TO THE KING.

SIRE,

IN no period has a more general regard to the Holy Scriptures been manifested, among all ranks, than during the time you have had the high and distinguished honour of reigning over the British Empire. The expressed desire of your venerated and pious Father has in a great degree been realized; and it is hoped there are but few, even of the lowest order, who are now without a Bible. The general circulation of the Scriptures at home and abroad, and the expansive benevolence exercised in various other ways, have already, through the blessing of Almighty God, produced a strong re-action on the public mind; and the demoralizing and destructive system of infidelity has sunk into merited contempt.

The experience of all ages has established the fact, "that while righteousness exalteth a nation, sin is a reproach to a people; and that a nation to be, and to con"tinue great, glorious, and happy, must be wise, pious, and virtuous." Hence it is the duty of kings and princes to encourage, by their example and influence, whatever has a clear and evident tendency to promote the knowledge and practice of piety and virtue among their subjects; and while they in this manner, become a blessing to those whom they govern, they will find their own reward in the esteem, gratitude, and loyalty of their people. The memory of such princes will be revered and blessed.

During the reigns of your Majesty's illustrious predecessors of the House of Brunswick, as well as your own, knowledge has been diffused through the realm, and civil and religious freedom established on the justest principles, while trade and commerce have flourished in a degree unparalleled. What has contributed essentially to the attainment of these objects, has not only been the enlightened and liberal views of your Majesty, and of your predecessors, but the blessing of a free and unfettered press. In consequence of this, the fruits of laborious research, intense study, and patient and persevering investigation, are published and circulated through the empire. Every subject of science, policy, or religion, is freely discussed; and error, however venerable by age, or disguised by art or sophistry, is detected and exposed. By the aid of this powerful engine, the intrepid Luther, and his brave coadjutors, assailed, with success, that system of superstition and tyranny which for ages had alike enslaved princes and people; and thus was effected the ever-memorable reformation, which restored freedom to princes and their just rights to the people; and especially, their right to search and examine for themselves, God's most holy Word.

Among Protestants, the Holy Scriptures are generally acknowledged to be a revelation from God, and are given to us as the only authoritative rule of faith and practice. If, however, whatever be our rank in society, we are bound to study them, that we may know and do the will of our heavenly Father. In this eminently consists the sum of true religion, which invests every human character with the greatest glory—soothes the mind under the many, and often, anxious cares of life—alleviates the ills inseparable from our present imperfect condition, and inspires the hope of a blessed future state of perfection and immortality. It is the peculiar honour of these Holy Writings, that they are able to make us wise to salvation, through faith, which is in Christ Jesus.

The authorized version of the Scriptures is readily acknowledged to be, in many respects, truly excellent; yet it must be admitted by every competent judge that it has considerable defects. The original texts from which it was made were not as perfect as they now are, in consequence of the collation of ancient Manuscripts, and the persevering labours of eminent and truly learned divines and critics, during the space of two centuries. Those texts are often defective, but more frequently contain erroneous readings, and our common version is affected by each of these causes. When the text is correct there are numerous mistranslations, while the true ones are placed in the margin. By retaining the idioms of the original, it is occasionally obscure, and sometimes deficient in energy and harmony. On these and other accounts, a revised and improved version has long been a desideratum.

Having devoted more than thirty years to the critical study of the Holy Scriptures, and employed nearly one-half of the number in attempting to revise and improve our common version, I have been induced to think that the importance of the work would justify me in laying it at the foot of the throne, and intreating your Majesty's gracious acceptance and patronage of it. I have no interest to serve but that of truth; and how far I have succeeded in this attempt, your Majesty and an enlightened public will decide, and to that decision I shall most cheerfully submit.

May it please Almighty God to bestow his choicest gifts on your Majesty, on your Royal House, and on your numerous and powerful people. May you be blessed, and be made a blessing, by the wisdom of your public measures; and may your reign be long and prosperous, distinguished by the diffusion of knowledge, the increase of piety, and by the general happiness of your people, is the sincere prayer of him who is,

With great and profound respect,

May it please your Majesty,

Your Majesty's most dutiful subject and servant,

THE work now offered to the public, necessarily implies, that, in the opinion of the author, the common version of the Holy Scriptures admits of improvement. Nor is he singular in this opinion, if any reliance is to be placed on the professions of Commentators. They generally assure the public, that the object which they have in view, is to correct the mistranslations—to reconcile the real or apparent contradictions—to explain what is difficult and abstruse; and, in fine, to render the Scriptures more intelligible to the reader. How far these professions are realized, in most instances, it is for the public to decide. As works of this kind meet with liberal and general countenance, the public so far seem to coincide in the opinion, that some parts of the present version are obscure, and that mistranslations do exist.

The following are some of the causes of the imperfections of the common version, and may be regarded as so many reasons for the present attempt to improve it. First, THE COMMON VERSION IS TOO VERBAL AND LITERAL TO BE, IN ALL INSTANCES, FAITHFUL AND PERSPICUOUS. To a person unacquainted with various languages, it may seem most natural and most faithful, to translate word for word; and in case the terms and idioms of one language exactly corresponded with those of another, a verbal and literal version would be the only proper one. But the smallest acquaintance with different languages is sufficient to prove, that in no two languages does such an exact correspondence exist. Every language is modified and varied by a thousand different circumstances; and its idioms and its phrases cannot be rendered literally and verbally, without often conveying either no sense, or a wrong one. Were we to render the English idiomatical phrase, hold thy peace, into Latin, in this manner, a good Latinist, unacquainted with the idiom, would never suspect that preserva tuam pacem, signifies sileri, to be silent. Nor would an Hebrew suppose that שמור שלומך had any such meaning. The Hebrew language abounds with idioms of this kind. To lift up the hand, signifies to swear; to fill the hand, means, to consecrate; to pour water on the hands of another, to attend on or serve him; and we find many similar idiomatical phrases in the Scriptures.

Another cause of obscurity and of imperfection in the common version, is, the FREQUENT CHANGE OF PERSONS, which the Hebrew language admits. In some places, in the same sentence, we have both the singular and the plural numbers, and the third and second persons used; when the obvious sense and connexion prove that the same persons are intended. This idiom abounds chiefly in the book of Deuteronomy; and I have ventured to neglect it, and to render as perspicuity and the propriety of our own language demand.

A third cause is FOLLOWING THE ORDER of the original text too closely. "Like the land of Egypt as thou comest to Zoar." Gen. xiii. 10. The English reader will conclude that Zoar was a city in Egypt; and yet it is certain that it was one of the cities of the plain of Sodom. It is necessary to transpose this clause, and connect it with the plain of the Jordan, in order to make the sense of the author understood by the English reader. "And Lot, raising his eyes, saw that the whole plain of the Jordan as thou comest to Zoar, (the Lord not having then destroyed Sodom and Gomorah,) was every where well watered, like a garden of God, or like the land of Egypt." Compare Gen. xx. 1. Exod. xxx. 29. Mark, iv. 34. and xi. 13. and many other passages in the common version, where, from the same cause, a wrong sense is suggested.

Another cause is, mistaking the sense of AMBIGUOUS terms or phrases. A word in Hebrew may be ambiguous, when it may be derived from various roots, or when it has many significations. In the first respect, many verbs are ambiguous, in some of their persons, tenses, and conjugations. Comp. Gen. i. 15. and the note, and 1 King. xii. 2. Some Hebrew words, as pronounced, are either nouns or verbs. Thus שָׁמַר Gen. iv. 7. may be either a noun, or a verb, in the second person. Our translators considered it as a verb, "shalt thou not be accepted?" I have, with many of the best critics, considered it as a noun, without any change in the sense of the clause. As many Hebrew words have various significations, it is manifest, that if a translator render nearly always by the same term, he will not give the sense of his author. Thus the term דָּבָר signifies a word, a promise, matter or thing, as well as pestilence, &c. Nor is this a difficulty peculiar to the Hebrew, but one which is found in all living or dead languages. The particular sense is to be ascertained by the subject of which a writer or speaker is treating, and by the connexion of the word with others. In many instances, it is generally allowed, that our translators have failed in giving the genuine sense of particular terms. Comp. Deut. viii. 3. and the note. They considered, "what came from the mouth of God," to signify a word instead of "what he appointed," or commanded.

Another cause of obscurity and frequent mistake, is, an attempt to render the TENSES and CONJUGATIONS of Hebrew verbs, in a manner nearly uniform. The Hebrew has only the perfect and future tenses, and the present and past participles. This paucity of tenses necessarily introduced great latitude in the use of them; the perfect being used for the present and imperfect of other languages, and sometimes for the preter perfect; and the future for the first and second futures, and with certain particles for the optative, potential, and subjunctive moods of other languages. In certain cases, the future is used for the past; and it was the opinion of Michaelis, and is that of other distinguished oriental scholars, that the Hebrew future is, in reality, an Aorist. Their conjugations, according to the Masorets, are four, Kal, Pihel, Hiphil, and Hithpahel. The three first have the active and passive moods, and the fourth is reciprocal. The Hiphil signifies to cause or suffer another to do a thing; the Pihel renders the signification of Kal more intense; for verbs which are neuter in Kal, become active and transitive in Pihel. Every Hebrew scholar has found difficulties, both in respect to the tenses and conjugations of Hebrew verbs, and it is not wonderful if our translators have frequently erred in rendering them. The oldest translation extant, the Greek, is in this respect often obscure and erroneous. The translators, being Jews who had acquired and who spoke the Greek tongue, considered it an imperative duty to render the Hebrew as literally as possible into that language, and hence they rendered most frequently the Hebrew future by the Greek future, and the perfect by the Aorist. We gain one advantage from this, that we can ascertain more clearly, how those translators read; and their version becomes of great use, so far as it is correct, in detecting the errors of the Hebrew text. This mode of translating, it is easy to perceive, will often obscure, and not unfrequently pervert the sense of the sacred writers. For proofs of this I must refer to my notes on the Psalms.

By rendering the Hiphil conjugation very generally, to cause another to do a thing, some sentiments, equally at variance, I think, with the real sense of the text, and with all sound notions of the divine nature, obtain in the common version. God's hardening the heart, and other things of this kind, have given occasion to the scoffs of infidels, and have tortured the minds of some good men. When we take the other sense, which this conjugation is allowed to have, of suffering or permitting a thing to be done, nothing is asserted, but what is equally agreeable to reason, and to what we actually see in the administration of providence; that men, blinded by their passions and hardened by their crimes, are permitted to go on till they receive the due reward of their deeds.

One of the chief causes of the errors, contradictions, darkness, and confusion, of some parts of the Old Testament, is THE STATE OF THE ORIGINAL TEXT, from which it was made. I am aware that there are Hebrew scholars, who boast of their attainments in the language, and who contend that the present Hebrew text is as perfect as when it was first written. How such persons can have read it and compared one place with another, and draw such a conclusion, I am at a loss to conjecture. After the extensive collations of Hebrew manuscript copies, which are still existing; and after a comparison of the common printed text with the old versions; one would think, that this is a subject on which there could not exist two opinions. The numerous instances of various readings introduced in this work, in preference to the printed text, and their evident propriety and suitableness to the context, I conceive, sufficiently prove the errors of that text, and the necessity of correcting it from the legitimate sources of the manuscripts, old versions, and a comparison of parallel places.

In the Pentateuch and historical books, I have made considerable transpositions, for the sake of order and connexion; and my reader has just reason for the inquiry, on what grounds I have proceeded. In some cases, such transposition is warranted by the Samaritan copy of the Pentateuch, and in others, by the Greek version; but in many, I have no authority but that of internal evidence, and the state of most existing Hebrew manuscripts. Kennicott found that the manuscripts which he and others collated, contained transpositions of whole verses, and sometimes of chapters; the former of which occurred from the same word beginning several verses or periods, and a wrong verse or period catching the writer's eye. After having written a period or two, and comparing his manuscript with his copy, he discovered that he had made an omission, and inserted it with a reference. Thus transpositions of periods or verses were frequently made; and those of whole chapters most probably arose from the skins of parchment being, by some accident, stitched together improperly. In this manner the prophecies of Jeremiah have been transposed, the whole order from the 26th chapter to the end being confused. As a transposition makes no change in the text, and when it restores coherence and propriety to a narrative, I have, with other critics, ventured to adopt it.

The change which has occurred in the English language, since the period at which the common version was made, is considerable, and forms another reason for an attempt towards its improvement. Some words in a living language, in the course of time, become obsolete, either altogether, or in some of their senses; and others acquire new significations. In some instances, words acquire a low, mean, or ludicrous sense; and ought to be excluded in a version of the Holy Scriptures. Bishop Newcome has observed, that "many words or phrases which occur in the received version, are become unintelligible to the generality of readers; and many which are intelligible, are so antiquated and debased as to excite disgust among the serious, and contempt and derision among libertines. The strength of the argument from this topic rises in proportion to the frequency of such expressions, and to the importance of the book throughout which they abound." In proof of the justness of this observation, the following phrases may be noticed: And all to brake his scull, for which broke his scull. Go your way, for go; set him at nought, for treated him contemptuously. Why make ye this ado? for why make ye this disturbance, and weep? Do thy diligence to come, &c. for endeavour to come, &c. The good man of the house, for the master of the house. Upon which, when I had fastened mine eyes, for and looking steadfastly upon it. To show the Jews a pleasure, instead of to obtain the favour of the Jews. Many others of this kind might be produced.

The ancient use of prepositions and adverbs, renders innumerable passages of the authorized version obscure and ambiguous, and in some instances, totally alters the sense. The preposition of was frequently used for by, which, Johnson observes, is now wholly obsolete. "And I will bless her and give thee a son also of (by) her." Gen. xvii. 16. "When, as his mother Mary was espoused to Joseph before they came together, she was found with child of (by) the Holy Ghost." Matt. i. 18. Compare also verse 20. In these passages, a sense the reverse of the author's intention is conveyed.

After the verbs said and spoken, the preposition of denotes the subject of the verbs, and not the agent. Hence, there is an impropriety in the version of Luke ix. 7. "It was said of some, that John was risen from the dead." "Remember the words which were spoken before of the apostles of our Lord Jesus Christ." Jude, ver. 17. In both these places, the proper preposition would be by. According to our present idiom, "spoken of the apostles," signifies what others had spoken of them, and not what they had spoken, which is certainly intended.

The preposition of occurs where modern use requires from. After heard, in such passages as the following, of conveys a wrong sense. "That which I have heard of the Lord of hosts, &c." Is. xxi. 10. "I speak to the world those things which I have heard of him." "A man that hath told you the truth, which I have heard of God." John, viii. 26, 40. "For all things that I have heard of my father," &c. John, xv. 15. Now, to hear of a person, and to hear from him, signify very different things. Hence, "of a child," Mark, ix. 21. should be, "from his childhood." "This is the message which we have heard of (from) him." 1 John, i. 5. "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of (from) me." 2 Tim. i. 13. See also Gen. xxi. 30.

In the following passages it is used for at. "Of (at) my hand thou didst require it." Gen. xxxi. 39. "Of (at) my hand shalt thou require him." Gen. xxxiii. 3. Sometimes it is used for out of. "For all they did cast in of (out of) their abundance, but she of (out of) her want, or what she wanted for herself." Mark, xii. 44. Sometimes it is used for over. "Lest Satan should get an (the) advantage of (over) us." 2 Cor. ii. 11. Sometimes for to. "Be thou an example of (to) the believers." 1 Tim. iv. 12. In our language, some verbs and adjectives require certain prepositions after them. "I am jealous of you" is proper, not "over you," as 2 Cor. ii. 11.

By rendering the Hebrew ב and the Greek preposition $\epsilon\iota\varsigma$ in, the sense of the sacred writers is often obscured, and sometimes much perverted. "If they do these things in (to) a green tree, what shall be done in (to) the dry?" Luke, xxiii. 31. The phrase "in the earth," is improper; it should be "on the earth." "When it pleased God, &c. to reveal his son in (to) me!" Gal. i. 16. "And they glorified God in me." Doddridge very properly renders, on my account. So Macknight. "And they were offended in (at) him." Matt. xiii. 57. The Geneva version is with him, which is preferable to in; but Coverdale properly at. To sit in a throne is now obsolete; it should be on, or upon.

The neuter pronoun it, had originally no variation of case. The possessive its, which is of so much importance to accuracy and precision in our language, does not once occur in the whole of our common version. Instead of it, the possessive of the third person masculine or feminine was used; or the adverb, thereof. This frequently occasions some degree of obscurity, as it is difficult to perceive, whether his and hers, refer to persons or to things. Levit. i. 6, "and cut it into his pieces." This occurs often. Ver. 9, "and his inwards and his legs, &c." Ver. 15. "And the priest shall bring it to the altar, and wring off his head, &c." "and the blood thereof, &c." Ps. i. 3. "And he shall be like a tree planted by the rivers of water, that bringeth forth his fruit in his season; his leaf also shall not wither, and whatsoever he doeth shall prosper." Comp. Matt. xii. 33. and Luke, vi. 44. "Say thou, Thus saith the Lord God, shall it prosper? shall he not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, even without great power, or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof." Ezek. xvii. 9. "Doth not behave itself unseemly, seeketh not her own, is not easily provoked, thinketh no evil." 1 Cor. xiii. 5.

Errors frequently occur in the use of the articles, and of the relative and distributive pronouns. The definite article is improperly put before which. "In the which." Gen. xlv. 6. Luke, xxi. 6. Colos. iii. 7. Heb. vii. 19. and James, ii. 7. The definite is used instead of the indefinite. "The son of God," for "a son of God." Matt. xxvii. 54. Mark, xv. 32. "The physician," for "a physician." Mark, ii. 17. "Defile the man," for "a man." "Entered into the house," for "a house." Mark, vii. 15. 17. The definite article is sometimes improperly omitted. "Into all truth," for "all the truth," that is, all religious truth, all the truth of the Gospel.

The relative which is now appropriated to things only; but was anciently applied both to persons and things. In the common version, instances occur every where of this use. Is it not proper now to discard it, in conformity to our most correct writers? "Our father which art in heaven, &c." should be, "who art." The objective case of the relative pronouns is sometimes used for the nominative. "Whom do men say that I am?—But whom say ye, that I am?" Matt. xvi. 13, 15. So likewise Mark, viii. 27, 69. Luke, ix. 18, 20. "Whom think ye, that I am?" Acts, xiii. 25. It ought in all these places to be who; as it is not governed by the verb say, or think, but by the verb am; or agrees in case with the pronoun I. If the verb were in the infinitive mood, it would require the objective case of the relative, agreeing with the pronoun me: "Whom think ye, or do you think, me to be?" We have often two objective cases in a sentence.

The distributive pronouns are often used improperly. They are now uniformly construed with nouns, pronouns, and verbs of the singular number only. Philip. ii. 3. "Let each esteem others better than themselves," should be himself. Either is often used instead of each. "The king of Israel, and Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, sat either (each) of them on his throne." 2 Chron. xvii. 9. "Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either (each) of them his censer." Levit. x. 1. See also 1 Kings, vii. 15. Each signifies both of them, taken distinctly, or separately; either properly signifies only the one, or the other, of them, taken disjunctively. For which reason the like expression in the following passages seems also improper: "They crucified two others with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst." John xix. 18. "Of either side of the river was there the tree of life." Rev. xii. 2. See also 1 Kings, x. 19.

On some occasions we have adjectives with double superlatives. "After the most straitest sect of our religion, I lived a pharisee." Acts, xxiii. 3. The vulgarism, as Johnson styles it, lesser, for less occurs frequently; as does also chiefest. See Cruden. There is certainly the justest reason, when an adjective contains in itself a superlative sense, not to superadd to it the superlative form. Such is the word chief; and strictly speaking, it cannot admit of any degrees of comparison.

We find some instances of false concord in the common version. "For he was astonished, and all who were with him, at the draught of fishes, which they had taken: and so was also (were also) James and John, &c." Luke, v. 9. "And they did eat and were filled; and there was (were) taken up of fragments, &c." Luke, ix. 17.

In the same sentence the indicative and subjunctive moods are sometimes confounded. "Therefore, if thou bring thy gift to the altar, and there rememberest that thy brother hath ought [any matter of complaint] against thee &c." Matt. v. 23. It should be remember, for the hypothetical conjunction if, as used in this verse, must necessarily suppose something contingent; and of course require the subjunctive mood after it. Matt. xvii. 12. "If a man have a hundred sheep, and one of them be gone astray, doth he not leave the ninety and nine, and goeth (go) into the mountains, and seeketh (seek) that which is gone astray?" We have a similar grammatical error in John, xix. 31. "Now we know that God heareth not sinners: but if any man be a worshipper of God, and doeth (do) his will, him he heareth."

In the use of the tenses we have innumerable instances of the violation of grammatical propriety. "The Lord hath given (gave) and the Lord hath taken away &c." Job i. 21. "Then did they spit in his face: and buffeted him." Matt. xxvi. 67. The Geneva version is, "Then they spat on his face and buffeted him;" which is at least grammatical. In the following chap. ver. 30, "And they spit upon him and took the reed, &c." should be, "they spat," to agree with took. So Mark, viii. 22. "And he cometh to Bethsaida, and they bring a blind man to him and besought him." In the original, the verbs are in the present tense, and should all be rendered in the same time.

Inaccuracies of every kind, should, as far as possible, be avoided in a version of the Holy Scriptures.

both on account of their intrinsic importance, and on account of their influence on the sentiments and conduct of mankind. If the style be low and mean, and ungrammatical, readers of taste and judgment will be offended: and if the version be obscure and indefinite, or erroneous, some readers may be induced to found theological doctrines on such version, and thus be led into the labyrinths of dangerous and pernicious errors. For, as the vulgar version is that only which the common reader can consult, and as such a reader does not often weigh the context, or examine learned commentators, his opinion will be formed on the usual sense of the words which he reads; and he will be induced, from an improper version, to embrace error for truth.

Convinced of the necessity and of the advantages which would arise to the public in general, from a corrected translation of the Holy Scriptures, I have been led by my particular studies to engage in this work; not that I suppose myself better qualified than many others, but because the avocations of others do not permit them to devote their time to such an undertaking. Nor did I engage in it, till I had been repeatedly solicited by persons of various denominations, for whose judgment and piety I have reason to entertain the highest opinion.

My great object has been to give the sense of the sacred authors, without, on the one hand, rendering verbally, or on the other, being too diffuse or paraphrastic. I have endeavoured to follow the rules laid down by Archbishop Newcome, as not only founded in good sense, and an intimate acquaintance with the subject, but as paying that deference to the authorized version, which its general fidelity, and its long use demand. Hence I have uniformly preferred the language of this version, and have rarely introduced any terms but what are already sanctioned by biblical use. Even in rendering the Hebrew particles, though I have varied considerably from the common rendering in innumerable places, yet I have generally found the same particles rendered as I have done in some place or other in the common version. In short, I have not designedly changed the terms, but when I have been fully satisfied, that they were improper, and did not express the sense of the text with perspicuity or justness. Preserving as much as possible the language of the common version, I have arranged that language in such a manner as to endeavour to secure precision, harmony, and strength; and I cannot but flatter myself, that every reader of taste will find that these ends have, in some degree at least, been attained.

I have not the vanity to think, that I have always succeeded in this attempt; but I have the pleasure to know, that if I have failed in giving the sense of the text, or in expressing it clearly, it has not been through design, nor has it been through want of diligence in consulting the best authorities, as the notes will abundantly testify. I have never had recourse to hypercriticism, or endeavoured to give new and forced senses to the Hebrew text; nor have I, except in a few desperate cases, admitted any conjectural reading or emendation. Hence many readings which I considered as probable, and even favoured in my notes to my Hebrew Bible, I have not adopted in this.

Some friends have been dissatisfied with the version I have given of the latter part of Gen. i. 2. I stated in the note the reasons which induced me so to render it, nor have I yet seen any just cause to alter my opinion. I conceive the text to contain a description of the chaotic state, and consequently that the terms רוח אלהים cannot mean the 'Spirit of God' but a 'mighty wind.' It has been objected, that the atmosphere did not then exist, and that there could not be any wind. It may be replied, that the Mosaic account implies, that the various elements were brought into existence at once; and though not separated as afterwards, yet the caloric, or matter of heat, would immediately produce what Moses mentions; it would raise the lighter particles aloft, which may with as much justness be called wind, as the mixture of earth and water, is called the abyss or sea. I only add, that my reasons for this version are purely philological, not theological; as I cordially believe the divinity of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, as a doctrine of revelation: yet I would not rest the proof of this doctrine on a passage which I conceive has no relation to the subject. Maimonides, one of the best. Jewish expositors, in explaining the various senses of אֵר asserts that it signifies the air, that is, one of the four elements; and he refers to the text in question as a proof of it. More Nevochim, Pt. 1.

Another passage has in like manner had to encounter the objections of friends in the version given as quite altering the sense usually attributed to it. The passage I refer to is 2 Sam. xxiii. 4, 5. "Is not my house thus with God?" I may appeal to my version for clearness, beauty, and propriety in comparison with the common one. I conceive the whole to contain one of the most beautiful and express predictions of the future Messiah. But the question is, will the text bear the sense given? Is it not without any just foundation, that two clauses are rendered interrogatively? The learned reader will consult the authorities for the use of אִם; and if these should be deemed inadequate, it must be allowed that the אִם interrogative is sometimes omitted. Comp. Heb. Exod. viii. 22. and other places in Noldius. The more I reflect, the more I feel satisfied that I have hit on the just sense of this incomparable passage.

The design of the Notes is to support, by proper authorities, the version given, and to explain, with brevity, the sense of the text, when any custom or rite was referred to, not so generally understood. My labour in this part has been much abridged, by the Introduction, which contains in a condensed form, a complete view of the Mosaic law, both as a civil and a religious code. I have stated to whom my readers are indebted for this part of the work; and I hope the good sense, and many uncommon but just remarks found in it, will be acceptable to the public. It has cost me no little time to bring it into so small a compass. The other parts of the Introduction will supersede the necessity of long notes, and of much repetition.

As to the Reflections after each chapter, they are designedly short and practical; such as I conceive may be read with propriety in a family. I have been indebted, occasionally, to the labours of the pious Job Orton in this part of the work, making such corrections in the language as seemed to me necessary. While I fully make this acknowledgment it will appear that the chief part of the Reflections, such as they are, belong to myself, and in availing myself of the hints of authors, I have only done what is frequently done without any acknowledgment.

As the manners and customs of the Jews were so very different from ours, and as there are in the laws given to them, references to things which delicacy forbids us to mention, I have given the sense of such passages, rather than a naked, verbal version; and as a few passages of this kind had escaped my attention, at the suggestion of some valued friends, I have been induced to reprint the pages, where they had occurred. In a word, I do not think that fidelity requires us to do more in such cases, than to give the sense in as delicate a manner as possible. I hope it will be found that my version contains nothing but what may be read in a family, without occasioning modesty to blush, or raising any unpleasant and unhallowed thoughts in the minds of youth.

Though great attention has been paid to the press, yet some errors have escaped, which the reader is desired both to correct and excuse. The most material errata which I have noticed, or friends have communicated, are given. I have aimed to give the names which occur in a uniform manner; but, misled by the common version, I have found several instances which have escaped my attention. In regard to the various readings, the references in the text have been sometimes omitted, and in a few instances the authorities have been omitted. This has chiefly originated in the carelessness of the corrector. In the two latter parts this has been avoided, more attention having been paid to the references.

Conscious of the purity of the motives which have influenced me in this undertaking, I commit this volume to the public; and should any competent critic show that I have misunderstood the text, and rendered improperly, he will not only be entitled to the gratitude of the public, but to mine in particular. I even solicit the candid remarks of my fellow-labourers in sacred criticism on this important work ; and I promise them, that they will not find me too self-opinionated to retract an error when convinced of it, nor insensible of obligation for stating it. Remarks originating in party spirit, or in a tone unbecoming the sacred subject, I have determined not to notice ; but any hints tending to improve the version I shall receive with pleasure, and take the first opportunity to communicate to my friends.

I cannot conclude these remarks, without expressing my gratitude to my friends and the public, for that share of support which I have received, and to that God who has granted me health and strength to prosecute my arduous work hitherto. And should the same blessings be continued, I hope to be able, in the course of another year, to complete the second volume, containing the remaining books of the Old Testament. I entreat the prayers of my friends, that capacity, judgment, and ability, may be vouchsafed, that this work may tend to promote the best interests of men, and the glory of God the father, Son, and Spirit.

INTRODUCTION.

PART I.

On the Genuineness, Authenticity, and Inspiration of the books of the Old and New Testaments, the formation of the original Texts, and the means of improving them, with an historical account of English translations.

CHAPTER I.

On the Genuineness, and Authenticity of the books of the Old and New Testaments.*

THERE are now, in various parts of the world, a numerous body of people, called Christians; and others denominated Jews, who are scattered among the various nations of the earth. When we inquire into the reason of these denominations, we find the former are so called from their belief in, and adherence to, a divine teacher, called Christ; and the latter, from their being the descendants of Judah, one of the twelve Patriarchs, sprung from Jacob. The former maintain certain opinions, which were taught by Christ; they observe certain rites appointed by him; and they meet on the first day of the week, to worship the Deity, by prayer and praise. They have among them written books, which they account sacred; and one part of their worship is, for a person properly qualified, to read some portion of these books, and to explain to them the various duties which man owes to his Creator, himself, and his neighbour.

* Bishop Watson, in his excellent Apology for the Bible, has pertinently observed, that there is an important distinction between the genuineness and authenticity of any book. "A genuine book is that which was written by the person whose name it bears, as the author of it. An authentic book, is that which relates matters of fact, as they really happened. A book may be genuine, without being authentic; and a book may be authentic, without being genuine. The books written by Richardson and Fielding are genuine books, though the histories of Clarissa and Tom Jones are fables. Anson's Voyage may be considered as an authentic book, it, probably, containing a true narrative of the principal events recorded in it; but it is not a genuine book, having not been written by Walters, to whom it is ascribed, but by Robins."

As the authors of several books of the Old Testament are not mentioned, we are left to form our opinion, either from internal evidence, or from the hints or the direct testimony of subsequent writers. In reading the

In every country where Christians are numerous, they erect edifices for the purpose of divine worship; and where they are few, they assemble in some house with the same design. For public worship is essential to christianity; and one day in seven has been, and is now, kept sacred, and spent in the exercises of devotion. In Europe this religion generally prevails; and its doctrines, rites, and precepts, are in some degree incorporated with the civil institutions of the various nations which it contains. From this it is evident that christianity must have long prevailed; and that it is no novel invention. When we inquire into its origin, the most authentic history carries us back more than seventeen centuries; and from the testimony of those who then lived, we are sure that there were persons at that period, denominated Christians, and that they had among them the same sacred books which we now have, and that they observed the same rites, and believed the same doctrines. Happily we have not only the testimony of christian writers, but of polytheists, who were the avowed enemies of christianity.

Tacitus, writing the life of Nero, who set the city of first four books, it is manifest, there is a striking similarity in style; the same terms, the same idioms, the same figures occur. The least attention to the books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Deuteronomy, must satisfy the candid and impartial, that the author must have been an eye witness of the facts which he narrates, and a principal agent in the occurrences which he describes. God is said to have given his laws and statutes to Moses, and Moses to have delivered them to the people; he must then have written them down; for he could not have retained them all in his memory, nor could they have been otherwise preserved. From a careful and repeated examination, I am satisfied that the first four books are both genuine and authentic; they were written by Moses, and contain a true account of events and circumstances as they happened. It is however, certain, that some few explanatory terms have been subsequently introduced; and it is also admitted, that the account of the death of Moses was added by some later writer; but these additions cannot invalidate, either their genuineness or authenticity.

Rome on fire, the report of which rendered him odious, tells us, that Nero imputed it to a set of people, called Christians. "The founder of that name was Christ, who suffered death in the reign of Tiberius, under his procurator Pontius Pilate. This pernicious superstition thus checked for a while, broke out again; and spread, not only over Judea, where the evil originated, but through Rome also, whither every thing bad upon earth finds its way, and is practised. Some who confessed their sect, were first seized, and afterwards, by their information, a vast multitude were apprehended, who were convicted, not so much of the crime of burning Rome, as of hatred to mankind. Their sufferings at their execution were aggravated by insult and mockery; for, some were disguised in the skins of wild beasts, and worried to death by dogs; some were crucified; and others were wrapped up in pitched shirts, and set on fire when the day closed, that they might serve as lights to illuminate the night."

This testimony proves: First, That the founder of christianity was put to death; Secondly, That in the same country in which he was put to death, the religion, after a short check, broke out and spread; and Thirdly, That it so spread, so that, within thirty-four years from the author's death, a very great number of Christians were found at Rome. This testimony from a heathen historian, establishes the leading facts of the christian records. His opinion of this sect, is what we might expect from his habits and principles. Suetonius gives the same account of the sufferings of Christians at that period.

On examining the books, held as sacred and divine by Christians, we find that four of the disciples of Christ, wrote narratives of his life. They differ in their manner, style, and in the order they observe; but agree in a most wonderful manner as to the facts they record. They write like persons who had heard and seen what they relate, or who had received information from such as had; and through the whole of their narratives an artless simplicity prevails, which strongly prepossesses the mind in favour of their veracity. Another book contains a history of the persecutions of Christians, and the progress of christianity, during a period of about thirty years. The remaining books are letters directed to different christian societies; and were evidently written on particular occasions; either to oppose some error, or to explain and enforce some part of christian truth. One book is so peculiar in its style, imagery, and design, that it has been considered prophetic, and as emblematically setting forth the events, whether adverse or prosperous, of the christian church, till the consummation of all things.

The wonderful personage whose life, doctrines, and miracles, are related by the Evangelists, did not himself commit any thing to writing. He was honourably employed in imparting instruction by public teaching; and in performing a series of the most benevolent and astonishing miracles. Unsupported by civil power, rank or wealth, his teaching and miracles commanded the greatest attention, wherever he went; and the multitude crowded to see and hear him. The freedom with which he attacked the prevailing vices of the day; the manner in which he refuted the errors of the Jewish sects, and exposed their hypocrisy, irritated their malice, which led them to form the design of putting him to death. He had from among his more constant followers, selected twelve, who are called Apostles, and who usually attended him, and were the constant witnesses of his miracles. To them he occasionally gave private instruction; and empowered them to work miracles in his name. To them he foretold also, his own death; and previously to it, appointed the rite of eating bread and drinking wine, in remembrance of him. He assured his disciples, that though he should be put to death, he would rise again and ascend to heaven; and that he would send the Holy Spirit, by whose agency, they should be instructed, and that whatever he had taught them, should be thereby brought to their remembrance—that they should be empowered to work miracles; and he commissioned them to baptize in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Spirit, and preach his doctrines first to the Jews and then to the Gentiles.

On the crucifixion of our Lord, the disciples remained spectators; and discovered their attachment by their distress. When he had breathed his last, they were deeply affected, and fell into some degree of despondency. Certain women who were his disciples, went early on the first day of the week, to visit the tomb where he had been laid; and to their surprise found the tomb empty. Supposing that the Jews had removed the body, they inquired where it had been deposited; for they did not as yet understand the scriptures, nor what he had so often taught them, that he would rise again. An angel assured them that he was risen; and he himself appeared to them, and to his other disciples, and gave them the fullest proof of his resurrection. He was seen by them during the space of forty days, and spoke to them of things concerning the kingdom of God; and then ascended to heaven in the sight of many brethren.

The disciples remained at Jerusalem, and there formed the first christian society or church. They continued in prayer, and other religious exercises, until the day of pentecost, when the Spirit was poured on them, and they were endowed with the gift of tongues, and other miraculous powers. They now preached in the name of Jesus; and mightily convinced the Jews, that he was the Messiah, promised to their fathers. Numbers were converted to the faith, and continued steadfast in the Apostles' doctrine and fellowship, and in breaking of bread, and prayers. The Apostles seem to have continued at Jerusalem for some years, instructing and confirming the disciples; but others, who had been called at Jerusalem to the knowledge of Christ, on their return into various parts of Judea, preached the faith, and laid the foundation of other christian societies. Perhaps the Apostles made occasional visits to those societies; but confined their labours, for more than seven years, to the house of Israel.

As yet, the christian church had no authentic written narrative of our Lord; its faith and discipline rested on the testimony of such as had seen and heard him. It is probable that many who had heard him, would write down what they could remember; thus some would preserve his moral sayings, and others some of his parables. The Apostles in their ministry, would often repeat what he had taught them, and the miracles which he had wrought; and by degrees the principal facts would be committed to writing. Those Christians, who had collected and written down the sayings and parables of our Lord, would naturally show them to some of the Apostles; who might correct what was erroneous, and supply what was deficient. Thus materials would be gradually accumulating for a complete history of our Lord, and of his doctrines.

These accounts of the life and doctrines of Jesus would still be liable to suspicion, as not having been sanctioned by some author, whose name would be a voucher for their truth. From the introduction of Luke's gospel, we learn that many narratives of our Lord were in circulation, perhaps written by well meaning persons, but who had not obtained correct information. It would soon be found necessary for some one of the Apostles to undertake this work, that the body of Christians might have an authentic written narrative of their Lord's life and doctrines; to which they might appeal as to an infallible standard of what they were to believe and practise.

It is natural to expect that the church at Jerusalem would be favoured with such a work, by some of the Apostles; and we accordingly find, that Matthew wrote his gospel for the use of that church and of the Jews in Palestine. According to the testimony of antiquity, it was written in Hebrew†, or the language the Jews then spoke; and of course it would be accessible to the whole Jewish nation. The learned Dr. H. Owen, observes, that the structure and genius of this gospel, support the opinion that it was written "to confirm those Jews who believed, and to convert, if possible, those who believed not." "For he begins with the genealogy of Christ from Abraham*—refers often to Jewish customs—relates the most of our Saviour's discourses against Jewish errors and superstitions†—quotes the greatest number of passages from the Jewish scriptures—answers the most considerable Jewish objections—and frequently makes use of the terms and phrases of Jewish theology."

The time when this gospel was composed, has not been precisely ascertained. Dr. H. Owen thought that it was written as early as Anno Domini 39 or 40, or about six years after our Lord's ascension. Lardner, however, supposes it was not written till the year 64, in which year he also places those of Mark, and Luke, and the Acts of the Apostles. This opinion is not, in my judgment, even probable; for we must allow some time to elapse after Luke had written his gospel, before he wrote the Acts. I think it most probable, that Matthew wrote his gospel, while Peter and Mark were in the northern part of the Lesser Asia, which might be while Paul was preaching in Greece, about the year 54. Peter, we know, was at Antioch, about this period; and might with Mark, thence go to Pontus, and Bithynia.

During this period, many different christian societies were formed in various parts of Judea, and among the Samaritans, and many Hellenist Jews, or those who spoke the Greek, had embraced the gospel; and on their return to the usual places of their residence, they endeavoured to preach and propagate it. Thus some went into Phœnicia, and others to Cyprus, and Antioch, but preached only to the Jews; while others who, though Jews by descent, were born in the island of Cyprus, and some at Cyrene, in Africa, came to Antioch, the chief city of Syria, and preached to the Greeks or gentiles. Perhaps they had heard of the vision of Peter, and of

* St. Matthew, in conformity with the Jewish custom, records the genealogy of Christ, according to his legal descent; and brings it down from Abraham, through David, to show his title to the kingdom of Israel. Vid. Chrysost. Hom. 1, in Matt."

† Ch. xiii. 1—33. Here St. Matthew speaks to the Jews personally, and reproves their superstitions, as our Saviour did, with a view to correct them. And St. Luke, who had to do with foreign Jews, follows the same method, xi. 42—52. But St. Mark, xii. 38—40. viii. 15. vii. 5—7. speaks only of the Jews, and their various superstitions; and seems to do it with a view to distinguish them from the Christians, who were commonly, though unjustly, looked upon as a sect of the Jews; and comprehended under that denomination in the imperial edicts. By showing in this manner that the Christians condemned all Jewish superstitions and factious tenets, St. Mark might hope to procure for them a more favourable treatment from the Roman state."

† Eusebius has preserved the testimony of Papias to this fact, who was cotemporary with the Apostles, or at least with those who had seen and heard them. He informs us he took delight in making inquiry after the sayings of the Apostles, and has related some miracles wrought by their hands. "Matthew wrote his divine oracles in the Hebrew tongue, and every one interpreted them as well as they were able." Euseb. lib. 3. ch. 39. This suggests, that for some time there was no translation of this work, but that every one translated Matthew's Hebrew records in the best manner he was able. Ireneus and the following fathers give us the same account, his preaching to Cornelius; and might be influenced to imitate his example. Their labours were attended with great success; and information of this having been conveyed to the Church at Jerusalem, Barnabas was sent to Antioch. Barnabas, knowing the wonderful conversion of Saul, and the talents and gifts conferred on him, went to Tarsus, to induce him to come to Antioch, where they both abode labouring in the gospel for more than a year.

On the establishment of christian societies beyond the boundaries of Judea, it is natural to suppose, that an authentic narrative would be given in Greek, the language then most generally spoken. Accordingly, the gospel of Mark, is said to have been the second narrative presented to the church; but when published is uncertain. He was the companion and attendant of Peter, as the christian fathers relate; and with the greatest probability, is supposed to be the person he mentions in his first epistle, (ch. v. 3.) and calls his son*. Eusebius and others mention it as a tradition, that he came with Peter to Rome; and that this gospel was written for the use of the Roman church. I confess that this tradition seems to me entitled to no credit. From Gala. ch. ii. 11. it appears, that Peter had gone from Jerusalem to Antioch; and there discovered that temporizing spirit, for which Paul blamed him. He probably returned to Judea, where he abode for some time; for had Peter gone to Rome, Paul would certainly have saluted him, if not have made some particular mention of him in his epistle to that church. When Paul was carried to Rome on his appeal to Cæsar, where he abode two years, and wrote four epistles, to different churches; had Peter been there, it is fairly presumable that he would have mentioned him as a brother Apostle and fellow labourer in the gospel; but his name never once occurs. "It seems to me," says Lardner, "that when Peter left Judea, he went again to Antioch, the chief city of Syria. Thence

* Whether the person called John Mark be the same as the Evangelist is disputed. His mother's name was Mary, Acts, xii. 12.; and he was sister's son to Barnabas. Colos. iv. 10. He attended Paul and Barnabas in their apostolic journeys, when they travelled together. Acts, xii. 25.—xiii. 5. For some unknown reason, Mark had left Paul and his uncle Barnabas, in Pamphylia; and when Paul proposed to go and visit the churches they had planted, Barnabas wished John, whose surname was Mark, to go with them, but Paul would not consent; "And the contention was so sharp between them, that they parted asunder one from another: and so Barnabas took Mark, and sailed unto Cyprus;" Acts, xv. 39. Here Luke drops the name John, and only calls him Mark. Paul makes honourable mention of him by the same name, Colos. iv. 10.—2 Tim. iv. 11.—Philem. 24. Campbell thinks it by no means probable, that he is the same person as the Evangelist; but Dr. H. Owen and others maintain that he was. I agree with Campbell, because John Mark attended Paul, and not Peter, as the fathers relate; and because Peter calls him his son, that is, his convert, which John Mark could not be. Moreover, no ancient author ever calls the Evangelist John Mark, but always Mark.

he might go into other parts of the continent, particularly Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia, which are expressly mentioned at the beginning of his first epistle. In those countries he might stay a good while. It is very likely that he did so; and that he was well acquainted with the Christians there, to whom he afterwards wrote two epistles. When he left those parts, I think he went to Rome: but not till after Paul had been in that city, and was gone from it."

It is not improbable, that while Paul was at Rome, Peter again visited Antioch, and afterwards the churches in Pontus, Galatia, &c.; and Mark, his convert and attendant, as the fathers relate, might write his gospel for the use of those churches; and as it would have the approbation of Peter, it would often be called the gospel of Peter, as in fact it was called. Peter afterwards going to Rome, and communicating a copy of Mark's gospel to that church, the tradition might arise that it was written for that church. After weighing the statements of the fathers, and the opinions of learned men, this seems the most probable hypothesis.

Augustine considered Mark as a mere abridger of Matthew†; but it is evident, that he ought to be regarded in some degree as an original writer, though he has given a more succinct history than his predecessor. He has wholly omitted what Matthew relates in his first two chapters. He does not always follow the order of Matthew; and there are some things in Mark, which Matthew had not recorded. In some parts of his narrative, where he relates the same facts, he is more diffuse and circumstantial than Matthew. He has related our Lord's miracles with particularity; but has given few of his discourses at length. He probably dwelt on the miracles, as being best calculated to prove the divine mission of his Lord and Saviour, and to make the strongest impression on the minds of his readers. This history, without referring to dates and circumstances, which might be interesting to the inhabitants of Judea, contains only a simple and compendious account of our Lord, and his doctrine. The author frequently explains words, which would have been otherwise unintelligible. On mentioning the Jordan, he adds river, (ch. i. 5.) which might be necessary to persons who knew little or nothing of Judea. When he mentions gehenna, or hell, he explains it to mean unquenchable fire, ch. ix. 43. When he alludes to Jewish customs, in order to make them understood, he explains. Relating the remark of the pharisees on our Lord's disciples eating with defiled hands, he adds, that is, unwashed hands, ch. vii. 2. To Jews, or the inhabitants of Judea, this was unnecessary; but to foreigners it was proper. In like manner, when he uses the word corban, he adds, that is, a gift, ch. vii. 11. From these and other peculiarities of this gospel, it was evidently composed out of Judea, and chiefly for the benefit of gentile converts.

The Evangelist Luke has given to the church the fullest history of its founder and head. There is no ground for doubt, but that he is the person who accompanied Paul, and who wrote afterwards the Acts of the Apostles. Paul has mentioned him with the highest respect in his epistles, Col. iv. 14.; 2 Tim. iv. 11.; Phil. 24. From Acts, it appears, that he regularly attended Paul, from his voyage into Macedonia, till he was carried prisoner to Rome, whither the Evangelist also went with him. Compare Acts xx. 5. where Luke speaks of himself as with Paul, and he ever after uses the same mode of speaking.

The style of Luke proves that he was a Jew by descent; and most probably one early converted to the faith. It does not appear from what he says, that he had personally seen Christ, but had derived his knowledge from the Apostles, who had been eye and ear witnesses of what our Lord did and taught; and especially from Paul, to whom the gospel had been communicated by special revelation, Gal. i. 11. 12. Dr. Campbell thinks it highly probable, that he was a native of Antioch, the capital of Syria, where the Greek language had been long cultivated, and was generally spoken by the higher classes. If Mark wrote his gospel while Paul was a prisoner at Rome, whither Luke had accompanied him, and where he continued till the release of the Apostle, as is nearly certain, from Paul's mentioning him in the epistles which he there wrote, (Colos. iv. 14.) he could not, I think, have written his gospel sooner than A. D. 63, and most probably in Greece. Dr. H. Owen, in opposition to the uniform testimony of christian antiquity, contends that Luke's gospel was the second published, and assigns to it as early a date as A. D. 53. He has, in my opinion, failed in the attempt; and on a subject of this nature, the testimony of the christian fathers is to be preferred to any hypothetical reasoning.

It has been observed, that the language of Luke is more pure and copious, and there is more of composition in his sentences, than in those of the other Evangelists. From his profession, as a physician, he might have received a superior education; and from his intercourse with men might have derived his superior accomplishments, in the Greek language. In relating the same facts, which Matthew and Mark had related, he uses, in some instances, the same expressions, and in others, there is but little variation. "In his gospel, Luke," says Dr. Campbell, "has supplied us with many interesting particulars, which had been omitted by both his predecessors, Matthew and Mark. From him we learn whatever relates to the birth of John the baptist; the annunciation; and other important circumstances concerning the nativity of the Messiah; the occasion of Joseph's being then in Bethlehem; the vision granted the shepherds; the early testimony of Simeon and Anna; the wonderful manifestation of our Lord's proficiency in knowledge, when only twelve years old; his age at the commencement of his ministry, connected with the year of the reigning emperor. He has given us also an account of several memorable incidents and cures which had been overlooked by the rest; the conversion of Zaccheus the publican; the cure of the woman who had been bowed down for eighteen years; and of the dropsical man; the cleansing of the ten lepers; the repulse he met with when about to enter a Samaritan city; and the instructive rebuke he gave, on that occasion, to two of his disciples, for their intemperate zeal: also the affecting interview he had, after his resurrection, with two of his disciples, in the way to Emmaus, and at that village. Luke has likewise added many edifying parables to those which had been recorded by the other Evangelists. Of this number are the parable of the creditor who had two debtors; of the rich fool who hoarded up his increase, and, when he had not one day to live, vainly exulted in the prospect of many happy years; of the rich man and Lazarus; of the reclaimed prodigal; of the pharisee and the publican praying in the temple; of the judge who was prevailed on by a widow's importunity, though he feared not God, nor regarded man; of the barren fig-tree; of the compassionate Samaritan; and several others; most of which, so early a writer as Irenæus has specified as peculiarly belonging to this gospel."

On comparing these three gospels, it is clear, that one was not copied from another; for in this case, there would have been not only the same facts, but the same order. It is equally clear, that the two latter could not be translations of Matthew's Hebrew original; we must then deem them independent testimonies to the same facts, and account for the coincidences and verbal agreement from the materials they possessed*; and for the

* I have supposed that there existed written Hebrew accounts of the chief events and circumstances of our Lord's life; and also of most of variation of the order and arrangement, from the judgment of each writer, and from the circumstances and design he had in view.

Luke also wrote the Acts of the Apostles, which contains the history of the church till Paul obtained his liberty, about the year 63. He has traced the most material occurrences, during this period, and the history may be considered as a continuation of his own gospel. His information was derived from the best sources; and in regard to many transactions, he was personally concerned. This book is of the greatest value, as it shows the manner in which the Apostles fulfilled their commission, and propagated the gospel abroad.

The gospel of John, is uniformly stated to have been written the last; and he has designedly omitted most of what the others had related, with whose writings he was acquainted; and has given many interesting discourses of our Lord, at great length. It is generally admitted that John lived to an advanced age; and that one design of his gospel was to refute the errors which had already sprung up in the church. John himself mentions the Nicolaitans, (Rev. ii. 15.) a sect of the Gnostics. They introduced into the christian church, the most absurd, speculative doctrines, respecting the person of the Saviour, his works, sufferings, and resurrection. John, in consequence, begins his gospel with establishing his glory as God, and the creator of all things. He is wonderfully simple and artless in his style and manner; and every where discovers the most amiable and affectionate temper. From internal evidence he is supposed to have written, previously to the destruction of Jerusalem, his parables and moral sayings; and the introduction to Luke's gospel establishes this supposition. Every convert to christianity would be anxious to possess such accounts and narratives, and they would of course be translated into the Greek, for the use of those who spoke that language. When Matthew composed his gospel, he made use of these documents, and arranged them, and added such particulars and circumstances as had been omitted, or suited his design. Both Mark and Luke were in possession of the same accounts translated into Greek, and each so arranged them as best suited his own purpose, and added such particulars as had been communicated by the Apostles, or those who had been eye and ear witnesses of what Jesus did and said. Hence all three accounts may be expected to contain the same facts, and the two gospels written in Greek, in those places where they agree, nearly the same language, which is found to be the case. When Matthew's Hebrew gospel was translated into Greek, the translator frequently derived assistance from Mark, when he had matter in common with Matthew; and in those places, where Luke had matter in common with Matthew, he had recourse to Luke. This hypothesis accounts for the close verbal agreement, which obtains in the leading historical facts. Whenever, or by whomsoever this translation was made, it could not fail to be examined by the Apostles, and receive their sanction, if it were not made by some one of them.

Some writers suppose, that the words as well as the sentiments of the New and Old Testaments, were all inspired; and consequently, that the authors availed themselves of no sources of information, but simply wrote

(See, ch. v. 2.). In the year 70, this city was taken and in a great measure destroyed; and had John written after that event, it is natural to think he would have referred to it.

The epistles of Paul have been generally admitted genuine. When considered, in connexion with the Acts of the Apostles, there is such an undesigned coincidence, of persons, circumstances, and facts, as not only proves their genuineness, but their truth*. It is concluded from evidence contained in the Acts and epistles themselves, that they were written in the following order, according to Dr. Wall.—1. The first epistle to the Thessalonians, A. D. 54, from Corinth. "The copyers at the end of this epistle, say it was written from Athens; and the English have thought that note of theirs worth translating: But whoever reads Acts, xviii. 5. will see that it was at Corinth, that Silas and Timothy came to Paul; and they join in the epistle."—2. The second epistle to the Thessalonians, in the same year 54. from the same place.—3. The epistle to the Galatians, from Ephesus, A. D. 55.—4. The first epistle to the Corinthians, from Ephesus, A. D. 57.—5. The second epistle to the Corinthians, from the same place, in the following year.—6. The epistle to the Romans, from Corinth, A. D. 60. Usher, 58 Pearson.—7. The epistle to the Philippians, from Rome, during his imprisonment, A. D. 62.—8. 9. & 10. The three epistles to the Ephesians, Colossians, and Philemon, were written from the same place, and sent by the same person, Tychicus, during the same period. From internal evidence, it is now generally admitted, that the epistle to the Ephesians is the same as that to the

what the Holy Spirit dictated. This is a compendious method of accounting for the origin of the gospels and other historical books; but it is one which will not satisfy a mind in the least accustomed to moral evidence, nor is it reconcileable with the express declaration of Luke. He professes to write those things which were most surely believed among Christians, "even as they delivered them to us," says he, "who from the beginning were eye witnesses and ministers of the word; it seemed good to me also, having had perfect understanding of all things from the very first," &c. or, as Campbell more accurately translates, "It seemed good to me also, having exactly traced every thing from the first, to write a particular account to thee, most excellent Theophilus." From this, it appears, that Luke had used his utmost diligence in collecting information from the Apostles, the ministers of the word, who had seen and heard our Lord, and who preached the gospel under the influence of the Holy Spirit; and for the instruction of his friend and the church, he wrote these things in order. In the historical books, the authors obtained the best information, and were so far inspired as was necessary, to prevent mistakes and to relate facts as they occurred. See Dr. Herbert Marsh's Origin of the first three gospels, and Paley's Evidences.

* See Paley's Horæ Paulinæ for proof of this remark; a work of such singular merit, that no theologian should be without it. While he illustrates from the undesigned coincidences, between the epistles and the historical records in the Acts, the genuineness and authenticity of the epistles, he throws much light on the design and meaning of the epistles themselves.

INTRODUCTION.

BOOKS OF THE OLD AND NEW TESTAMENTS.

Laodiceans, and Paley considers, that the true reading is, "Laodicea"*.—11. The epistle to the Hebrews, soon after the former, in the opinion of Wall, but whether sent to the church at Jerusalem, or some other church of Judea, is not known†.—12. After Paul obtained his liberty, he travelled into various parts; and having left Timothy at Ephesus, he sent from Laodicea, the first epistle to Timothy, about A. D. 65†.—13. About the same time, he wrote the epistle to Titus, whom he left the year before in Crete.—14. Paul was again a prisoner at Rome, when he wrote the second epistle to Timothy. This last letter of the great Apostle, contains intimations, that he considered his course as now run, and that he was ready to be offered up, as the victim of persecution.

The first epistle of John, and the first of Peter, are by the consent of antiquity, admitted to be genuine. The second and third of John, and the second of Peter, as well as of James and Jude, were not so generally received. They possess, however, such internal evidence, as must satisfy any impartial inquirer, and accordingly, they have been admitted into the canon. The book of Revelations, was for some time undisputed, and as far as external authority goes, it is better supported than most others.

James, is called, the brother of our Lord, i. e. kinsman; and is said to have been the first stated bishop or pastor of the church at Jerusalem. He was eminently pious, and was called James the just. Josephus has mentioned the manner, in which Herod, to please the Jews, put him to death, in the latter end of the year 62,

* See Griesbach's Greek Test.

† This epistle was not so soon known, or admitted into the canon as the rest. As it was written to the Hebrews, and chiefly respected them, it is natural to infer, it might be some time before it was communicated to the gentile churches. On having examined the testimonies of the fathers, Lardner observes, "It is evident that this epistle was generally received, in ancient times, by those Christians who used the Greek language, and lived in the eastern parts of the Roman Empire.—In particular, Clement of Alexandria, before the end of the second century, received this epistle as Paul's, and quoted it as his frequently, and without any doubt or hesitation. This epistle is not expressly quoted as Paul's by any of the Latin authors in the first three centuries. However, it was known to Irenæus and Tertullian, and possibly to others also." Some moderns avail themselves of what Eusebius observes, that it was not universally received, and on this account they wish to diminish its authority. Two reasons appear for this, the testimonies it contains to the divinity of our Lord, and to the doctrine of the atonement. Hence some have argued from the style, against Paul being the author; but a careful examination has satisfied my mind, that it is a mere assumption. In this epistle, we find the same sentiments and expressions, which Paul had used in his other writings. Compare, Heb. i. 2. with Colos. i. 15, and Heb. ii. 7. with Philem. 2.—8.—10. and Ephe. i. 20.—22; also, Heb. v. 12. with 1 Cor. iii. 2. &c.

or the beginning of 63. The epistle might be written the year before. It is directed to the twelve tribes of Israel, or to those who dwelt among the gentiles; but I consider it as particularly referring to such as had embraced the gospel. It is wholly practical.

The first and second epistles of Peter were addressed to the Jews, scattered through Pontus, Galatia, Cappadocia, Asia, and Bithynia. It is evident, from the design of the first epistle, that those to whom it is directed, were in a state of suffering and persecution; and some think it was written about the same time with the above. The second is supposed to have been written just before the breaking out of the Jewish war, A. D. 66. "That this second epistle of St. Peter was not at first received in the church of Christ, with so universal agreement and consent as the former, may be concluded from what Eusebius has recorded, that it was not received by all. But notwithstanding, there are great and sure evidences of this epistle being written by the acknowledged author of it, as First. The title of "Simon Peter," with the addition of "an Apostle of Jesus Christ," (ch. i. 1.) Second, There is a whole passage in this epistle (ch. i. 16, 17.) which doth signally belong to Peter, that of having been on the holy mount with Christ, and hearing those words, "This is my beloved son," &c. which certainly belongs to the transfiguration, Matt. ch. xvii. where only Peter and James and John were present with Christ. Third, This is said to be a second epistle, (ch. iii. 1.) written much to the same purpose with the former. Fourth, St. Jude speaking (v. 18.) "Of the scoffers that should come," &c. cites that prediction from the Apostles of our Lord Jesus (v. 17.) where it is reasonable to believe that this epistle (ch. iii. 3.) is referred to; for in it those very words are met with (and are not so in any other apostolic writing) "Knowing this first," &c. Compare Jude 17. & 18. with 2 epis. Pet. iii. 3. All this in all copies stands unmoved to secure the authority of this epistle, and to convince us of the author of it."

The epistle of Jude, is thought to refer to the second of Peter, (v. 17.) and of course was written after it. He calls himself the brother of James. Wall supposes he was the youngest of the four sons of Alpheus, James, and Joses, and Simon and Judas. It might be written soon after the above, about the year 70.

The epistles of John, are thought to have been written as late as the year 90. The first breathes the spirit and manner of the Evangelist; the two latter are directed to two pious individuals, and the sameness of style, would justify us in considering John the author, had we no other testimony.

The Revelations were communicated to John in the isle of Patmos, and contain the last divine revelations.

given to the church. They are with the greatest probability, supposed to have been given about the year 96.

The four gospels and the epistles were communicated by one church to another, and were most of them read, and commented on in the churches on the Lord's day. Some of them are quoted or alluded to by Clement of Rome, by Hermas, by Ignatius, by Polycarp, disciples and cotemporaries with the Apostles; and by every christian writer that followed, in the next age; by Justin Martyr, Irenæus, Theophilus, Clement of Alexandria, Tertullian, and others. Tertullian refers to the churches, as then possessing the very letters, which Paul addressed to them. He bids "any one, who is willing to exercise his curiosity profitably in the business of his salvation, to visit the apostolical churches, in which their very authentic letters are recited, ipsæ authenticæ literæ eorum recitantur." Then he goes on: "Is Achaia near you? You have Corinth. If you are not far from Macedonia, you have Philippi, you have Thessalonica. If you can go to Asia, you have Ephesus; but if you are near to Italy, you have Rome."

Little more than seventy years after the death of our Lord, nearly the whole of the canonical books were translated into Syriac, which still remains. The accurate Lardner observes, "In the remaining works of Irenæus, Clement of Alexandria, and Tertullian, there are perhaps more and larger quotations of the small volume of the New Testament, than of all the works of Cicero, in the writings of all characters for several ages."

Having stated according to the best evidence extant, the manner and the time when the books of the New Testament were published, we may justly infer, that nothing can be brought to invalidate, either their genuineness or authenticity. As far as the authority of external testimony goes, it is wholly in their favour, without any direct opposing testimony. In the epistle of Barnabas, the companion of Paul, the gospel of Matthew is quoted, "Many are called, but few chosen." In that of Clement of Rome, (Philip. iv. 3.) we have several passages of our Lord's sermon on the mount, quoted. In the writings of Hermas and Ignatius, the former mentioned (Rom. xvi. 14.) and latter bishop of Antioch, about thirty-seven years after our Lord's ascension, there is distinct references to three of the gospels, and the Acts of the Apostles. Polycarp, bishop of Smyrna, alludes to the Lord's prayer, and to the Acts; and Papias, a companion of Polycarp, expressly ascribes two gospels to Matthew and Mark; and informs us that the first was written in Hebrew, and that Mark wrote his from Peter's preaching.

There is strong reason to believe, that within forty years after the ascension, the evangelists and the chief part of the epistles were collected together, and read and commented on, in the christian churches, as the law and the prophets were in the Jewish synagogues. Ignatius, contrasts the gospel, with the prophets. "Ye ought," says he, "to hearken to the prophets, but especially to the gospel, in which the passion has been manifested to us, and the resurrection perfected." In this passage, the prophets and the gospel are put in conjunction; and as Ignatius undoubtedly meant by the prophets a collection of writings, it is probable that he meant the same by the gospel, the two terms standing in evident parallelism with each other." Eusebius relates, that Quadratus, and some others, who were the immediate successors of the Apostles, travelling abroad to preach Christ, delivered to their converts, The scripture of the divine gospels. Polycarp, styles the christian records, the Holy scriptures, and the Oracles of the Lord. As christianity spread, a number of writers appeared, some as its apologists, as Tertullian and Justin Martyr; others as illustrating its doctrines and enforcing its precepts.

Supposing the books of the New Testament the mere invention of men, and the facts they relate respecting the person of Jesus Christ, to be without foundation, it is difficult, nay impossible, to account for the rise, spread and duration of christianity in the world. General experience supports the remark, that on no subject are men, in general, more indisposed and disinclined to entertain and cordially receive a new sentiment, than on religion. What they have been accustomed to hold sacred, they are unwilling to consider foolish or criminal. However absurd their opinions and practices may be, when regarded as a part of their religion, they are maintained with the warmest zeal; and all the influence of previous and long-accustomed habits will be in their favour. And if vice has been consecrated, and sensual pleasure made a part of what men deem religion, a new system which requires the sacrifice of vice, and enforces the practice of the most exalted virtues, will be sure to meet with the most strenuous opposition.

At the period, when the Saviour appeared, the Jews, according to their own historian, and the testimony of Heathens, were become exceedingly depraved in their principles and practice. They had lost the genuine spirit of the religion which they professed; they had nearly subverted the authority of the law and the prophets, by adopting the most forced expositions, which they called the traditions of the elders. Infidelity, hypocrisy, avarice, and oppression, prevailed. A tyrannical aristocracy; a wordly and profligate priesthood; and a people devoted to the grossest vices, formed the Jewish state. Still they had the law and the prophets; and they continued to be read in their synagogues. With all their vices, they entertained juster notions of the divine nature and perfections than the heathens. They maintained the spirituality, purity and holiness of God; while the heathens had gods innumerable, to whom they ascribed, not only the passions and infirmities, but the vices of men. One of their gods was guilty of parricide; another of infanticide; another of unnatural lust, ravishing his own sister; another was addicted to theft, &c. Of these gods they had images continually before their eyes; and it is more easy to conceive, than fit to describe, the moral, or rather, the immoral state of the people.

Were the christian records merely the invention of artful and designing men, how could it have been possible to persuade either Jews or Heathens to become Christians? It cannot be denied that these books contain doctrines and precepts, wholly opposed to the known prejudices, sentiments and practices of both those classes of men. In regard to the Jews; they looked for a Messiah, who was to liberate them from subjection to a foreign yoke, and raise them to the highest degree of temporal power and grandeur. This had become the popular hope and passion; and how mortifying to them must the claim of one whom they regarded as a poor Galilean, have been? By his doctrine, their religious ritual and ceremonies were represented as of no intrinsic importance, and unless accompanied with faith, purity of heart, and integrity of life, unavailable in the sight of God. Another part of the christian doctrine was equally opposed to Jewish pride and prejudices, that the Gentiles should enjoy equal privileges with them under the Messiah's reign. They viewed all other nations as unclean, and rejected of God; nor could any thing be more galling, than to be told that the kingdom of God should be taken from them, and set up among the Gentiles; that men should come from the east and west and sit down with Abraham in the kingdom, while they should be cast out.

In the same manner was the christian doctrine opposed to the opinions and prejudices of the Heathens. They had gods many and lords many; and were ready to admit any new god to a place in their pantheon. The christian doctrine on this point was opposed to every article of their mythology; it denied the very existence of every object of their worship. It taught that an idol was nothing but an imagination. It is evident that such a sentiment must have tended to overthrow every statue, altar and temple in the world; and how could a doctrine like this prevail, unless founded in truth, and supported by such evidence of its divine origin, as must have been most convincing to those who embraced it?

Were men induced to become Christians by the prospect of temporal gain? Were riches and honours the consequence of embracing christianity? No; "this was a sect every where spoken against;" and Christians had nothing to expect, but reproaches, insults and persecutions. Were men compelled to become Christians by civil authority, or the power of the sword? No; the only arms its first propagators used, were those of truth, patience and submission. During a considerable part of the first three centuries, Christians had to endure whatever the malice of Jews and Heathens could inflict. The civil power was exerted in every way to induce them to renounce christianity, and to conform to the established and prevailing superstition. They were plundered of their property, many were banished, many immured in prisons, and great numbers tortured and put to death in the most painful manner.

The arguments in proof of the reality and certainty of the christian doctrine, derived from these sufferings, undergone only on account of their testimony to Jesus, and their adherence to him, are strong and decisive. When was it found that men, without any temporal interest, and in the face of the most formidable difficulties, persisted in a scheme of falsehood? The christian records only assign adequate causes of the effects, which are acknowledged to exist; and from them we see why the first Christians choose rather to suffer than to be silent, or to deny their Lord. The objects then which usually influence the human mind are here out of question; and it must be admitted, either that the first Christians acted contrary to the known principles of human nature, or that the facts they believed, on the evidence of their own senses, were true. To admit the former supposition is to admit a miracle; for what is a miracle, but a fact, above, or contrary to, the usual course of nature? To admit the latter, is to admit that christianity is founded in truth.

The facts contained in the New Testament were the continual topics, on which the apostles of our Lord dwelt in their public ministry; and if these facts were not true, doubtless their enemies would not have failed to expose them; as they could not have wanted either the inclination or the opportunity. The books of Christians were not locked up, but alike accessible to friends and to foes. Curiosity, as well as a desire to invalidate their authority, must have stimulated the latter to peruse them; and had they not been supported by the most decisive evidence, we should have had refutations without end. After a lapse of more than a century, an attempt was made, not to prove that the christian records were a mere fiction, but to account for the miracles they contained, from the supposed powers of magic. The christian records, could not, therefore, be a cunningly devised fable; but must have been allowed to contain a faithful narrative of facts, which courted the strictest scrutiny, and which did not admit of refutation.

These three circumstances support both the genuineness and authenticity of the books of the New Testament.—First, The recognition of the facts, doctrines, and precepts they contain, by a series of succeeding writers;—Secondly, The total absence of any account of the origin of christianity substantially different;—Thirdly, The early and extensive prevalence of rites and institutions, founded on the facts and doctrines contained in the christian records.

Admitting the authenticity of the New Testament, we cannot reasonably doubt that of the books of the Old. The Evangelists and Apostles appeal to them, and often quote largely from them. We have in their writings, references to most of the books of the Old Testament: to the five books of Moses, to Joshua, Judges, Samuel, Kings, Chronicles, Job; the Psalms, Proverbs, and the Prophets. Independently of this evidence, we have a translation of these books into the Greek language, made, at least in part, in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, more than two hundred and fifty years before the christian era. The Samaritans, who were opposed to the Jews in many things, retained the law, or the five books of Moses, in the old Hebrew character, which the Jews used, prior to their captivity in Babylon. This carries us back a considerable period; and the existence of the Samaritan Pentateuch, and the version of the Seventy, incontestibly prove, that the authenticity of the books of the Old Testament, were then admitted.

The books of Moses contain the civil and religious institutions of the Jewish nation, and the body of their laws; and it cannot admit of doubt, that their civil polity, and religious ritual and conduct, were regulated by these laws. Their whole history proves this; and the unvarying testimony of Greek and Roman writers, corroborates the fact.

On examining the books of the Old and New Testaments, we find all the marks of genuineness and authenticity, which we could expect. The writers make no attempts to adorn, by the enticing words of human wisdom, the facts which they relate; they state them with the greatest simplicity and brevity, often without any remarks; and thus they give us in a few sentences, what a Greek or Roman writer, would have swelled into as many pages. Whether they describe the virtues or the faults of men, they adopt this method, and leave the reader to make his own reflections. In the didactic and moral part of these writings, we have the noblest sentiments, delivered in the most perspicuous manner. The writers detail their own faults, with as much freedom as those of others. So far as we are acquainted with them, they seem to have been equally unawed by power, and uninfluenced by ambition, honour, or riches.

to believe the writers of the gospel, by observing the evidences of piety and probity that appear in their writings, in which there is no deceit, or artifice, or design.’ ‘No remarks,’ as Dr. Beattie hath properly said, ‘are thrown in, to anticipate objections; nothing of that caution, which never fails to distinguish the testimony of those who are conscious of imposture; no endeavour to reconcile the reader’s mind to what may be extraordinary in the narrative.’”

“I beg leave to cite another author*, who has well expressed the reflection which the examples now brought forward were intended to suggest. ‘It doth not appear that ever it came into the mind of these writers, to consider how this or the other action would appear to mankind, or what objections might be raised upon them. But without at all attending to this, they lay the facts before you, at no pains to think whether they would appear credible or not. If the reader will not believe their testimony, there is no help for it: they tell the truth, and attend to nothing else.†’”

CHAPTER II.

On the Inspiration of the Holy Scriptures.

INSPIRATION consisted in a supernatural influence on the human mind, elevating and directing its natural powers, and imparting such truths, and such knowledge of God’s will, as could not be otherwise attained. Inspiration must, from its very nature, have been personal, and the inspired person must have been fully assured of it from his own consciousness. Inspiration included both the divine influence, and the effect of it, in the communications or discoveries made; and these communications and discoveries, when embodied in language, constituted a divine revelation. A revelation indeed might be made, without inspiration. God might, and from scripture we know he actually did, assume some form, and make known his will to men; or without any form, speak in human language, as at the giving of the law, and on many other occasions. In these cases, the discoveries made, would be of the same nature and deserve the same regard, as truths directly inspired.

From this statement, it appears, that inspiration was miraculous. An uncommon influence was exerted, and knowledge imparted, without the intervention of the usual means. How was it possible for the inspired person to convince others, that God had inspired him; and that the truths he announced were divine revelations? Such a pretension would be regarded with suspicion, as being contrary to general experience; and without some sensible, evident proof of divine power and influence, would command no respect, nor produce any beneficial effects. If the inspired person should work miracles, or should miracles be wrought at his word, this must, with all reasonable men, establish his claim; for it would be absurd to suppose the God of truth would give his sanction to falsehood and imposture. As a miracle is an effect above the power of created beings to produce, and a deviation from the laws or course of nature, it is the strongest and most convincing proof of the agency of God. Nicodemus reasoned justly, when he said to our Lord, "We know that thou art a teacher come from God: for no man can do these miracles that thou doest, except God be with him."

Inspiration has been properly divided into that of superintendence and that of suggestion. "The former implies such a divine influence on the mind, as to secure the person who speaks or writes, from error, in the statement of facts, or the declaration of any doctrine." It cannot be denied, that such an influence is possible. Such an influence as this, is also consistent with the free exercise of the person's own faculties; so that he would express himself in his own usual manner, in words and phrases, to which he had been accustomed. Such an inspiration, the writers of the historical books of the holy scriptures enjoyed; so that what they wrote, contained only truth, though expressed in their own style. And though they availed themselves of well authenticated documents, and the oral testimony of honest and competent witnesses, yet, in arranging these materials, and stating circumstances, they enjoyed this superintending inspiration.

From the Acts, it is evident, that the Apostles and other disciples, were in a most wonderful manner, inspired by the Holy Spirit. They were originally Galilean fishermen; and their circumstances must have precluded any literary advantages. They attended the ministry of Jesus, but they had no opportunity of acquiring the knowledge of any foreign language. How then was it possible for these men to speak at once in various languages, unless they had been inspired? Whoever reflects on the nature of language, must be sensible, that there could, in this, be no collusion. When the multitude heard the disciples speaking and praising God, each in his own tongue, well might they be amazed, and say, "Are not all these who speak, Galileans?" The gift of tongues was essentially necessary in their circumstances, to spread the doctrines of their Lord and Saviour; and the power of conferring this gift seems to have been bestowed on the Apostles. Hence, those who went forth to preach the gospel, were, by this supernatural gift, qualified for the work, and with the strictest truth, the Apostle might say, that the gospel was preached, "not in the enticing words of human wisdom, but in demonstration of the spirit."

If inspiration were necessary to those who first preached the gospel; and if the preachers assert that they enjoyed it, it is not reasonable to suppose, that those Apostles and Evangelists, who wrote the life, and stated and illustrated the doctrines of our Lord, should be considered as having been unaided in this important work. The interests of christianity were involved in the accuracy, faithfulness, and truth of their writings, and had they not enjoyed as full an inspiration as was necessary, their writings would have been of less authority than their oral testimony. Examine their writings, and, unless I am greatly deceived, their agreement in the facts they record; their harmony in doctrinal sentiments, in moral precepts, directions, cautions, and exhortations to duty, will produce the fullest conviction, that they wrote under the influence of the same Spirit. In short, the excellence of the doctrines delivered in their writings; their elevation, holiness, and spirituality; their obvious tendency to raise the moral state of man, and to promote his happiness, demonstrate their divine origin.

As the miracles which the Saviour wrought, demonstrated his divine mission; so those of the Apostles and Disciples support the inspiration and truth of their writings. Those, to whose writings we are most indebted, wrought miracles, and by this, clearly evinced, that they were under a special, divine influence. "Consider Peter, as striking Ananias and Sapphira dead with a word; as curing, by the like powerful word, one cripple at Jerusalem and another at Lydda, and calling back Dorcas, even from the dead. Let us view him in that grand circumstance, of being marked out so particularly by an angel to Cornelius, and sent to him as the oracle of God himself, from whom that worthy and honourable person was to hear words, by which he and all his house should be saved; and after this, let us view him, as once more 'delivered out of the hand of Herod, and from all the expectation of the Jews,' by an angel, who struck off his chains, and opened the doors of the prison, the very night before he was to have been executed. And let any one, with these particulars in his eye, say, what more could be necessary to prove the divine inspiration of what he taught, so far as inspiration was requisite to render it entirely authentic; or let any one farther say, upon what imaginable pretence, the authority of his writings can be denied, if that of his preaching be granted."

"And to mention no more, let Paul, that great 'scribe instructed in the kingdom of heaven,' to whose pen we owe so many invaluable epistles, be considered in the same view; and let us endeavour to impress our minds with the various scenes through which we know he passed, and the distinguishing favours with which his Master honoured him, that we may judge, how we are to receive the instructions of his pen. Let us therefore think of him, as so miraculously called by the voice of Christ, to the profession of the gospel, when he was persecuting it even to the death; as receiving a full and distinct revelation of that glorious, but to him quite unknown gospel, by the immediate inspiration of its divine author, which is a fact he expressly witnesses, and in which he could not possibly be mistaken. Think of the lustre of those astonishing works which shone round him wherever he went, and of those wrought in his favour, which shewed him so eminently the care of heaven; dæmons ejected; distempers cured, sometimes with a touch, and sometimes without, by a garment sent from him to the patient; his motions guided from place to place by a divine oracle; Elymas struck blind for opposing him; his bands loosed by an earthquake: his strength and vigour instantaneously restored, when the rage of the mutable and barbarous populace at Lystra had stoned him and left him for dead; and to add no more, his safety in a shipwreck, with that of near three hundred more in the same vessel for his sake, promised by an angel, and accomplished without the loss of a single person, when they had expected nothing but an universal ruin. Let us, I say, think of Paul in these circumstances; and with these facts full in our view, let us judge, whether it is probable, yea, whether it be morally possible, that a man, sent out and attended with such credentials as these, should be so left of God, amidst all these tokens of his constant care, as to mingle error with sound doctrine, and his own fancies with the divine revelations, which we are sure he received; or whether, if he were not left to such effects of human frailty in his preaching, but might have been regarded by his hearers with entire credit, he would be left to them in those writings, by which he was (as it were) to preach to all future generations of men, from one end of the world to the other, and by which, 'being dead, he yet speaketh,' in all languages, and to all christian assemblies."

John is associated with Peter, in the cure of the impotent man, Acts, iii. 3, 4.; and to him Jesus appeared in the isle of Patmos, and made use of him as his amanuensis, expressly dictating to him the letters he was to send to the seven churches of Asia. Is it possible then to think, that he was not under an inspiration of superintendency, or of suggestion, when he wrote his gospel and his epistles?

The sacred writers expressly assert such a divine inspiration. Thus Paul to the Corinthians, (1 Cor. ii. 10.) "But God hath revealed them to us by the Spirit; for the Spirit searcheth all things, even the deep things of God.' And again, (ver. 12.) 'We have received, not the Spirit of the world,' so as to act in that artful way which a regard to secular advantages dictates; 'but the Spirit which is of God, that we may know the things that are freely given us of God.' Now, it is natural to conclude from hence, that this knowledge being given them not merely or chiefly for themselves, but for the church, (in which view they speak of themselves and their office as the gift of God to the church; compare Eph. iv. 11, 12; and 1 Cor. iii. 21—23.) they should be assisted to communicate it in a proper manner; since otherwise the end of God in giving it to them would be frustrated. But the Apostle does not content himself with barely suggesting this, but he asserts in the most express terms; (1 Cor. ii. 13.) 'Which things also we speak, not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth,' that is, not with a vain ostentation of human eloquence, 'but which the Holy Ghost teacheth; comparing spiritual things with spiritual,' or as some would render and paraphrase it, 'adapting spiritual expressions to spiritual things.' And in the close of the chapter, when with a noble freedom, in a consciousness of the distinguished character he bore, he puts the question to the whole world besides; 'Who hath known the mind of the Lord?' he adds, 'but we have the mind of Christ.' In his first epistle to the Thessalonians, the first he ever wrote, he ventures to say, "he that despiseth," that is, (as the context plainly implies,) he that despiseth or rejecteth what I now write, 'despiseth not man,' only or chiefly, 'but God who hath given us his Holy Spirit.' "In his epistle to the Galatians, the Apostle solemnly assures them, (Gal. i. 11, 12.) that 'the gospel which he had preached' among them was 'not after man,' that is, not of any human original; and he gives this substantial proof of it, 'that he was himself taught it,' no otherwise than 'by the' immediate 'revelation of Jesus Christ.'

Peter also insists "that the gospel was preached with the Holy Spirit sent from heaven." (1 Pet. i. 12.) And John speaks under the strongest conviction of the Apostles and Evangelists being under a divine influence, "We are of God: he that knoweth God, heareth us; he that is not of God, heareth not us: hereby know we the spirit of truth, and the spirit of error." (1 John, iv. 6.)

These writers represent their Lord and Saviour, while he was yet with them, as giving them power to effect miraculous cures and other wonders, in his name; and also as promising, that after his departure from them, he would send them the "Spirit of truth." "Nevertheless, I tell you the truth; It is expedient for you that I go away: for if I go not away, the Comforter will not come unto you; but if I depart, I will send him unto you."

ON THE INSPIRATION OF THE HOLY SCRIPTURES.

(John, xvi. 7.) And he promised that this Spirit should abide with them for ever—that he should guide them into all truth, and show them things to come. In a word, he promised that this spirit should qualify them to bear testimony concerning him, and to preach his gospel, without danger of mistake or error. “But when the Comforter is come, whom I will send unto you from the Father, even the Spirit of truth, which proceedeth from the Father, he shall testify of me: and ye also shall bear witness, because ye have been with me from the beginning.” (John, xv. 26, 27.) “But the Comforter, which is the Holy Ghost, whom the Father will send in my name, he shall teach you all things, and bring all things to your remembrance, whatsoever I have said unto you.” (John, xiv. 26.)

If the Apostles and Evangelists did not receive this Spirit, and were not divinely inspired in their preaching and writing, they furnished their enemies with an argument to prove that Jesus was a deceiver; but their writings show us that our Lord fulfilled, in the most ample manner, the promises which he had made. Under the influence of this “Spirit of truth,” their mistakes respecting the nature of our Lord’s kingdom were corrected; their timidity was converted into a holy boldness; and they displayed, through the whole course of their ministry, a wisdom truly heavenly, a fortitude, patience, meekness, love, and zeal suitable to the cause they advocated, and according with the example of their Lord and Saviour.

Collateral proof of the inspiration of the New Testament, may be derived from a comparison of these writings with the spurious writings handed down to us, under the name of the Apostles. Let any man read the gospel of Nicodemus, of the Egyptians, or the remains of that of the Ebionites, and compare them with those of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John; and if he possess any judgment, he will not hesitate to conclude, that while the latter possess all the characters of truth, and are worthy of the high claims which they maintain, the former contain ridiculous stories, in language and style below notice.

The belief of the first Christians in the divine authority of the scriptures; the regard they paid to them, and the care with which they read and transcribed them, furnish a strong presumptive proof of their genuineness, authenticity, and inspiration*. They found here recorded the facts and doctrines taught them by the Apostles, and the first christian preachers; and thus their faith would be strengthened. On the doctrines taught by our Lord and his Apostles, and contained in the writings of the New Testament, the christian church was founded; and on the preservation of these, its purity, perpetuity, and safety depended. If our Lord intended that his kingdom should continue among men; that the great purposes of his divine mission, sufferings and death should be accomplished, it was necessary, either that the power of miracles should be continued to his disciples, or, that they should leave behind them, written records of whatever was requisite for faith and practice, and that these records should contain nothing but the truth; or in other words, that they should be sanctioned by divine authority. Such authority was at first admitted; and on the same authority Christians now build their faith and their hopes.

The second kind of inspiration is that of suggestion; “in which God by his Spirit speaks directly to the mind, making such discoveries, as could not otherwise be in any manner known.” Thus, if a man was to give a just account of what another did at a distance, at any given moment, it must be evident that this was given to him, by an inspiration of suggestion. In like manner, if a man declare what will come to pass in any future period, and the event happen accordingly, he must be under the influence of the same kind of inspiration. For instance, should a man inform us that a person of such a name shall exist a hundred or a thousand years hence—that he shall obtain power, and reign over such a kingdom, and vanquish the surrounding nations; and should it happen accordingly, who could doubt but that this had been revealed to him? In the New Testament we have many instances of this inspiration. Indeed, every prediction of future events and every revelation of doctrines and truths, which unfold what are the designs of the divine wisdom and mercy, come under this species of inspiration. When the inspired person was to commit such discoveries to writing, that of superintendence was necessary to preserve him from mistake or error. Hence both kinds were, doubtless, often united†.

The marks and evidences of inspiration, in the books of the New Testament, are equally manifest in those of the Old. The prophetic books contain many singular predictions of events which were to happen at distant periods, and which in the New Testament are said to be fulfilled. The prophets were extraordinary and divinely authorized teachers in Israel. Whether they rebuked the people for their sins, and threatened them with deserved judgment, or exhorted them to repentance and promised them forgiveness and remission, they spoke "in the name of the Lord." In their writings, there is a frequent reference to the future Saviour; his incarnation and his miraculous birth—his family—his poverty—his miracles—his sufferings—his death—his resurrection—his kingdom and glory are described with an accuracy which defies misapplication. Circumstances the most minute are noticed; and, though the Jews have rejected our Lord as the Messiah, they still apply the same prophecies to him, whom they expect. Of the inspiration of the prophets, in the highest sense, there can be no doubt; unless it can be proved that they wrote after the events, which it is pretended they predicted; but this is impossible, as the Jews would never have supplied arguments in favour of christianity.

* “The attachment of the early Christians to the word of God was exceedingly strong, and manifested itself in various ways, according to the circumstances and inclinations of different persons. Women wore it hanging at their necks. Children were trained up from their infancy to repeat it by heart. Most persons carried it about with them. Some washed their hands before they took it up to read. And many have been found buried with the gospel lying on their breasts.” (Fleury. Mœurs des Chrétiens, sec. 7.)

† God, in communicating his will, spoke at various times and in various manners to the fathers, by the prophets. Sometimes in a dream. Compare, Gen. xv. 12—15, & xxviii. 12—17, and other places. Sometimes in a vision. By this term is meant, such a representation to the mind, of things, distant or future, as occupied and abstracted it from all other things. In a dream, the person was asleep; but in a vision, awake. The prophets in general received the divine will in the latter method. Compare, Ezek. viii. Sometimes the word of Jehovah came to the prophet in an audible voice, and he was expressly told what to speak or do. Compare, 1 Sam. iii. 1. &c. It is probable this was the case when the prophets assert that, “Thus saith the Lord.”

In regard to the Psalms, some are prophetic; others didactic, and others only commemorative. The Proverbs and Ecclesiastes, contain maxims of prudence and wisdom. The evident design and tendency of these writings, establish their claim to a divine inspiration, either of superintendence or of suggestion. The same view may be taken of the Historical books. We may also add, that our Lord affirms their divine authority; and he directs his hearers to search them.

As to the writings of Moses, they have the highest authority. God spoke to him with an audible voice, "as a man speaketh with his friend." Empowered to deliver an enslaved people from their oppressors, and to conduct them to a land which God had promised to their fathers that he would give to them; he wrought many miracles, and established his claim to a divine mission, by the most decisive evidence. After he had led the people out of Egypt, he conducted them to Mount-Horeb; and there God gave him the laws, which the people were to keep. God himself, in the hearing of the whole assembly, from the top of Sinai, uttered the decalogue; but the people were so alarmed, that they entreated that Moses might be their mediator, and speak to them what God in future commanded, and they would hear.

On considering the laws of Moses, in respect to civil polity or religion, they are so peculiar, that little doubt can be entertained of their divine origin. On these laws the Jewish state was founded, and continued with little interruption, for a period of more than fifteen hundred years. The prophets refer to these laws as of divine origin, and our Lord and his Apostles, in like manner. We may then conclude, that the writings which Jews and Christians deem sacred, are not only genuine and authentic, but in the sense explained, divinely inspired. They mutually illustrate and support each other. As the leading facts recorded by the Evangelists are referred to by subsequent writers of the New Testament, so the facts contained in Genesis and the other books of Moses, are alluded to by all the following writers. The miracles wrought in Egypt; the descent of God on Sinai; the giving of the law; the idolatry of the golden calf; the rebellion of Dathan and his associates; the manner in which the people were fed in the desert; their subsequent entrance into the land of Canaan; and the manner in which it was divided among the tribes, constituted a never-failing theme of admonition to the people or of praise to God, by the prophets. Their very language and imagery are derived from these events.

We may fairly, and in all reason, incontrovertibly infer, the inspiration of the holy scriptures, from a comparison with the writings of the most enlightened and polished Heathens. The Jews were never celebrated for their attainment in science or literature. We have reason to believe, that they never carried the arts to any high degree of perfection. Solomon, in erecting the temple, and in accomplishing his other works, availed himself of the superior skill of the Tyrians, and probably of other neighbours. The Jews were employed in agriculture, a calling, which, while it furnishes the means of subsistence, does not require, or call forth the active and inventive powers of the human mind. A people devoted to the labours and toils of agriculture, have neither leisure, means nor inclination, to indulge in speculation; to investigate the laws of matter or the properties of mind. Content with the produce of their lands and flocks, their vine-yards and olive-yards, they remain nearly stationary in the arts and speculative sciences.

Such being the general state and character of the Jews, from their origin down to their dispersion, the question forces itself on the mind, how did this people attain such just notions of the divine nature; of the unity, spirituality, omnipotence, omniscience, and other natural and moral perfections of God? How did they discover the Creator in his works, and inform others that he made the world and governed it? Are these things so evident, that men in the lowest state of mental culture, perceive and understand them? Why then has not pure theism every where prevailed? It is well known, that the reverse is the fact; and that men have, in every age and country, where divine revelation has not been enjoyed, worshipped the creature, and not the creator. Will it be said, that they received these just and noble sentiments from Abraham? The question still recurs, whence did he receive them? To say by tradition from his fathers, will not satisfy the enquirer after truth. For why did not others secure and retain the same truths, in the same manner?

Will it be said that Moses by the force of his own genius, aided by the learning of Egypt, discovered these truths, and founding his civil and religious polity on them, perpetuated them among that people? It may readily be granted, that Moses possessed great powers of mind, and that these were improved by the literature of Egypt; but this supposes that the Egyptians also possessed great powers of mind; and how is it, that so far from acknowledging the unity and perfections of the divine nature, they were the most degraded, for worshipping the vilest idols? Had Moses received no instruction but from the Egyptians, from the penetration, genius and force of his mind, he might, like Homer, have written an epic poem, and converted the Egyptian pantheon into the machinery of it, but there is no reason to think that his ideas would have excelled those of the Grecian bard.

In short, the just sentiments respecting the divine nature, good and evil, providence, the state and condition of man; his civil, social and relative duties; his accountability, and final state, scattered through every part of the holy scriptures, clearly prove, that the authors were inspired; or else we must admit, what must be deemed altogether miraculous, that shepherds, herdsmen, and Galilean fishermen, without literature, possessed wisdom and made discoveries in moral science unattainable, and I may say, unattainable by all the heathen sages of the east and west, north and south. It has already appeared, that the sacred writers ascribed all their knowledge to divine influence; they asserted that Jehovah spoke by them, and that his word was on their tongues. It remains for those who deny their divine inspiration, to account for their attainments, which has not yet, and I am confident, on their principles, never will be done.

Another argument may be derived from the harmony of the sacred writers. From Moses to the close of revelation, elapsed a period of above fifteen hundred years; and the sacred authors lived and wrote at successive intervals. In matters of opinion, we find one writer differing from another; and each controverting the reasoning of his antagonist. The sentiments of one age are exploded by the following; and on a variety of interesting subjects, the human mind is kept in suspense. The schools of philosophers were only the arenas, where the masters and scholars exercised their powers in opposing one another; and after an impartial person has read all that they have said on religion and morals, he will be constrained to admit, that they have done little more than 'darken counsel, by words without knowledge.'

Go to the sacred scriptures; examine them closely and critically. Can you find one writer controverting the statements or opinions of his predecessor? One historian, who disputes any fact which another had stated? Is there in the prophets, any discrepancy in doctrines, precepts, or predictions? However they vary in style or manner of illustration, the sentiment, and the morality is the same. In their predictions, they exceed one another, in particularity and clearness; but where is there any contradiction? The same remarks apply to the New Testament. Whence then arises this harmony of scripture? Had the writers been under no peculiar, divine influence, they would have reasoned and speculated like others, and their writings would have opposed each other. But if they were inspired, if they all spoke and wrote under the influence of the same spirit, then is this harmony accounted for, and it is, I presume, impossible to account for it on any other principle. Hence, we may conclude, that all scripture, is not only genuine and authentic, but divinely inspired, "and is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction, for instruction in righteousness: that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works."

CHAPTER III.

History of the formation of the original Texts, and the means of improving them.

IN proportion to the intrinsic excellence, relative importance, and high claims of the holy scriptures, should be our care to obtain as correct, original texts, as present circumstances and means will admit. The Hebrew scriptures are unquestionably the most ancient extant; and they must have undergone many transcriptions, previously to the christian æra. It is natural to conclude, that the five books of Moses, as containing the law given to the Israelites, detailing their history, recording events the most interesting to them as a nation, would be most frequently transcribed and copied. The ten commandments were written or cut in stone, and deposited in the ark, which from this, was called the ark of the testimony. It is most probable, that the whole of the books were written on skins prepared for the purpose; for the account of the tabernacle proves that the Israelites then understood the art of tanning and preparing skins, for various purposes. Valuable Hebrew manuscripts, written on skins or leather, are still in existence.

In transcribing any work of such a length as the Pentateuch, it is next to impossible to avoid errors of various kinds; and unless the manuscript should be most carefully revised and corrected, these errors would be transmitted to posterity. There is every reason to believe that the Jews used great care in transcribing their sacred books; and that previously to the Babylonish captivity, and while the Hebrew language continued to be their native tongue, they were preserved in a considerable degree of purity and perfection. In a living language, errors committed in writing, are sooner perceived and more easily corrected, than in a dead language.

During the captivity, they gradually lost their own language, and acquired the Chaldee, that of the people among whom they lived. This may be considered as a kindred dialect of the Hebrew, having many words in common; but its inflections and structure are different; so that a person speaking the Chaldee would not understand one speaking the Hebrew. On the return of the Jews from Babylon to their own country, and the restoration of their civil and religious polity, it became necessary for their learned men to translate the Hebrew scriptures into the language which the people then spoke; and in reading the law, they first read a verse or sentence in Hebrew, and then gave the sense in Chaldee. It is supposed that this gave origin to the full point, called soph passuck.

Ezra, the priest and scribe, or one most skilful in the Hebrew language, and distinguished by his knowledge of the law, is said to have collected and revised the books of Moses, the prophets, and other sacred writings. On this occasion, the holy scriptures were most probably written in the Chaldee square character, to which the Jews had become accustomed, and which they have continued to use ever since. Their old alphabet, now called the Samaritan, fell into pretty general disuse among them, while the Samaritans still retained it, and have transmitted it down to posterity, together with the Pentateuch, which book only they received as divine.

The collection of the sacred books made by Ezra, could not contain the whole of the Jewish canon. The learned Dean Prideaux, supposes that the two books of Chronicles, Ezra, Nehemiah, Esther, and Malachi, were added to the canon after the time of Ezra, probably about the time of Simon the just. He founds this opinion on the genealogies in Chronicles, being carried down to a period long after the time of Ezra, and that Nehemiah and Malachi are also much later. I agree in the opinion, except in relation to the two books of Chronicles, which seem to have been revised at the same period with the rest; and I suspect that the genealogies were afterwards continued. It has been supposed, that Ezra inserted some of those remarks in the Pentateuch and historical books, which appear explanatory; such as giving the modern names of places, when the old ones had become obsolete; and occasionally adding after a new name, which is so called to this day *.

On the resettlement of the Jews in their own land, a plan was adopted for the general instruction of the people. Synagogues were built in the towns; and on the sabbath, the people assembled there to hear the law read. The law, or five books of Moses, was divided into fifty-four sections, and one of these was read every sabbath. "This division many of the Jews hold to be one of the constitutions of Moses, from mount Sinai. But others with more probability, attribute it to Ezra. And this, we are assured in the Acts of the Apostles, was done amongst them (Acts, xv. 21.) of old time, which may well be interpreted from the time of Ezra. They ended the last section with the last words of Deuteronomy, on the sabbath of the feast of tabernacles, and then began anew with the first section, from the beginning of Genesis, the next sabbath after, and so went round in this circle every year. The number of these sections was fifty-four, because, in their intercalated years (a month being then added), there were fifty-four sabbaths. On other years they reduced them to the number of the sabbaths which were in those years, by joining two short ones several times into one; for they held themselves obliged to have the whole law thus read over in their synagogues every year. Till the time of the persecution

* "The third thing which Ezra did about the holy scriptures, in his edition of them, was, he added, in several places, throughout the books of this edition, what appeared necessary for illustrating, connecting, or completing them; wherein he was assisted by the same Spirit, by which they were at first written. Of this sort we may reckon the last chapter of Deuteronomy, which giving an account of the death and burial of Moses, and of the succession of Joshua after him, could not be written by Moses himself, who undoubtedly was the penman of all the rest of that book. It seems most probable, that it was added by Ezra at this time. And such also may we reckon the several interpolations which occur in many places of the holy scriptures. For that there are such interpolations, is undeniable; there being many passages through the whole sacred writ, which create difficulties that can never be solved without the allowing of them. As for instance, Gen. xii. 6. & xxii. 14. Exod. xvi. 35. Deut. ii. 12. & iii. 11. &c."

"He also changed the old names of several places that were grown obsolete, putting, instead of them, the new names by which they were at that time called, that the people might the better understand what was written. Thus Gen. xiv. 14. Abraham is said to have pursued the kings, who carried Lot away captive, as far as Dan; whereas the name of that place was Laish, till the Danites, long after the death of Moses, possessed themselves of it, and (Joshua xix. 47. Judges xviii. 29) called it Dan, after the name of Dan their father: and therefore, it could not be called Dan in the original copy of Moses, but that name must have been put in afterwards, instead of that of Laish, on this review. And so in several places of Genesis, and also in Numbers, we find mention made of Hebron; whereas the name of that city was Kirjath-Arba, till Caleb, having obtained the possession of it after the division of the land, called it Hebron, after the name of Hebron, one of his sons; and therefore that name could not be in the text, till placed there long after the time of Moses, by way of exchange for that of Kirjath-Arba, which it is not to be doubted was done at the time of this review." (Prideaux's Connec. vol. 2. p. 409.)

of Antiochus Epiphanes, they read only the law. But then being forbid to read it any more, in the room of the fifty-four sections of the law, they substituted fifty-four sections out of the prophets, the reading of which they ever after continued. So that, when the reading of the law was again restored by the Maccabees, the section which was read every sabbath out of the law, served for their first lesson, and the section out of the prophets for their second lesson; and so it was practiced in the time of the Apostles. And therefore, when Paul entered into the synagogue at Antioch in Pisidia, it is said, (Acts xiii. 15.) that "he stood up to preach, after the reading of the law and the prophets;" that is, after the reading of the first lesson out of the law, and the second lesson out of the prophets. And in that very sermon which he then preached, he tells them, (Acts xiii. 27.) "that the prophets were read at Jerusalem every sabbath-day," that is, in those lessons which were taken out of the prophets."

Another division of the sacred scriptures was, into the law, the prophets, and the hagiographæ. The first contained the five books of Moses. The second included Joshua, Judges, Ruth, Samuel, Kings, Isaiah, Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and the twelve minor prophets, Job, Ezra, Nehemiah, and Esther. The third, the Psalms, Proverbs, Ecclesiastes, and the Song of Solomon. This division obtained in the time of our Lord. In Luke xxiv. 44. he saith, "These are the words which I spoke unto you, while I was yet with you, that all things may be fulfilled, which are written in the law, and the prophets, and in the psalms; concerning me." For there, by the psalms, he means the whole third part called the hagiographæ: for in that part beginning with the psalms, the whole was then for that reason commonly called by that name, as the Jews usually named the particular books from the words with which they begin. And Josephus makes mention of this same division. For he says, in his first book against Apion, "We have only two and twenty books, which are to be believed as of divine authority; of which, five are the books of Moses. From the death of Moses, to the reign of Artaxerxes, the son of Xerxes, king of Persia, the prophets, who were the successors of Moses, have written in thirteen books. The remaining four books contain hymns to God, and documents of life for the use of men."

The general practice of reading the law and the prophets in the synagogues, would necessarily multiply the copies of the Hebrew scriptures; and owing to the common casualties and mistakes, errors would creep in;—omissions, repetitions, and the misspelling of words, would frequently, and without a miracle, unavoidably occur. As many of the Hebrew letters are nearly alike, mistakes might arise from this cause; and as many of those who made transcripts might know but little of the language, they were in danger of forming words according to the language they spoke. The subversion of the Jewish state, the banishment of the people into other countries, the loss of their learned men, would all tend to the deterioration of the sacred volume; and notwithstanding the utmost care of such as remained, errors would multiply and become inveterate.

Some various readings of manuscripts had been early noticed, and it was usual to write them in the margin. These were called Keri, that is, the reader was admonished to read the word in the margin, instead of that in the text, to which there was a reference. It is allowed that there are upwards of a thousand of these Keri. In the copies used by the eastern Jews, who lived in Babylonia, there are found above two hundred variations from the copies used by the western Jews of Europe; and the collation of the existing Hebrew manuscripts by Kennicott and De Rossi, has added a vast number to those before noticed. One thing contributed greatly to multiply and propagate errors in the manuscripts. The writers, when they found they had committed mistakes, suffered them to remain, lest they should injure the beauty of their copies, and thus diminish their value.

The more learned and opulent Jews, spared no expense to obtain correct and beautiful copies of their sacred books; and their very superstition, contributed much to preserve them in that state in which they now are. Their learned men called Mosorets, employed themselves in numbering the very letters contained in each book; in noticing how often the same word occurred in a book, and in other niceties of this nature. They are supposed to have invented, or in imitation of the Arabs, to have added, the vowel points to the scriptures, for the purpose of preserving the pronunciation, and determining the sense of the writer. Prideaux and some others contend, that the points were gradually introduced from the time of Ezra, but that the present system was not completed until the fifth century of the christian æra. They are now generally allowed to be a human invention, and although useful in ascertaining the sense of the scriptures, yet not to be regarded as an infallible guide.

From the time of their dispersion, some of the learned Jews had employed themselves in writing their ancient customs and traditions, others in commenting upon them. In the second century, these traditions and comments had increased to a mass; and Rabbi Judah, called hakkodosh, or holy, methodised and digested them under certain heads, in six books, each containing several tracts. This work, the Jews call Mishna, or the second law, which they pretend was orally delivered to Moses, by whom it was transmitted down through the elders, till it was written. On this second law, their learned men at Babylon, and in Judea, wrote comments, and produced what are called the Jerusalem and Babylonish Talmuds. These comments they call the Gemera, or complement, because by them, the Mishna is explained and completed. The Mishna is the text; the Gemera the comment, and both together they call the Talmud. That of Babylon consists of twelve folio volumes. This work now forms the study of their learned men, and the law and the prophets are in a great degree neglected.

While the Hebrew scriptures were exposed to some unavoidable errors, divine providence appeared, both in preserving them, and affording means for correcting them. Near three centuries before the christian æra, a valuable Greek version of the Hebrew scriptures was made, at least, of that part called the Pentateuch. Josephus relates from Aristæus, that seventy men were employed; and though they each translated separately, they all agreed. This account is justly deemed fabulous; and the only thing which seems certain is, that in the reign of Ptolemy Philadelphus, a version of the law of Moses was made by some Jews at Alexandria, into the Greek language. It is well known, that Alexander, on building his new city, Alexandria, brought a great many Jews thither; and "Ptolemy Soter having fixed the seat of his government in that place, and resolving to increase the number of inhabitants, brought thither many more of this nation, and indulging them with the same privileges enjoyed by the Macedonians, and other Greeks, they soon grew to be the chief part of the people of that city, and by degrees so accustomed themselves to the Greek language, that they forgot their own; and as they could no longer understand the Hebrew language, in which the scriptures were hitherto first read, nor the Chaldee, in which they were afterwards interpreted in every synagogue, they were therefore obliged to have them translated into Greek for their use, that this version might serve for the same purpose in Alexandria and Egypt, as the Chaldee paraphrases afterwards did, in Jerusalem and Judea. And this was the original and true cause of the making of the Greek version. No more than the Pentateuch was at first translated, for at that time, as has been observed, no other books of the scriptures were publicly read in their synagogues; but when afterwards, in the time of Antiochus Epiphanes, the reading of the prophets came into use in the synagogues of Judea, and the Jews of Alexandria were likewise obliged to use the same method, they were forced to make a translation also of the prophets into the Greek language. And after this, other persons translated the rest of the scriptures, for the private use of the same people, and so the whole version called the Septuagint was completed. And after it was finished, it was made use of among all the churches of the Hellenistical Jews, wherever they were dispersed among the Grecian cities. That this translation was made at different times, and by different persons, the various styles in which the several books are found written, the many ways in which the same Hebrew words, and the same phrases, are translated in different places, and the great accuracy to be observed in the translation of some of the books above others, are a full demonstration."

A translation of the books of the Old Testament, as well as those of the New, was made in the latter part of the first century, or the beginning of the second, into the Syriac, and another into the Latin. The former is a very literal version of the Hebrew, the translator rendering as nearly as the idioms of the two languages would admit, word for word. De Rossi prefers this version to any other, on account of its purity. This old Syriac version is called the Peshito, or literal version, to distinguish it from another made by Philoxenus, about A. D. 508, and from him called the Philoxenian. This old version does not contain the second epistle of Peter, the second and third of John, Jude, and the Apocalypse. This proves that it was made before the canon of the New Testament was completed. The first edition of the Syriac New Testament was published at Vienna, 1555, at the expense of the emperor Maximilian. The Old Testament was first printed in the Paris Polyglott, by Le Jay, assisted by Gabriel Sionita, a learned Syrian, belonging to the Maronite church. The whole was reprinted in the London Polyglott, compared and revised with some excellent manuscripts, belonging to archbishop Usher, and the Universities.

The old Latin version, is now called the Itala, and is thus distinguished from the revision of it by Jerom. Some have supposed that it was made from the Septuagint; and in this view, can only be brought to prove the readings of that version. The Vulgate, made up of the old Itala, and Jerom's version, has preserved numerous valuable readings; and is now justly regarded as of the greatest importance in sacred criticism. Owing to the disputes with the catholics, the first reformers undervalued it; and the decree of the council of Trent, having declared it to be authentic, and ordered it to be read in churches, &c. still increased their prejudices.

These versions of the Hebrew scriptures, contributed much to prevent the introduction of material alterations; and had such been made, they would have been detected and exposed. Another work ought also to be mentioned as equally important in this view, the Hexapla of Origen. This work consisted of six columns, the first containing the Hebrew text, in the Hebrew letters; the second in Greek characters; the third and fourth the Greek versions of Aquila and Symmachus; the fifth, the version of the Septuagint; and the sixth, that of Theodotion. In this work, he carefully distinguished the places where the Hebrew was deficient, or had nothing to answer the readings found in the Septuagint, and how the Septuagint differed from it in the readings retained. He supplied from the other versions, where the Hebrew contained any word or words not found in the Septuagint. According to Montfaucon, this work was finished in the year 231. This important work was deposited in the library of the church of Cæsarea, in Judea; and is supposed to have perished when the city was taken by the Arabs, in the year 653. Transcripts had been made of the old Septuagint, and of that, with the additions and alterations, made by Origen. One by Lucian, was nearest the Koiny or old version, and was used at Constantinople, and as far as Antioch. Hesychius formed another, which was adopted at Alexandria and in all Egypt; and a third was formed by Pamphilus and Eusebius, which was adopted in Judea. It is probable, that the edition of Hesychius was nearest the amended text of Origen; and in that of Pamphilus, only some of the additions of that father were adopted. From these editions we have received the two most celebrated manuscripts of the Greek version of the Old Testament, the Alexandrian and the Vatican. The former comes nearest to the Hexaplar copy; and the latter to the old version.

The Chaldee paraphrases, or Targums, next claim our notice. As the Jews in Alexandria and other Greek cities made, and constantly used the Greek version, so the Jews, who dwelt in Judea, Syria, and Babylon, made, and used, in their worship, the Chaldee paraphrase. "As to the exact age of the Chaldee paraphrases, we may safely affirm that to be uncertain. Some learned men have supposed, that such paraphrases were in use amongst the Jews soon after the captivity, or long before the time of Christ; but scarcely any one pretends, that paraphrases of such high antiquity are now in being. On the contrary, it has been remarked by other learned men, as a strong presumptive proof against the antiquity of these Targums, that no kind of Chaldee paraphrase is so much as mentioned by Origen, Jerom, Epiphanius, or any early christian writer." That of Onkelos on the Pentateuch, is the most valuable; as it is a literal version of the Hebrew into the Chaldee. That of Jonathan is the most diffuse and paraphrastical; but often of great use, as it gives us the opinion of the author, and probably that of the learned Jews of his own time, on many passages of the scriptures. These are both printed in the London Polyglott.

On the invention of the art of printing, the Hebrew psalter first issued from the press. This psalter is dated 1477, and is without points; the text is accompanied with the commentary of Kimchi. De Rossi describes another, also without points, and which he supposes, was printed in the same year as the former, or perhaps even earlier. The Pentateuch, printed at Bononia, with points, followed in the year 1482; and in the year 1486, the former, and the latter prophets, without points, at Soncino; and the Hagiographæ at Naples, with points, the year following. These three formed a complete edition of the Hebrew scriptures, printed, as is nearly certain, from different manuscript copies.

In the year following, 1488, was published, a complete edition in folio, at Soncino, with points; and in 1494, another at Brescia. In 1518, Felix Pratensis, edited an edition, which was printed by Bomberg, at Venice; and in 1526, Ben Chaim edited another edition, which issued from the same press. A second edition was published in 1549, and this last is considered as the standard edition, according to which all the later ones have been formed, with some few and trifling variations. That of Vander Hooght, printed at Amsterdam, in four volumes octavo, 1705, has been justly deemed the most correct, of those which have followed that of Ben Chaim; though Kennicott and others have noted some typographical errors.

The accuracy of the printed text, depends on the manuscript or manuscripts which the editor used; and on his fidelity in following them. If these were imperfect, so must the printed edition. The Jews indeed asserted, and most Christians too credulously admitted the truth of their assertion, that their Hebrew manuscripts were uniform, and without any various readings. Some learned men however, soon observed, that there existed considerable difference between the Samaritan copy of the Pentateuch, and the printed text; and that in many instances the Greek version agreed with the former. Morinus attacked this singular opinion; Cappellus followed, and exhausted the subject in his Critica Sacra. He compared the printed Hebrew with the old versions, and in a manner the most satisfactory, proved that errors had obtained in the former, and ought to be corrected.

At length Kennicott commenced his important work, of collating all the Hebrew manuscripts, which he could obtain. De Rossi followed him, and has nearly done all that we can expect. From these collations, the general opinion among the learned, is, "first, that all Hebrew manuscript copies now extant may, in some sort, be called Masoretic copies, because none of them have entirely escaped the rude hands of Masorets: secondly, that the most valuable manuscripts, generally speaking, are those which are oldest, written at first without points or accents, containing the greatest number of real vowels, or matres lectionis, exhibiting marks of an accurate tran-scriber, and conforming most to the ancient versions, and, with regard to the Pentateuch, conforming most to the Samaritan exemplar, and the Greek uninterpolated version: thirdly, that the Masoretic copies often disagree, and that, the further they go back, the greater is their disagreement from the present printed copy: fourthly, that the synagogue rolls disagree the least with the printed copies, so that they are of little value in ascertaining the text. From all this they conclude, that the surest sources of emendation, are a collation of manuscripts and parallel places; a comparison of the text with the ancient versions, and of these with one another; grammatical analogy, and, where all these fail, even conjectural criticism”*.

The Greek manuscripts of the New Testament suffered by the mistakes of transcribers, in the same manner as those of the Old. Cardinal Ximenes printed an edition of the whole Bible in several languages; and in this edition was contained a copy of the Greek Testament. This is called the Complutensian edition, Complutum being the Latin name of Alcala, where it was printed. This was printed in the beginning of the sixteenth century, but not licensed for publication, before 1522. The manuscripts from which it was published, were modern, and are now considered of little value. In 1516, Erasmus printed his first edition of the Greek Testament, from a few manuscripts he met with at Basle in Switzerland. He published three other editions, in the last of which he introduced many of the readings of the Complutensian.

Next appeared the edition of Robert Stephens, at Paris, in which he mostly followed Erasmus, introducing a few readings from some Greek manuscripts in the royal library. He was the first who divided the New Testament into verses. In 1558, Beza published an edition with many various readings, from some excellent manuscripts which he possessed. From this edition, the English version was made. In 1624, an edition was printed at Leyden, by the Elzevirs, nearly after Stephens, with a few readings from that of Beza; and this is now considered the received text.

*On these principles the author has attempted to point out as correct a Hebrew text as can now be obtained, in his Biblia Hebraica, or the scriptures of the Old Testament, without points, after the text of Kennicott, with the chief various readings, selected from his collation of Hebrew manuscripts, from that of De Rossi, and from the ancient versions, accompanied with English notes, critical, philological, and explanatory, selected from the most approved, ancient and modern, English and foreign, biblical critics. 2 vols. 4to. In this work, the author was diligently occupied nearly seven years, and he has, on the most difficult passages, collected and given the sentiments and opinions of the most eminent biblical critics. In the present work, he generally follows the text he has in that considered genuine.

The same means have been adopted to correct the received text of the New Testament, which have been noticed respecting that of the Old. The most valuable, because the most ancient, manuscripts have been accurately collated, and every variation from the received text noticed and collated. The old versions of the Syriac, the Coptic, the Ethiopic, the Arabic, and the Vulgate have been examined; and quotations from the New Testament by the Greek fathers, have been compared, and applied to illustrate and improve the received text. Mill, after thirty years application, printed his Greek Testament with various readings, in 1707. Kuster, at Amsterdam, republished Mill's work, with some additional readings, in 1710. Bengel, published at Tubingen, in 1734, a valuable edition, with some select various readings taken from Mill, and some from manuscripts examined by himself.

In the year, 1751, 1752, Wetstein published his most valuable edition of the Greek Testament. He was indefatigable in his labour, and examined with the greatest accuracy, the most valuable manuscripts. “Underneath the various readings in this edition are printed his notes. These are numerous and invaluable. They are philological, critical, and explanatory. They contain a great number of parallel passages from the classics, and of quotations from the Talmudists, which tend to elucidate the idioms of the language and the customs of the Jews. They are accompanied with many judicious observations, and supply an inexhaustible fund of theological and critical information.”

Three other critical editions followed; that of Matthai, in twelve volumes octavo, containing all the various readings of the Moscow manuscripts, some of which are of great antiquity. Alter, of Vienna, published an edition from a manuscript in the Imperial library, in 1786; and professor Birch, of Copenhagen, the four gospels in folio and quarto. At length, the Greek Testament by Dr. J. J. Griesbach, was published. The first edition in 1775 and 1777, in two volumes octavo; the second edition, very much enlarged and improved, in 1796 and 1806. “In the construction of this admirable work, the learned editor had two objects in view. The first was to exhibit to the public a text of the Greek Testament as correct, and as nearly approximating to its original purity, as it could be made by the assistance of that immense quantity of critical materials which had been accumulating during the last century: and, secondly, to compress a great mass of critical information into as narrow a compass as possible, in order to bring it within the reach of those who could not afford either the time, the labour, or the expense, which would be necessary to collect it, from those numerous and expensive volumes in which it was diffused.”

From the sources mentioned, the learned are now furnished with a nearly correct text of the New Testament, and with ample means of correcting that of the Old, in most cases of importance. Of what use to the world are these stores of sacred literature, unless applied to their legitimate purpose, the improvement of the authorized version? Men of the first talents for piety and learning have long desired it; but as yet nothing has been done by authority; and from the present state of public opinion, it is to be feared nothing will be done.

The first English versions were made from the Latin Vulgate only. Such were the Saxon versions, and that of Wicliffe; for the original scriptures were then unknown. William Tyndale* was the first who undertook to translate the scriptures into English, at the reformation. He published the New Testament at Antwerp, in 1526; and the Dutch reprinted three editions of it, with some alterations, by George Jaye, an English refugee, in 1527—1528—1530. Tyndale printed a second edition in 1534; and having translated the Pentateuch and the historical books as far as Nehemiah, they were printed

*He was born towards the close of the fifteenth century, on the borders of Wales, but nothing is recorded of his family. He was educated at Magdalen hall, Oxford, where he read private lectures in divinity, to some of the students. He afterwards removed to Wolsey's New College of Christ Church, whence he was expelled, for embracing the doctrines of Luther. He then became a private tutor in Sir John Welsh's family, and occasionally preached in the city of Bristol. He uniformly avowed his principles, and was much persecuted by the popish clergy. This obliged him to go to London, where he seems to have formed the design of translating the New Testament into English, and which, with unwearied diligence, he soon accomplished. It is certain, that Tyndale was as good a Greek scholar as the most of his age; and had made some progress in the knowledge of Hebrew. In his preface to the second edition of his New Testament, he says, "If ought seme changed (from the former) or not altogether agreynge with the Greke, let the finder of the faute, consider the Hebrue phrase or manner of speche left in the Greke words, whose preterperfect tense and present tense, is oft both one, and the future tense is the optative mode also, and oft the imperative mode in the active voice, and in the passive even. Likewise, person for person, number for number, and interrogation for a conditional, and such like, is with the Hebrues a common usage."

Tyndale particularly offended the clergy by translating what were called the sacred terms. He uniformly rendered congregation instead of church; senior for priest; love for charity; repentance for penance. These renderings were considered full of heretical pravity, as they divested the subjects to which they related of that mystery with which priest-craft had surrounded them. The learned, but bigotted Sir Thomas Moore, was induced to write down Tyndale's translation, and defend the existing superstitions; but Tyndale vindicated his work, and showed, that if he had not the wit of Sir Thomas, he had sound sense, genuine piety, and the truth on his side. This version of the New Testament was the basis of all that followed, down to that of James', and in many instances, is more just to the text, and more simple and perspicuous than our present authorized one. Tyndale, after passing his life in perils, was seized at Antwerp, by order of the emperor of Austria, and at length was condemned for his heresy and sin in translating the holy scriptures, to be strangled and burnt. He displayed, during his imprisonment and in his last moments, the power and influence of divine truth.

at Halle, 1552—1553. Coverdale, at home, laboured to complete what Tyndale had begun, and in the year 1535, the whole Bible was finished at the press. In 1547, another edition was published abroad, with some few corrections, under the feigned name of Matthewe. In 1540, archbishop Cranmer published a new edition, which he had corrected in some places, and to which he wrote a preface. This is called Cranmer's Bible†. In 1553, Edward the sixth died, and was succeeded by Mary, who immediately restored the Popish service and sacraments, and persecuted the friends of the reformation with such cruelty, that many of them fled into foreign countries; among whom was Coverdale, who, in Edward's reign, had been made bishop of Exeter. He, and some others, fixed their residence at Geneva, where they employed themselves in making a translation of the Bible. They began with the New Testament, which they published in duodecimo, printed with a small but beautiful letter, in 1557. This is the first printed edition of the New Testament, in which the verses of the chapters are distinguished by numeral figures and breaks.

Strype, in the annals of the reformation, tells us, that the Geneva brethren, after publishing their New Testament, proceeded to revise the Old. But not having finished it when Elizabeth came to the throne, some of them staid behind the rest to complete their design. And having finished the Old Testament, they published the whole Bible at Geneva, in quarto, in the year 1560, printed by Rowland Hill. This is what is commonly called the Geneva Bible; concerning which, Simon affirms, without any just reason, that it is only a translation of a French version. In this translation cuts are inserted, representing the garden of Eden, Noah's ark, &c. They likewise added a variety of notes, with two tables; the one containing an interpretation of the names, and the other an account of the principal matters in the scriptures. There is also an epistle to Queen Elizabeth, in which they charge the English reformation with retaining the remains of popery, and exhort her to strike off certain ceremonies. But this epistle giving offence, it was omitted in the subsequent editions. The Geneva Bible was so universally used in private families, that there were above thirty editions of it in folio, quarto and octavo, printed from the year 1560 to the year 1616‡.

†The book of Psalms now used in the liturgy, is after Cranmer's Bible, which differs from Coverdale's in very few places.

‡The persons employed in this work, besides Coverdale, were Anthony Gibby, William Whittingham, Christopher Woodman, Thomas Sampson, and Thomas Cole. They enjoyed at Geneva, the friendship, and occasionally the society, of Calvin, Beza, and other learned men. They were all men of learning, and zealous for the spread of divine truth. They pursued their important work with diligence, and produced the best English version, take it throughout, which has yet appeared. It is more literal than Tyndale's, or Coverdale's, but scarcely any where so absurdly literal as the version now in use. The authors tell us, that "where the Hebrew speech seemed hardly to agree with ours, we noted in the margin, using (in the text) that which was more intelligible." Some thousands of passages might be produced where this version excels in propriety, noble simplicity, and perspicuity the authorized one. What chiefly offended James, and the high church party in this version, were, the notes, which indicated a strong, but just sense of freedom. They spoke of tyrants as the instruments of God's wrath, but as having no right or title, in reason or scripture, to absolute power. They even justified the deposition of kings for misrule. These sentiments were opposed to the high notions of James, and it is probable, that this alone gave rise to the present version. James was so afraid of marginal notes, that he charged the persons he employed, not to write any.

In the year 1604, king James appointed a number of learned men to revise and correct the Bishops' Bible. From the injunctions or rules given respecting this work, it is clear, that the learned men employed were not left to follow their own unbiassed judgment. The chief of these were: First, the ordinary Bible read in the churches, commonly called the Bishops' Bible, to be followed, and as little altered as the original would permit.—Third, the old ecclesiastical words to be kept; as the word church, not to be translated congregation, &c.—Fifth, the division of the chapters to be altered either not at all, or as little as might be.—Sixth, no marginal notes to be affixed, but only for explaining the Hebrew and the Greek words, which could not be expressed in the text without some circumlocution.—Fourteenth, the translation of Tyndale, Coverdale, Matthewe, Whitechurch (the great Bible), and Geneva, to be used, where they agree better with the original than the Bishops' Bible.

From this statement, it is clear, that the authorized version, was only revised by the persons employed by James; but as this revision was made by some of the most learned men of that period, it is probable, that it contains as faithful a representation of the original scriptures as could then be made. "But when we consider," says Dr. Marsh, "the immense accession which has been since made, both to our critical and to our philological apparatus; when we consider, that the whole class of literature, commencing with the London Polyglott and continued to Griesbach's Testament, was collected subsequently to that period; when we consider, that the most important sources of intelligence for the interpretation of the original, were likewise opened after that period; we cannot possibly pretend that our authorized version does not require amendment."

PART II.

On the principles and form of the Hebrew Republic, and the Laws of Moses.

CHAPTER I.

On the principles and form of the Hebrew Republic.*

WHEN the family of Abraham had become numerous, it was impossible that they could live together without some laws, or customs, which obtained the force of laws. These customs had partly been handed down to them by tradition, and partly derived from divine communications to that Patriarch. On examining the laws of Moses, there will be found a frequent reference to known customs, or to an ancient consuetudinary law. The laws of Moses were not given in a systematic form, but occasionally, as circumstances demanded. There is one particular, which cannot fail to strike an attentive reader,—it is, that Moses gave laws to a people who were at the time without a country, and yet, his laws in a great degree, were designed for that country to which he was conducting them. He must then have been under a divine direction; and have been fully persuaded, that God would accomplish the promises made to his fathers.

"The fundamental principle of the Mosaic law was the maintenance of the worship of one God, and the proscription of polytheism." The worship of many gods was at that period the general and prevailing practice; and Moses found the disposition to idolatry so strong among the Israelites, that they frequently violated his laws, and incurred the severest punishments. By the covenant made with Abraham, and the ordinance of circumcision, the Israelites were in a measure already devoted to Jehovah; but Jehovah, having miraculously delivered them from Egypt, acquired a new right to their obedience and devotion. He became their peculiar sovereign and king. (See Deut. xxxix. 5. & 1. Sam. viii. 7.) Hence he gave them laws, through the mediation of Moses, which were to be of perpetual obligation, so long as their state endured. The judges, in administering these laws, were considered as holy persons, and as sitting in the place of God. (Deut. i. 17. & xix. 17.) The judges were chiefly taken from the tribe of Levi; and the chief expounder of the law, was the high priest. As the Levites were devoted to the study of the law and to literature, this was evidently proper; for no other persons were so well qualified for the office. In particular cases, God made known his will by prophets, and the people were bound to hearken to their voice. And on some occasions, God was consulted by Urim and Thummim. In all these cases, God appears as king, ruling the people by his appointed ministers.

"Another fundamental principle of the Mosaic law, was the prevention of intercourse between the Israelites and foreign nations." The prevalence of idolatry among other nations, rendered this necessary, to secure the great object of the Jewish law already mentioned; and many of the peculiar laws, will, on this principle, be found wisely adapted to secure this end.

The form of the Hebrew republic was democratical. Moses, on giving his laws, convened the whole congregation of the Israelites; and he is said to have spoken to the whole congregation. It must, however, be observed, that he could not possibly be heard by six hundred thousand men; and from this circumstance, we conclude, that he only addressed a certain number, deputed to represent the rest of the Israelites. These representatives are denominated, (Num. i. 16.) קרואי העדה. those wont to be called to the assembly. In Numbers xvi. 2. they are styled עדה קרואי מועד, chiefs of the congregation, those wont to be called to the assembly. Who these per-

*The author has abridged, for this second part, Michaelis' commentaries on the laws of Moses, translated by Smith, &c. 4 vols. 8vo. He has thrown them into that order, which to him seemed most natural; and has not, he hopes, omitted any thing which is of real value to the biblical critic and scholar. The original contains a variety of dissertations, which, though bearing on the general subject, have little connexion with it, and may, without any loss, be wholly omitted. As the most serious mistakes respecting the nature of the Hebrew republic and civil laws have long prevailed, the christian world is much indebted to the learned professor, for elucidating them with so much judgment, discrimination and learning. In this part, the laws of Moses are only considered as they relate to the civil polity of the Israelites; and what respects their religious polity, will form the third part of this introduction.

sons were, may be collected from Deut. xxix. 9. & Josh. xxiii. 2. They were the heads of tribes and families; and judges and officers. The former seem to have a natural right to this honour; and the other to have a right from the office they discharged.

§ 1. All the various branches of Abraham's descendants, like the ancient Germans or the Scottish clans, kept together in a body, according to their tribes and families; every tribe forming a small commonwealth, with its own peculiar interests, and all of them at last uniting in one great republic. The tribes were subdivided into certain greater (משפחות) families, and less called (בתי אבות) houses of fathers; and each of these had their heads or chiefs. These are most probably the persons called elders, in the two passages above referred to. Josh. xxiii. 2. & xxiv. 1. Compare also, Deut. xix. 12. & xxi. 1—9. There is no hint, how these heads or chiefs of families were chosen when any of them died. Most probably, the honour was transmitted by descent.

The princes or chiefs of tribes do not seem to have ceased with the commencement, at least, of the monarchy. I find them still subsisting in the time of David, 1 Chron. xvii. 16—22.; and they must have proved a powerful restraint on the power of the king. It will now be easily conceivable how the Israelitish state might have subsisted, not only without a king, but even, occasionally, without that magistrate who was denominated a judge, although we read of no supreme council of the nation. Every tribe had always its own chief magistrate; subordinate to whom, again, were the heads of families; and if there was no general ruler of the whole people, there were yet twelve less commonwealths, who, in certain cases, united together, and whose general convention would take measures for their common interest."

That a certain number of persons was necessary to constitute a family, and to entitle such family to have a head to represent it, has been inferred from 1 Chron. xxiii. 11.; where it is said of four sons, that they had not a numerous offspring, and were, therefore, reckoned but as one family. Hence we may explain, why Bethlehem may have been too small to be reckoned among the chief families of Judah. (Mic. v. 1.) It does not appear, how many persons were requisite to constitute a house or family.

2. The judges had also a right from their office, to be present in the convention of the state. Moses himself was, for some time, the sole judge in Israel; but from the advice of Jethro, his father-in-law, he appointed judges of tens, of hundreds, and of thousands; allowing of an appeal from one to another, and lastly to himself. Of the judges of ten, there must have been sixty thousand; of the judges of hundreds, six thousand; and of those of thousands, six hundred. It is not probable that all these attended the convention of the state, or had a right to attend. From the use of the term (אלף) it is not improbable, that the judges of thousands only had this right, as it denotes a thousand, and a leader or chief. After the Jews had entered Canaan, some difference in this respect was appointed by Moses. They were to constitute judges in every city. (Deut. xvi. 18.) And in their history we find frequent mention made of the elders of cities, who were, doubtless, persons of rank and authority. In the wilderness, God commanded Moses to choose out seventy of the elders of Israel, to assist him in the government. They do not seem to have formed a court of justice, but to have been a kind of council to Moses. The Jews pretend that this was a supreme court of judicature, and that it continued to exist ever after. They ascribe to it extraordinary powers, and suppose that it could control the king; but we find no mention made of such a court, from the death of Joshua till after the Babylonish captivity. In the time of the Maccabees, this court was established as a supreme tribunal, in Jerusalem, the chief city; and in the history of our Lord and his apostles, there is frequent mention of it. It appears that the high priest, and the chief priests or heads of the courses, and other leading persons, formed this court.

3. The persons named (שופטים) and rendered scribes, also attended the convention of the Israelites. They were different from the judges; for Moses expressly ordained, that they should not only appoint judges, but scribes in every city. (Deut. xvi. 18.) Officers thus called, we find among the Israelites in Egypt. (Exod. v. 6—14.) They are with probability thought to have kept the genealogical tables of the Israelites; and to have had the duty of appointing the public burdens and services on the people individually. After the tribe of Levi was separated to the service of God, and by their profession, bound to the cultivation of literature, these scribes were generally, if not always, chosen from that tribe. In time of war, they seem to have had the duty of conveying the orders to the army, (Deut. xx. 5.); and in the 2d. of Chronicles, xxvi. 11. we have the chief scribe, who in modern times would be called the muster-master-general. Compare also, Deut. xxix. 10. & xxxi. 28. Josh. viii. 33. and xxv. 2.

4. The first head of this republic under God, after Moses, was Joshua, their military leader. He was divinely appointed to conduct the people to Canaan; and when he had accomplished this, his office ceased; as we do not find that the Israelites chose any one in his room. Afterwards they had judges, who seem to have been particularly raised up, as leaders of the people. It was generally some remarkable deed of valour, which aroused the courage of his fellow-citizens, and attached them to him, that led to this honourable office. Some seem to have been judges only over particular tribes*.

5. Moses allowed the Israelites to appoint a king at a future period, and gave laws for that purpose. (Deut. xvii. 14—20.) He supposed that the people would be desirous to follow the example of other nations. He left to the people the right of choice, but with this limitation, that they must never elect a foreigner. This was a patriotic law, but did not apply to the case of the nation being subjected to a foreign prince by the force of arms, as the pharisees explained it in the time of our Lord. The king was, in some sense, to be chosen by God, (ver. 15.); which implied, at least, that he would make known his will respecting the person, by some prophet. Thus the first king was chosen by lot. (1 Sam. x. 17. &c.) The family of Saul being rejected, David and his house were chosen; and the prophet anointed him to be king, during Saul's reign; but after his death, he was chosen by all the tribes. The king was not to multiply horses, as cavalry would be of little use in a mountainous country like Judea; nor was he to amass private riches, lest the liberties of the people should be endangered. He was not to take many wives: no law was less regarded than this. The kings of Israel were by no means absolute. On the election of Saul, Samuel prepared a declaration of rights, according to which, the king was to govern, (1 Sam. x. 25.); and when the eleven tribes submitted to David, we again find express mention of a compact or covenant, 2 Sam. v. 3. The ten tribes proposed to Rehoboam, some new stipulations, to which he refused to accede, and in consequence, they revolted; nor are they blamed for this, but for their idolatry, and defection from God.

CHAPTER II.

On the Laws regarding Property.

1. According to the promise made to Abraham, his descendants were to occupy the land of Canaan. The boundaries of this country were specified; the west boundary was the river of Egypt, and the east, the Euphrates; the south, the desert; and the north, mount Lebanon. This includes a larger extent of territory than is commonly conceived; and fully sufficient for a people as numerous as the Israelites became. It comprised an extent of country beyond the Jordan, much larger than Judea, properly so called; many parts were adapted to pasturage, and which the Israelites actually appropriated to this purpose, as we find in Numbers xxxiv. 12.

Moses, by a particular law, prohibited the king from carrying the people back to Egypt, (Deut. xvii. 16.) and the south point of the promised land was not to extend further towards that country than the river mentioned*. On the southern line were situate the Edomites; and then the Amalekites and other Arabian tribes, who chiefly lived by plunder. (1 Sam. vii. 28.) Moses allowed the Israelites to spread themselves towards the east, as far as the Euphrates, because that river, and the inaccessible deserts of Arabia, formed a most secure border. In the time of David and Solomon, they actually possessed this territory. Only one day's journey from the Euphrates, Solomon, built or fortified Tadmor, whose ruins are yet so much celebrated. The land actually divided by Joshua did not extend so far.

The right of the Israelites to the land of Canaan has been much disputed. Some assert, that they could not on any principles of justice, expel the prior inhabitants, much less exterminate them. According to Moses, the

* "In many cases, particular tribes acted as distinct and independent republics, not only when there was neither king nor judge, but even in the times of the kings. We find that wars were carried on by particular tribes; see Josh. xvii. 14—18. Judg. iv. 10. and chaps. xviii. xix. xx. But the most remarkable example, perhaps, is in 1 Chron. v. 18—23. where the two tribes and a half beyond Jordan, even during the reign of Saul, carried on a very important war by themselves; in which, indeed, the rest of the people of Israel took so little share, that Samuel has not so much as noticed it in Saul's history, although it was a far more splendid event than all his achievements put together. In 1 Chron. iv. 41—43. we read, in like manner, of wars carried on by the single tribe of Simeon, in the reign of Hezekiah."

"In perusing the book of Judges, it has appeared to me as highly probable, that some of the judges therein mentioned, ruled not over all Israel, but merely over particular tribes. In the ninth chapter, Abimelech is properly king of Sichem. In chap. xi. we see the Gileadites choosing Jephtha as judge and general, without troubling themselves about the concurrence of the other tribes. The Ephraimites, it is true, soon after commenced a war with them, but not on account of this election of Jephtha; but because they had not called for their aid against the Canaanites: thus treating them with contempt, and depriving them of their share of plunder, (Judg. xii. 1—3.) Whoever reads the history of Samson, attentively, will hardly be disposed to acknowledge him as a judge or consul of the whole nation of Israel, but only as a brave defender of the western tribes, against the attacks of the Philistines." Michaelis' Comment. vol. 1. p. 235.

* The river of Egypt, which separated Judea from that country, is generally considered to be the river near to Rhinocolura, one station from Pelusium, as Josephus describes the journey of Titus from that country to Judea. A considerable part of the district between the land of Egypt and Judea, was, and still is, a sandy desert, nearly destitute of water. Reland considers this desert, as in reality, the boundary of the two countries, and as properly belonging to neither. The river mentioned, was then, most probably, the extent of the land which could be cultivated on the side of Judea. It is called Shihor, (1 Chron. xiii. 5) which some contend must signify the most eastern branch of the Nile; an opinion, which is not even probable, (Compare Josh. xv. 4.) It is not certain that this river was any thing more than a torrent, which during the rainy season, might be large, but in the summer was dried up. It is well known, that the term (נהל) signifies both a torrent and the valley in which it flows; and in the south-west parts of the land allotted to Judah, there were many such rivers or torrents, called by the psalmist, the streams of the south, Psalm cxxvi. 4. (See Reland's Palestine, p. 284.)

Israelites were to take forcible possession of this country, and to exterminate the people, if they would not voluntarily leave it. They were not allowed to accept them as subjects, nor to take them for slaves. (Exod. xxxiv. 12—16. Deut. vii. 1—5. & xx. 15—18.) Admitting that the war which the Israelites carried on against the Canaanites was just in its origin, what followed was a necessary consequence of the two fundamental laws of the Jewish state. The Canaanites were unquestionably an idolatrous and most depraved race; and to have suffered them to remain and coalesce with the Israelites, would have been to sanction idolatry, by encouraging their union with idolatrous nations. That God has a right to punish wicked nations, by the infliction of judgments, such as pestilence, famine, or by employing the sword of enemies, must be granted, because we see that he actually does so in the course of providence; and I cannot see what essential difference there is between this, and his giving a command to the Israelites to destroy the wicked Canaanites. Abraham and his descendants dwelt in Canaan as independent chiefs; and their posterity had a right, on regaining their liberty, to return to their own land. It does not appear, that they had ever relinquished their right; and when they actually came to recover the country of their fathers, in case they were opposed, they had a right to use force. We see in fact, that they were opposed; and they only did what every people had a right to do, according to the then acknowledged laws of war.

When they had conquered their enemies, and acquired the possession of the land, it was divided first among the tribes, into eleven larger districts; and then each district among the families of each tribe. The two tribes of Reuben and Gad received their possession beyond the Jordan, according to their own request. (Num. xxxii.) Among the rest, was the land properly called Judea, divided, according to the number of families, and more or less land was allotted to each family, according to the number of persons, of whom it consisted. It does not appear, that the Israelites had any among them like the feudal lords of Europe; they were all equal in rank, and had an equal share of the land. Hence they became an agricultural nation; and on agriculture their polity seems founded.

2. In the division of the land, the tribe of Levi obtained no part; but in lieu of it, they were to receive the tithes of the produce, from the other tribes; and instead of cultivating the ground, they were devoted to the service of God, and the cultivation of literature. The law was to be their peculiar study; and, in fact, they were, in a great degree, its expounders and administrators. To them the original law was given: they were to be its guardians, and to make correct transcripts from it. At the end of every seven years, they were bound to read over the law, in the hearing of the people. (Deut. xxxi. 9, 10.) So far as we have any hints, it should seem, that this tribe contained chiefly, whatever was known of science. They were the lawyers, the physicians, the judges, the scribes, the keepers of genealogical records, the mathematicians, and the persons employed in the service of the police. In a civil point of view, these persons were of the highest importance to the state; and if they did not obtain their portion of the land, they had a right to an honourable maintenance from the other tribes. They had forty-eight cities, with their suburbs, appointed for their residences, among all the tribes; evidently for the purpose of discharging the duties of their office.

3. Moses ordained, that the land allotted to each family, should be absolutely inalienable; continuing for ever, the property of the descendants of the original possessor. To render this law more sacred, God is represented as the sovereign proprietor of the land of promise, (Levit. xxv. 23.); and the people were to consider themselves as his tenants, and without any right to alienate their possessions in perpetuity. If they became poor, they were allowed to dispose of their land, or rather, of its produce, for a given number of years; but on the year of jubilee, it returned to the original proprietors or their heirs. In this case, there was established a right of repurchase or redemption, by the seller or his nearest kinsman, at any period prior to the jubilee, on the same terms as the produce had been sold for. (Levit. xxv. 23—28.) We find one exception to this law, which is, that if a man had by vow consecrated a field to God, he had it in his power to redeem it, on paying the value of the crops until the year of jubilee, and one-fifth more to the priests. If he did not this, the field fell to the priest at the year of jubilee. (Levit. xxvii. 16—21.) The legislator would seem to have represented it to himself as a case hardly to be expected, that from hatred of his children or heirs, a man would consecrate his field, and leave it unredeemed for any longer period; or else he would have made some provision to meet such a case. There was actually, however, in his law, an enactment already made, which would have had the effect of frustrating such a base attempt; for as according to Leviticus xxv. 25. the Goel, or nearest relative, had a right to redeem the crops for his own advantage, he could not, in such a case, have been likely to leave that right unexercised.

This law secured many advantages. It served to perpetuate in a considerable degree, the equality which Moses established—it rendered it impossible that any Israelite should be born to absolute poverty—it tended to encourage marriage, and promote the population of the country—to increase the fruits of the land, by agriculture being carried to greater perfection—and this law attached every Israelite to his country in the strongest manner, by suggesting to him, that if he had to fight, it was in defence of his own property.

4. Houses in the Levitical cities, and their lands, were subject to the above law; but houses in other cities might be sold in perpetuity; and the seller or his kinsman, enjoyed the right of redemption only for one year; of which, if he did not avail himself within that period, it then closed. (Levit. xxv. 29, &c.)

5. Among the Israelites, every other kind of property but land, might be alienated, given away, or sold. Sons only could inherit the landed property of their father; but in case of the failure of sons, daughters were allowed to inherit, on condition of marrying within their own tribe. (Num. xxvii. 2—4.) From this exception, it seems that it was lawful for all other daughters of the Israelites but heiresses, to marry into any tribe. Hence, it has been properly inferred, that Mary, the mother of our Lord, must have been an heiress, as she found it necessary, contrary to the custom of women, to travel to Bethlehem, although her property might be mortgaged, till the year of jubilee; and consequently, Joseph, her husband, must have been of the same tribe, and probably of the same family.

The first-born son received a double portion of the inheritance, (Deut. xxi. 17.) and the remainder was equally divided among the rest. As for the other property that a man possessed, he might dispose of it as he thought proper; in gifts to his daughters, or to his sons, in general. Some such disposition of a man's effects, as is made by will or testament, must have obtained; and what is said of Ahithophel, (2 Sam. xvii. 23.) and of Hezekiah, (1 Kings, xx. 1.) appear to imply as much; but what were the formalities, is uncertain. It is not improbable that the father had the right of dividing the inheritance, and giving to each son his part. (Deut. xxi. 16.)

From remote periods it was a custom to buy and sell in the gates of the cities, before all that went out or came in. (Gen. xxiii.) This was done, that the purchase or sale might be attested by many witnesses. From Ruth, iv. 7. we see that a singular custom prevailed, on the transfer of alienable property, in ancient times;—it was, for the proprietor to pull off his shoe, and hand it to the new owner. Some have thought that this custom prevailed in the time of Moses; and to be called bare-footed, signified a man that had sold every thing—a spend-thrift; and Moses permitted this term to be applied to the man who would not marry his brother's widow, as a term of reproach. (Deut. xxv. 9, 10.) In the transfer of property, the Jews used the precious metals as the standard of value. In the time of Moses, and long after, silver was not counted, but weighed. The shekel so often mentioned, was no coin, but a weight, as its name imports. The Jews had no coined money till after the death of Alexander the Great.

CHAPTER III.

On the laws relative to Personal Rights.

§ 1. In the Hebrew republic, fathers enjoyed very great rights over their families. The more heinous offences of their children against them, were punished with death. (Exod. xxi. 17. Levit. xx. 9. & Deut. xxi. 18—21.) The sons, when married, continued to reside in the father's house, and were still in subjection; and fathers, and even sometimes mothers, chose for them their wives. (Exod. xxi. 9—11.) In respect to daughters, while they remained at home, the parents still exercised more authority than over sons. (Num. xxx. 4—6.) They disposed of them also in marriage; or rather, sold them to their husbands.

Next to the fathers, the first born son possessed the greatest rights. As polygamy was allowed, he only was called the first-born, who was the first son of the father as well as of the mother. (Deut. xxi. 15—17.) Besides having a double share of the inheritance, he was considered the head of the family, next to the father, and had some authority over his brethren.

2. Among the Hebrews, wives were commonly bought. (Gen. xxix. 15—29. & Hosea iii. 1, 2.) Jacob bought each of Laban's daughters by seven years service; and as by the Mosaic statutes, a servant, at the medium rate, was worth thirty shekels, (Exod. xxi. 32.) and we find Hosea (ch. iii. 1, 2.) paying for a wife fifteen shekels of silver, and fifteen ephahs of barley, that is, half the price in money, and half in grain, it would seem from this, that the price of seven years service, and the price of a wife were equivalent*. When a young man had lain with a maid, Moses ordained that he should buy and marry her. (Exod. xxii. 16, 17.) He afterwards states

*I believe it may be necessary to remark, that fifteen pieces of silver, and fifteen ephahs of barley, was not, as has from ignorance of Hebrew prices and customs been supposed, the hire of a harlot; for which certainly the same sum could never be paid, for one night, as for the purchase of a wife of equal rank with one's self. Nor do the words of this passage bear (although expositors have fastened that impertinence upon them,) that Hosea was to commit whoredom by the command of God; but merely that he was to marry a harlot; and so he says of her, I bought her for fifteen shekels, and an homer and leteck (that is, for fifteen ephahs) of barley."

N.B. This reasoning of Michaelis is just, though we should explain the command given to Hosea, and what follows, as a mere allegory, or prophetic representation of what God intended to do; for in this case, the allusion is to a known custom. (See Hosea, iii. 1. &c. and note.)

the sum to be paid at fifty shekels. This was the highest price of a bond-servant, (Levit. xxvii. 3.); and it may be inferred, that a bond-servant and a wife were nearly of the same value. Was this custom introduced after the time of Abraham? Sarai, seems to have enjoyed supreme control in her own house; and though she gave Hagar to her husband, she still maintained her own authority.

It has been noticed that fathers chose wives for their sons. The father had the power to assign a female slave to his son, as a concubine, or an inferior kind of wife; and when he married another, Moses ordained, that the damsel should, from that time, be considered not as a slave, but as a daughter; and that marriage with the slave was so far to continue, that he was to find her suitable support, and to render that matrimonial duty, to which she was entitled by the laws; and if the husband failed in any of these, she was to become free. (Exod. xxi. 9—11.)

Hence, the Hebrews, among whom polygamy was tolerated for the hardness of their hearts*, had wives who enjoyed different degrees of rank. The husband, at his wife's desire, might use her slave as his wife; but he might also use his own hand-maid in the same way, without her consent. As the Hebrews who had become poor, might sell their daughters for hand-maids, to their richer Hebrew brethren, if the master chose, he might take one of these to his bed; but "if she please not her master, so that he will not betroth her, he shall let her be redeemed. Because he despiseth her, he shall not sell her to a foreign nation." (Exod. xxi. 8.) Any relation, or any one intending to become the husband of such a hand-maid, might redeem her, and her master was bound to let her go for an equitable ransom. These secondary wives were called (אִמָּה) hand-maids or (פְּלִנְשָׁה) concubines; yet their children were regarded as legitimate; and enjoyed equal right with those of the wife.

In case a Hebrew fell in love with any female taken captive in war, he was allowed, after some time, to use her as his concubine, or hand-maid; but if she displeased him, he was to let her go out free, and by no means to sell her and make merchandise of her. (Deut. xxi. 10—14.)

These secondary wives appear to have been taken without any particular rite or ceremony; cohabitation forming the marriage; but in respect to the wife, properly so called, she was first betrothed, or espoused, in the presence of witnesses, and a space of ten months or a year usually intervened between the espousals and the marriage; the marriage was then celebrated, and among the more opulent, there was a feast, which generally lasted for a week.

As chastity is, in a civil point of view, an indispensable virtue of the female sex, in the laws of Moses, the greatest attention was paid to the preservation of it. Hence, if on consummating marriage, the husband had reason to suspect that his wife had been previously defiled, she was exposed to legal prosecution; and in case of established guilt, she was stoned to death. This must have induced parents to watch over the conduct of their daughters with the greatest possible care, for the honour of their own family, and out of regard to their personal safety. In consequence of this law, the parents or other relatives of the bride, carefully preserved the proof of their virginity; and if the husband accused her without any just cause, he was exposed to such chastisement as the judges deemed proper, and to a fine, to the wife's father; and also forfeited the right of giving her a bill of divorce. (Deut. xxii. 13—21.)

3. The custom which had long existed of a man marrying the wife of his deceased brother, who had no children, Moses tolerated, and in some degree modified. As in all places nearly the same number of each sex are born, where polygamy obtains, many men must want wives. Hence sprung the custom of making so many eunuchs; and perhaps that of a man marrying the widow of his brother. In no case was a man to marry his brother's wife, if she had children; and if she had none, the brother, by appearing in court, and declaring that he would not marry her, was then set at liberty. The slighted widow had a right to revile him, to spit in his presence, and call him bare-footed. The instances recorded, are of brothers, who were unmarried; and in case the deceased had none, this law extended to the next nearest of kin, as we learn from Ruth. (Deut. xxv. 5—10.)

4. The marriage of near relations, is strictly prohibited; and the reason is obvious; to prevent general depravity. For as parents and children, brothers and sisters, uncles and aunts, have, from their affinity, the greatest intercourse, if cohabitation in these degrees were allowed, there would be no possibility of preventing the most shameful profligacy. Hence, the law prohibits such

* It is certain, that before the time of Moses, polygamy was in use among the ancestors of the Israelites, and that even Abraham and Jacob lived in it. It is also certain, that it continued in use after the time of Moses. According to Judg. viii. 30. Gideon had many wives, and seventy sons by them. Judg. x. 4. Jair had thirty adult sons; and as it is likely he had not sons only, but daughters also in proportion, we cannot doubt that he lived in polygamy, particularly when we reflect that Hebrew mothers generally nursed their children until their third year. Judg. xii. 9. Ibzan had thirty full-grown sons, and as many full-grown daughters, which, without polygamy, was impossible; and in like manner, Judg. xii. 14. Abdon had forty adult sons, and thirty adult daughters. 1 Sam. i. Elkanah had two wives at once. 2 Sam. iii. 7. xii. 8.—We hence see that Saul lived in polygamy; and so David and others; but our Lord has forbid this to his followers.

carual connexion, under the penalty of death. Compare Levit. xviii. & xx. These marriages are called incest; and for these as well as other crimes, the Canaanites were to be cast out of the land. In case of the marriage of more distant relations, the punishment is not capital; but Moses says, they shall bear the blame or sin. It should seem, that in this case, the punishment of the offence was left to the opinion of the judges.

5. From the permission of polygamy, some regulation was necessary in respect to cohabitation; I say, permission; for Moses seemed not to approve it, but rather to discountenance it. It is expressly ordained that a man was not to have many wives. The question is, how many? The Jews answer, he was not to have more than four; and they seem to have stated this number from the conduct of Jacob, who had four wives. Perhaps Moses alludes in this, to the custom which then prevailed. It is inferred, that the husband was to cohabit with each wife, at least once a week. That each wife had her night, is clear from Gen. xxix. 14—16.; and from the law already noticed, Exod. xxi. 10, 11. it is evident, that each wife had a right to claim her marriage-due.

6. The right of divorce was permitted from the same cause, as the permission to have more wives than one. The original law of marriage was founded on the justest and wisest principles; and the violation of it was, and ever will be, attended with evil consequences. From the depravity of human nature, this violation arose; and for wise reasons the supreme legislator saw fit, for a season, to tolerate it. So, in regard to divorce, for other causes than that of unfaithfulness, our Lord expressly asserts, (Matt. xix. 8.) that, "Moses suffered it on account of the perverseness of their hearts." The law of divorce, as I would render it, of separation, is recorded in Deut. xxiv. 1—4. From the language, it does not appear, that Moses gave the liberty of separation, but presupposed it as being well understood from ancient custom; and, that his design was to correct certain abuses, and particularly that the resumption of a dismissed wife, who had married a second husband, might be prevented. To prevent a man acting from the mere influence of passion, Moses required that he should give his wife a written instrument of separation. This might occasion some delay, as, perhaps, few, besides the Levites, could write. The separation was not complete until she had actually left his house; and some time would be necessary to ascertain, whether she was pregnant; and in this case, she must remain until delivered. Even after she had left his house, provided she had not married another husband, if both parties were willing to renew the connexion, the law did not prohibit it. Among the more virtuous part, this permission of Moses would rarely be acted on; and indeed, polygamy itself seems to have, in a considerable degree, been laid aside among the Jews previously to the christian æra.

CHAPTER IV.

On the laws respecting Slaves and Servants.

§ 1. MOSES found slavery established long before his time, both among the Israelites and the neighbouring nations. That it is a hard situation to be a slave none will deny; and wherever slavery subsists, it is a hardship that falls to the lot of thousands. The great object of Moses was to alleviate the hardship of this state, as much as possible, and many of his laws have evidently this tendency.

Slaves might be acquired by war; and it is probable, that from war, slavery derived its origin. The conquering party, having the lives of the vanquished at their disposal, spared them either from motives of compassion or of interest, but reduced them to slavery. Hence, those in this state might be sold by one proprietor to another. These were said to be bought with silver. (Gen. xvii. 13.) An Israelite might sell himself for a servant. (Levit. xxv. 39. 47—52.) The debtor, who was unable to pay his creditor, was, by way of payment, put into his hands, as a slave. The same rule was observed in the case of theft. (Exod. xxii. 3. & Nehem. v. 4, 5.) A creditor might not only seize the man, but his wife and children. (2 Kings, iv. 1. & Isa. li. 1.)

Slaves were acquired by the issue of the marriage of slaves. Such slaves by birth, are said to be born in the house, (Gen. xiv. 14. & xvii. 23.); and also termed sons of the house, (Gen. xv. 9.); or sons of the handmaid, (Exod. xxiii. 12. Ps. lxxxvi. 16. & cxvi. 16.) If a Hebrew sold himself, and had a wife, at the end of his service, his wife and children went out with him; but if his master had given one of his slaves to him as a wife, she was to remain, with her children, as the property of his master. (Exod. xxi. 2—4.) If the servant said he loved his master, his wife and his children, and would not go out free, he was then to go before the judges, and to have his ears bored, as a sign that he had henceforth relinquished all claim to liberty.

Persons might become slaves by a vow, devoting themselves to the service of God or the sanctuary. Such a custom seems to have prevailed prior to the time of Moses, as his statute appears to have been only designed to modify and regulate such vows. (Levit. xxvii. 1—8.) Thus the Gibeonites were given to the service of the sanctuary, and hence denominated Nethenim, i. e. presented as gifts; and the history of Samuel proves, that Israelites might by a vow of their parents be thus given to the sanctuary. Moses, however, allowed of compensation for personal service by the payment of a sum specified. On a child less than a month old he put no value, as its life was uncertain. From a month old to the end of the fifth year, the value of a boy was five, and of a girl, three shekels. From the fifth year to the twentieth, a boy was worth twenty, and a girl ten shekels; and from the age of twenty to sixty, a man was valued at fifty, and a woman at thirty shekels. After this period their value fell again, so that a man was only estimated at fifteen, and a woman at ten shekels.

According to the law, Levit. xxv. 49. it is implied, that a Hebrew slave might acquire property, and be able to redeem himself; and from 2 Sam. ix. 10. we perceive, that a man who was himself a slave, might have other slaves under him; for Ziba had twenty such. The history of the patriarchs proves, that many in this state were raised to considerable power; and became, in consequence of their approved fidelity and ability, the sole managers of their master's property.

Moses allowed masters the right of correcting their slaves; and without such a right, slavery could not subsist. If the master so beat him, that in a day or two he died, he was not punished, as it was presumed that the master had no intention to kill him. On the other hand, if the master so struck him as to kill him, he was punished. If the master by a stroke deprived his slave of an eye or a tooth, he obtained his freedom as a recompense. (Exod. xxi. 20, 26, 27.) This law seems to have held, in the case of his losing any bodily member whatever; the eye and the tooth being specified by way of example. This must have moderated the correction which masters found it necessary to inflict.

2. Moses made a great distinction between a slave of foreign birth, and a Hebrew. The latter could only be made to serve six years; and in the seventh he received his freedom. A stranger might be bought for a servant for ever. (Exod. xxi. 2—10. Levit. xxv. 39—55. Deut. xv. 12—18.) In case the jubilee occurred before the expiration of the sixth year, the Hebrew servant or slave became free. At this period, the servant whose ear had been bored, went out, and probably his wife and children went out with him. Moses also ordained that the master should not dismiss his Hebrew servant empty-handed, but must furnish him with sheep and other necessities, to enable him to begin housekeeping anew. The reason of this Moses assigns; 'for he hath been worth a double hired servant;' by which it appears, that if a man bought a servant for six years, he only paid half as much as a hireling, or day labourer would in that time have received. This was reasonable, as he had the money to pay down at once, and the risk of the servant dying before the term of his service expired. The law in Deuteronomy, equally regards female Hebrew slaves or servants. (Compare Jerem. xxxiv. 8. &c.)

Moses urges by every suitable motive, the duty of treating Hebrew servants kindly. (Levit. xxv. 39—45.) They were to be regarded, in some sense, still as citizens. However proper this advice, and however good the laws on which it was founded, such is the tendency of wealth to establish power, and such the depravity of human nature to abuse it, that we find no law less observed in the whole Jewish history. (Comp. Jerem. xxxiv. 8. &c.)

3. Every servant, even one who was not of the seed of Abraham, was obliged to be circumcised, (Gen. xvii. 13, 27.); and at least to abstain from the worship of idols, and to worship only Jehovah. No uncircumcised person could partake of the sacrificial feasts, or enjoy the other privileges which Moses designed for servants. One end of the sabbath was to allow a day of rest from labour to servants and slaves. (Exod. xx. 10.) The fruits growing spontaneously, during the sabbatical year, were destined for the use of the slaves and of the poor. (Levit. xxv. 6.) The Israelites were wont, at their high festivals, to make feasts of their tithes, firstlings, and sacrifices; and to these the slaves were to be invited. (Deut. xii. 17, 18. & xvi. 11.)

4. Hired labourers were to partake of the rest of the sabbath as well as slaves, and like them, were to share in the produce of the sabbatical year. Their hire was to be paid every day before sun-set. (Levit. xix. 13. Deut. xxiv. 14, 15.) Moses does not determine what that hire was to be, as the price of labour must have varied according to circumstances. In the time of our Lord, the usual wage was a denarius, worth about sevenpence-halfpenny of our money. What Moses says of the ox, "that he was not to be muzzled, when treading out the corn," is justly thought to apply to slaves and hired labourers. They were allowed to partake of the grapes they gathered, and so in other instances.

CHAPTER V.

On the laws respecting the Goel, or blood-avenger.

WHEN one man has injured another in any way, the injured person is strongly impelled by his passions, to seek satisfaction; and if not restrained by the laws, he would avail himself of every opportunity to obtain it, by personally returning the injury. Provided a man was not able to avenge the injury which he had received, he would naturally call in the aid of relations to assist him; or if he himself should fall in the contest, it would be considered as the duty of the nearest kinsman to avenge his death. In the infancy of society this would often lead to the most serious consequences; and it would soon be found necessary to devise some means to control the passions, and to regulate, in such cases, the conduct of men towards one another.

§ 1. The verb (גאל) Goel, signifies to ransom, to redeem; but whether this be the original sense has been doubted; as it also means to pollute, or stain. If the latter be the radical sense, it seems to be derived from the noun, or blood-avenger, who was considered as stained with the blood of his slain relatives, until he had, as it were, washed away the stain, and avenged his death. The other sense is easily derived from this; as he who avenged another who was unable to do it himself, would be regarded as his vindicator or redeemer. It is probable that the custom of avenging murder by the nearest kinsman obtained long before the time of Moses, as he gives the Goel the right of redeeming a mortgaged field. Job calls God, Goel, (chap. xix. 25.) who will redeem our ashes, from the earth, at the resurrection. When Moses mentions murder, he presupposes the avenger of blood, Exod. xxi. 12, 13. In this, it is implied, that some one would follow the man guilty of man-slaughter, and that he would not be secure until he had reached the place which God had appointed for his protection. In Num. xxxv. 12. Moses appointed six of the Levitical cities, as cities of refuge from the avenger. This implies, that the blood-avenger was then a well known character; and that these cities were destined to be asylums for those pursued. (Comp. Deut. xix. 4-10.)

2. In most ages and countries, certain places enjoyed the privilege of asylums; and Moses takes it for granted, that the murderer would betake himself to the altar, and, therefore, he commanded, that when the crime was deliberate, he should be torn from the altar and put to death. (Exod. xxi. 14.) But when it was not intentional, he enjoined the slayer to flee to one of the cities, until the circumstances of the case were investigated. That the avenger might not overtake the man; they were ordered to make the roads to these cities as direct as possible—to set up guide posts, that he might be prevented from mistaking his way—and that the bridges should be kept in repair. (Deut. xix. 3.)

3. If the avenger caught him before he reached one of these cities, and slew him, he was not considered as guilty of blood; but if the slayer had reached one of them, he was protected; and an inquiry made whether he had a right to an asylum; or whether he was a deliberate murderer. In the latter case, he was delivered to the Goel, who might put him to death in whatever way he chose. In the former case, the slayer was protected, but was confined to the city to which he had fled; for if the Goel found him without the city, or beyond the suburbs allotted to the Levites, he might slay him without being guilty of blood. (Num. xxxv. 26, 27.) The slayer was to continue in the city as an exile, till the death of the high priest. The reason of this, in a civil point of view, I cannot devise.

4. By these salutary regulations, Moses took, in a great degree, the power to punish a murderer from the Goel; and as must often have happened, prevented the shedding of innocent blood. By affording an asylum to the slayer, he secured an impartial examination into the circumstances of the murder; and when it was found that it had been done unintentionally, to put to death the man would have been the greatest injustice. This law had such an influence, that we find no mention made of any avenger putting to death a man-slayer. Joab indeed killed Abner, under pretence of avenging the death of his brother Asahel. (2 Sam. iii. 19.) But David justly observed, on his death-bed, that blood shed in war ought not to be avenged in peace; and he therefore considered Joab as a wilful murderer, and charged Solomon to punish him as such. (1 King. ii. 5, 6.) To guard the life of man and prevent the perpetration of murder, Moses commanded, that no sum of money should be received from a murderer, by way of compensation. (Num. xxxv. 31.)

CHAPTER VI.

On the laws regarding strangers, the poor, the aged, deaf, and dumb persons.

§ 1. STRANGERS are very often mentioned by Moses in his laws, and he specifies two different descriptions of them, (גרים) Gerim, and (תושבים) Toschabim. I do not certainly know wherein these differed; but from Levit. xxii. 10. I am almost inclined to conjecture that Toschab meant a foreigner who had no house of his own, but dwelt in lodgings; whereas Ger meant a stranger in general, even if he should have bought a house of his own. In short then, every man who had no landed property was a Ger, and every one who had no house a Toschab. At the same time, I certainly do not think that this distinction of the terms was uniformly observed, particularly in the historical books of scripture. Moses enforces kindness to strangers, by reminding the Israelites that they had been once strangers in Egypt, (Levit. xix. 34.); and he urges them to love them as neighbours. (Deut. x. 18, 19.) Hence he ordained the same punishments for the Israelites as for strangers. (Levit. xxiv. 10-22.)

2. Strangers might be naturalized, by submitting to circumcision and renouncing idolatry. (Deut. xxi. 1-9.) Eunuchs are first prohibited; and then the seed of harlots; but Edomites and Egyptians might become Hebrew citizens in the third generation. Ammonites and Moabites are expressly excluded; for according to Nehemiah, xiii. 1. the words tenth generation, now in the text, seem to be a mistake of some scribe. That strangers from other nations might be naturalized, is evident from other parts of scripture. Uriah, by descent, was an Hethite, and yet seems to be a fully naturalized Israelite.

3. In a monarchy or aristocracy, birth and office confer rank; but in a republic, where all are equal, it is only superior talents, or old age, which entitles to some distinction. Hence, there is the greatest propriety in the Mosaic statute, (Levit. xix. 32.), "Thou shalt rise up before the hoary head, and honour the face of the old man, and fear thy God: I am Jehovah." This is conformable to human nature: for no man wishes to sink in respect as he becomes old; and to allow precedence to old age, cannot be any diminution to the importance of youth. Moses even guards the deaf and the blind. Persons in these circumstances are objects of compassion; and nothing can be more improper than to allow them to be insulted, by the petulant and unthinking. (Levit. xix. 14. Deut. xxvii. 18.) The poor in general are entitled to compassion; and some relief should be afforded. Moses never once mentions beggars; nor do we find any notice of this description of poor in the Old Testament, except once in Ps. cix. 10. where David's enemies imprecate this curse upon him. In the New Testament, they often occur; but then many of the Mosaic laws were no longer observed.

4. The laws given to the Israelites tended to preserve a happy mediocrity of circumstances; but no laws can prevent those misfortunes and casualties by which a man's property might be destroyed, and he reduced to poverty. In this case, Moses ordains, that a creditor should not demand his debt, during the sabbatical year. (Deut. xv. 1—3.) He exhorts the rich to assist the poor with a loan; and he promises the divine blessing on their own substance. (Deut. xv. 7—11.) During the harvest, he forbids the owner to reap the corners of his field, or the after growth; and the scattered corns or sheaves were to be left, in like manner, for the poor. After a man had once shaken or beaten his olive trees, he was not allowed to do it a second time; so that the fruit which did not ripen till after the season of in-gathering, was also left for the poor. (Levit. xix. 9, 10. Deut. xxiv. 19—21. Ruth, ii. 2.) Whatever grew during the sabbatical year, in the fields, gardens, vine or olive-yards, the poor might take at pleasure; for they had an equal right to it with the owners of the land. (Levit. xxv. 5, 6.) Another important benefit which they enjoyed, was, what were called second tenths, and second firstlings. Besides the tenth given to the Levites, the Israelites were obliged to set apart another tenth of the produce of their fields, and their gardens; and also, of their cattle, a second set of firstlings, for the purpose of thank-offerings. Only certain fat pieces of these offerings were burnt on the altar; the rest were appointed, after the priest had received what belonged to him, for the sacrifice-feasts, of which, the stranger, the widow, and the orphan were to partake, and rejoice before Jehovah. When any part of these tenths remained, which they had not been able to bring to the altar, they were obliged to make an estimate of their amount, and without presenting it to God, employ it in benevolent entertainments in their native cities. (Deut. xii. 5—12, 17—19. xiv. 22—29. xvi. 10, 11. and xxvi. 12, 13.)

On personal rights and obligations; such as vows, debts, pledges, and usury.

§ 1. UNLESS the Deity has expressly declared his acceptance of human vows, it can at best be but a doubtful point, whether they are acceptable in his sight; and if they are not so, we cannot deduce from them the shadow of an obligation; for it is not from a mere offer alone, but from an offer of one party, and its acceptance by another, that the obligation to fulfil an engagement arises. The divine acceptance of vows, we can by no means take for granted; considering that from our vows God can derive no benefit, and that, in general, they are of just as little use to man. In Matt. xv. 4—6. Mark vii. 9—13. Christ himself notices a vow common in his time, whereby a man consecrated what he was bound to apply to the support of his parents; and he declares it as so impious, that we cannot possibly hold it as acceptable to God. Under the New Testament, no vows whatever are obligatory, because God has nowhere declared that he will accept them from Christians. But the people of Israel had such a declaration from God himself; although even they were not counselled or encouraged to make vows. In consequence of this declaration, the vows of the Israelites were binding; and that, not only in a moral view, but according to the national law; and the priest was authorized to enforce and estimate their fulfilment. The principal passages relating to this point, are Levit. xxvii. Num. xxx. and Deut. xxiii. 18, 21, 22, 23.

Moses makes it essential to the validity of a vow, that it be expressed in words. In Num. xxx. 3, 7, 9, 13. and Deut. xxii. 24. he repeatedly calls it the expression of the lips, or, what has gone forth from the mouth; and the same phrase occurs in Psalm lxvi. 14. If, therefore, a person had merely made a vow in his heart, without letting it pass his lips, it would seem as if God would not accept such a vow; regarding it only as a resolution to vow, but not as a vow itself. This limitation is humane, and necessary to prevent much anxiety in conscientious people. If a vow made in the heart be valid, we shall often find it difficult to distinguish whether what we thought of was a bare intention, or a vow actually completed. Here, therefore, just as in a civil contract with our neighbour, words—uttered words—are necessary, to prevent all uncertainty.

One vow is singular; it is called Cherem. Moses alludes to it in Levit. xxvii. 21.; and it appears that what was by vow made Cherem, could never be redeemed. We know nothing of the formalities of this vow. The species of Cherem with which we are best acquainted, was the previous devotement to God of hostile cities, against which it was intended to proceed with extreme severity. In such cases, not only were all the inhabitants put to death, but also, according as the term of the vow declared, no booty was made by an Israelite; the beasts were slain; what would not burn, as gold, silver, and other metals, was added to the treasure of the sanctuary; and every thing else, with the whole city, burnt. (Josh. vi. 17—19, 21—24. and vii. 1. 12—26.) In Moses' lifetime we find a similar vow against the king of Arad, in Num. xxi. 1—3. The vow of Saul, when, in issuing an inconsiderate order, he swore, that whoever transgressed it should die, was, in fact, making the offender against his whim a Cherem: but the people would not suffer him to put Jonathan to death. (1 Sam. xiv. 24—45.) It is disputed whether any persons but enemies, according to the law of Moses, could be thus devoted or made Cherem. From Levit. xxvii. 28, 29. men might be made Cherem; but with Houbigant and Rosenmüller, I am satisfied, it must apply only to enemies; or this statute would have been in opposition to the Mosaic code, which uniformly guards the life of man, under severe penalties. The instance of Jephthah making a vow to offer to God, whatever should come forth from the door of his house to meet him, if God should grant him victory, has been thought a strong proof that Israelites were sometimes made Cherem. I cannot but think, that, as the words of the original will bear another interpretation, (See notes to Judges xi. 31. &c.) this is by no means any proof; but in case he put her to death, it was his crime, and by no means supported by the law.

Moses divides vows into two kinds; namely, vows of (דבר) dedication; and vows of (אסר על נפש אסר vel אסר) abstinence; (Num. xxx. 2, 3.)—The first kind consisted in a person engaging to offer, or dedicate any thing to God. This might be some unclean beast. These were to be estimated by the priest and redeemed by the vower, adding one-fifth to the value. (Levit. xxvii. 11—13.)—Or,—2. Clean beasts used for offerings. Here there was no right of redemption. (Levit. xxvii. 9, 10.)—3. Lands and houses. These might be redeemed. (Levit. xxvii. 14—24.) To these we may add,—4. The person of the vower himself, with the like privilege. (Levit. xxvii. 1—8.) To this species of vow belonged the second tenths, which probably took their rise from the vow of Jacob, (Gen. xxviii. 22.) and which his descendants held as binding on them. God had respect in vows to the morality of actions; and what was acquired by vice, was utterly unacceptable. (Deut. xxiii. 19.)

The second species of vows were those of abstinence. Among these may be classed the vow of the Nazarite. (Num. vi.) He was to drink neither wine nor strong drink; nor to eat the fruit of the vine; nor knowingly to defile himself. He was obliged to let his hair grow. At the expiration of his vow, the Nazarite was to make certain offerings prescribed, besides those he had vowed. Nazarites for life are not mentioned by Moses. In after times, we find Samson and Samuel devoted as Nazarites, by their parents, but these were married, and afford no ground for the custom in the Roman church, of persons devoted to God being obliged not to marry.

Moses has given a remarkable law respecting vows made by daughters and wives. The father had power to disannul the vow of his daughter, but he must do it immediately. (Num. xxx. 3—5.) The husband might disannul a vow made by his wife before marriage, though it had been confirmed by her father. If he held his peace, when he heard the vow of his wife, but afterwards revoked it, she was clear, and the blame was his own.

2. In case of debt, or pledge, the laws of Moses were very different from what obtain in European countries; their mode of procedure was simple but efficient. The creditor might seize,—1. The hereditary land of the debtor, and enjoy the produce of it till his debt was paid, or at least, till the year of jubilee.—Or,—2. The houses. These might be sold in perpetuity, except those belonging to the Levites. (Levit. xxv. 14—28. xxix. 30.)—3. The person of the debtor; who might be sold, along with his wife and children, if he had any. This is implied in what Moses says in Levit. xxv. 39. This custom is alluded to in Job, xxiv. 9. and more particularly stated in 2 Kings, iv. 1. On the return of the Jews from captivity, some rich persons exercised this right over their debtors, (Nehem. v.) Our Lord alludes to the same custom. (Matt. xviii. 25.)—4. The cattle, of course, might be seized by the creditor, if his own person might; and—5. His furniture. Solomon hints at this in Prov. xxii. 27. It does not appear that imprisonment for debt was resorted to, in the age of Moses. Our Saviour, it is true, represents (Matt. xviii. 34.) that the debtor was delivered to the tormentors or jailers, which implies both imprisonment and, perhaps, torture. Our Lord may allude to the practice of some of the oriental kings; for he says, "A certain king." Further, it is not a common debtor, but a traitor our Lord describes, who had laid his hand on the royal treasure. In the seventh year no debt could be exacted from a poor man. (Deut. xv. 1-11*.)

3. In regard to pledges, they must have been common in the time of Moses; and much extortion occasionally exercised. In the book of Job, we have several expressions, denoting the injustice of such as lent money on pledge. (ch. xxii. 6. and xxiv. 3, 7, 9.) Moses prohibits the creditor from going into the house of the debtor to fetch the pledge. (Deut. xxiv. 10, 11.) This was wise, as it prevented the creditor from requiring other articles which he might see, besides those agreed for. Moses also prohibited the taking or keeping in pledge, certain indispensable articles, such as,—1. The upper garment of the poor, which served him also by night for a blanket. (Exod. xxii. 25, 26. Deut. xxiv. 12, 13.) If taken as a pledge, it was to be returned before sun-set†.—2. Mills and mill-stones. (Deut. xxiv. 6.) There were no water-mills, or wind-mills at that period; every one was therefore obliged to grind his own corn, in his own house; and for that purpose, had either a hand-mill, or one larger, turned by asses. These were indispensably necessary, and no creditor was to take them.

Moses says nothing respecting suretiship. The words (רשומות) giving or striking the hands, only once occur. (Levit. v. 21. English, vi. 2.) In the proverbs of Solomon, there is a constant reference to it; and cautions against it. From this, we may infer, that in the time of Moses, it was rarely, if ever practised, while, in the days of Solomon, it had become common; and was attended with serious consequences. It appears that the formality observed, was to give the hand to the debtor, and not to the creditor, denoting that he became, in a legal sense, one with the debtor. (Prov. vi. 1-4.) For Solomon advises his son against giving his hand to the stranger, to a person whose circumstances he did not know, and entreats him to go and urge the person, to whom he had given his hand, or for whom he had become surety, to pay his own debt: so that it must have been to the debtor that the hand was given.

4. Moses prohibits usury, Levit xxv. 36-38. Here, usury is distinguished;—1. Usury on money, and—2. Usury on natural productions, such as corn or fruit. In an agricultural state, the interest on money will always be low; and Moses considers a loan of money to a poor Israelite, as a kind of charity. Besides, the lender could always be sure of the principal, if he chose to demand it, as appears from what has been said on debts. In a loan of grain, or other fruits, the borrower might have it in his power to repay in kind; and to convert his present need into a source of profit, would have been very un-neighbourly, not to say, unjust. Moses does not indeed consider interest on money or produce, in itself, unlawful; but the statutes respecting it, are evidently designed in favour of the poor Israelites. (Exod. xxii. 24.) He allows interest to be taken of strangers. (Deut. xxiii. 19, 20.)

In the case of a borrowed beast of burden, Moses distinguishes between that lent for hire, and that lent for good-will. If any misfortune happened to such beast, in the former case it was not paid for, but in the latter it was, unless the owner was present. (Exod. xx. 13, 14.)

CHAPTER VIII.

On the reparation of injuries done to another's property; and the laws respecting beasts.

§ 1. HE who injures the property of another, is naturally bound to make compensation; and it is also as reasonable, that he should answer for any mischief done by his servants or slaves. Moses, by various laws, adopts this principle,—1. If a man kill a beast, he shall make it good, beast for beast. (Levit. xxiv. 18.)—2. If an ox pushed another man's servant, so that he died, the owner was to pay for the servant, thirty shekels. (Exod. xxi. 32.)—3. In case of one man's ox pushing another's to death, it would be impossible to know which was to blame; and both owners were obliged to bear the loss. The dead ox was to be divided, and the living one sold, and the price divided between them. But if one of the oxen had been wont to push, and the owner had not confined him, he was obliged to give another to the man whose ox had been pushed to death, and to have the

* Michaelis has laboured to prove, that this release was only a respite during the sabbatical year; and that the creditor might the next year demand what was due to him: and his ideas have been adopted by Dathe and Rosenmüller. I cannot see how the text can bear this interpretation. I believe it was a real and absolute release; although it seems from ver. 4. to be restricted to the poorer sort only. From the rich, I apprehend, the debt might be demanded.

† The better to understand this law, we must know, that the upper garment of the Israelites (Simla שמלה) was a large square piece of cloth, which they threw loosely over them, and which by the poor was also used for a blanket or coverlet to their beds. Dr. Shaw, in his travels through Barbary, has given the best description of it, under its modern name Hyke. It was commonly six ells long, and five or six feet broad. It might be laid aside in the day time, and, in fact, in walking it was so troublesome, that labouring people preferred being clear of it, and were then, what the ancients so often call naked. When they had to walk, they tucked it together, and hung it over their shoulders. By night it was indispensable to the poor man, for a covering: at least, it was at the risk of his health, and even his life, by exposure to the cold, if he wanted it: for in southern climates, the nights, particularly in the summer, are extremely cold.

PROPERTY; AND THE LAWS RESPECTING BEASTS.

dead-ox. (Exod. xxi. 35, 36.)—4. If a man dug a pit, and did not cover it, or let an old one remain open, and a beast fell into it, the owner of the pit was obliged to pay for the beast, and had it for the payment. (Exod. xxi. 28, 24.)—5. When a fire was kindled in a man's field and did any damage, he who kindled it was to make it good. (Exod. xxii. 6.)

To eat ears of corn in another's field, or grapes in another's vine-yard, was not considered an injury; but Moses prohibited a man from putting the sickle into his neighbour's standing corn, or pulling any of his grapes into a vessel. In this, the person would have been guilty of theft. (Deut. xxiii. 24, 25.) Whoever drove his cattle into the field or vine-yard of another, he was to make recompense, by the payment of a grazing rent *. (Exod. xxii. 5.)

2. When a person entrusts his property to another, or loses it and another finds it, it is manifest that the latter has no right to it, but ought to restore it to the owner on demand. Moses presupposes the obligation; and in regard to property in trust, he mentions, money, household furniture, apparel, oxen, asses, sheep, and other cattle. (Exod. xxii. 7.) If a deposit was denied, the person might be put to his oath before the judges; and, unless he was peculiarly hardened, he would scarcely venture to incur the guilt of perjury. (Levit. vi. 2—7.) If a man denied a deposit, or pretended that it had been stolen from him, a judicial inquiry took place; and if it was found that he had received the property, and had falsely given it out as stolen, it became a kind of theft, and he was to pay double. (Exod. xxii. 9.) If the deposit was silver, or apparel, and the person entrusted with it affirmed that it was stolen, though the thief could not be found, the owner could bring him to the judges, and doubtless, require an oath, that he had not put his hand on his neighbours property. If the deposit was a beast, and it came by any misfortune, or was driven away from the pasture, the depository was obliged to swear he had not applied it to his own use; but if it had been stolen out of the house of the depository, he was obliged to make it good. (Exod. xxii. 9—12.)

3. The property which another has lost, and I have found, I ought not to retain, nor wish to retain; but I ought to endeavour to find its owner, and to restore it to him. That fundamental principle of the Mosaic law, (Exod. xx. 17.) that we should not covet what is another's, inculcates this doctrine so forcibly, and to such an extent, as that it would even disapprove my secret wishing, that after all the trouble I could take, the owner might remain undiscovered.

The person who found any thing lost, whether a beast that had strayed, or an article of clothing, or whatever else, living or lifeless, was not at liberty to remain unconcerned about it, but was bound to take charge of it; and, if a beast, to maintain it at the owner's expense, until he could have it taken away. (Deut. xxii. 1—3.) Whoever saw a beast tottering or lying under the weight of his burden, was bound to help him; and that with the same exertion and perseverance as the owner himself was doing, or would have done. Nor durst he (for this the words of Moses seem to imply,) desist, but with the owner; that is, until the owner himself left the beast, seeing him past relief. (Exod. xxiii. 5. Deut. xxii. 4.)

4. Moses carried his kindness to animals so far, that he enjoined, that when a man saw even his enemy's beast lying under the weight of his burden, he must help up with him, (Exod. xxiii. 5.); that the ox must not be muzzled while treading out the corn, (Deut. xxv. 4.); that on no account must any beast be castrated, (Levit. xxii. 24*.); that a cow, ewe, or goat, must not be killed on the same day with her young, (Levit. xxii. 28.); that a kid was not to be dressed with its mother's milk, that is, with butter made of milk, but with oil, (Exod. xxiii. 19†.); that when a man found a bird's nest without the limits of his own land, he was not to take the dam with the young, but allow her to escape, (Deut. xxii. 6, 7‡.); that their cattle were, as well as themselves, to enjoy

* "Of this passage, because the meaning of the words has been contested, I will here give a literal version, that every one may judge for himself. A beast that is crushed, bruised, evulsed, or excised, (these were the four modes of castration) you shall not bring unto Jehovah, nor shall you make it so in your land. The Mosaic prohibition is, therefore, two-fold; in the first place, with regard to the offering of castrated animals: and, secondly, with regard to making them so in the land. Thus was the law understood in the time of Josephus, for he says, that, according to the Mosaic ordinance, the castration of either man or beast was not lawful. (Antiq. iv. 8. 40.)" Michaelis.

† The design of this law was to encourage the culture of the olive, for which the land in Judea, was particularly adapted; and in hot climates butter soon becomes rancid, so that good oil is uniformly preferred.

‡ Many birds are so useful in destroying insects, that were it not for them, they would increase so as to eat all the fruits; and others devour the dead carcasses of animals, and prevent diseases. The Sparrows have been found to be useful, as they search, in spring, for nothing so eagerly as for young caterpillars. In Egypt, the Ibis was held sacred, because it lives on snakes, and prevents their multiplication; and in like manner, the Seleucia, which destroys the flies with which that country is infested. These instances prove, that no species of birds, and I may add, perhaps, of reptiles, ought to be destroyed, as they may be of important use in the economy of nature. Their numbers ought to be kept within bounds, but not wholly destroyed.

* So I render the Hebrew word מִטָּב. Others have translated it good, or the best. I will point out the reason of my explanation as well as I can here do it. According to the analogy of the two languages, מִטָּב must be the Arabic Yatab, which means to graze, or pasture; and thence Mautab is a common or place daily pastured. The word מִטָּב also occurs in Gen. xlvii. & applied to the land of Goshen, which certainly could not be called the most fertile field of Egypt, but merely the grazing country." Michaelis.

the rest of the sabbath, (Exod. xx. 10.); and that even the game was to have a jubilee on the sabbatical year, and be allowed to feed in the fallow fields unmolested. (Levit. xxv. 7.)

CHAPTER IX.

On their Civil and Military Police.

§ 1. It is matter of considerable importance, both in a civil and military point of view, to know the number of citizens; and most nations of antiquity adopted the method of occasionally numbering them. It is evident, that this is the intention of what God says by Moses, in Exod. xxx. 12. "When thou takest the sum of the children of Israel," &c. From Num. i. 3. we find that it was only males from twenty years old and upwards that Moses numbered; and not the whole population; and this enumeration had a particular reference to war. A different method was adopted in respect to the Levites; an account was to be taken of all that were nine months old or more, and they were to be exchanged for the first-born sons of the other tribes and consecrated to God. Those Levites who were from thirty to fifty, were to be set apart to the service of the sanctuary. (Num. iii. 40—51) It is doubted whether this is the same as that noticed in Exod. xxx. 11. &c. Michaelis and others maintain that there was but one enumeration—that it was begun in the first year of the Exodus, but not completed till the second; and that Num. i. 1. refers to the enrolment of the names. What makes this probable, is, that the number of persons mentioned in Exod. xxxviii. 26. and Num. i. 46. are the same.

Every numbered Israelite paid half a shekel towards the erection of the tabernacle, called the ransom-money; but we find no command for this tax afterward. No mention is made of collecting the money in the second enumeration made by Moses. (Num. i. 26.) It is not on this account necessarily to be inferred that no such collection was made; for many things are omitted in the brief history contained in the scriptures. It is certain, that after the captivity in Babylon, the Jews paid the half-shekel annually to the temple, without any enumeration of the people. I suspect this arose from the circumstance of their imitating their ancestors, who first paid it for the erection of the tabernacle; and that they again paid it for the rebuilding of the temple; but as this was a work of time, and great expence, it continued to be paid until it grew into a custom, and became an annual tax. (Matt. xvii. 24.) There is a reference to this in the answer of our Lord to the pharisees, Matt. xxii. 15—22. The Jews coined their own money, and the tax called the half-shekel, was paid in the shekel of the sanctuary.

They had circulating among them, as being subject to the Romans, their copper coins, one of which, value about sevenpence-halfpenny of our money, was paid to Cæsar as tribute. Hence, the meaning of our Lord is: Ye see that the emperor demands not from you the poll-tax that you are wont to pay to the temple. He demands but a denarius, which would not so much as be taken in the temple. Ye may, therefore, in all good conscience, pay to the emperor this annual poll-tax, in imperial coin with his own image and superscription; and in like manner, to God, in sacred coin, the sum double the former, destined for the support of the temple; all which, Jesus expresses with greater brevity and beauty, when he says, Give then to Cæsar, what is Cæsar's, and to God, what is God's.*

2. Among the Israelites, the obligation to military service was universal; so that every man of twenty years of age and upwards, is described as one that goeth to war. (Num. i. 3.) It could not be necessary, scarcely on any occasion, for all to be actually called out, hence, some method of selection must have been adopted. When Joshua was to attack the Amalekites, he was ordered to choose out twelve thousand men for the purpose. (Exod. xvii. 9, 10.) And in the war with the Midianites, a thousand men were selected from each tribe. (Num. xxxi. 1—6.) Moses supposes it the duty of those scribes (שרטוט schoterim) who kept the genealogical tables, to make the selection of warriors, or to muster the people, if all were summoned to the field; for, in Deut. xx. 5, 8, 9. he directs what, on such occasions, they were to do, in regard to the exemption of certain descriptions of persons, from service, and to the appointment of officers. (Comp. 2 Sam. viii. 17. xx. 25. and 1 Chron. xviii. 16.)

3. On the appointment of kings, a change took place in the military establishment. David had a guard called Cherethites and Pelethites†; and twenty-four thousand men were called out to be exercised, and perform duty every month; so that there were always two hundred and eighty-eight thousand men trained to arms every year. This was a large army: and amply sufficient both for defence or for hostile operations.

4. Moses expressly authorized certain exemptions from military service. 1. Such as had built a house, and had not yet occupied it, were allowed to return home.—2. Such as had planted a vine or olive-yard, and had not eaten of its fruits.—3. Every man who had betrothed a wife, but had not yet consummated the marriage, was exempted; and—4. Every new-married man, during the first year after his marriage, was freed from military service. (Deut. xx. 5—7. and xxiv. 5.) The design of these exemptions was, to encourage marriage, building, and agriculture.—The fifth exemption must have been disgraceful; and few surely would venture to accept it; that is, if a man was fearful and faint-hearted, he might retire, lest he should infect others with his spirit. (Deut. xx. 8.)

* What was the sin of David in numbering the people? Some say he offended God by his pride, and others, because he did not collect the half-shekel. See note 2 Sam. xxiv. 10.

5. Warfare, in those days, was carried on and regulated by laws, much more severe and sanguinary than it is at present. The victors scarcely ever gave quarter to those who fell into their hands; and this accounts for the vast numbers slain in battle. When an enemy's country was invaded, they seized and took away whatever they possibly could; not only the cattle, and other goods, but the women and children, whom they reduced to slaves. In the laws of Moses, regulations concerning the spoils taken in war are given. (Num. xxxi.) The spoils are of two kinds. Persons and cattle, or inanimate things, such as gold, silver, jewels, apparel, &c.—1. The spoil in persons and cattle did not belong to the persons who took it, but was collected, reckoned, and distributed in the following proportion:—I. Those who went into the field against the enemy received one half; of which, however, they had to give every five hundredth individual to the priests.—II. All the other Israelites received the other half: but with the deduction of every fiftieth individual for the Levites. 2. Things inanimate belonged to the individual who seized them, as we see from verses 48th and 54th of the chapter referred to. For on this occasion the commanders had taken sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels of gold, and they voluntarily dedicated them to the sanctuary; but of the common soldiers it is said, that every man kept his plunder for himself. (Comp. Josh. xxi. 8. and 1 Sam. xxx. 20—25.)

6. During the encampment of the Israelites in the wilderness, Moses guarded against the vice and uncleanness which prevail in camps; he made involuntary pollution a reason for retiring out of it; and did not allow nature to be eased without covering the ordure, and thus preventing any putrefaction which might endanger health. (Deut. xxiii. 10—15.)

CHAPTER X.

On their Police regulations respecting private life.

§ 1. ONE of the regulations respected food. The Israelites were forbidden to eat many things, which were, and are eaten, by other nations. Of animals, only those called clean might be eaten, or offered in sacrifice. These unclean were considered as unfit for food; and indeed, these distinctions, clean and unclean, mean, beasts which were to be used or not to be used for food. This depends much on climate and custom; and what is common in one country, is in another, regarded as wholly improper. We regard the horse, ass, dog, cat, frog, snail, and locust, as unclean or not fit for food; and yet in other countries they are generally used. When God made certain animals unclean, which were used for food, by the nations surrounding Judea, it might be to keep his own people more effectually from associating with them. For those who could not eat at the same table could never become very closely united. The laws relative to clean and unclean beasts are recorded in Levit. xi. and Deut. 14. According to the laws,—1. Quadrupeds that have their feet completely cloven, above as well as below, and at the same time chew their cud, are clean. Those which have neither, or indeed want one of these distinguishing marks, are unclean.—2. With regard to fishes, all that have scales and fins, are clean: all others unclean.—3. Birds are not classed; but those, which live on carrion are specified as what should not be eaten; others, not forbidden, might be eaten.—4. Insects, serpents, worms, &c. are prohibited; and also, certain kinds of lizards; but locusts, in all their four stages of existence, are accounted clean*.

The falling of any sort of vermin into food, or into any oven or pot, rendered it unfit for use. This obliged the Israelites to pay a very particular attention to cleanliness. (Levit. xi. 29—38.) No animal that had died of a disease, or had been torn by wild-beasts, was allowed to be eaten. Strangers, if they chose, might eat them†. (Exod. xxii. 31. Deut. xiv. 21.)

The boiling or roasting of meat with butter, was forbidden. We find the law on this point thrice repeated, viz. in Exod. xxiii. 19. xxxiv. 26. and Deut. xiv. 26. The word (בשל) denotes to boil, when in water is added, but it also means to roast, as in Deut. xvi. 7. and 2 Chron. xxxv. 13. where it refers to preparing the paschal lamb.

* "In Palestine, Arabia, and the adjoining countries, locusts are one of the most common articles of food, and the people would be very ill off if they durst not eat them. For when a swarm of them desolates the fields, they prove, in some measure, themselves an antidote to the famine which they occasion; so much so, indeed, that the poor people look forward with anxiety to the arrival of a swarm of locusts, as yielding them sustenance without any trouble. They are not only eaten fresh, immediately on their appearance; but the people collect them, and know a method of preserving them a long time for food, after they have dried them in an oven." (See Niebuhr's description of Arabia, p. 171.)

† "In Palestine and Arabia, there are great numbers of mad wolves, and consequently, of mad dogs and foxes, among which the hydrophobia is propagated by bites; so that if a man find in the field any beast torn, but not devoured, it is more than probable that it has been bitten by a mad dog, wolf, fox, or jackal, and would communicate this dreadful and fatal disease to the person who should eat of it."

The mother of a kid signifies a she-goat that has yeaned, and all butter is originally milk; so that the precept is, as explained, and as the Jews have always understood it. Though the cooking of a goat with butter is mentioned, the same law is understood to have applied to every other case; and the design of the law was to encourage the use of olive-oil.

What are called the fat pieces in oxen, sheep, and goats, are also prohibited. These were devoted to the altar; and no Israelite was permitted to eat them. (Levit. iii. 17. vii. 25.) These pieces were,—1. The fat with which the intestines were covered, called the net or caul.—2. The fat upon the intestines, called the mesentery, &c.—3. The fat of the kidneys.—4. The fat-tail or rump of certain sheep, which usually weighed from fifteen to fifty pounds. In like manner, they were prohibited from eating blood; and even foreigners residing among them. (Levit. xvii. 10. xix. 26. Deut. xii. 16, 23, 24. xv. 23.) Eating blood, or drinking it, was common among the nations of Asia, in their sacrifices, and in taking of oaths. Hence, this was so repeatedly forbidden; and especially as blood was appointed to make atonement.

2. Other laws regard certain impurities, which cut off those infected with them from all intercourse with their brethren; and who, besides, were bound to abstain from attending the place where divine worship was performed. The political reason of these laws is obvious; it was to promote cleanliness, and thereby health; and to prevent infection, in case of certain disorders which were endemic in Judea.

The leprosy was one of these; and the laws respecting this are more minute and particular, because of its malignant nature. There are various species of this disease; or rather, various diseases which, in their symptoms at the beginning, are nearly allied to it. These did not render the persons attacked with them, unclean; as the bohak, which denotes any cutaneous disorder. (Levit. xiii. 38, 39.) This is neither infectious nor dangerous. In case of the hair falling off, either before or behind, from the head, the person was to be inspected, but if there were no other symptoms of leprosy, the person was clean, (ver. 40—44.) Moses describes the appearances of the infectious and real leprosy so particularly, that we need only to read the chapter, to understand the nature of the disease. It is said to be hereditary, for three or four generations; but then, disappears; and Michaelis asserts, that Exod. xx. 5. is unquestionably to be understood of the leprosy. The regulations adopted to prevent this most loathsome disease, were,—1. That leprous persons should be separated from all others, and reside in a place by themselves. They might marry with those in the same condition.—2. That all suspected persons should be examined; and if the signs of the disease were doubtful, they were shut up, and after seven days again inspected. (Comp. Exod. xiii. and Deut. xxiv. 8.)

The leprosy of clothes or what is made of skin, and of houses, appears to be in a great measure unknown in Europe. The former is described as consisting of green or reddish spots, that remain in spite of washing, and still spread. (Levit. xiii. 47—59.) Michaelis, from information he had received, considers, that the disease in woollen arises, from the use of the wool of dead or decayed sheep. In regard to linen and leather, he could obtain no information. As it respects the house-leprosy, it is considered to be the same as the saltpetre, which sometimes attacks and corrodes our houses, especially in damp places. In Judea, this might be injurious to health; and in consequence, it was necessary that a house should be destroyed. (Levit. xiv. 33—57.)

The disease, called in our version, a running issue, or among physicians, the Gonorrhœa, like the leprosy, rendered the person infected, unclean; and whomsoever he touched became unclean. The bed on which he lay, the stool or bench on which he sat, became unclean. These precautions were necessary when the disease was virulent, to prevent the most dangerous consequences. From the general habit of wearing woollen next the skin, infection might be retained or transmitted much more easily than with us. Moses gives no laws respecting the plague. This was, and is the peculiar disease of Egypt; and Michaelis asserts, that there never was yet, a plague in any other country, that did not come either directly or indirectly from that country. It is often mentioned in the holy scriptures, and usually rendered pestilence (דבר). In David's time, it occurred, (2 Sam. xxiv.); and it is probable, this was Hezekiah's disease.

3. Moses, for obvious reasons, confines women in child-bed, as unclean. He accurately distinguishes the period of lochia rubra, which he limits to seven days. During this time, she was regarded in the same manner as a woman removed. When this ceased, she was clean, but still confined to her house, on the birth of a daughter, for thirty-three days, and on that of a son, sixty-six days. (Levit. xii.)

Involuntary or self-pollution, made persons unclean; and infected the clothes. Both were to be washed. Matrimonial converse defiled both persons in the same manner. These laws, in a physical view, were wise; and on the one hand tended to promote health and marriage; and on the other hand, to discourage polygamy, from the frequency of defilement it occasioned.

The natural evacuation, and any menorrhagia, were also accounted impurities. (Levit. xv. 19—33.) This

4. All human corpses, and the carcasses of beasts, were considered as unclean. Whoever touched the former was unclean for seven days; and whoever went into the tent, or apartment (after the Jews had houses) where the corpse lay, or touched it, or even a human bone, was unclean for the same period. (Num. xix. 11—16.) And the open or uncovered vessels in the house were deemed unclean. Even the body of a clean beast that had died of itself, or was torn, defiled the person who touched it, and he was unclean until the evening, (Levit. xi. 39.); and the carcasses of unclean beasts had the same effect. (Levit. v. 2. xi. 8, 11, 24—31. Deut. xiv. 38.) The design of these laws was to prevent the spreading of any contagious diseases; and by interring whatever was dead, to avoid that putrefaction which often, by impregnating the air with noxious effluvia, generates, particularly in hot climates, diseases the most virulent and fatal. For this reason, it is probable, that earthen vessels defiled, were to be broken.

5. There are three laws which prohibit the mixture of heterogeneous things; one respects agriculture; another the breeding of cattle; and the third, clothing. (Levit. xix. 19. Deut. xxii. 9.) That seed-corn be clean, is now considered of great importance; and no one would buy that which is full of the seeds of weeds, for the purpose of sowing. Nor does any farmer sow wheat and barley mixed together, on the same piece of ground. But I suspect, that this law has a reference to weeds, which might be injurious to health, as mingling wheat and darnel. (Mat. xiii. 24—30.)

The next statute relates to the pairs of beasts of different species. This was forbidden, to impress the people with abhorrence of the crime of bestiality, which was so common with the Canaanites. Yet beasts produced by this commixture, were not forbidden to be used, as the mule is often mentioned in the time of David. Among flocks and herds of various kinds of animals, they will sometimes couple, unknown to the herdsmen, and in this case, the law does not apply. Indeed, it was prohibited to yoke the ox and the ass together. (Deut. xxii. 10.) The other statute, forbidding to wear any stuff composed of flax and wool, I do not understand. Josephus asserts, "that clothing of this kind was allowed only to the priests, the sons of Aaron." In this case, the law forbids the Israelite to dress above his circumstances.

6. The produce of planted fruit-trees was not to be eaten for the first three years, but to be considered as uncircumcised. (Levit. xix. 23.) Every gardener knows, that by plucking off the blossoms, from young fruit-trees, they will thrive better, and be more fruitful afterwards; and doubtless, this was the design of the law.

7. The sexes have been usually distinguished by their dress; and there are natural reasons why they should be so. God prohibits women from wearing the dress of men, and the men from wearing that of women. (Deut. xxii. 5.); and disguises of this kind would be attended with consequences fatal to families, and to chastity and morality.

The law, in Num. xv. 37—40. enjoins that a tassel should be put to each of the four corners of the large piece of cloth with which they wrapped themselves as an upper garment, to be as mementos of their duty. The order, or rather, exhortation in Deut. vi. 8. seems to have the same design. In after times, these laws were abused to the purpose of superstition, and the phylacteries were regarded as a kind of amulets, to preserve the person and to ward off evils. So inscribing passages of the law upon the door-posts of their houses, is still continued by the Mahometans, in Judea and Syria.

On building houses, Moses commands that the roof be surrounded by a parapet. (Deut. xxii. 8.) The flat roofs of the houses in eastern countries, on which the people sit, walk, and, in summer, frequently sleep, and sometimes, where the houses are of equal height, go from roof to roof over the whole city, require this precaution; and to this day it is common to have on the side towards the inner court a parapet, somewhat lower than the one on the other side towards the street, which is generally a wall breast-high. Land-marks were not to be removed. (Deut. xix. 14.) They were to be considered as sacred; and one man must not encroach on the property of another.

8. Various fashions are prohibited, such as tingeing the skin with alheenna, or burning various figures or characters into the skin, by way of ornament, or from superstition in honour of some idol. (Levit. xix. 28. and comp. Deut. xiv. 1. Jerem. xvi. 6. Zecha. xiii. 6.) The design of such laws is obvious; and the same design applies to the prohibition of two Arabian fashions. (Levit. xix. 27.) They shaved the hair of their heads in a round form, in honour of a certain deity, whom the Greeks compare to Bacchus; and the cutting of the whiskers must have had some similar reference.

In mourning for the dead, it had been usual to disfigure their bodies by making slashes in their flesh. This is prohibited. (Levit. xix. 28. Deut. xiv. 1.) They were allowed to put on mourning habits, to rend their garments, to put dust on their heads, and to express their grief in other ways, but not to cut themselves, or shave the head. That cutting the flesh till the blood streamed down was considered acceptable to the idols of Canaan is evident, from the priests of Baal; and for this reason it was not allowed to the Israelites.

9. The common transactions of social life require regard to be paid to weights and measures; and the laws of Moses in this respect deserve universal imitation. The tabernacle furnished standing instances of the long measure; and the table of show or presence-bread, the altar of incense, and the ark of the covenant, all served to preserve the same measure as Moses appointed. Nor could these exemplars of long measure be easily lost. Solomon doubtless used the same measures in building the temple, which Moses had specified; and after the temple was destroyed, sufficient memorials were preserved. Their measures for corn and wine were the ephah and bath, each of the same dimensions. There was a standard of these kept in the holy of holies, in the golden pot, which contained the manna. (Exod. xvi. 33, 36.) This was to contain a homer, which is repeatedly said to be the tenth part of an ephah. In respect to weights, Moses asserts, that twenty gerahs made one shekel of the sanctuary, and three thousand shekels one kikar, or talent. The tabernacle also furnished standards of weight. Each socket of silver for the fifty boards, weighed a talent; and the golden chandelier, in like manner, weighed a talent. (Exod. xxxviii. and xxv. 31—39.) They had many standards of weights, to which they could apply, in the sanctuary; and Solomon alludes to this in Prov. xi. 16. Some have thought that there were weights in use different from the shekel of the sanctuary; as Moses particularly specifies this in the estimations which were to be made of vows. (Levit. xxvii.)

CHAPTER XI.

On Crimes and Punishments.

§ 1. IT may be necessary to observe in general, that parents are not to die for children, nor children for parents. (Deut. xxiv. 16.) Nothing can be more just than this law; for why should the innocent be punished with the guilty? In after times, in cases of treason, it was not observed, as we learn from 1 King. xxi. and 2 King. ix. 26. It is mentioned to the honour of Amaziah, that he acted according to it, which certainly implies, that others had violated it. (2 King. xiv. 5, 6.) It has been thought that this law is contrary to what God says in Exod. xx. 5. It may be replied, that there is a great difference between what God may do in his allwise providence, and what a magistrate may be allowed to do. He may so dispose events, as that the father who deserves punishment may have a wicked son, who may also deserve it for his own crimes. In the law referred to, idolatry is the sin that is threatened with punishment; and the leprosy is supposed to be intended, which God might inflict for the violation of his law; and in the natural course, it would descend to the children to the third or fourth generation. Shall we accuse providence for this? We may then, with the same reason, accuse God for such a course of nature as we yet see, that the health of children should be affected by the vices of their parents.

2. Some of the capital punishments that are mentioned in scripture, were also usual among other nations; such, for instance, as that of burning alive, (Jerm. xxix. 22. Dan. iii. 6.), and that of cutting the body in pieces; limb from limb, (Dan. ii. 5. Ezek. xvi. 40. xxiii. 47.) among the Chaldeans; either that of strangling, or hanging, (1 Kings xx. 31.) among the Syrians of Damascus; and what will naturally occur to every one, that of crucifixion among the Romans. None of these subjects have any connexion with the Mosaic law.

3. The two capital punishments among the Jews were slaying by the sword and stoning. The first did not denote decapitation. This was an Egyptian punishment, but not mentioned by Moses as to be inflicted among the Israelites. (Gen. xl. 17.) Those put to death by the sword, were dispatched as speedily as possible, and in what way the executioner thought proper. (1 King. ii. 25—46.) When a city was to be attacked for any common crime, "they smote it with the edge of the sword." (Deut. xiii. 13—16.) Stoning was a common punishment. The witnesses threw the first stones, and the people followed their example.

4. When persons had been put to death by stoning or the sword, the body was sometimes burned, as a further mark of infamy. (Josh. vii. 15—25. comp. Gen. xxxviii. 14. Levit. xx. 14. & xxi. 9.) Sometimes the dead body was hung on a tree. This was considered peculiarly infamous. (Deut. xxi. 22. comp. Josh. x. 16. with Gen. xl. 19.) Sometimes a heap of stones was raised upon the dead body, to serve as a perpetual monument of the infamy of the person who had there suffered. (Josh. vii. 25, 26. viii. 29.) The punishment of extirpation is often mentioned, he shall be cut off from his people. In some passages it is certain it means, he shall die, or be put to death. (Exod. xxxi. 14. Levit. xvii. 4.) Such were to be either slain with the sword or stoned. It is probable, that in some other cases it denotes capital punishment.

5. Moses does not mention imprisonment as a punishment, among his laws. It was used in Egypt, (Gen. xxxix. 19, 20.); and in the time of Jeremiah it had come into use among the Israelites. (Jerem. xxxviii. 6.) Stripes were a common corporeal punishment. (Levit. xix. 20. Deut. xxii. 18. xxv. 2, 3.) The punishment was inflicted on the criminal, not standing, but laid down. (Deut. xxv. 2.) The stripes were not to exceed forty. This punishment was not considered infamous; so that he who suffered it did not become an object of reproach to his fel-

6. The crimes of lust and their punishment are specified in Levit. xviii. 22, 23. and xx. 13-16. The first crime was that of Sodom, and is known by that name. The person who submitted to this crime is called (כלב) a dog; or if he hired himself for that purpose, (קדש) devoted or consecrated; because in the consecrated groves of the heathen deities, there were brothels of this description established. For the person who committed the crime, we do not find any particular name. The crime of bestiality is called (חבל) disease, or insanity. Both kinds of this crime are specified. They were common among the Egyptians and Canaanites. (Levit. xviii. 3, 4, 22-28.) The punishment of death was appointed for both; and it was probably inflicted by stoning, although that is not specified.

7. The crime of adultery, signifies the carnal connexion of a wife with any other man than her husband. The connexion of a married man with an unmarried woman, was termed whoredom, and is not included in the crime of adultery. (Levit. xx. 10.) To constitute this crime, there must have been real carnal connexion. (Num. v. 12-20.) The punishment of this crime was death, both to the adulterer and adulteress, (Levit. xx. 10.); and, if we may believe John, viii. 5. it was by stoning. Crimes approaching to adultery were thus punished. (Deut. xxii. 20-24.)

That the proof of adultery will always be difficult, it is natural to suppose. But here the Mosaic law furnished an important help to husbands, in authorising them, when they had any suspicion of the fidelity of their wives, to exact from them an oath of purgation, which they were obliged to take in a very solemn and awful manner. The statute respecting this oath, is recorded in Num. v. 11-31. By one of the clauses of the oath of purgation, a visible and corporeal punishment is specified, which the person swearing, imprecated upon herself, and which God himself was understood as engaging to execute. It was, that her thighs might waste, and her belly swell, ver. 21, 27.; and, as we gather from the converse of the case, in ver. 28. that she might become incapable of conception. What particular disease was here meant, expositors have seldom troubled themselves with inquiring: but, as far as I can judge, we have in these words the most striking symptoms of what is no doubt a very rare disease, the hydrops ovarii. That in this disease the belly swells, will naturally be concluded; but it is observed, at the same time, that the thighs become quite wasted. The ceremonies with which this oath was accompanied, must have had an impressive effect; and few would surely be found so hardened as to take a false oath.

If the guilty female was a slave, the parties were not punished with death. (Levit. xix. 20-22.) The concubine is not truly a wife, but only a slave taken to her master's bed; perhaps without her own voluntary consent, and merely because she must do what he commands. The breach of fidelity to him, therefore, forms a sort of intermediate crime between adultery and whoredom; and although, in so far as it compels him to rear up and provide for another man's children as his own, it does him in fact the very same injury as adultery, still there is for her this excuse to be made, that no pactum liberum had been, or could be, entered into between them, in regard to cohabitation and nuptial fidelity, inasmuch as she had no will of her own, being a slave.

8. The crime of incest, was punished, in some cases, capitally, but in others it is doubtful. Those capitally punished, were—I. Incest with a father's wife.—2. With a daughter-in-law.—3. Marriage with a woman and her daughter, at the same time, or successively. (Levit. xx. 11-14.) The punishment is mentioned as burning with fire; but this followed stoning, as already stated. Those doubtful, were marriage between full brothers and sisters, or between half brothers and sisters. (Levit. xx. 17.) The punishment is, cutting off from their people. Some think by this is meant, the forfeiture of their civil rights, or exile; while others contend that it means death. The latter seems to me more probable. Marriage with a paternal uncle's widow, or brother's widow, excepting in case of the Levirate law, is threatened with unfruitfulness. This only denotes that the issue of such marriages should not be ascribed to the natural father, but to this brother, or paternal uncle; by which means the second husband lost his inheritance. (See chapter on personal rights). Many marriages with near kin are not specified; but by analogy with those mentioned, some punishment must have been inflicted.

The crime of forcibly lying with a betrothed woman who was abroad, was capital, as it respects the man, (Deut. xxii. 25.); but if the woman was in a city, it was presumed, that she might have made some one hear and come to her assistance, and in this case, both were to be stoned. In the case of a woman, not betrothed, the punishment was only a fine of fifty shekels, and compulsion to marry her with the loss of the right of giving her a bill of dismissal. (Deut. xxii. 28, 29.)

The crime of a father obliging his daughter to become a prostitute for his benefit, is prohibited, (Levit. xix. 29.); but the punishment is not specified. The crime is called (חבל) the dishonouring, or corrupting the woman whose chastity we ought to protect; and in other cases it is made capital. Among the Canaanites, prostitution in honour of their gods was common; and the hire of it was given to the priests. (Num. xxv.) Such a crime among the Israelites, was capital, as being a breach of the fundamental law of the state. When the daughter of a priest profaned herself, she was to be burnt, (Levit. xxi. 9.); that is, first stoned and then burnt. The same punishment was inflicted on the Levirate widow, who committed whoredom with a stranger, as we learn from the instance of Judah and Tamar, (Gen. xxxviii. 24.); and also in a woman who had deceived her husband, and was not found a virgin. (Deut. xxii. 20, 21.) The crime of cohabiting with a removed woman, was punished with cutting off from their people. (Levit. xx. 18.) The effects of this, even in Italy, and much more in the southern climates, are such as justify this severe punishment.

9. Crimes of blood. Intentional, and casual or accidental murder, are distinguished in the laws of Moses. To the first he appointed the punishment of death; and to the second, that of exile, or confinement to a city of refuge, till the death of the high-priest. Four accessory circumstances are specified, which distinguish the crime of murder, from homicide or manslaughter;—1. When it proceeds from previous hatred, (Num. xxxv. 20, 21. Deut. xix. 11.);—2. When from a wish to satiate revenge with his blood, (Num. xxxv. 20.)—Or, 3. When it is committed with premeditation, (Exod. xxi. 14.);—Or, 4. When a man lies in wait for another, without previous hatred. (Deut. xix. 11.)

Homicide is when one kills another without previous hatred, (Num. xxxv. 22. Deut. xix. 4–6.);—Or without thirst for revenge, (Exod. xxi. 13.);—Or, when it happens from mistake, (Num. xxxv. 11–15.);—Or, by casualty. (Deut. xix. 5.)

In reference to murder, besides the circumstances mentioned, Moses considers it essential to this crime, that the stroke be given by such an instrument or weapon as is likely to cause death. (Num. xxxv. 16–21.) As an iron tool; a piece of wood, or a stone; such as may kill. Striking a man with the fist, or pushing a man down, in such circumstances that his death must be the consequence, are also specified as actual murder. There are two exceptions,—1. In case of a man catching a thief breaking into his house, &c. by night, and killing him, it was not murder, or blood-guiltiness; but if the sun was up, it was deemed murder. (Exod. xxii. 2, 3.) From this law it is evident, that resistance was lawful in other cases.—2. In case the avenger of blood found the man-slayer out of his city of refuge, or caught him before he had reached it, and slew him, he was not guilty of blood. In all cases of the murder of free-men, Moses prohibits any pecuniary compensation; the murderer must be put to death. If the murderer fled to the altar, he was to be torn from it and slain. This secured the poor against the rich. In the case of a slave dying in consequence of the blows he had received from his master, a punishment proportioned to the offence was inflicted by the magistrates, but it was not capital. (Exod. xxi. 21, 22.)

When a murder had been committed, and the murderer was unknown, the elders of the nearest city were to make inquiry; and, by certain rites, declare their ignorance of the murderer. (Deut. xxi. 1–9.) The intention of this statute was to shield the life of man, by interesting all in its preservation.

10. Personal injuries. In a fray, if one man injured or hurt another, the injured person was paid for the loss of his time, and the expense of his cure. (Exod. xxi. 18, 19.) If a pregnant woman was hurt, in a quarrel, so as to produce premature delivery, without further mischief, the author of the injury was to give her husband a recompense, in money, according to his demand; and if this was deemed unreasonable, the case was referred to the judges. On the other hand, if either the woman, or her child was hurt or maimed, the law of retaliation operated in all its force. (ver. 22–25.)

If one hurt another by assaulting him openly, or by an insidious attack, he was to suffer the punishment of retaliation. (Levit. xxiv. 19–23.) This law applied both to the Israelites, and to foreigners, who might be resident among them. This law did not apply to slaves; yet, if a master knocked out the eye or tooth of his slave, the slave, in consequence, obtained his freedom. (Exod. xxi. 26, 27.) It is probable, that this rule was applicable to any other organ of the body. Moses alludes to a custom, shameful and indecent, in Deut. xxv. 11, 12.; and the punishment inflicted, was the loss of the hand.

11. On the crime of theft, Moses imposed the punishment of double (and in some cases still higher) restitution; and in case the person was unable to pay it, he was to be sold for a slave, and payment to be made with the purchase-money. (Exod. xxii. 1–4.) In general, people steal from the desire of gain, or from the love of luxuries, and because they wish for more of them than they can earn by industry, or from aversion to hard and unvaried labour. Wisdom herself cannot devise a more effectual check to any of these motives than restitution, or slavery; this must be much more effectual than capital punishment.

When a man had stolen oxen or sheep, and they were found in his possession, he was to restore double. (Exod. xxii. 3.) This punishment applied to every case, when the stolen property remained unaltered in his possession; but if he had sold or slaughtered it, for a sheep it was four-fold, and for an ox, five-fold. The importance of the ox in agriculture, (for they had no horses) was the reason of this increased punishment. In Solomon's time the punishment seems to have been increased, as we read of seven-fold restitution. (Prov. vi. 30, 31.)

Man-stealing was made a capital crime. (Exod. xxi. 16. Deut. xxiv. 7.) The design of this was to reduce a free-man to slavery, or to sell him as a slave to another. This must be deemed a high crime; and Moses might probably have the conduct of Joseph's brethren in mind. It was a violation both of natural and civil right; and deserved the highest degree of punishment.

Where a person was judicially convicted of having denied any thing committed to his trust, or found by him, his punishment, as in the case of theft, was double restitution; only that it never, as in that crime, went so far as quadruple, or quintuple restitution; at least, nothing of this kind is ordained in Exod. xxii. 8. If the person accused of this crime, had sworn himself guiltless, and afterwards, from the impulse of his conscience, acknowledged the commission of perjury, he had only one-fifth beyond the value of the article denied, to refund to its owner. (Levit. vi. 5.)

12. False accusation and witnesses are strictly prohibited, (Exod. xx. 15.); even to favour a poor man in his cause, or in any way to evade the truth, is not allowed. (Exod. xxiii. 1—3.) In case of false testimony being given against an innocent man, the matter was to be particularly investigated, and brought before the highest tribunal; and, after conviction, the false witness was subject to the law of retaliation, without reprieve. (Deut. xix. 16—21.) Nothing can be more just than this as a civil law; and it must have operated powerfully to prevent the crime.

13. The crimes of cursing or reviling parents, or of striking them, is made capital. (Exod. xxi. 15—17. Levit. xx. 9.) At least, the Hebrew word (קלל) denotes not only cursing, but any reproachful or abusive language. The act of striking, shows a disposition the most wicked; and severe as the punishment was, few parents would resort to the magistrate, until all methods of reformation had been tried in vain. These cases are both included in what is said in Deut. xxi. 18—21.; unless we suppose that the latter applies also to the conduct of the son towards others, besides his parents.

14. The persons of magistrates must be sacred, and in the discharge of their duty, they must not be insulted. The crime of cursing or speaking evil of such persons the law forbids. (Exod. xxii. 28.) The punishment is not specified; and, for this reason, must have been discretionary, and varied according to circumstances.

CHAPTER XII.

On their Judicial procedure.

§ 1. In most cases, judicial procedure must have been summary, as it generally is in Asia. Judges are warned against bribery and partiality. Gifts, to a judge, are absolutely prohibited, (Exod. xxiii. 8.); for as it is said, they blind the wise, and pervert a just cause. Hence, in the curses, one is against taking a gift. (Deut. xxvii. 25.) In regard to partiality, he forbids the judge to show undue respect to the rich and powerful, or to be influenced in his decision by a sympathy in favour of the poor. (Exod. xxiii. 3. Levit. xix. 15.)

2. The place of public judgment was at the city-gate. We do not find that persons like our advocates were employed; every man managed his own cause. As the cause was conducted in the city-gate, which was the usual place of concourse, where the people assembled to hear news or to pass away their time; so men of experience in matters of litigation, might sometimes assist those, who seemed embarrassed in their own cause, even when it was a good one. Perhaps this is meant in Job xxix: 7—17.

3. Witnesses were always upon their oath. A form was read, to which they said amen. (Comp. Levit. v. 2. Prov. xxix. 24. and 1 King. viii. 31.) In reference to this when our Lord was adjured, or put on his oath, he answered. (Matt. xxvi. 63.)

4. In matters of property, where all other means of decision failed, they had recourse to the lot. It was by lot that the land of Canaan had been divided; and from Prov. xvi. 33. and xviii. 18., it is manifest that it was then used in the decision of causes. It was for judicial purposes, in a particular manner, that the sacred lot, called Urim and Thummim was employed; and on this account, the costly embroidered pouch, in which the priest carried this sacred lot on his breast, was called the judicial ornament. This lot was used to discover the guilty, not to convict them. (Josh. vii. 14—18. 1 Sam. xiv. 37—45.) It appears that this lot was only resorted to in the case of an oath being violated, which the whole people had taken.

5. When persons were proved guilty, punishment was inflicted without delay, even in cases where it was capital. (Josh. vii. 16—26. 1 Sam. xvii. 11—19. 2 Sam. i. 13—16. iv. 9—12. 1 King. ii. 23—25. &c.) Our Lord was no sooner condemned than he was led to execution.

From this statement of the laws of Moses, considered as a system of civil polity, we perceive, that they are founded on the purest principles of natural right; maintained as sacred personal liberty, till forfeited by the commission of crime; that they modified many of the previously existing customary laws, which were unfavourable to liberty; that they secured the faithful administration of justice, and that the punishments inflicted were more mild and equitable, and better adapted to deter offenders, than those of any ancient or modern legislator.

PART III.

On the Religious Polity of Moses.

CHAPTER I.

Introductory Remarks.

THE two fundamental laws of the Jewish state, already stated, were also the basis of their religious polity. Jehovah is represented as the only true God; and all the works of nature and of providence, are ascribed to him. He is described as spiritual in his essence, and possessed of every perfection and excellence which can be conceived, in the highest possible degree; almighty in power; in wisdom and understanding, infinite; in goodness, unbounded; in justice, rectitude, and purity, perfect; and in mercy, faithfulness, and truth, invariable and constant. He is the creator and governor of the universe; has brought matter itself into existence, and impressed on it those laws, by which it is regulated, and adapted to all those purposes for which he designed it. He formed all the orders of intelligent beings, in heaven and on earth, as well as all inferior animals; and by him they are all supported and governed. His care is alike extended to all his works.

Such a being can have no equal; and, from his spiritual nature, no material object can possibly be a representation of him. Hence, when he revealed himself to Moses, and appointed the religious institutions of the Israelites, he forbade them to associate any other pretended god with him, or to attempt to make any likeness or representation of him. (Exod. xx. 1—5.) The world at that period was given to idolatry; and the creature was worshipped more than the creator. Mankind had truly become vain in their imaginations, and changed the glory of the incorruptible God into an image made like to corruptible man, &c (Rom. i. 23.)

To preserve the knowledge of himself among mankind, God had appeared to the Patriarchs, and with Abraham and his seed had entered into covenant, promising to give to them the land of Canaan, and that in him all the families of the earth should be blessed. As a sign of this covenant, the Patriarch and his seed were circumcised; and by this rite were consecrated to Jehovah. Among them the knowledge of the one true God had been in some degree preserved; but when he appeared to Moses, and sent him to deliver them from Egypt, by signs and wonders, he acquired a new right to their service and obedience; and on this ground, obedience is commanded and enforced. (Exod. xx. 2.)

We have strong reason to believe that sacrifices had been divinely appointed to Adam, after his fall. It is most probable, that the beasts with whose skins, he and Eve were clothed, had been offered as an holocaust. It is certain that Abel offered such a sacrifice, and that it was accepted. (Gen. iv. 4. Heb. xi. 4.) We have no ground to think that God would accept what he had not appointed. From remote antiquity, the custom prevailed of offering animal sacrifices; and those who worshipped false gods, as well as those who worshipped the True One, did it by sacrifice. Without admitting a divine and early origin, it is impossible to account for the universal prevalence of this custom, among nations most remote from each other.

The Patriarchs were accustomed both to slay and offer their own victims; and it probably continued to be performed by the heads of families, until the time of Moses. It is obvious that this might open a wide door to idolatry; as a man might offer his victim on his own domestic altar, to what object he pleased; nor could his idolatry be always detected. Hence, to abolish the worship of idols, it became necessary no longer to allow the right of private sacrifice; but to appoint some place where they might be publicly offered to the true God. For this purpose, when Jehovah had redeemed Israel, he appointed the tabernacle to be erected, as the centre of divine worship, during the abode of the Israelites in the wilderness; and such place as he should select when they were settled in the promised land. To minister at this holy place, and in future to perform whatever was appointed to be done at the altar, the tribe of Levi was chosen.

From these remarks, it is obvious, that the essential parts of the religious polity of Moses, are the same as what the Patriarchs observed; the object and mode of their worship, were similar. Indeed, the Mosaic, properly speaking, are only the patriarchal institutions, enlarged and modified, to suit the circumstances of the people to whom they were given; and to secure the accomplishment of the divine promises. The covenant made with Abraham, is the foundation charter of the Jewish church. According to this covenant, God promised him a numerous seed.—He foretold that this seed should be afflicted and enslaved, but engaged to redeem them from their enemies, and finally to establish them in the land of Canaan—"that in his seed all the families of the earth should be blessed." To fulfil these engagements God appeared to Moses, and by him delivered the people from the power and tyranny of Pharaoh; and entered into covenant with them, at Horeb, appointing their civil and religious institutions; promising to be their God, and demanding their submission and obedience as his people. (Exod. xix.)

CHAPTER II.

On the Tabernacle.

§ 1. FROM Exod. xxxiii. 7. &c. it appears, that Moses had pitched a tent in the midst of the camp of the Israelites, where he resided, heard causes, and inquired of God; but in consequence of the sin of the people, in making the golden calf, he removed it without the camp, and called it the Convention-tent. The people went thither to consult God by him. It is not improbable, that Moses offered sacrifice and performed other religious services here, until the tabernacle was made. Here God met with him, and spoke to him. (Comp. ver. 7—11.)

2. The tabernacle was not the invention of Moses; the pattern of it, and all that belonged to it, were shown to him on the mountain. The design of it was, that God might dwell there as the king of Israel, and that the people might there offer their sacrifices, and perform the most solemn duties of religion. The form of it was an oblong rectangular figure, thirty cubits long, ten broad, and ten in height, which, according to Dr. Cumberland, who supposes it the Egyptian cubit, was fifty-five feet long, eighteen broad, and eighteen high. The two sides and one end were composed of broad boards, standing upright; each board being about two feet nine inches broad, fastened at the bottom by two tenons in each board, fitted into two mortices in the foundation; at the top by links or hasps, and on the sides by five wooden bars, which ran through rings or staples in each of the boards.

3. Each side consisted of twenty of these boards; and the end, of eight; which comes to about three feet more than the breadth of the tabernacle. Therefore, if these eight boards stood together in a right line, the end must have projected on each side of the building. But, perhaps the two end boards of the eight stood in an angular position to the sides, and the end of the building; for which reason they are distinguished from the other six, and called "the boards of the corners of the tabernacle." (Exod. xxvi. 28.) These boards and these bars were all overlaid with gold; and their rings for the staves, and their hasps at the top, were all of the same metal. The foundation on which they stood, was also very costly and magnificent. It consisted of solid blocks of silver, two under each board; they were each about sixteen inches long, and of a suitable breadth and thickness; each weighing a talent, or about a hundred weight. Of these there were about a hundred in number, ninety-six of which were laid for the foundation of the walls of the tabernacle, under the forty-eight boards; and the other four were the bases of the columns that supported the veil or curtain, which divided the inside of the tabernacle into two rooms. (Exod. xxxviii. 27.)

4. The tabernacle, thus fitted and reared, had four different coverings, or curtains, or carpets thrown one over the other, which hung down on the side near to the silver foundation. The first and lowest carpet was made of fine linen, richly embroidered with figures of cherubs, in blue, purple, and scarlet. This carpet consisted of ten breadths, which were joined together with blue loops and clasps of gold. The next carpet, which lay over the embroidered one, was made of a sort of mohair; the breadths of these were joined together with clasps of brass. The third carpet was made of ram's skin, dyed red; and the uppermost of all, which was to fence the rest from the weather, was made of seal skins.

Thus we have seen the outside of the tabernacle complete, on the top, the two sides, and one end, namely, that which was set towards the west, when the tabernacle was reared. (Exod. xxvi. 22.) As for the east end, it had no boards; but was sheltered with a fine embroidered curtain, hung upon five pillars of shittim wood overlaid with gold. (ver. 36, 37.)

5. The inside of the tabernacle was divided into two rooms, by means of a veil or curtain, hung upon four pillars mentioned before. This veil was made of the richest stuff, both for matter and workmanship, and adorned with cherubs and other ornaments, curiously embroidered upon it. It does not appear, in the scripture account, at what distance from either end of the tabernacle this veil was hung; but it is reasonably conjectured, that it divided the tabernacle, in the same proportion in which the temple, afterwards built according to its model, was divided; that is, two-thirds of the whole length were allotted to the first room, and one-third to the second; so that the room beyond the veil, which was called the holy of holies, was exactly square, being ten cubits each way; and the first room, called the sanctuary, was twice as long as broad.

6. Round the tabernacle there was a spacious area, or court, of a hundred cubits long and fifty broad, surrounded with pillars, set in bases of brass and filletted with silver, at the distance of five cubits from one another. So that there were twenty pillars on each side, and ten at each end of the court. These pillars had silver hooks, on which the hangings were fastened, that formed the inclosure of the court. These hangings were of fine twined linen. (Exod. xxvii. 9.) The entrance into this court was at the east end, facing the tabernacle; where richer hangings, for the space of twenty cubits, were supported by four of the pillars; and these were not fastened like the rest of the hangings, but made to be either drawn or lifted up; the text does not say which, but the Jews believe the latter.

7. Within the court were placed the altar of burnt-offering, and the brazen-laver. The altar was five cubits square, and three high. (Exod. xxvii. 1.) At the corners it had prominences, called horns. (ver. 2. Ps. cxviii. 27.) On this, all the sacrifices were consumed; and the fire, which at first descended from heaven, was continually preserved. The laver is described in chap. xxx. 15—21. It was capacious, and designed for the priests to wash themselves in, before they approached the altar.

8. In the sanctuary, or first room of the tabernacle, were placed, first, the altar of incense, (Exod. xxx. 1—10.); second, the golden chandelier, (chap. xxv. 31—39.); and third, the table of presence-bread, (chap. xxv. 23—30.). In the most holy place, was put the ark, with its cover, called the mercy-seat, at the ends of which stood two cherubs, with expanded wings. (Exod. xxv. 10—22.) In this ark were put the two tables of the law; and beside it, the book of the law, (Deut. xxxi. 26.), the pot of manna, and Aaron's rod, which had budded. The temple of Solomon was built after the model of the tabernacle, only its dimensions were larger.

CHAPTER III.

On the Priests, Levites, and Prophets.

§ 1. To commemorate the deliverance of the first-born, when God destroyed those of the Egyptians, God appointed the Feast of the Pass-over; and he claimed as his right, all the first-born of Israel; but in lieu of them, he chose the tribe of Levi to minister at the tabernacle, and to serve at the altar. By the zeal of the Levites against idolatry, they are said to have consecrated themselves; and for which, they received, most probably, the blessing of the sacred ministry. (Exod. xxxii. 26—29.

Num. iii. 12, 13. viii. 18.) Both the Levites and the first-born, were numbered; and as the first-born exceeded the Levites in number, by two hundred and seventy-three, these were redeemed, by paying five shekels a head. (Num. iii. 14—51.)

2. The priesthood was given to Aaron and his sons, in perpetuity. Aaron was consecrated by Moses (Levit. viii. 1. &c.) as the first high-priest, and his sons officiated under him. Their office was to offer the sacrifices, burn incense, and bless the people. It was made a capital crime for any other to perform these offices, as appears from the instance of Korah and his companions, in Num. xvi. 10., and from Uzziah, in 2 Chron. xxvi. 16—21. We, however, find that Samuel, David, Solomon, and Elijah, offered sacrifices, and blessed the people, nor are they blamed for it. The reason seems to be, that being under a particular influence of the Holy Spirit, they are considered as possessing, in this case, the rights of priests. The high-priest only was permitted to enter into the holy of holies; and that but once in the year, on the great day of atonement. (Levit. xvi. 1. &c.)

3. The dress of the high-priest was most splendid. The following belonged to priests in common:—1. Fine cotton drawers, to cover their nakedness, when they went up to the altar. (Exod. xxviii. 42.)—2. Tunics, made of the same material. (Exod. xxxix. 27.) It is thought that they reached down to the feet. (Rev. i. 13.)—3. The girdle, also made of cotton. (Exod. xxviii. 42.) Josephus informs us, that it went twice round the waist, and was tied on a knot before, with the ends hanging down. It was made hollow, and served for a purse as well as a girdle. (Matt. x. 9.)—4. The turbans, made of cotton. (Exod. xxviii. 40.) The form of these varied at different periods. These priestly garments were all white, and designed to remind them of that moral purity, which their office obliged them to cultivate. When Aaron went into the most holy place, he was clothed only in these white garments. (Levit. xvi. 4. comp. Rev. iii. 5. iv. 4. vii. 9, 13. &c.) What was peculiar to the high-priest, were,—1. The blue robe, worn over the cotton tunic. (Exod. xxviii. 31—34.) The form and use of it are specified.—2. The ephod, which appears to have been like a modern spencer, and worn by persons of distinction. (1 Sam. ii. 18. xxii. 18. 2 Sam. vi. 14.) This ephod of the high-priest, was made of the richest materials. (Exod. xxviii. 5, 6.) It had two shoulder-pieces, in which were set two onyx-stones, and the names of the sons of Israel engraved thereon.—3. The breast-plate of judgment. (Exod. xxviii. 15—29.) This seems to have been designed to represent his office, as supreme judge, that he should equally regard the interest of all the Israelites, and decide impartially. (Comp. Ephe. vi. 14. and Isa. lix. 17.;

ON THE PRIESTS, LEVITES, AND PROPHETS.

2 Cor. vi. 7. and 1 Thess. v. 8.)—4. The mitre, with its gold petal, on which was engraved (קֹדֶשׁ לַיהוָה) HOLY TO JEHOVAH, emphatically expressing the honour and the duty of the high-priest. To the breast-plate belonged the Urim and Thummim, which the Septuagint renders, "manifestation and truth." What these were, it is impossible certainly to decide. Some think the stones of the breast-plate are meant; others, teraphs inclosed in it; Geddes, images of justice and truth; and Michaelis, three sacred lots; one of which implied the affirmative, another the negative, and the third, blank. He founds his opinion on the use of the word (תְּמִימִים) 1 Sam. xiv. 41. Moses gives no direction for making the Urim and Thummim, which naturally suggests that they were well known; and tends to support the opinion of Michaelis.

4. The priests were solemnly consecrated to their office.—1. Both Aaron and his sons were to be purified by ablution. (Exod. xxix. 4. comp. Matt. iii. 15.)—2. They were anointed with the Holy Uction. (Exod. xxx. 30. Num. iii. 3.) It is clear, that every high-priest was anointed on his entering on his office, (Levit. iv. 3.); but it does not appear that the ordinary priests were, after their first anointing with Aaron, their father. The Holy Uction is described. (Exod. xxx. 23—25.)—3. They were clothed with the holy garments; the priests, with the drawers, tunics, girdles, and turbans, before described; and the high-priest, besides these, with the blue robe, ephod, breast-plate, and mitre. The high-priest and the other priests, wore these garments only when they performed their sacred functions. (Exod. xxviii. 43.)—4. Their consecration was completed by offering certain prescribed sacrifices. (Exod. xxix and comp. with Levit. 8.) In the time of David, the priests had become so numerous, that, by divine direction, he divided them into twenty-four courses, each course serving by rotation for a week. (1 Chron. xxiv.) Each course had its respective head or chief, of whom there were sixteen of the posterity of Eleazar, and eight of Ithamar. These heads or chiefs are thought to be those called chief-priests by the evangelists. (Comp. Matt. xvi. 21. xxvii. 12, 41. John, vii. 32. xviii. 3. Acts, ix. 14. &c.)

5. The Levites were divided according to Levi's three sons, Kahath, Gershon, and Merari into three classes; and their office, on the erection of the tabernacle, was to assist the priests, by slaughtering victims, and providing and preparing whatever was necessary for the service. They entered on their office at the age of twenty-five, and at thirty were deemed properly instructed to perform every part of it. At the age of fifty, they ceased to wait on the service of the tabernacle. They were consecrated to this service. (Num. viii. 5—22.)—1. They were to be purified, their flesh shaved, and their clothes washed.—2. Aaron was to offer them to Jehovah as the offering of the children of Israel.—3. They were to be set apart by the imposition of the hands of the children of Israel, or as some think, by them, through their elders or chiefs of their tribes. This ceremony was afterwards used at the appointment of a person either to a civil or sacred office. (Num. xxvii. 18. Acts, vi. 6. xii. 2, 3.) In the wilderness, like the priests, they dwelt around the tabernacle; and formed a kind of guard to it and to Moses. When the Israelites marched, they took down and carried the various parts of the tabernacle; and when they encamped, they reared it up. (Num. iv. &c.) David divided the Levites into three classes; the first waited upon the priests, the sons of Aaron, (1 Chron. xxiii. 28, 29. 2 Chron. xxix. 34. xxxv. 10—14.); the second formed the choir of singers in the temple, and were divided into twenty-four courses, (1 Chron. xxv.); and the third class were the porters at the gates of the temple, and attended by courses. (2 Chron. xxxv. 15.)

6. Neither the priests nor the Levites had any part of the land of Canaan. They had forty-eight cities, with their suburbs assigned to them, thirteen of which belonged to the priests, and thirty-five to the Levites. (Deut. xviii. 1. Num. xxxv. 1—8. Josh. xxi.) Dr. Lightfoot considers these cities as seats of learning, where the Levitical tribes studied the law, and diffused the knowledge of it through the nation. They were supported partly by the land around their cities, but chiefly by the tithes, paid by the other tribes. (Num. xviii. 21.) This tithe consisted both of the produce of the land and of the live-stock. (Levit. xxvii. 30. 2 Chron. xxxi. 5, 6.) The Levites paid out of this tithe one-tenth to the priests. (Num. xviii. 25—28.) There was a second tithe, the produce of which the people were to employ in feast-offerings. (Deut. xii. 17, 18. xiv. 22—27. Levit. xxvii. 31.) To these feasts the Levites were invited. The priests had also certain parts of all sin and trespass-offerings. The tithes of the field might be purchased by the owner, (Levit. xxvii. 32, 33.); but those of cattle could not.

7. Prophets were extraordinary characters, whom God raised up from time to time, and to and by whom he revealed his will. In this sense, the patriarchs were prophets, as to them he made the most interesting promises; but Moses is considered as the most eminent, because God spoke to him with an audible voice. He foretold, that God would raise up a prophet like to him; &c. (Deut. xviii. 15—22.); which, though it may refer primarily to the Messiah, yet it clearly refers to an order of prophets, as it specifies some who might speak in the name of the Lord, when he had not sent them. The term prophet is applied to Aaron, because he delivered what Moses made known to him. Thus Heman and Jeduthun are said to prophecy on harps, &c. (1 Chron. xxv. 1.); because they sung prophetic hymns. (1 Sam. x. 5, 10.) Hence, the schools of the prophets, where persons were taught sacred literature, and sang the praises of God. Perhaps this may explain 1 Cor. xi. 5., as praising seems naturally connected with praying.

8. The true prophets were men of great piety; lived a mortified life, and were fervent in prayer. (Gen. xx. 7.) Their prayers had great efficacy. (Jerem. xxvii. 18. comp. xv. 1. and xiv. 1.) They generally wore rough garments, perhaps of camel's hair, like the Baptist. The history of Elijah and Elisha proves that they sometimes verified their character by working miracles; and all of them by the sanctity of their lives and the truth of their predictions. They spoke as they were moved by the Holy Spirit; and hence, when their message was a burden, and contained only denunciations, they faithfully delivered it. They were often persecuted for their fidelity; and not a few sealed their prophetic mission with their blood. In exigences, the people sought to the prophets for advice; and when the priests, and Levites, and people turned to idolatry, after the example of wicked kings, the prophets were sent to reclaim them, or to announce the judgments of God on them. Their writings, which are yet preserved, prove, that they were most eloquent preachers of righteousness; bold reprovers of vice; and men of God, as they are emphatically called.

CHAPTER IV.

§ 1. Sacrifices and offerings were presented to God from the fall of man; and no doubt were of divine institution. As for the notion of Spencer and others, that they were gifts presented to conciliate the divine favour, in the same manner that one man tries to conciliate that of another, to say the least, it is unsupported either by the nature of things, or by authority from revelation. So also is that of Mede and Sykes, that they were federal rites, indicating that the offerer and God were in a state of friendship. Equally so is the opinion of Warburton, that they were symbolical of prayer and praise. It is impossible to account for the origin of sacrifices on any principles of reason; for what connexion is there in human reason, between the slaughter and burning of an animal, and the forgiveness of sin? How can it be supposed reasonable that an offender should remove God's displeasure, and procure his favour, by killing, unauthorized, one of his creatures? The only proper view of this subject seems to me to be, that God appointed animal sacrifices, strongly to represent the punishment due to sin; and graciously admitted the substitution of the victim for the offender, by the offering of which, his anger was appeased, the offender pardoned, and admitted to his favour; and that such animal sacrifice had this effect, not for its own sake, but as typical of the Lamb, that victim which God in infinite wisdom and love, had destined to be offered for the sins of the world. This view is clearly founded on the language of the New Testament; and it gives dignity and importance to the patriarchal and Mosaic sacrifices.

2. Sacrifices are divided into four kinds:—1. The burnt-offering, which was wholly consumed. This appears to be the first species of sacrifice offered, and all those of the patriarchs, were, most probably, of this kind. The Jews considered the burnt-offering or holocaust, as the most excellent of all their offerings; and Moses first describes and appoints this. (Levit. i. 1. &c.)—2. The sin-offering. (Levit. iv.) The term (חטאת) denotes both sin and a sacrifice to expiate it; so the Greek term (αμαρτια) 2 Cor. v. 21. Rom. viii. 3. These sacrifices were offered for sins of ignorance, (Levit. iv. 2. &c.); for legal pollutions, as cleansing a leper, (Levit. xiv. 19.), purifying a woman after child-bearing, (ch. xii. 6.), and others, (ch. xv. 19, 29, 30.). Only certain fat pieces of these offerings were consumed on the altar; the rest was the portion of the priests. They were offered every new moon, during the pass-over week, at the feast of trumpets, and of booths. (Num. xxviii. xxix.) Some sin-offerings, like the burnt-offerings, were wholly consumed, not on the altar but without the camp; as those offered for the sin of the high-priest, for the sin of the whole congregation, and on the day of expiation. (Levit. iv. 2—6.) To the two last, the offering of Christ is compared. (2 Cor. v. 21. Heb. xiii. 11, 12. Levit. xvi. 27.)—3. The trespass or guilt-offerings. It is not easy to discover in what these differed from the former. Michaelis supposes the former refers to sins of commission, and these to those of omission; Geddes, that the guilt-offerings relate to offences of criminal carelessness. (Levit. v. 1. &c.)—4. The feast-offerings, the fat of the victims being consumed on the altar, a small part being given to the priests, the remainder was eaten by the offerer and his friends. Some feast-offerings were appointed, as at pentecost, for a Nazarite, who had completed his vow, and at the consecration of a priest; but they were generally free-will-offerings of the people.

3. Sacrifices were limited to three kinds of cattle, the beeve kind, and sheep and goats. No wild-beasts, though clean, and what might be slaughtered for food, were allowed to be sacrificed. (Deut. xii. 15, 22. &c.) All clean birds might be offered; but doves and pigeons were the most common. (Levit. xiv. 4—7.) These sacrifices were either offered for the whole people, as the morning and evening sacrifice, daily, and those of new moons and other feasts; or for individuals, as the paschal lamb, the high-priest's sin-offering for himself, and others for particular offences, vows, &c. With the sin and guilt-offerings and other sacrifices, wheaten-offerings and drink-offerings were presented. They are described in Levit. ii. &c. To the former, oil and salt were added; and the latter consisted of wine.

4. These sacrifices and offerings were to be offered at the tabernacle only. While the Israelites were in the wilderness, and on their settlement in Canaan, this was the place to which they were to bring their gifts and oblations. (Levit. xvii. 8, 9.) The ark and tabernacle were long fixed at Shiloh, then at Kirjath-jearim, and afterwards in Zion; and thither the tribes went to offer sacrifices. When the ark was taken out with the troops to battle, sacrifices were offered before it in any place; and when it was transferred into the temple, then they were offered there. In every period of the Jewish history, till the captivity, we find them transgressing the law on this point. They sacrificed on the high-places, and frequently to idols, for which their historians and their prophets so often blamed them, and denounced the most heavy judgments against them.

5. The feasts of the Jews were either weekly, as the sabbath; or monthly, as the new-moons; or annual, as the pass-over, the pentecost, the feast of ingathering or of tabernacles, and the feast of trumpets; to which we may add, the annual fast, or day of expiation. Besides these, there were others that returned once in a certain number of years; as the sabbatical year, and the jubilee. On the sabbath they rested from their usual employments, and on that day four lambs were offered. (Num. xxviii. 9, 10.) Though they did not, till after the captivity, build synagogues, and assemble on the sabbath-day to read and hear the law, yet, it is probable, that the most serious of the people employed it in private reading and instruction, conversation and prayer*. The new moons were not made days of rest, unless they chose, except that of the seventh month. (Num. xxxix. 11—15. comp. Levit. xxiii. 23, 24. Num. xxix. 1—6.)

6. The three great feasts, were distinguished from the sabbath and other holy days, by this remarkable difference, that they lasted for seven, one of them, indeed, for eight, successive days; and that all the males in Israel were then obliged to assemble at the place where the sanctuary stood. (Exod. xxiii. 14—17.) Their attendance, however, was not so rigidly exacted on the other two festivals, as on the first, which was,—1. The feast of the pass-over, kept in remembrance of their departure from Egypt. This festival was to commence on the evening subsequent to the 14th day of the first moon of the year, with eating what was called the paschal lamb, and it was to continue seven whole days, that is, until the 21st. On the 16th day, the first fruits of the ripe ears of corn were to be presented to God, (Levit. xxiii. 9—14.); and from that day they were permitted to begin harvest, which commonly was not completely finished till seven weeks after, because in the colder parts of Palestine, it was not commenced nearly so soon as in the warmest. After the first day was over, which was holy, every one was at liberty the very next morning, of course, while the festival still lasted, to return to his home, if he pleased. (Deut. xvi. 17.)

7. After the conclusion of the seven harvest-weeks now mentioned, or, in other words, on the 50th day, reckoned from the 16th of the first moon, the festival of pentecost was to be celebrated, and it continued in like manner for seven whole days. This was properly the harvest festival, in which they were to offer thanksgivings to God for the bounties of harvest, and to present unto him the first fruits thereof, in bread baked of the new corn. (Exod. xxiii. 16. Levit. xxiii. 14—21. Num. xviii. 26—31.) The feast of booths, which was the festival of gratitude, for the fruitage and vintage, commenced on the 14th day of the seventh moon (about the month of October) and continued until the 22nd. During these eight days the Israelites dwelt in booths, formed of green branches interwoven together, which, in the warm region of Palestine, answered extremely well, because in October the weather is dry.

8. Another feast, or as some call it, a fast, was the day of expiation. (Levit. xiv. xxiii. 27—32.) This was called the day of atonement, because of the extraordinary sacrifices which were then offered. Of the victims, none were more remarkable than the two goats, which the high-priest was to receive from the congregation, and to set them before the tabernacle; casting lots, which of the two should be immediately sacrificed, and which should be sent alive into the wilderness, after the sins of the people had been confessed over him, and laid as it were upon him. The rites attending the public service of this day were chiefly performed by the high-priest, who had more to do on this than on any other day of the year, or perhaps all the rest together. He was to kill and offer the sacrifices, and sprinkle their blood with his own hands. The grand peculiarity in the service of this day, was the high-priest's entering into the holy of holies, which was not permitted at any other time. (Lev. xvi. 2. Heb. ix. 7.)

* Lewis contends that they had oratories, or public places for prayer, even from their entrance into Canaan; but of this we have no satisfactory evidence. Had there been such places, and had the law been read and explained, it is difficult to account for the general defection from God, and the prevalence of idolatry.

ON THEIR DIVISION OF TIME ; AND THE OBJECTS OF IDOLATROUS WORSHIP.

And so it was his peculiar privilege thus to draw nearer to God, or to the tokens of his special presence, to the ark, to the mercy-seat, and to the shechina, or, divine glory, than any other mortal.

9. The feast of the dedication (John, x. 22.) was instituted by Judas Maccabeus, after Antiochus had been vanquished and the temple purified. (1 Mac. 4. 59.) The feast of Purim, appointed by Mordecai, the Jews still observe as a day of mirth and jollity. An account of it is found in the 9th chapter of Esther.

CHAPTER V.

On their division of Time.

§ 1. THE most natural division of time is that of the succession of light and darkness, forming one complete day. And this is undoubtedly the first and oldest. (See Gen. i. 3. and note.) In the Old Testament, we find no mention of hours, at least, before Daniel; the only terms which occur, are, the morning and noon, evening and night. They appear to have divided the day into four parts, beginning at sun-rise and ending at sun-set; and as the days grew longer, these parts must also have been longer. Hence, after they began to reckon by hours, their third hour answered to our nine in the morning; their sixth, to our noon; their ninth, to our three in the afternoon; and their twelfth, to our six in the evening. They divided the night in like manner; and each of the portions was called a watch. (Lamen. ii. 19. Judg. vii. 19. John, xi. 9. Acts, viii. 1. x. 9.)

2. The division of days into weeks was, according to Moses, from the beginning. (Gen. ii. 2.) Noah divided his days by sevens. (ch. viii. 10—13.) The same division was used in the time of the patriarchs. (ch. xxix. 27. com. Judg. xiv. 12, 17.) Months are clearly derived from the moon, containing the space between one new moon and another. The Jews were obliged, in order to observe their religious feasts, to notice the new moon; and their month consisted of twenty-nine or thirty days, corresponding to the moon. Their year consisted of twelve or thirteen months, in order to adjust the synodical period with the solar; and to keep their feasts nearly at the same seasons of the year, which the offering the first-fruits of the harvest, and the feast of ingathering particularly required. The year was distinguished into civil and sacred; each of which had a different beginning. The civil year began at the equinoctial new moon, in autumn; and the sacred, with the equinoctial new moon, in spring. (Exod. xxiii. 16. xxxiv. 22.)

3. Every seventh-year was distinguished from others, by being a year of rest; and therefore called the sabbatical year. It is natural to infer, that this year began in autumn, when all the fruits of the land had been gathered in, and when it was usual to prepare the land for the next crop. (Levit. xxv. 3, 4.) During the whole year, the land lay fallow, the vine and olive-yards were not even pruned, nor was any game taken or destroyed. Whatever grew was the common right of all. (Levit. xxv. 1—7.) The fiftieth year, or every forty-ninth, beginning with the sabbatical, was called the year of jubilee, most probably, from the blowing of the trumpets, and was a year of general release; debtors and prisoners obtained their freedom, and property sold, returned to its owner or his heirs. (Levit. xxv. 8. &c.)

4. The Jews seem to have had, at different periods, different eras, whence they dated, and to which they referred. Moses, at first, dated from the creation, by the birth of the patriarchs; and then, more especially from the birth of Noah, in the hundredth year of whose life the flood or deluge occurred. (Gen. vii. 11. viii. 13.) The deliverance from Egypt formed a new, distinguished era to the Israelites; and after this period, Moses and subsequent writers, dated from it. (Num. xxxiii. 38. 1 Kings. vi. 1.) At length, Solomon built the temple, the most splendid structure ever erected, and for some time they dated from it, by the reigns of the kings of Judah and of Israel. The captivity in Babylon, afterwards furnished a new epocha, whence they computed their years. (Ezek. xxxiii. 21. xl. 1.) Since their dispersion, they have constantly used the era of the creation.

CHAPTER VI.

On the objects of idolatrous worship, and various superstitions mentioned in the scriptures.

§ 1. IDOLATRY early obtained in the world. In the earlier periods, all the knowledge of the true God was derived from tradition, handed down from Noah and his sons, and through them to their descendants, in connexion with the works of nature. Tradition was soon corrupted; and though the worship by sacrifice every where continued, yet the forms of it were varied, and all just conceptions of the One infinite and eternal God, were, by degrees, nearly obliterated. Perceiving the influence which the sun and other heavenly bodies had on the earth, these were first honoured as the emblems of Deity, and afterwards, as so many different and independent gods. Next, perhaps, the elements, as connected with the great generating principle of nature, were deified; and then men, who had benefitted others by their inventions, or who had founded empires, and whom affection or flattery raised to the rank of gods. On the principle of utility, arose the worship paid to certain animals. Thus every country had its own gods, which were honsoured by some peculiar rites; and individuals possessed little images of these gods, to defend and prosper their families; and carried them about, for their personal protection and safety. Some of these gods were considered as vindictive; and to pacify them, human beings were immolated on their altars. Others were regarded as the patrons of pleasure; and acts of gross intemperance and licentiousness were considered as acts of worship paid to them.

2. Moses every where forbids the Israelites either to make images of any such gods, or to pay any respect to them. He assures them, that if they fell into this sin, Jehovah would give them up to their enemies; and that they should suffer as a nation, every kind of calamity; and which we see in their history they actually did suffer, for this crime. In no period till the captivity, were they wholly free from idolatry; in the wilderness, they made the golden calf, and worshipped Tammuz and Baal-peor; and in Canaan, they adored the host of heaven, and the gods of the surrounding nations. In the reign of some of the kings, we find the defection from God so general, that few were found devoted to him. Some of the better kings attempted to reform them, and produced by their example and efforts, a partial change; but their goodness was like the morning cloud, soon dissipated. The authority of the law, the most eloquent and pathetic addresses of their prophets, the most awful denunciations of divine judgments, were lost on an obdurate and vicious race.

3. Baal, in the scriptures, seems to be a name attributed to any of the heathen gods, denoting Lord. By the Babylonians, the sun was called Bel, and it is not improbable, that this was the original object to which this name applied, as 'lord of heaven.' Various epithets are given to this idol, as Baal-berith, (Judg. viii. 33.) 'lord of the covenant'; Baal-zebul, (2 King. vi. 3.) 'lord of flies', which some think the Jews so called out of contempt, and that the name among the Ekronites was, not 'lord of flies', but 'lord of hosts'. Baal-peor, (Num. xxv. 3.) called that shame 'open mouthed Baal', is justly thought to be the same as Priapus. These Baals, or their images, were compound figures of some animal, as the bull, lion, goat, eagle, &c. united with the form of a man or woman. (See Montfaucon or Calmet.) They were worshipped on high-places, and their temples and altars were often surrounded with groves. From Jer. xix. 5. compared with xxxii. 35. Bates concludes that Baal and Moloch were only different names of the same object. The latter name signifies king; and Baal was thus called by the Ammonites. The Moabites called him Chemosh. (Jerem. xlviii. 13.)

xliv. 17. &c. compared with 2 King. xxiii. 11. & 2 Chron. xxxiv. 4. From these passages, it is evident, that images, horses, and chariots were devoted to the sun, and that acts of religious homage were paid to that luminary. The manner of serving the queen, or the regency of the heavens, also shows the ardour and the zeal of these deluded idolators. The wheaten-offerings which Jehovah had commanded to be offered to himself, they offered to the host of heaven. The Baals, or the heavens which they worshipped, Jehovah made the instruments of their punishment. (1 King. xvii. xviii.) The Ashtaroth, or Astarte, the goddess of the Sidonians, (1 King. xi. 23.) is thought to be the moon, and, according to Cicero, was the same as Venus. This idol had the female form. (Comp. Judg. ii. 13. and 1 Sam. vii. 3. xii. 10. xxxi. 10.)

5. The idols, which the people worshipped whom the king of Assyria placed in Samaria, after the captivity of Israel, are unknown. They are mentioned in 2 King. xvii. 30, 31. They appear to have been nearly similar to the Baals or Molochs of the Canaanites. So also was the Nebo of the Babylonians, and the Rimmon (2 King. v. 18.) of the Syrians. The Tammuz (Ezek. viii. 14.) of the Egyptians, was the Adonis of the Phœnicians and Syrians, and Jerom so renders. She was the same as Venus. Dagon, the idol of the Philistines, was a compound image of a man united to a fish. (Judg. xvi. 23.) The learned editor of Calmet has rendered it probable, that this idol was originally commemorative of the deliverance of Noah in the ark. The Diana of the Greeks and Romans, had the form of a woman, hung round with breasts, and was only the prolific powers of nature idolized. (Acts, xix. 24—35.) Jupiter, was the chief god of the heathen world, who is represented as wielding the thunder-bolts of heaven; and Mercury, was considered the god of eloquence, and the messenger of the other gods. The inhabitants of Lystra, considered Barnabas and Paul as these gods come down to them. (Acts, xiv. 12.)

6. To these various idols, sacrifices were offered, and different rites were observed in honour of them. To Baal and Moloch, human victims were frequently presented; and children were in some manner dedicated and devoted to them. They are said to make them pass through the fire; denoting some rite of dedication and purification. This was forbidden the Israelites, without any penalty annexed. (Levit. xviii. 20.) Ahaz thus devoted his son, (2 King. xvi. 2.); but as Hezekiah afterwards reigned, and was one of the best kings, it is certain that he was not put to death. It is however clear, that after thus devoting and purifying them, many of them were sacrificed. (Ezek. xvi. 21. xx. 26, 31. Ps. cvi. 36—40.) The chief place of these horrid rites, was Tophet, in the the valley of the son of Hinnom, near Jerusalem. (Jer.

vii. 31, 32. Josiah defiled this place, and it became a receptacle for dead carcasses and other filth, and where a fire was kindled to consume them. Hence, either from this or the burning of children there, the place was considered as an emblem of hell, or the future state of punishment. (Is. xxx. 33. Matt. v. 22. &c.) Jeremiah declared, that the idolatrous Jews should there be slain, in such numbers, that the valley should be called the valley of slaughter. (ch. xix. 11—13.)

7. The idols, Tammuz, Ashtaroth, Baal-peor, and others, were the gods and goddesses of lust; and were served in a manner suitable to their character. For the virtues of modesty, chastity, and sobriety, were substituted the opposite vices, in honour of these idols; and strange as it may appear, the worst passions and deeds were regarded not only as innocent, but as hallowed and meritorious. The language of the prophets assures us, that the people had become corrupt and sensual, and committed whoredom under every green tree, and on every high hill. This not only applies to their idolatry, but may be understood in a literal sense.

8. Connected with the worship of idols, were the various superstitious practices of augury, divination, soothsaying, &c. The most general expression for divining, is ḥazôn. It denotes either to attempt to foretel events, by some kind of arts, or to conjecture by prudence and experience. (Comp. Deut. xviii. 10. with Prov. xvi. 10. and Is. iii. 2.) Michaelis thought that it denoted the Haruspex, one who divined by inspecting the liver, and other viscera of sacrificed animals; Dathe, divining by the lot; and Rosenmüller, divining by arrows. (Ezek. xxi. 26.) I am satisfied, that it denotes rather, the act of divination in general, some of the various kinds being afterwards mentioned, as,—1. The observer of the clouds. By the appearance of the clouds and the sky, the state of the weather may be often conjectured; and from this, perhaps, arose the practice of pretending to foretel other events.—2. Inchanter, one who divined by serpents; probably having tamed them, he divined by their motions. Bates renders Juggler.—3. Sorcerer, one who divined, by using some kind of drugs.—4. A charmer, one who composed magical spells, to guide and protect. It is probable, that they were composed in verse, and which the people repeated. (Ps. lviii. 6.)—5. A ventriloquist, or pythonist.—6. A wizard.—7. A necromancer. The Greek translators uniformly render the first term as I have done; and I suspect, that those who possessed this art, were also denominated wizards, or the knowing ones, and necromancers as pretending to consult the dead. (1 Sam. xxiii. 7. &c.) That persons possessing this art would be regarded as under some kind of divine influence, by an ignorant race, is very natural, and it is not improbable, that they might believe themselves to be so. Similar superstitious arts obtained among all the heathen nations, and still exist among them, and among ignorant men in christian countries.

9. To honour idols, they often made little images of them, and placed them in their houses, and sometimes carried them along with them in their journeys. These were anciently called teraphs; and these were the gods which Rachel stole from her father Laban. (Gen. xxxi. 19, 30.) At Ephesus, it became a considerable trade to make small silver shrines, or little temples, containing a small image of Diana, which were regarded in like manner. (Acts, xix. 24. &c.) This also explains the prophet Amos, ch. vii. 25. and Acts, vii. 43. They bore the little tent of Moloch, containing his image, and the star of Chiun, or Remphan, an Egyptian idol. These were borne about for protection, as well as to pay homage to. They sometimes wore ear-rings in honour of their idols, (Gen. xxxv. 4. Hos. ii. 13.); and crescents, or figures of the moon. (Judg. viii. 21. Job, xxxi. 26. Is. iii. 18.) They cut their hair round, for the same purpose; and spoiled their beards, and made incisions in their flesh. (Levit. xix. 27, 28. xxi. Deut. xiv. 1. Jer. xvi. 6. Zech. xiii. 6.) All superstitions of this kind were strictly forbidden the Jews; and they were threatened with sword, famine, pestilence, and captivity, as the consequences of complying with such practices.

CHAPTER VII.

On the Sects among the Jews.

§ 1. THE Nazarites seem to claim some notice as a sort of sect among the Jews. There have been, in all ages, as well from natural disposition as from the influence of religious principles, some persons more serious and devoted to God than others. Joseph is called by this term, Gen. xlix. 26. and Deut. xxxiii. 36., which I have rendered after the Septuagint, 'distinguished'. Some were devoted to Nazaritism all their lives, as Samson, Samuel, and John, the baptist. Two things distinguished them from others; they drank no wine or other strong fermented liquor, and their heads were never shaved. (Judg. x. 5. 1 Sam. i. 11. Luke, i. 15.) These were not confined to the same strict rules as those who were Nazarites by a vow, for a specified period. These were to drink no wine, nor even to eat grapes; their hair was to be let grow; nor were they to come near a dead body. (Num. vi. 3. &c.) In case of being defiled, they had their vow to begin again. (ver. 9—12.) The vow of Nazaritism might be taken either by men or women. Their abstemiousness is thought to have promoted health. (Lam. iv. 7.) Some think that our Lord was called a Nazarite, that is, lived as one devoted to God. The Rechabites, the descendants of Jethro, lived in tents, and like the Nazarites, abstained from wine. (Comp. 1 Chron. ii. 55. and Judg. i. 16. with 2 King. x. 15—23. and Jer. xxxv. 1—7.)

2. After the captivity, the returned Jews were obliged to study the Hebrew scriptures as a dead language; and their leading men began to speculate on various subjects, and, as a natural result, they differed in opinions, and were divided into parties and sects. The first division seems to have been made respecting the authority of the laws of Moses and the prophets. Some maintained, that these alone ought to be regarded as the foundation of faith and practice; while others contended for the traditions or opinions handed down to them, as of equal authority. The former were called Karaites, or Scripturists; and the latter, Rabbinites. It is supposed that this distinction began about thirty years before Christ; and it has continued ever since. The former sect still continues in Poland, and Russia, but chiefly in Turkey and Egypt. The Rabbinites or Traditionists obtained a complete ascendancy over them as to numbers, and the greatest part of the Jews are still of this sect. These abuse the Karaites, as Sadducees, and heap on them every abusive epithet; just as the Catholics do on the Protestants.

3. The Pharisees were the Traditionists, and so called from the word (פרושים) separated, denoting that they pretended to a more than ordinary strictness in religion. (Acts, xvi. v.) Josephus gives this account of them, "that they valued themselves for their exact conformity to the law, and for their skill in the interpretation of it; and that they excelled all others in observing the customs of the fathers." This sect existed in the time of the Maccabees, according to the same historian; and they gradually increased, till they became the leading persons in the church and state, as appears from the Evangelists. Their distinguishing opinion was, 'their holding the traditions of the elders,' which they maintained had been handed down from Moses, to whom they were given on the mount, and were of equal, if not superior, authority to the written law.

4. The doctrinal sentiments of the Pharisees were the following:—1. They held, that all things were decreed, yet in consistency with the freedom of man's will in acting.—2. They believed the doctrine concerning the angels, and the existence of human spirits in a separate state.—3. They also admitted the resurrection of the dead. (Acts, xxiii. 8.) These opinions were rational, and supported by the law and the prophets; but their radical error was, admitting the traditions, as of equal authority with the inspired books. Hence sprung their practical errors.—1. They explained away the obvious sense of the divine law. (Matt. xv. 3—6.)—2. They attended to many uncommanded customs; such as frequently washing their hands, furniture, &c.—fasting twice a week, and, according to the Talmud, whipping themselves, lying upon flints and thorns, and enduring other mortifications. (Mark, vii. 1—4. Luke, xviii. 12.)—3. They made the whole of religion to consist in rites, and neglected its great principles, and became the most consummate hypocrites. (Comp. Matt. vi. 2, 5, 23, &c.) They despised all others, expected respect from all, and distinguished themselves by broad phylacteries, or scrolls of parchment with some passages of scripture written on them, and by broad fringes on their garments. (Deut. vi. 8.)

5. The Sadducees are supposed to have derived their name from a person named Zadok or Jadok, who first taught the errors which distinguished this sect. According to Josephus, they rejected the traditions of the elders. They denied the resurrection of the body, and the existence of the soul after death. They also did not admit the existence of angels. (Matt. xxii. 23. Acts, xxiii. 8.) They are said to have denied all divine decrees; and to have attributed such power to the human will, as to make man the disposer not only of his moral actions but of his temporal condition. They were generally the rich who were of this sect; and they may justly be regarded as the materialists, free-thinkers, and infidels of the day.

6. The Samaritans, as inhabiting a part of the country of Judea, and receiving the five books of Moses, may be considered as a sect among that people. Their origin is given us 2 Kings, xvii. 24. &c. On the reform effected by Nehemiah, Josephus informs us, that a son of Jehoiada, the high-priest, who, contrary to the law, had married a daughter of Sanballat, and being unwilling to quit his wife, fled to Samaria, and many others with him. Sanballat was then governor of Samaria, and afforded them protection. In the time of Alexander, the Samaritans obtained leave to build a temple on mount Gerizim, like that of Jerusalem, where the same form of worship obtained. This became a source of the bitterest enmity between them and the Jews. (John, iv. 9. Luke, ix. 52.) They rejected the writings of the Prophets.

7. Josephus and Philo mention a numerous sect, called Essenes. They lived together, and were a kind of Jewish Monks. By abstraction they pretended to understand spiritual things better than others. Some think that the Apostle alludes to their opinions in Colos. ii. 18, 23. The Herodians are mentioned, Matt. xxii. 16, 17. Mark, iii. 6. and viii. 15. They are thought to have been rather a political than a religious sect, agreeing with Herod, that it was lawful to obey the Romans, and, in some things, conform to them. An opposite political faction is that mentioned in Acts, v. 37. called Gaulonites.

ON THE SECTS AMONG THE JEWS.

8. The Scribes, so often mentioned in both Testaments, were not a sect, but so called from their office as writers, secretaries or teachers. They were of two sorts; some employed in civil affairs, and others in what respected religion. The former were of different ranks. Hence Seraiah, in the reign of David, (2 Sam. viii. 17.) Shebna, in that of Hezekiah, (2 King. xviii. 18.) are mentioned among the chief officers. Hence, the scribe of the host. (2 King. xxv. 19.) Others were in inferior offices. (2 Chron. xxxiv. 13.) The scribes employed in reference to religion, expounded the law and taught the people. They are styled, 'doctors of the law,' (Luke, v. 17.) and in the 21st verse they are called 'scribes.' They are also called 'lawyers.' (Comp. Matt. xxii. 35. with Mark, xii. 28.) They were generally of the sect of the pharisees, and hence they are joined together. They taught the people, as we may infer from Mark, i. 22. They had great power, and some of them were members of the Jewish sanhedrim. (Matt. xx. 18.) Some of them might be of the Levitical tribe; but it appears from the Gospel, that any person of knowledge might teach the people, or expound the law and the prophets, in their synagogues.

9. The Publicans were persons appointed to collect the taxes imposed by the Romans. Some of them were receivers-general, for a large district, and inferiors of this order paid to them what they collected. Zaccheus appears to have been one of the chief publicans or receivers. (Luke, xix. 9.) Matthew was one who sat at the receipt of custom, where the tax on goods, imported or exported, was paid; for this was one source of the revenue. A second was a tax on cattle, fed in lands, which were considered as belonging to the Roman state; and a third was a tax on corn, amounting to one-tenth. These taxes the Apostle calls 'custom or tribute;' the former seems to denote all imposts on merchandise, and the latter, a tax on persons or estates. The publicans were generally rapacious and oppressive; and hence they are classed with sinners. They were particularly odious to the Jews, as reminding them of their subjugated state, and obliging them, according to their opinion, to act

10. Strangers might be naturalized among the Jews, (See PART II. ch. vi. p. 31.); and when they were admitted to all the rights of church and state, they were called 'proselytes of righteousness,' in distinction from those who dwelt among them without embracing their law. (Exod. xxii. 48.) According to the rabbies, on being admitted, they were first examined in respect to their motives, then instructed in the leading principles of divine truth, and required to profess their faith in them, and their resolution to adhere to them, and in all things to be subject to the law. After these things, they were circumcised, and then immersed or baptized, as a rite of purification. They were considered as born again, and it was a saying among the Jews, that when a man became a proselyte, 'he is like a new-born infant, and hath a new soul.' To this language our Lord is thought to refer John, iii. 10. They also considered, that when a person became a proselyte, the bond of natural relationship was dissolved; so that he was not to regard father, or mother, or other kindred. To this, some think, our Lord refers, Luke, xiv. 26. Tacitus says, that when any of the heathens became proselytes to Judaism, "They quickly learn to despise the gods, to renounce their country, to hold their parents, children, and brethren, in the utmost contempt." It was imparting such sentiments and inspiring such dispositions, that made our Lord say, "Ye compass sea and land to make one proselyte, and when he is made, ye make him twofold more the child of hell than yourselves." (Matt. xxiii. 15.)

On reviewing the religious polity of Moses, it is evident,—First, That no better system could have been devised to maintain the knowledge and worship of one God, the great fundamental principle of the law.—Secondly, That the tabernacle, with its sacred furniture, the priesthood, the sacrifices, &c. were all typical, shadows of good things to come, the substance of which is Christ; and—Thirdly, That the purest morality is enforced by the strongest motives. The whole system is worthy of its divine author.

PART IV.

The Climate, and Productions of Judea; the Arts, Customs, and Manners of the Jews.

CHAPTER I.

*On the Climate, Agriculture, and natural Productions of Judea.

§ 1. JUDEA extends, from south to north, near three degrees in latitude, from 31 to 34 degrees, north; and its longitude from London is 35 to 37 degrees, east. Being mountainous, especially to the north and east, the heat and cold vary considerably, in different parts. Jordan is the chief river, which rises in mount Hermon, a branch of mount Lebanon, and after running a few miles, falls into a lake called Semechon, then flows on for about fifteen miles, to the lake of Genesareth, or sea of Tiberias. Thence it issues again, and waters a great plain, for more than forty miles, and then falls into the Dead-sea. During the rainy seasons the Jordan overflows its banks; and the various mountainous tracts pour down torrents, which in the summer are usually dried up. On the highest part of Lebanon, the snow, according to some travellers, rests perpetually; but on the lower ridges, it melts, and swells the Jordan, the river of Damascus, the Orontes, and various others, which take their rise from various parts and ridges of it.

2. The winter commences in November, when the first rain begins to fall. It is common to prepare the ground for seed in October, and the latter end of that month, or the beginning of November, the seed is sown. They sow wheat, barley, spelt, Turkey wheat, millet, and lentiles. The heat in this month, during the day, is considerable, but the nights are cold. The rain which falls in this month, and the occasional snow and rain, which fall in the three following months, December,

*This chapter is abridged from the Economical Calendar of Palestine, by John Gottlieb Bahle, and translated in the Fragments to Calmet. In the original work, every particular is established by a reference to some author, who had visited and resided some time in Judea; so that the whole is supported by the strongest evidence. It is of great importance, in explaining and understanding the scriptures, to be acquainted with the climate and natural history of that once favoured land, the scene of so many divine discoveries, and miracles, the land, called by the prophet, 'Immanuel's land,' because there Immanuel dwelt, taught, and suffered.

January, and February, are the source of fertility. The corn appears in January; and in February, a considerable verdure, on every side, captivates and delights the sight. In March, the spring begins; and though the mountainous districts are somewhat cold, the heat, in the plains, and the south-east parts, becomes very great. Copious rains fall in this month and the beginning of the next, which is called the latter or spring rain. Towards the end of April, the rain ceases, and the sky becomes clear and serene, and no rain usually falls till October. Near Jericho, the barley and wheat are often ripe in the beginning of April, and in the course of this month, the harvest is cut down, in most parts, the grain is then threshed out on the ground, and in the next month, it is stored for use.

3. Beans, and all sorts of pulse, are sown in October and November; they blossom in January, become podded in February, and may be gathered all the spring. Cauliflower is ready to cut, in February, and a variety of most beautiful flowers adorn the fields and gardens. In March, rice is sown, and is ripe the latter end of May, or the beginning of June. Korte takes notice, that they still continue, after the harvest, to sow various garden herbs, part of which are unknown to us; and many of them, as cucumbers, cauliflowers, and others, come to maturity twice in the same year, in spring and in autumn. In Palestine, the grass and herbs were grown to that height in this month, that when Thevenot was riding from Nazareth to Acre, on the 8th of May, they reached the girth of his saddle.

4. The almond-tree is the first that blossoms, even before it is in leaf. Its fruit is fit to gather, being ripe; about the middle of April. The winter fig-tree has sometimes fruit on even in January, until March, when it blossoms again, and in June the figs are ripe. The later figs are not ripe before August. The peach-tree blossoms in February, and, together with the nectarine, yields the most excellent fruit in July. The early apple-tree blossoms and yields fruit at the same time. The palm or date-tree, the Jericho plum-tree, and various species of apple, pear, and cherry-trees, blossom in March, and;

yield fruit in June and July. Oranges are ripe in April; and the fruit of the mulberry-tree, in May. The olive-tree yields ripe fruit in August and September. Pomegranates are ripe at the same season.

5. The most usual shrubs in Palestine are the following:—The vine, from which they gather a triple produce each year. The first clusters are in blossom in March, when they cut away the wood that is barren. In April, a new shoot springs from that left in March; they then again lop the wood which is barren, from whence comes another shoot in May. The first clusters are ripe in August, the second in September, and the third in October. The cotton-tree is sown in May. It is said to stand the winter in Syria, and in May following, to blossom; it then produces a ball resembling a walnut, which becomes ripe in September or October, and in which the cotton is contained. Sugar-canes are planted in April, but it is doubtful whether this was anciently known. Mandrakes, of which there is great plenty in Galilee, yield ripe fruit in May; and in June, the balm-tree, whence is got the balm of Gilead, or the opobalsam, is tapped, and the melons are now gathered. The balm is now chiefly cultivated about Jericho. The sebestus yields fruit in September, like nuts, or acorns, from which they make glue.

6. The culture of olive-trees and vines, was of great importance, and seems to have been carried to great perfection. Their olive and vine-yards were carefully fenced; and, during the time they were ripening, it was usual to make sheds in them, for the watchmen and keepers. (Is. i. 8.) The vines sometimes appear to have been trained against a wall, but most commonly against railing. They were planted in houses, as well as olives. (Ps. cxxviii. 3.) Some farms wholly consisted of vine-yards; and what Isaiah and our Lord calls the tower, Lowth considers as meaning the house, offices, and implements necessary for making the wine. Hence, a lake is said to be hewed out, most probably, of the rock, for the sake of coolness; and into this the wine must have flowed by a pipe from the press. In cultivating the vine, the land was cleared of stones. (Is. v. 2.) In some districts, the grapes were of superior quality; and perhaps the kind of vine also. The land allotted to Judah was celebrated on this account. (Gen. xlix. 11.) In this district were the vales of Esheol and Sorek, so often mentioned. We also read of the vine of Lebanon, (Hos. xiv. 7.); and the vine of Helbon. (Ezek. xxvii. 18.); but some think they mean only the sweet or fat wine. Mixed wine implies wine made strong by various ingredients; and by inspissating it, or boiling it down to one half. (Prov. xxiii. 30. and ix. 2, 5.) They preserved their oil and wine when expressed, in large earthen jars, which they frequently hid in the earth, as well as other provisions. (Jer. xli 8.)

7. The soil is generally light, and the labour of the husbandman easy. The plough is so light that a man may carry it in one hand; and a cow, or two, or oxen, or asses, draw it with ease, and one man both holds it and drives, and is usually smoking his pipe. They use no harrow, but, after sowing, plow a second time; where the soil is sandy, they sow on the ground as it is, and only plow to cover the grain. I have met with nothing respecting their method of manuring the land, though there can be no doubt, but they employed art to assist nature, especially in their gardens, and olive and vineyards. From the climate, they had no need to do much in this respect; and the manure usual with us served them for fuel.

8. Their method of reaping was by cutting down the corn, as with us. (Deut. xvi. 9. xxiii. 25.) They now occasionally, pluck up the corn by the roots, as Maundrel and Dr. Russel inform us. They used four methods of threshing out the grain. They are mentioned in Is. xxviii. 27, 28. The first was the staff, for beating out the more tender kinds of grain, such as dill.—The second was the drag, made of planks, and drawn by oxen over the corn when spread on the floor.—The third was the wain, made like the drag, but had wheels with iron teeth or edges, like a saw, which not only crushed out the grain but cut the straw.—The fourth was driving oxen upon the corn, and as this was the oldest, so it was the most common way of separating the grain from the straw. For winnowing, they used only a shovel, throwing up the grain to the wind, which carried the chaff away. They trod out the juice of the grape, their feet and legs being bare; and this work was performed with shouting.* (Is. xvi. 10. lxiii. 2. Jer. xxv. 30. Rev. xix. 15.)

9. The domestic animals were the beee kind, the ass, the goat, and the camel. The horse was little known till the time of Solomon; and not much used by the common people even after that time. Their wild animals or game, were the deer, gazelle, and antelope. Of poultry, the cock is mentioned, but as the hen abounded in Egypt, it is natural to think that it did in Judea. Doves of every kind were numerous; as were also, the partridge, peacock, pheasant, quail, &c. Birds of prey, as eagles, hawks, &c. and singing birds of many kinds, were common. Beasts of prey; the lion, wolf, hyæna, jackal, pantther, tiger, &c. are mentioned. The lake of Genesareth abounds with large and excellent fish, and they could obtain it from the Mediterranean sea, at Ptolemais, or Joppa, and from the Tyrians, and Sidonians. From this view of the climate, soil, and productions of the Holy Land, it might well be called, a land flowing with milk and honey, containing abundance of whatever was necessary or pleasant.

* Vegetation is most rapid in the spring, and the grass grows three feet high. They make no hay; and of course, they do not mow down the grass for this purpose. At the end of July, vegetation ceases, except where there is water; and during the period they want pasture, they feed their domestic animals with barley, which they grow chiefly for this end.

CHAPTER II.

On the Arts among the Jews.

§ 1. THE laws of Moses tended principally to encourage agriculture, as the chief foundation of national greatness and independence. Population is the strength of any state; but it is clear that this must be limited by the means of subsistence. A country well cultivated, and every advantage taken to render it productive, will always yield much, and furnish an industrious class with ample necessities, and often afford sufficient to export. It is probable, that the Jews obtained much of their wealth by the sale of grain, oil, and wine, to the Tyrians and other nations. But an agricultural nation cannot subsist without cultivating some of the arts. The common ones of spinning, weaving, dying, preparing the skins of animals or tanning, working in metals, wood, pottery, building, and others, must obtain among people in any degree civilized; and from the construction of the tabernacle, it is evident, that the Israelites had attained considerable perfection in these, as well as some others.

2. Moses, and others, who had, doubtless, received a superior education, must have had some knowledge of geometry, which science flourished early in Egypt. The division of the land of Canaan, strongly implies this; as boundary-marks were fixed, not only to separate one tribe from another, but to ascertain the land allotted to each family. These land-marks were to be carefully preserved; and whoever removed them was exposed to a curse. They numbered by the letters of their alphabet; but to what extent they carried their calculations, or how they could perform the operations of arithmetic in this way, I know not.

3. The diseases to which the human frame is subject, would soon lead men, either from affection or interest, to try to alleviate or to remove them. Hence sprung the art of medicine. There is reason to think that both the knowledge of the medical properties of plants, and the way to apply them to the best advantage, were little known in these ancient times. The art of healing was, no doubt, studied. Various diseases are mentioned, as the cancer, consumption, dropsy, epilepsy, fevers, gangrenes, gonorrhea, gout, piles, or hemorrhoids. The leprosy, palsy, and plague, are also mentioned, but in what manner the patients were treated, we have no information.

Some surgical operations were necessary, as in circumcision, castration, of which four methods are specified. (Lev. xxii. 24.) There is reason to think, that in most cases, they made use of external applications; and in surgical cases, chiefly of oils and emollients. (Is. i. 6.) Solomon is said to have studied botany, and to have written of all the trees and plants, from the cedar to the hyssop on the wall; but of this work nothing remains.

4. The engraving and lapidary arts, and working in gold, silver, brass, or iron, were all necessary in making the tabernacle and its furniture, the high-priests pectoral and crown. These arts were not common, as God is said to have filled Bezaleel and Aholiab, with a spirit of wisdom to make all these things. Indeed the hangings of the tabernacle show to what perfection the art of needle-work was then brought. Forms of cherubs were to be wrought in the ten curtains, and in the veil of various colours, of blue, purple, and scarlet. To make the cherubs which were commanded for the most holy place, of beaten gold, in one mass, was no easy task; nor to polish, and engrave on, the precious stones; but he who commanded these things to be done, gave ability for the work.

5. Building or architecture does not appear to have attained great perfection, prior to the reign of Solomon. There is reason to think, that the houses of the Jews were in general made of brick, dried in the sun, with some stones, to give them more strength, and make them more durable. Solomon engaged the best workmen among the Tyrians, and, perhaps, from other nations, in erecting the temple and his other magnificent works. This seems to have been the Augustan age of the arts, and the ruins of Tadmor, or Palmira, are yet a proof of the wealth of Solomon, and the perfection to which architecture was then brought.

CHAPTER III.

On their Military Weapons, and Musical Instruments.

§ 1. The military character of the Israelites, when delivered from Egypt was wholly to form. Depressed by slavery, they had little spirit or courage; and hence, God ordered Moses to lead them about in the wilderness, to accustom them to order, and by degrees, fit them for the conquest of Canaan; 'lest, said he, when they see war, they return again to Egypt.' We find them by this course of discipline, gradually improving; though it is obvious that had they not been under a special providence, they would not have entered the promised land. (Ps. xlv. 3.) Under their Judges they occasionally displayed courage, but it was after they had chosen a king, that they became formidable.

2. Their arms were either for attack or defence. Of the latter kind was the helmet, which was made of brass, and covered the head. (1 Sam. xvii. 2, 3. 2 Chron. xxvi. 14.) The corslet, or coat of mail, or breast-plate, seem to have equally defended the back and the breast. (1 Sam. xvii. 5. Is. lix. 17.) The shield was of two kinds, the large one was called (צנה) zinah. This kind was very large, made of wood, covered with brass or leather, and was designed to ward off the darts and spears of the enemy. Shield-bearer was an office among the Jews, (1 Sam. xvi. 21.) The smaller kind was called (מגן) magen, it is sometimes rendered target. Lewis thinks it was used by the cavalry, but as David often mentions it, it was used by the infantry too; for he does not appear to have had cavalry. All antiquity notices the shield. The shields of the Greeks and Romans had a considerable protuberance in the middle; and they were richly ornamented. It was usual to oil the shield, to preserve it, as well as other parts of their armour. (2 Sam. i. 21. Is. xxi. 5.) Another part of defensive armour, was the military girdle, to bind their loose garments, and to hold the sword. Hence, to gird and to arm, are synonymous. (1 Kings. xx. 11. Is. viii. 9. 2 Sam. xxii. 40.) Boots or greaves of brass were also worn for the defence of the legs. (1 Sam. xvii. 7.)

3. The arms for attack, were the bow and arrow. This is the oldest weapon, (Gen. xxvii. 3.) first employed in hunting, and then in war. Ishmael is said to have become an expert archer; and the Hebrews cultivated this art. The bow was sometimes made of brass or other metal. (Job. xx. 24. Ps. xviii. 34.) The sword and the battle-ax were also early in use. Jacob's sons used this instrument of death against the Shechemites. (Gen. xxxiv. 25.) The battle-ax is mentioned by Jer. li. 20, 23. The spear and the javelin were of different kinds and lengths. Some might be thrown or darted, and some of them were piked or pointed at both ends. (Num. xxv. 7, 8. and 2 Sam. ii. 23.) The sling was also used with considerable effect, as we learn from the history of David. The Benjaminites are celebrated for their dexterity in the use of the sling. (Judg. xx. 16.)

4. Of the fortifications, and the engines of attack and defence, we have little information. They surrounded their cities with strong walls, on which, at certain distances, were raised towers, from which missile weapons might be thrown against the besiegers. They had gates and bars. It was usual with the besiegers to raise a mount made of trees, stones, and earth, equal to the height of the walls; and to make towers of wood, for the same purpose. On the mount, they placed engines, for throwing stones, or for battering the walls, in order to make a breach. These engines were like the balistæ, the catapultæ, and the battering rams of the Romans. Comp. Ezek. iv. 2. and 2 Chron. xxvi. 14, 15.

5. The musical instruments of the Jews were of three kinds; wind-instruments, those with strings, and such as were beat on, either with the hand or with a stick or a piece of mettle. Of the first kind the most ancient was the organ, improperly rendered organ, in the common version. (Gen. iv. 21. Job, xxi. 12. Ezek. xxxiii. 31.) It was originally a simple pipe, and afterwards, as Calmet judged, several of these joined together, of different lengths and sizes, played on the lips. They had also two kinds of flutes, called et חליל et חליל. Parkhurst thinks that they only differed in the number of holes. These were joined with the tabour, (Exod. xv. 20. Is. li. 12.), and played by women. They had also two kinds of trumpets. The one might be straight; the other like horns, crooked and wider. Two of the former kind Moses was commanded to make of silver, for assembling the chiefs of Israel, for ordering the march of the camp, and, on their settlement in Canaan, for collecting the troops; they were also to be blown on the new moons, solemn feasts, and at their feast-offerings. The priests only were to blow these trumpets. (Num. x. 1—10.) They also used the other kind. (Levit. xxv. 9.)

6. Of their stringed instruments we can ascertain little. One of the most ancient is called the kinnor. (Gen. iv. 21.) This instrument had sometimes three, at others six, or nine strings; but it is probable that the harp or lyre was at first exceedingly simple, and had but three strings. This instrument appears to have been played on by the fingers. David excelled on the harp. (1 Sam. xvi. 23.) The nebel or nablum, was a stringed instrument, nearly like the Greek letter Δ, played on by both hands, with a kind of bow, according to Calmet. We also read of stringed instruments called sheleshim, and minim. The former may denote three-stringed instruments, and the latter the decachord, or ten-stringed instruments, and applied either to kinnor, or nablum, when they had this number of strings. (Comp. Ps. xxxiii. 2. and cl. 4.)

7. The instrument beat by the hand, or by a stick, was the tympanum. Dr. Russell describes it as a wooden hoop covered with skin, on which the women beat with their hands. Sometimes pieces of brass were fixed in the hoop to make a jingling noise. They usually sung to it, and it was more for beating time on that it was used, than for its sound. Dimock thinks that under this term is comprehended all kinds of drums, tabours, and timbrels. The eymbals, as the Septuagint renders the Hebrew word צלצלים, were two convex plates of brass or other metal, which, when struck against each other, produced a kind of ringing sound. They appear to have had different sizes; and which produced different tones. These were used on the most solemn occasions. (2 Sam. vi. 5. and Ps. cl. 5.) Considering the variety of instruments, and that, in the reign of David, so many studied music as a profession, and were continually employed in the temple, there is reason to think, that this art must have been brought to considerable perfection. Many of the psalms were set to music, and sung responsively; but it is now impossible to ascertain exactly the parts or distribution of them. Music was not divinely appointed; and David seems to have been blamed for introducing it into the service of the temple. (Amos, vi. 5.)

CHAPTER IV.

On their Houses, Furniture, and Manner of Living.

§ 1. As far as travellers throw any light on the houses of the east, it appears, that the poorer sort there, as every where else, inhabit houses low and mean, made of slight materials, such as wood and sun-burnt bricks, and only one story high. The houses of the opulent are large, consisting of a considerable square, surrounded with buildings, the upper rooms of which are brought forward, and supported by columns; which form a colonnade around. The roofs are always flat, and a parapet wall is built, two or three feet high, above the roof, on every side. Sometimes within the court there is a shrubbery, a fountain with jet d'eau, mustaby, and alcove. In the front, it is not uncommon to have a building over the gate-way, extending backwards, and higher than the other parts of the house. To this building there is a private stair-case, which communicates with the gate-way; and it is in this that the master chiefly resides, where he receives visits, and amuses himself. The buildings around the court are for the female slaves, and servants.

2. In building their houses, whether they are of brick, stone, or other materials, for convenience in the more common and useful apartments, and near the doors and windows, they put in large nails with thick heads like dice, and the other end being turned up, they become cramp irons, and are as secure as the wall itself. To this custom there is a reference in Ezra, ix. 8. Is. xxii. 23. On these nails they hung their kitchen utensils, or other articles. The floors of their houses were frequently marble of various colours, or painted tiles, or plaster; their ceilings were of wood and pannelled, and the sides of the walls wainseotted, and sometimes covered with rich hangings. (Hagai, i. 4. Jer. xxii. 14.) Their windows were of various kinds; some were very narrow for the purpose of just looking out, (comp. Is. lx. 8. with Hos. xiii. 3.); some were wide, as appears from Judg. v. 28. and 2 King. ix. 30—33. as a person could pass through them. There are seven Hebrew words rendered by the term window, some of which may denote their size, others their form, or the lattices and materials of which they were made. The winter and summer-houses, Dr. Russell supposes, refer to different apartments of the same house, (Jer. xxxvii. 22. Amos, iii. 15.) the one exposed to a north, and the other to a south aspect.

3. As to their furniture, that of the poor people consisted of few articles, and those such as were absolutely necessary. Instead of chairs they often sat on mats, skins, or carpets; and the same articles on which they laid a mattress, served them instead of bedsteads, while their upper garment or mantle served for their covering. (Comp. Levit. xv. 17. Exod. xxii. 25, 26. Deut. xxiv. 12, 13.) The richer people had fine carpets, couches, and sofas, on which they sat, lay, and slept. (2 King. iv. 10. 2 Sam. xvii. 28.) In later times, their couches were splendid, and the frames inlaid with ivory, (Amos, vi. 4.); the coverlets rich, and perfumed. (Prov. vii. 16, 17.) It seems that it was usual to place these couches near the walls of their rooms. (2 King. xx. 2.) They had also, stools, tables, trunks, and, doubtless, other articles.

4. Their kitchen utensils were but few, as they still continue to be, in the east. The first requisite of this kind was a hand-mill, with which they ground their corn. This was similar to the quern of our ancestors, which, I believe, is still used in some of the remote northern isles of Scotland. The grinding of the corn was done by women; and chiefly by slaves. To this instrument we have frequent allusions in the holy scriptures. Among some of the more opulent, it appears, that mills turned by asses, were in use in the time of our Lord. (Matt. xviii. 6.) From Chardin, we learn, that they usually ground the corn at break of day, and sang while grinding it. (Jer. xxv. 10. Rev. xviii. 22.) They did not grind more at once than would serve them for one day. The soldiers received a portion of corn daily. (2 Sam. iv. 2—7.) They had earthen ware of various kinds, dishes, pitchers, pots, &c. They also used vessels of brass, or copper, and of wood. In baking their bread, they used different methods. (Levit. ii. 4—7.) The oven was sometimes only a large earthen pot, in which fire was put to heat it, and the batter or dough spread on the out-side, which was almost instantly baked. The fire-plate was a round piece of metal, heated, on which they baked cakes, as is often done with us. They had also, a shallow earthen vessel called, (פרחשת,) frying-pan, which they used for baking bread and other purposes. They usually ate their bread new, though on some occasions they prepared small loaves and biscuits, which would keep some time. (Luke, xi. 5. Gen. xlv. 23. Josh. ix. 12.)

5. From scripture, we learn that pastry was studied in Egypt, and though, the people of the east are generally temperate, yet they indulged in making various kinds of rich cakes and sweet-meats. Perhaps they were the same kind of cakes that David's wicked son Amnon longed for. (2 Sam. xiii. 1—8.) They mix with the flour, or strew upon the unbaked cake, seeds of various kinds; and from the instance of Tamar, it appears, that king's daughters and females of the highest rank were employed in cookery. Harmer supposes that what Jeroboam's wife sent to Ahijah, were not cracknels, but cakes spotted with various-coloured seeds. (1 King. xiv. 3.) Dr. Russell agrees with Harmer in this conjecture, and adds, that there is a great deal of sweet-meats and pastry made in different forms, but none for long-keeping.

6. In preparing meat, we read of roasting and boiling. I suspect that their method of roasting was sometimes in an oven, but from Dr. Russell, we learn, that though on some occasions they roasted a lamb or a kid whole, yet they generally cut their meat into small pieces, and roasted them over a small charcoal fire; and in this way they quickly prepared meat for their guests. (Gen. xviii. 8.) Meat thus dressed is generally all consumed, and fresh prepared when wanted. They often boiled their meat in large pieces, and various kinds of rich and excellent soups were made. It seems to have been common to bring the stewed meat and the soup together. Judg. vi. 19. and 2 King. iv. 38—41.

7. Jews, as well as other Orientals, only occasionally ate flesh. They lived on milk, rice, and vegetables; and few, except the rich, indulged in animal food, except at the appointed feasts, or when they offered their feast-offerings. They were, however, very fond of it, as appears from Num. xi. 4. In 1 Chron. xii. 40. and 2 Sam. xvii. 23—28. we have a list of articles brought to David, when he was made king of Hebron; and when he had fled from his unnatural son Absalom. The one shows us on what they feasted, and the other what were deemed necessities; or they may represent what was usual to present to the king at different seasons. The poor sometimes ate barley-bread; and dipped their bread into vinegar and oil. (Ruth, ii. 4.)

8. Their drink was chiefly water, mixed with the juice of the pomegranate, or some other syrup, which, like oranges and lemons, gives a pleasant acidity. They also now, and probably did anciently, make decoctions of liquorice, and other saccharine roots, which they drank cold. As they chiefly lived on milk, either from the goats or cows, they made of it various articles of beverage. Cream prepared, as is done in Cornwall, is what is called cream in our version, and kaymack, by the Arabs. They were exceedingly fond of coagulated sour milk, which they call lesan: and this is presented to guests as what is most agreeable. They had rich and various kinds of wines. Red wine seems to have been esteemed. Prov. xxiii. 31. They had many sorts of white sweet wines, but some of these being poor, they were seldom kept longer than a year, and became vinegar. This was what they gave our Lord in mockery. (Luke, xxiii. 36.)

9. It is necessary to notice, that in preparing their food, they used as fuel, wood, sticks of all sorts, parings of dried fruits, and in general, as their sure supply, cow, asses, or camels' dung, dried, and collected into heaps. (Lam. iv. 5.) It seems that it was not uncommon to use dried grass for the same purpose. Matt. vi. 28—30. This illustrates the language of Solomon and others, in Eccle. vii. 6. Ps. lviii. 9. Amos, iv. 11. Zech. iii. 2. and Is. vii. 4.; but especially of the order given to Ezekiel, ch. iv. 12.—To show the distress and the extremities to which the Jews would be reduced in the captivity, he was to prepare the most common provisions, and to bake his bread with human dung. Nothing could paint more strongly, a state of extreme necessity, than this; and the Jews would so understand this sign.

10. The Jews rose early, about the dawn of day, and then breakfasted. They dined about eleven in the forenoon, and supped at five in the afternoon. From this circumstance of their breakfasting so early, Dr. Lightfoot endeavours to account for the language of John and Mark, respecting the time of our Lord's crucifixion, John, xix. 14. and Mark, xv. 25. The former notices the time from the preparation of the pass-over, and the latter the time of the day. The preparation began at the dawn or at the cock-crowing. From this custom too, the term to rise early denotes diligence, either in doing good or evil. Eccle. x. 16, 17. Prov. xxxi. 4, 5.

CHAPTER VI.

On their Dress, Sleeping, Manner of sitting at meals, &c.

§ 1. THE dress of the Jews was simple, and nearly uniform; fashion not having so wide an empire in the east as in the west. They had a stuff tunic next the skin, and a mantle or upper-garment. The tunic was the principal part of their dress, nearly resembling our present shirt. A round hole was cut at the top, to permit the head to pass through. The sleeves were sometimes long, reaching to the wrists; at others, short, only reaching to the elbow, or to the middle of the upper arm; and even sometimes was wholly without sleeves. The tunic was made wide, and reached below the knees; it was tied around the waist with a girdle, when they were employed in labour, or travelled; but when they rested, the girdle was loosed. Hence, the metaphor to gird the loins, to prepare for work or for battle. White seems to have been the common colour of the woollen tunic. (Eccle. ix. 8.) The mantle was a long piece of woollen cloth, thrown over the shoulders and back, and was worn during the cold season, or in the evenings of the warm weather. Their legs were bare, and on the feet they had only sandals, or soles, tied in various manners round the foot. The head was covered with a turban, or tiara.

2. Though the common people were dressed in the manner described, it is clear that the rich were distinguished by the fineness of the tunic, and mantle, as well as by the colour. They seem to have worn tunics of cotton, like those of the priests; and for ornament, they were sometimes dyed purple, or red, or violet, or blue. These had fringes of various colours, and clasps of gold, set with precious stones. "Greatness," says the Abbe Fleury, "consisted in changing their dress often, and wearing such clothes as were clean and whole." The women were distinguished chiefly by their head-dress, and the ornaments which they wore on the legs, arms, neck, nose, and ears. (Is. iii. 16—24.) Married women wore veils. (Gen. xx. 16. xxiv. 65.)

3. Both sexes anointed the body with oil, scented by odoriferous herbs and woods. This practice conduced essentially to health, by preventing too great perspiration, under the scorching heat of a vertical sun. Were it not for the free use of unguents, the body would be weakened, not only by the heat, but by the common and frequent practice of bathing. The law of Moses enjoined the constant use of the bath, for all those ceremonial uncleannesses which he specifies.

4. It has been noticed, that the roofs of their houses were flat; and we find that it was usual to erect a kind of booths, or little wooden houses, on their roofs, for the purpose of enjoying the air, and sometimes of sleeping. In these booths, they often lay down during the heat of the day; (Judg. iii. 24. and 2 Sam. iv. 5—7.) Here they retired for privacy and devotion, as well as for rest. (1 Sam. ix. 25, 26. Acts, x. 9.) It was common for whole families to sleep on the house-top, or in the courts belonging to their houses. (Dan. iv. 29. and 2 Sam. xi. 2.) In the time of danger they ascended to the house-top. (Is. xv. 3. xxii. 1.) When they published any thing abroad it was from the same place. Matt. x. 27.

5. It was the custom anciently, among the Hebrews, Greeks, and Romans, to sit at table as we do; the practice of lying on raised seats or sofas, was derived from the Persians. (See Gen. xxxvii. 25. and xliii. 33.) When this custom was introduced, or from whom derived, it had; apparently, in the time of our Lord, become the universal custom. (Amos, vi. 4. and Luke, vii. 36—38.) It is only a knowledge of this custom which can explain the manner in which the woman could bathe our Lord's feet with her tears, and wipe them with her hair; or how John could lean on his bosom. John, xiii. 23.

6. On visiting a superior, it was the custom to take a present for him. (Prov. xviii. 16.) In the most familiar visits, they took a flower or an orange to present to their host. This explains 1 Sam. ix. 7. Presents consisted of all kinds of valuable and useful things, provisions, raiment, silver, and gold. (Job. xxvii. 16, 17.) On some occasions, the great refused to accept the present, not from displeasure, but from motives of superiority or independence. (2 King. v. 16.) Persons of power expected presents as due to their rank or office. (1 Sam. x. 27. and Judg. viii. 5—17.) They were regarded as a kind of tribute; and tributary people presented them. (Ps. lxxii. 10.) Kings sometimes sent presents to other kings to engage their assistance. 1 King. xv. 18, 19.

7. Respect was shown to persons on meeting, by saying, 'Peace be to you,' and laying the right hand on the bosom; but if the person addressed was of the highest rank, they bowed to the earth. Thus Jacob bowed to his brother Esau. Sometimes they kissed the hem of the person's garment, and even the dust on which he had to tread. (Zech. viii. 23. Luke, viii. 44. Acts, x. 26. Ps. lxxii. 9.) Intimate acquaintances, on meeting, kissed each other's hands, head, or shoulders. (Gen. xxxiii. 4. xlv. 14. Luke, xv. 20. Acts, xx. 17.) Sometimes persons out of humility, turned aside from the way, as if not worthy to salute those they met; and Harmer thinks that our Lord's words on sending out the seventy disciples, may be referred to this custom, Luke, x. 4. It appears from 1 Sam. xxv. 5, 6, 14. that when a person of rank sent to another, he expected to receive a present in return; and I cannot but think that our Lord had this custom in view. "Do not seek for entertainment by the way, but go and quickly discharge the commission which I have given you." Comp. 2 King. iv. 29.

8. Visitors were always received and dismissed with respect. On their arrival, water was brought to wash their feet and their hands. (Gen. xviii. 4. xix. 2.) Our Lord complained of the treatment which he received from the pharisee, Luke vii. 44. Here we learn that it was usual for friends to embrace, and to supply oil to anoint the head. Solomon refers to the custom Prov. xxvii. 9.; and to this Harmer refers Dan. ii. 46. "The king did obeisance to Daniel, and commanded that they should present a gift, and sweet odours to him." It is still the custom in Egypt, among the Arabs and other nations, thus to treat their guests; and when they are about to depart, to burn the richest perfumes.

9. In visiting, owing to the habits and jealousy of the orientals, women visited with their own sex, and men with theirs. It is by no means common to find them mixed on these occasions. Such was the pride of the men that they would not eat with their own wives. Whether this custom prevailed in Judea anciently, I doubt. It certainly did in Persia. (Esth. i. 9.) According to Chardin, the women had their feasts at the same time, but apart from the men. Even on the occasion of marriage, this seems to have been the custom. Hence, Jer. xxvi. 10. notices "the voice of the bridegroom and the voice of the bride:" that is, the noise of mirth was heard from their different apartments.

10. When persons travelled, they furnished themselves with every necessary, as there are not now, nor were there of old, any inns, properly so called. They took such food as would keep, a bucket to draw water with, and tents to pitch for the night. This explains the question of the woman of Samaria, John, iv. 11. Women, and rich men often travelled on asses, and sometimes on camels. For the camels they had counes, one on each side, like panniers, sufficiently large to sit comfortably in, and to contain any necessary article. Thus Rebecca rode from Syria to Judea, Gen. xxiv. 61. It appears that the Jews often travelled in companies when they went up to Jerusalem at the annual feasts, Ps. lxxxiv. 1.; so they continue to do in the same country, whether they travel on business, for pleasure, or for devotion.

CHAPTER VI.

On their Domestic Employments, Marriages, Funeral Rites, &c.

1. BESIDES working, washing, and other domestic employments, the women were occupied with spinning, weaving stuffs, and making clothes. (1 King. viii. 14. and Prov. xxxi. 13, 19, 21.) This was the employment, not only of the poor, but of ladies of the highest rank. The same custom prevailed among the Greeks and the Romans, as we learn from Homer and Terence. Augustus wore clothes made only by his wife or his sister; and Samuel's mother made him a little coat, or tunic, which she brought for him at the festivals, 1 Sam. ii. 19. Women appear to have been also door-keepers, even to kings, 2 Sam. iv. 4, 5. according to the Sept. and Vulg. comp. with Exod. xxxviii. 8. and 1 Sam. ii. 22. and John, xviii. 17.

2. The Israelites, at their weddings, made great feasts and rejoicings. They were dressed in the most elegant manner; the bride and the bridegroom, in this respect, vying with each other. Hence, the comparison of David in the 19th Psalm, ver. 5.; and the allusions of the prophets, Is. xlix. 18. Ixi. 10. and Jer. ii. 32. The feast lasted for seven days, as we learn from Gen. xxix.

and Judg. xiv. 12. In the song of Solomon, we find seven days plainly pointed out, to represent the first week of the marriage. We see in the same song, the friends of the bridegroom and the virgin-companions of the bride. He had young men, and she had young women, as attendants. To this our Lord refers, Matt. ix. 15. It appears, that on the marriage of the great, the bridegroom's friends were furnished with mantles and robes, out of his wardrobe, suitable for the occasion, Matt. xxii. 11. According to the Jews, the bride and the bridegroom each wore a mitre or crown. Song, iii. 11. Is. lxi. 10.

The evening, or night, was the time of their feasting; and the rooms were lighted with lamps. Their feasts were accompanied with music and appropriate sentimental compositions. They made certain processions, as they still continue to do, on each of the seven days; and their dress was changed and varied as much as possible. The bride, attended by her companions, was conducted with great pomp and ceremony to the house of the bridegroom. (Ps. xlv. 14, 15.) On these occasions they used lamps or torches, Matt. xxv. 1.; and on their approach the bridegroom came forth to meet them. From our Lord's remark, it seems that the bridegroom sometimes tarried; and that during this period, the bride and her companions amused themselves in the court or gardens, until it was said that the bridegroom cometh. The marriage was regarded as a civil contract, made by the parents; and we do not find that any sacrifices were offered on such occasions. The parents usually offered up their petitions for the happiness of the parties.

4. On the death of a person, or on any calamity, the ancients expressed their grief in the most violent manner. In short, it appears that they on no occasion restrained their passions, but, as on happy occurrences, they manifested their feelings by shouting, leaping and dancing, so on mournful ones, they rent their garments, threw dust on their heads, sat on dunghills, or put on sackcloth, and sometimes fasted, and gave vent to their grief by loud and continued lamentations. On the death of a person, it was usual for all present to shriek aloud, for a long time; and then to cease all at once. (Gen. xlv. 2.) It appears from Mark v. 38. that on hearing this death-shriek, the neighbours flocked to the place, and increased, by their voices, this doleful noise. This shriek was accompanied by minstrels, or rather, pipers. (Matt. ix. 23.) They often placed the dead body near the door of the tent; and the chief mourner sat near to it. Gen. xxiii. 2.

5. When the corpse, after having been washed, was carried to the grave, (Acts, ix. 37.) either in a coffin, or on a bier covered with a shroud; and was attended by the relations and friends; the women made loud lamentations, and the men sung hymns in a solemn manner. It appears that some women studied mourning lamentations; and were hired to heighten the scene, Jer. ix. 17, 18. After having interred the body, the mourners returned to the house; and the chief mourner sat to receive them with his mouth muffled up. (Ezek. xxiv. 17. comp. Lev. xiii. 45.) They commonly mourned seven days. (1 Sam. xxxi. 13.) They either sat silent on the ground, or on ashes, (Job, ii. 13.) or spoke only but to bemoan themselves. A kind of funeral feast was sometimes made, and the friends and neighbours sent provisions for the occasion. This, Chardin tells us, is what is meant in Jer. xvi. 7.

6. When persons of rank and consequence died, they burnt perfumes over the corpse, as in the case of Asa, king of Judah. (2 Chron. xvi. 14. xxi. 19. Jer. xxxiv. 5.) They mourned for them a month or longer. (Deut. xxxiv. 1-6.) The mourning for Jacob was only seven days; so that to mourn longer seems to have been an Egyptian custom. For distinguished individuals, odes or songs were written, celebrating their deeds. Such were those that David made upon the death of Saul, and Jeremiah, the prophet, upon that of Josiah. (2 Sam. i. 17. and 2 Chron. xxxv. 25.) In the same light David's language may be regarded at the funeral of Abner. (2 Sam. iii. 31. Zech. xii. 11-14.)

7. Shaving the head, and going with the head and feet bare, were signs of grief. (Job. i. 20.) The nearest relations often went to the grave to lament over the dead. (John, xi. 31.) Harmer supposes that Jeremiah refers to this custom, Lamen. ii. 19. From Le Bruyn, it appears that the lifting up of their hands was one attitude of the women of Rama, at the tombs of their dead relations. Sometimes they threw dust into the air; and it appears that they made wounds in their flesh, for the purpose of showing their affection, Zech. xiii. 6.

GENESIS.

INTRODUCTION.

The Holy Scriptures collectively are called the BIBLE, or the BOOK, by way of distinction and pre-eminence, from the Greek βιβλος. The first five Books are called the Pentateuch, from two Greek words expressive of their number, and are generally ascribed to Moses as their author. The first of these is called Genesis, from a Greek word which denotes generation; and was so called, because it relates the Generation or production of the Heavens and the Earth, of Man, and the various generations of mankind from Adam to the flood, and from the flood to the Descent of Jacob into Egypt.

This is undoubtedly the oldest Historical Book extant in the world; and the events it relates are of the greatest importance to mankind. By giving us the History of the Creation, by One infinitely wise and powerful God, Moses lays the foundation of religion and morals, and shows the folly of Idolatry. From the defection and sin of Adam, and the promise of a Redeemer, he leads us to the source of our depravity, and the foundation of our hopes.

Though this Book was designed for the instruction of mankind at large, it was more especially written for the advantage of the Jews. Hence we have the call of Abraham, the Covenant made with him, the glorious promises made to him, and the most circumstantial History of his life; which could not fail both to instruct and gratify his descendants. The promises made to Jacob, and the subsequent events of his life, with the interesting narrative of Joseph, are closely connected with the deliverance from Egypt and the giving of the law. This History begins, according to Usher, 4004 years before Christ, and comprises a period of about 2365 years.

CHAPTER I.

An Account of the Six Days Creation.

1 IN the beginning God created the heavens and 2 the earth. And the earth was desolate and waste; darkness also was upon the face of the deep, and a mighty wind agitated the surface of the waters. And God said, "Let there be 3 light;" and there was light. And God saw that 4 the light was good; and God distinguished the light from the darkness; And God called the 5 light Day, and the darkness he called Night.

And the evening had been, and the morning had been, One day; And God said, "Let there 6

NOTES.

CHAPTER I. 1. The sacred author takes for granted the Being of God. He at once introduces him as the Almighty Creator of all things; and leaves his readers to judge of his nature and perfections from the works of his hands.

In the beginning, &c. The sense of this passage, in connexion with what follows, obviously is, "That God at first produced by his power the matter of the heavens and the earth, and that he gradually formed this matter into all that variety of animate and inanimate objects, of which the whole system of nature consists." As our language admits the plural, heavens, as well as heaven; I have uniformly adopted it as expressing both the sense and idiom of the original.

2. And the earth was desolate and waste, &c. The earth when first produced was in a chaotic state; forcibly expressed by the original words והארץ תהו ובהו which I have rendered, 'desolate and waste.' I have preferred these terms to the common version, because matter cannot be without some form or other; nor does void in this connexion, convey any clear and definite sense.

And a mighty wind, &c. After much thought, I have thus rendered the original for the following reasons. 1. It is unquestionable that רוח denotes, breath, wind, as well as spirit. Compare Psalm xiv. 7, and Isa. xl. 7. The word God is often used to denote, excellence of any kind; as mountains of God, mean, 'great mountains,' trees of God, 'tall, flourishing trees;' and by a similar idiom, wind of God, means, 'a strong, mighty wind.' 2. This I conceive is a part of the description of the chaotic state, and connected with what precedes, from the participle (מרוחפת) agitating being used. 3. Because the common version seems opposed to the design of the sacred author, who introduces God as first exerting his power and wisdom in separating the discordant elements, and reducing the chaos into order, by the production of light. 4. Because the common version ascribes no effects to the Spirit of God, worthy of his immediate agency. If we render, instead of agitating, moving, or brooding, yet no effect follows, but what my version contains. The Targums, the Arabic and Persic translators have thus rendered.

4. And God distinguished, &c. So J. T. distinctionem fecit, et alii distinxit. I have preferred this term to divide, when applied to light; because this implies that darkness and light are homogenous, or at least that darkness is equally the effect of some peculiar element with light. I cannot believe that man in his most simple state, could possibly entertain such an opinion: it is so obvious to sight that darkness is occasioned by the mere absence of light. God at first doubtless, distinguished them as they are distinguished still, by giving to the earth its rotatory motion. With Rosenmuller I conceive, that the element of Light was first formed, and being collected in the atmosphere, served the purposes of the heavenly luminaries during the three first days. On the fourth day this element was connected with the globe of the Sun, which, according to some of our wisest astronomers, forms the atmosphere of that planet.

5. And the evening had been. Purver renders, 'The evening had been, and the morning was, &c.' It is clearly the design of the author, in this passage, to inform his readers, that the first day began with the production be an Expanse amidst the waters, and let it separate waters from waters;" "and so it was".

7 For God made the expanse, and separated the waters which were below the expanse, from the waters which were above the expanse; And God called the expanse, Heavens; "and God saw that this was good".

And the evening had been, and the morning 9 had been, a Second day; And God said, "Let the waters below the heavens be collected into one place, that the dry land may appear;" and so it was. "For the waters below the expanse were collected into their places, and the dry land 10 appeared". And God called the dry land Earth; and the collection of waters he called Seas; and God saw that this also was good.

11 And God said, "Let the earth bring forth grass, the seed-bearing herbs "according to their kinds", and the fruit-bearing trees, whose seed is in them, according to their kinds, upon the earth; 12 and so it was. For the earth brought forth grass, the seed-bearing herbs, according to their kinds, and the fruit-bearing trees, whose seed was in them, according to their kinds; and God saw that this also was good.

And the evening had been, and the morning 13 had been, a Third day; And God said, "Let 14 there be Luminaries in the expanse of the heavens "to give light upon the earth", and to distinguish the day from the night: "and let them be for signs of stated times, and of weeks and of years;" and so it was. For God made the two 16 great luminaries, the greater luminary for the regulation of the day, and the less for the regulation of the night; he made also the stars. And God set them in the expanse of the heavens 17 to give light upon the earth, And to regulate 18 the day and the night, and to distinguish the light from the darkness; and God saw that this also was good.

And the evening had been, and the morning 19 had been, a Fourth day; And God said, "Let 20 the waters abound with living Reptiles; and let flying Fowl fly over the earth, through the wide expanse of the heavens;" "and so it was". For 21 God created the great sea-monsters, and all the

of Light, and ended when the Evening had been, and when the morning had been, One day, a second day commenced; so that we are to understand each day mentioned as past, and the next as properly the day on which what follows was done. Thus one day was past when God said, 'Let there be an Expanse, &c.' so that making the Expanse &c. was the work of the second day; and so all the six days.

6. Expanse &c. Most modern versions have adopted this term in preference to the firmamentum of the Vulgate, which our Translators followed; and it expresses the sense of the original (רָקִיעַ) more justly, which denotes what is extended; and here denotes that dense air called the Atmosphere, which is continually drawing up a large quantity of watery particles, which coalesce and float in the region of the clouds, until they become too heavy, and fall in drops of rain. These are here called, the waters above the expanse. The Expanse is called the 'Heavens,' which in scripture has three different acceptations. It denotes the air around us, where the birds fly, and the clouds are formed. 2. The whole visible sky, including the sun, moon, and stars. 3. The invisible residence of God, called by the Apostle the third heavens, 2 Cor. xii. 2. It is in the first acceptation the word is used here. At the end of this verse the Septuagint reads, and so it was, and omits the words at the end of the following, where they are now found in the Hebrew.

8. And God saw, &c. The Sept. has here preserved the integrity of the text; for after no other operation are these words wanting; and the want of them here destroys that harmony of composition, which the author so evidently intended. So also in the next verse, after, and so it was, we expect it to follow, as in other instances; For the waters &c. which Sept. retains.

9. The waters below the heavens, which as yet covered the globe, must have exceeded those separated by the expanse. For these receptacles are provided in the globe itself; and to these they gradually subside.

From the scripture account it appears that the innermost parts of the earth are actually composed of water, with which the seas have a communication. Compare Psalm civ. These receptacles are doubtless the fountains of the deep which were broken up at the deluge.

11. Grass and herbs. The Vulg. J. T. render, tender herbs; but the words are clearly distinguished, Deut. xxxii. 2, and 2 Kings xix. 26. In this verse, the productions of the earth are divided into three classes. 1. The grass, which clothes the earth as a garment, and which is uniformly pleasing to the sight. 2. Herbs, esculents of all kinds, and flowers are included in this term; and 3. Trees, of every size and species, whose seed is in them, i. e. which have the vegetative power of reproducing and multiplying themselves.

14. I adopt the reading of the Samaritan, Sept. and 1 ms. on this com. and omit the next, as I am satisfied, that it has originated from the words omitted, being afterwards inserted, and the beginning of this verse again repeated. That office, which the light created on the first day had hitherto discharged, is henceforward to be discharged by the sun, moon, and stars. These are to be signs of stated times. So J. T. render למקרים, and so the word is most usually rendered. I render ימים, weeks, a sense which it has Chap. xxiv. 55. See Note. On the first day God created light, אֵר; but on this he created luminaries, מַאֲרֹת; which implies, a luminous body, a body to which light is attached, or which has the power of exciting it, as Mercer has justly observed.

20. Let the waters abound, &c. I have followed the Latin translators in rendering חַי רֶמֶשׂ, living reptiles, (reptilia animantia) as more expressive, than 'moving creatures.' By these are meant all sorts of reptiles, which creep in the water, in opposition to such as creep on the earth, called ground-reptiles verse 25.

21. Great sea monsters. All the larger kinds of fishes are intended, living reptiles with which the waters abound, according to their kinds; and all the winged fowl; according to their kinds; and God saw that this also was good. And God blessed them, saying, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the waters of the seas, and let fowl multiply upon the earth."

23 And the evening had been, and the morning 24 had been, a Fifth day; And God said, "Let the earth bring forth animals according to their 25 kinds;" and so it was. For God made the Cattle according to their kinds, and the Wild-beasts, according to their kinds, and every ground-Reptile according to its kind; and God saw that this also was good.

26 And God said, "Let us make Man in our own image, according to our own likeness; that they may have dominion over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and over the cattle, and over the 'wild-beasts', and over every reptile 27 that creepeth upon the earth." So God created Man in his own image; in the image of God he created him; male and female he created them. 28 And God blessed them, saying, "Be fruitful, and multiply, and fill the earth, and subdue it; have dominion also over the fishes of the sea, and over the fowls of the air, and 'over the cattle and the wild-beasts", and over every reptile that creepeth upon the earth." And God said, "Be- 29 hold, I give you every seed-bearing herb which is on the face of the whole earth, and every tree, in which is a seed-bearing fruit; it shall be food for you, And for all the beasts of the 30 earth, and for all the fowls of the air, and for every reptile upon the earth, in which is the breath of life; even every green herb for food;" and so it was. And God saw every thing that 31 he had made, and behold it was very good.

And the evening had been, and the morning had been, a Sixth day; and the heavens, and the earth, and all their hosts, were finished. For on the 'sixth' day God finished his work 2 which he had purposed to do; and on the seventh day rested from doing any of his works. And 3 God blessed the seventh day and made it holy; because on it he rested from all his works which he had purposed to do.

This is the origin of the heavens and the earth 4 when they were created; at what time God Jehovah made the 'earth and the heavens'. For 5 before this no plant of the field existed on the earth, nor could any herb of the field grow; for God Jehovah had not caused it to rain upon the earth, nor was there a man to till the ground;

but the word cannot denote the whale kind only. It is supposed often to denote the crocodile and other amphibious creatures.

25. Wild-beasts, &c. When חַיָּה הָאָרֶץ, the beast of the earth, is joined with בְּהֵמָה, cattle, it denotes wild-beasts. The animals of the earth, like the vegetables, are divided into three classes: 1. Cattle; by which all domestic animals seem to be meant. 2. Wild-beasts; such as roam in the forests; and 3. All sorts of less animals which creep on the ground. I have transposed in this and the next com. for the sake of order.

26. Let us make man. This mode of speaking certainly indicates that the author conceived the formation of man, to be a work of peculiar importance and interest; so that a heavenly council is called, and this chief of the divine works, as it regards the earth, is at length brought into existence. The father addresses the son by whom all things, &c. Coloss. i. 16.

In our own likeness, and according, &c. As this mode of speaking occurs Chap. v. 3, where it denotes an exact resemblance, not only in nature, but as I conceive, in moral qualities, it must have a similar sense here. The divine image and likeness, then, means the spiritual nature of the human mind, with its endowments of understanding, judgment, and reason; and its moral qualities of purity, righteousness, &c.

CHAP. II. 1-6. I intirely agree with some late Critics, that these verses belong to the preceding Chapter, and should not have been separated from it.

2. On the sixth day, &c. So both the Samar. and Sept. read; and the sense of the passage requires this reading. Compare Exod. xx. 11. See Note to my Hebrew Bible on this com.

3. And God blessed, &c. What is meant by blessing the seventh day, is explained by the next term, hath made it holy, or, set it apart as sacred in memory of the creation; as a day in which he is to be blessed and praised as the author of all being and the source of all happiness. As Adam and Eve were created towards the close of the 'sixth day,' their first whole day was the sabbath, and was doubtless spent in holy worship; in admiring the perfections of their Creator, and in the warmest expressions of love and gratitude!

4. This is the origin of the heavens, &c. Some render, 'this is the account &c,' and contend the term denotes always either the progeny, or 'an account or history of the progeny;' Compare Chap. vi. 9, and xi. 27; but as generation is the origin of the creature generated, I conceive this sense as much implied in the term as the other. I have preferred origin, as best adapted to convey the sense of the original considered in its connexion.

5. For before this, no plant of the field existed, &c. This verse evidently refers to the chaotic state of the earth, before those exertions of divine power, by which it was clothed with verdure, and made a fit habitation for the different orders of animated creatures.

6. But a flood had risen out of the earth, &c. Geddes has proved that מַבּוּל or מַבְּל denotes not a mist, but a flood. It most commonly signifies, sudden calamity, destruction; but this is doubtless, a metaphorical sense

6 But a flood had risen out of the earth, and deluged the whole face of the ground.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. The works of God prove his being and display his perfections and glory. By the things which are made his eternal power and Godhead are manifest. He spoke and the world was made! He commanded, and the universe arose into existence! How amazing, how incomprehensible his power! His will is the only cause of whatever exists. What beauty, order and harmony, in all his works! He is truly wonderful in counsel, and mighty in working. Who can survey the Sun, Moon, and Stars, which he hath placed in the expanse of the heavens, without admiration! Praise ye him Sun and Moon; praise him all ye stars of light!

2. The earth, the habitation of man, is wonderfully formed, and, as it is emphatically said, hung upon nothing. It is full of God's riches; each element teems with life! In the great and wide sea, play all the larger and smaller kinds of fishes. How various are their species, and their number beyond computation! The birds, display their variegated and beautiful plumage; and, while skimming the air, are chanting forth, in notes the most naturally arising from its primitive. For as a flood, or the bursting of a watery cloud, produces sudden devastation; this sense would naturally be attributed to it. Compare Job xxxvi. 27. As for the sense of נִפְּקָה, it is used to express the over-flowing of the Nile, Amos viii. 8; and here must have a similar one.

7. Living person. This is doubtless the import here and in other instances of נִפְּקָה; and it is well known, that נִפְּקָה, not only denotes soul, but occurs frequently in the sense of person, and is often used instead of the reciprocal pronoun.

8. After having given a particular account of the formation of man Moses next describes the place provided for his residence. This was in the east, in a part of the district called Eden, in a Garden planted by the Creator, and furnished with every desirable production. In the midst of the Garden were two trees of a peculiar species; one called the Tree of life, most probably, because it was appointed to be a natural mean of preserving man's life, and a divine pledge of its continuance; the other called the tree of the knowledge of good and evil; because made the test of man's obedience, and by eating of which, and transgressing the divine command, he would experimentally know the difference between moral good and evil. Some have supposed that the fruit of this Tree, might be naturally noxious to human life. See Doddridge's Lect.

10—14. The situation of Paradise is described with such geographical is pleasant to behold, or suitable for food; and, in the midst of the Garden, the Tree of LIFE, and the Tree of the KNOWLEDGE of GOOD and EVIL. And there issued a stream out of Eden to water 10 the garden; and thence it was parted, and became four principal rivers. The name of the 11 first is Pison; which boundeth the whole land of Havilah, where gold is found; And the gold 12 of that land is good: there also are found pearls and onyx stones. And the name of the second 13 river is Gihon; which boundeth the whole land of Cush. And the name of the third river is 14 Hiddekel; which runneth east of Assyria: and the fourth river is the Euphrates.

melodious, the praises of their Creator. The fields, the plains, and the forests, are furnished with suitable inhabitants; and the earth is clothed with verdure for their use and support. O Lord, how manifold are thy works! In wisdom hast thou made them all.

3. The formation of man, and the institution of the sabbath, display the goodness of God. The human frame was not originally adapted to perpetual labour and toil; and therefore one day in seven is granted as a day of rest. Man is endowed with the noblest faculties; and as the only being on earth, capable of serving and worshipping God, ought to employ his faculties, in contemplating his glories, and in rendering to him homage and praise. The Sabbath was made holy for this purpose; and the observance of it made obligatory. This was calculated to remind him of his origin, to teach him his dependence, and to cherish the spirit of devotion. Let all remember to keep holy the sabbath; as an institution founded in wisdom, and designed to promote their present and future happiness.

precision, that one would suppose it would be easily ascertained; yet on no subject are opinions more at variance. It has been placed in almost every part of the Globe. Le Clerc placed it in Judea; Huetius and others in Babylonia; and Reland, one of the best Scripture-Geographers, in Armenia, where issue the heads of the rivers Tigris and Euphrates. This has been adopted as the most probable opinion by many late writers. Major Wilsford, in the Asiatic Researches, has advanced and supported with much learning, another opinion; "that the real situation of Paradise was in that mountainous tract, which extends from Candahar to the Ganges. "In this district" says he, "we find such a spot as answers minutely to the Mosaic description, a circumstance not to be met with any where else on the surface of the globe. A small brook winds through the district of Bamiyan, and falling into a small lake, divides itself into four heads, forming so many navigable rivers." As the names of the rivers are Ap-pelatives, they might be applied to many rivers from their resembling qualities. Pison, from נָחַל, a deep, overflowing river; Gihon, from גִּיחֹן, an impetuous river; Hiddekel, from חֲדָק, a turbid river; and Euphrates, from עֲפְרַת, which in Syr. denotes, disruptit, &c, an eruptive river. This opinion is not improbable, as other parts of the description agree. The Major conceives Havilah, to be the present country of Cabul, where gold and precious stones are yet found. Pison is the modern Lundi-Sindus, or lit-tle Indus, called also Nilab, and Nila-Ganga. Jerom says the Pison was

 19 mayest freely eat; But of the tree of the know-

 18 And God Jehovah said, "It is not good that had given names to the cattle, and to "all" the 21 fowls of the air, and to all the beasts of the field;

 yet for Adam there had not been found a suit-21 able help-mate. God Jehovah therefore caused a heavy sleep to fall upon Adam; and while he slept, took one of his ribs, and closed up the place with flesh; And the rib, which God Je- 22 hovah had taken out of Adam, he formed into a woman; and he brought her to Adam. And 23 Adam said, "This is now bone of my bone, and flesh of my flesh: Woman shall she be called;

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. In the formation of man, what skill has God displayed! The human body, in its proportion and parts, is an amazing instance of his power and wisdom. I am fearfully and wonderfully made! Made of the dust
 —Let me ever remember my origin, as a check to every feeling of pride—Yet into this dust, God hath breathed the breath of life! Not only made man a living person, but endowed him with an immortal spirit! In this He hath crowned him with glory and honour! Hath made him but a little lower than the Angels.
 Let me remember the dignity of my rational nature, and ever act in a manner becoming it.

2. How happy was man in his primitive state. Placed in a Garden, planted by the hand of Jehovah, and blessed with a suitable help-mate! With what tenderness should a man regard his wife; and how should the wife reverence her husband! They are but one flesh, they should be one in affection.

3. How equitable was that Covenant under which man was placed! No impossible duties are enjoined, no severe restrictions are imposed! A free grant is made of the fruit of all the other trees of the Garden, and only that of one prohibited, to teach him his dependence on his Creator, and his subjection to him as his moral Governor and Lord. As he was not exposed to other temptations, nothing could be more just than this test of his obedience. O my soul, ever aspire after obedience to the divine will, as not only thy duty, but thy highest honour, and inseparably connected with thy happiness!

called Gihon in his time. The Gihon is the Hir-Mend, which bounded the land of Cush; and the country, which begins near the Candahar, and includes a part of Iran, or Persia, is the original seat of Cush. The Hid-spel is the river of Balac which formed the eastern boundary of Ancient Assyria. The fourth is the Cundu. That some-where in the East this delightful Garden was situated, is unquestionable; but it is of no essential importance to us to know the precise spot. In this Garden, Man, when formed, was placed, to cultivate and keep it.

18-20. It is not fit Adam (or man) should be alone, &c. God had formed Adam a sociable being; and it was not fit, or becoming his nature, or suitable to the purposes and designs of his Creator, that he should be without a suitable Companion. To exercise his faculties, God had brought to Adam the beasts of the field, and the fowls of the air; and though Adam had nicely inspected their natures and given them appropriate Names, there was not found one among them all, like himself, endowed with reason and intelligence. Hence it was necessary that his Creator, should form a help-mate suitable for him. And this he did in such a manner as to answer the wisest purposes.

21-24. For Jehovah God, &c. On presenting Adam with his lovely help-mate, God must have informed him how she had been made; and the reflections which follow, show the moral purposes God had in view.

 "This is now bone, &c." The concluding com. our Lord cites, not as either the reflection of Adam, or as the remark of Moses, but as the command of God; "Therefore shall a man, &c. Compare Math. xix. 4, 5:

CHAPTER III. The history of the fall. The observation is not more common than just, that the holy Scriptures are their own best Interpreter.
 What is obscure in one part, is frequently explained in another; so that by comparing different passages the attentive reader will find sufficient light to direct him in his inquiries, and to solve his difficulties. On the History contained in this Chapter, much has been written; and different hypotheses have been assumed for the purpose of explaining it. Without discussing the merit of these, I also will state my opinion. 1. Who or what are we to understand by the Tempter? Our Lord, I conceive has answered this question, by a direct reference to this history, John viii. 44,
 "Ye are of your father the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do.
 He was a murderer from the beginning, and abode not in the truth, because there is no truth in him. When he speaketh a lie, he speaketh of his own:
 for he is a liar, and the father of it." The Tempter in his discourse with Eve "abode not in the truth, but boldly contradicted what Jehovah had of the animals of the field, which God Jehovah had made; and he said to the woman; "Hath God indeed said, Ye shall not eat of every tree of the garden?" And the woman said to the serpent, "Of the fruit of ^aall the other trees of the garden we may eat; But of the fruit of ^athat tree which is in the midst of the garden, God hath said, 'Ye shall not eat of it; nor shall ye touch it; else ye shall die.'" And the serpent said to the woman, "Assuredly ye shall not die. Yea, God knoweth that whenever ye eat of it, your eyes will be opened, and ye will become as gods, knowing good and evil." And when the woman saw that the tree was suitable for food, and that it was pleasing to the eyes; also a tree to be desired as giving knowledge, she took of its fruit and ate, and gave of it also to her husband with her; and he ate. And the eyes of both were opened, and they knew that they were naked; and they sewed together fig-tree leaves, and made themselves waist-girdles.

said; 'Assuredly ye shall not die.' Thus he was 'a liar and the father of it.' And by the success of the temptation, he became a murderer: 'He was a murderer from the beginning.' The 'beginning' here most naturally refers to the transactions recorded in this chapter. Admitting the authority of our Lord, the principal Agent in the temptation of our first parents was the Devil or Satan. Compare 1 John iii. 8.

2. Why is he called (נחש) the Serpent? Did he appear in the likeness, or did he animate the body of a Serpent, and make use of its organs? The most common opinion is, that Satan animated the body of a real Serpent. The original word unquestionably signifies a Serpent, and is so rendered by all the ancient translators. It must notwithstanding, be admitted, that the word is ambiguous, and may denote one who uses serpentine arts, in order to beguile and deceive. Thus the word (שרף) Seraph, denotes a species of serpents, and an order of Angels, being both so denominated from the splendour of their appearance. Thus the Tempter might be called Serpent, not because he appeared in the form or animated the body of a Serpent, but because he had imitated the subtlety of that creature, in alluring and deceiving the woman. For a similar reason our Lord called Herod 'a fox.' Hence I conceive the first verse of this Chapter is the remark of the Historian, and contains the reason why the Tempter was called, 'the Serpent.' I would thus paraphrase it. 'Now the natural Serpent was the most subtle of any of the beasts of the field which Jehovah God had made.' And he, to whom the woman gave this name, said &c.

Hence the sentence pronounced on the Tempter is in language literally applicable to the natural Serpent. "As this animal is considered degraded because he crawls on his belly, and licks up dust together with his food, so shall the Tempter be degraded; as the natural serpent when crushed on the head, perisheth; so the spiritual serpent shall be crushed and punished." There is nothing unusual in this kind of play on the literal and figurative sense of a word. It is often found in the scriptures, and indeed abounds among the Oriental writers in general. Had our Lord pronounced the sentence on Herod, in allusion to the fox, and said, 'Thy cunning and craft shall not secure thee; they shall chase thee from all thy covers,

And they heard the voice of God Jehovah resounding in the garden, in the cool of the day; and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of God Jehovah amidst the trees of the Garden. But God Jehovah called to Adam, and said to him, "Where art thou?" And he said, "I heard thy voice in the garden, and I was afraid, because I was naked; and I hid myself." "And who," said he, "told thee that thou wast naked? Hast thou eaten of that tree, of which I commanded thee not to eat?" And Adam said, "The woman whom thou hast given me for a companion, gave me of that tree, and I ate." And God Jehovah said to the woman, "Why didst thou this thing?" And the woman said, "The serpent deceived me, and I ate."

And God Jehovah said to the serpent, "Because thou hast done this, accursed shalt thou be above all the cattle, and above every other animal of the field; upon thy belly thou shalt go, and dust thou shalt eat all the days of thy life."

6. ^v The Sam. Sept. and they ate. The Vulg. omits with her.

and tear thee limb from limb,' we should have understood that he meant, that Herod should be pursued by enemies and punished for his wickedness.

3. Admitting that the Tempter was Satan; and that he did not appear in the form, nor animated the body of a Serpent, it may be said in what form did he appear? As the holy Scriptures are silent on this subject, I would assert nothing positively. But if Satan sometimes 'transforms himself into an angel of light,' why might he not be suffered, for wise and holy purposes, to do so on this occasion? This was the opinion of pious Bishop Tenison; and the eloquent Saurin seems inclined to adopt it. (See his Diss. in loc.) If we understand what is here related as literally occurring, this view of the subject obviates some difficulties which attend the common opinion. For if Satan appeared as a Serpent, and animated the body of one, it must surely have excited some surprise in Eve, to hear a contemptible reptile speak, and discover a knowledge of the divine command, &c! But as from some passages of Scripture, it is probable that the Angels were created prior to man, and might occasionally appear in Paradise, it could excite no surprise to hear one like these speak, &c. But if we understand the conversation between Eve and the Serpent, or Satan, as what the Tempter suggested to her mind, and her own reflections on the reasons, why the fruit of that one Tree was prohibited; and the consequent descent of Jehovah, and the sentence he pronounced on the Tempter, and on Adam and Eve for complying with the temptation, as expressing in an historical narrative, the revealed purpose of God to punish them for their offence, while yet in mercy he opens a door of hope—I can see nothing in this mode of interpretation, which is in the least degree improper, or repugnant to scripture usage. This mode of interpretation must be adopted in many instances, as in what Micaiah says to Ahab, 1 Kings xxii. 20, &c; in explaining the first three Chapters of Job, and of the Prophet Hosea. The attentive reader will observe a striking agreement between the History of the fall, and that of our Lord's temptation in the wilderness. If the latter be considered literally and historically true, so may the former; but if our Lord's temptation can be explained as what the Tempter suggested to his mind, so may the temptation in paradise.

15 And I will put enmity between thee and the serpent; and between thy seed and her seed; He shall bruise thee on the head; and thou shalt bruise him on the heel.

16 To the woman he said, "I will greatly multiply thy breeding-sorrows; and in sorrow shalt thou bring forth children; and to thy husband thou shalt be in subjection, and he shall rule over thee."

17 And to Adam he said, "Because thou hast hearkened to the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, 'Thou shalt not eat of it;,' accursed be the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of its produce all the days of thy life. Thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and the herbs of the field thou shalt eat. In the sweat of thy face thou shalt eat thy bread, until thou return unto the ground, out of which thou wast taken: for DUST thou ART, and unto DUST shalt thou return." And Adam called his wife's name 20 Eve, [LIFE-GIVER] because she was to become the mother of all the living. And God Jehovah 21 made garments of skins for Adam and his wife, and clothed them.

And God Jehovah said; "Behold, Adam 22 would so become like one of us, as to know good and evil; and now possibly, he will put out his hand, and take also of the fruit of the tree of LIFE, that he may live for ever!" Therefore, 23 God Jehovah sent him out of the garden of Eden, to till the ground, whence he had been taken. And he drove out the man, and placed 24 at the East of the garden of Eden Cherubs, with flame-brandishing swords, to keep the way to the tree of life.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. We here learn the malignity of the enemy of mankind. Having fallen from his integrity, and 'left his first estate,' and viewing with envy the innocence and happiness of man, he tries to make him his associate both in sin and misery. How just is the character which Peter gives us of this adversary: "He goeth about as a roaring lion, seeking whom he may devour."

2. We see in this history the nature and progress of Temptation: Indebted to God for their existence and all the blessings of it, our first Parents were placed under a righteous system of moral government; the rule of their duty was expressly stated, and the consequence of sinning threatened. The woman owns, that God had granted them the free use of all the trees of the Garden; except the tree of the knowledge of good and evil. The enemy boldly asserts that death would not be the consequence of eating. She still listens, while he proceeds to arraign the goodness of God, in restraining them from the fruit of that tree which would alike increase their knowledge and pleasure. First doubting the truth of the sanction of God's own Law, and then aspiring after the enjoyment of some unknown good, she looks, she takes, she eats, and she gives to her husband, and he eats with her; and they die to that pure happiness they had hitherto enjoyed. How necessary is it for every one, 'to keep his heart with all diligence, and to make a covenant with his eyes,' lest he should be ensnared and overcome by temptation.

3. Let us own the justice of this sentence passed on man. We bear the image of Adam in our afflictions and death. We labour like him, and like him return to the dust. Adam's sin was great and heinous, and being the first transgression, claimed a heavier punishment. God did his guilty creatures no wrong—he did but keep his own word. Let us humble ourselves under these mortifying circumstances of becoming a prey to sin, to affliction and death; and adore God, who exacts less than our iniquities and the iniquities of our first parents, deserved.

4. Let us adore that mercy which pointed out the Lord Jesus Christ. By faith in this promise, the holy men of old bore up under their imperfections and distresses. We have particular reason to be thankful that Christ was manifested in the flesh, that as the children, whom he came to save, were partakers of flesh and blood, he also partook of the same. Blessed be God for Jesus Christ! This second man is the Lord from heaven, who restores those blessings which our first father lost, and brings greater and nobler along with him. Thanks be to God for this unspeakable gift!

head. The 'enmity' is more particularly to be between the Tempter and this seed, and the woman is only mentioned as the instrument of bringing this seed into the world; as all nations are said to be blessed in Abraham, from whose loins the Messiah was to spring. When the woman's seed actually appeared, the enmity of the Tempter and his seed, the wicked, was soon discovered; and our Lord continued to experience it, until by death he destroyed him that had the power of death, and laid the foundation of his own Universal Empire.

16. Thy breeding-sorrows, &c. With Glasius I consider that we have here the figure Heudyadis, and that the meaning of "thy sorrow and thy conception" is that given. As (ἡδυάδης) here rendered 'desire' in the

16. I will put enmity, &c. As the woman was first in the transgression, this language strongly expresses that she was to be the honoured medium, of bringing forth the Deliverer. We may reason on this passage as the Apostle does on the promise made to Abraham; "He saith not, and to seeds as of many," but as speaking of one individual, "his seed, which is Christ." Gal. iii. 16. In allusion perhaps to this scripture, the same Apostle says, "But when the fulness of time was come, God sent forth his Son, made of a woman &c." Gal. iv. 4. The last clause of this verse gives us the sense of the former. The woman is to have a seed and the serpent a seed, and mutual enmity is to subsist between them. They are to be opposed to each other. The woman's seed is to crush the Serpent's

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 4008: The birth of Cain and Abel; the murder of the latter, and the Curse on Cain his murderer; the first Polygamist, Lamech and his address to his wives.

1 AND Adam knew Eve his wife; and she conceived, and bare Cain, [ACQUISITION,] and said I have acquired a man-child from Jehovah. 2 And she afterwards bare his brother Abel, [VANITY.] And Abel became a keeper of flocks, 3 and Cain a tiller of the ground. And at the appointed period, it came to pass, that Cain brought of the fruit of the ground an offering 4 to Jehovah. And Abel also brought one of the choicest and fattest of the flock; and Jehovah had respect to Abel and his offering; but to Cain 5 and his offering he had not respect. Cain was 6 therefore very wroth, and his countenance fell. And Jehovah said to Cain, "Why art thou wroth; 7 and why is thy countenance fallen? Is there not, if thou doest well, acceptance; and if not well, a sin-offering, lying at the door? Still to thee shall he be in subjection, and thou shalt 8 rule over him." Nevertheless Cain said to Abel authorised Version, is used in reference to Abel, Chap. iv. 7, and appears to signify a disposition or readiness to obey another, no rendering appears more proper, than that given; and the following words require this sense.

21. Coat of skins, &c. It is probable, as animals were not used for food previous to the deluge, that sacrifices were now instituted, and that the skins with which our first parents were clothed, were those of the victims, which had been offered to God. We have no express mention, it is true, of this; but as we find Abel offering with acceptance the best and fattest of his flock, at no very distant period, it is clear that sacrifices must have been divinely appointed. The instituted rites of sacrifice would throw light on the promise, and represent in what way the seed of the woman was to bruise the head of the Serpent. Is there not a reference to this, when our Lord is said to be 'the Lamb slain, from the foundation of the world?'

22. Behold the man that would become, &c. In this version I adopt the principle, that the verb (יָרָא) here denotes, not what man actually 'became,' but what he 'attempted to become;' (See Glassius Canon 8 in veb.) and this version, unless I am mistaken, is more suitable to the character of God than the common one. This rendering converts what has been regarded an Irony, into the language of commiseration; and what follows contains the reason, why Jehovah expelled man from paradise; lest, having violated the divine command, and incurred the penalty of death, he should attempt to escape the punishment by eating of the tree of life.

CHAP. IV. 1. A man-child from Jehovah. The pains and dangers of child-bearing are so great, that one would think it almost impossible, for any to be insensible of the favour of God in supporting under, and saving from them. Such seems to be the sense of this passage. Through the assistance of Jehovah, Eve acknowledges that she had brought forth a man-child. Some would render; "I have gotten a man, the Jehovah," referring to the promised seed; but the usual sense I consider the true one.

his brother, 'Let us go into the field'; and it came to pass, when they were in the field, that Cain rose up against Abel his brother, and slew him.

And Jehovah said to Cain, "Where is Abel thy brother?" And he said, "I know not: Am I my brother's keeper?" And God said, "What hast thou done? the voice of thy brother's blood crieth unto me from the ground. And now thou art cursed art thou by that ground, which hath opened its mouth to receive thy brother's blood from thy hand. Shouldest thou till that ground, it would not hence-forth yield to thee its substance; a fugitive and a wanderer shalt thou be on the earth." And Cain said to Jehovah, "My punishment is greater than I can bear. Behold, thou drivest me out this day from the face of this ground; and from thy presence I shall be secluded, and shall be a fugitive and a wanderer upon the earth, and it will come to pass, that whosoever findeth me will slay me." And Jehovah said to him, 'Not so'; whosoever slayeth Cain, on him shall be taken sevenfold ven-

15. *Sept. Syr. Sym. Theo. others therefore.

3. Appointed time. Literally, 'end of days.' Whether this refers to the weekly sabbath or to the end of the year, which (יָמָיו) sometimes signifies, is uncertain; but that it refers to some stated time of worship seems most obvious and natural. Indeed if Sacrifices were of divine appointment, there must have been stated times, when, as well as an Altar, on which they were to be offered. Purver renders, 'at the end of the year.'

4, 5. In the matter of the offerings of Cain and Abel, there is a striking difference. Cain's is a mere acknowledgement of God as a benefactor; while that of Abel implies the confession of sin, and a regard to the appointed method of remission and acceptance. The Apostle tells us Abel's was a more excellent sacrifice (πλεονα θυσιου) than Cain's; it was so in the matter, as well as in the spirit of the offerer. It is most probable God testified his acceptance of Abel and his sacrifice, by consuming it with fire from heaven, as he did in after times. The preference given must have been in some sensible manner, otherwise Cain could not have known it.

7. The ambiguity of this verse has occasioned much difficulty to Critics and Translators. The design has led me to prefer the version adopted. For it is evident that Cain was wroth on account of the preference given to his brother's offering; and God's address to him, is to show that the cause was in himself; in neglecting to make atonement, he discovered no sense of his own sin, nor any desire for pardon; but that if he would repent, and offer an atoning sacrifice, he also should be accepted. I have followed Dr Lightfoot in rendering (רָחַם) a 'sin-offering,' which was ready at hand, even 'lying at the door.' In this view the latter clause, points out the method of acceptance, and implies a call to Cain to seek it in this method.

13. Others would render, "Iniquity is too great to be pardoned." So all our first translators, and most of the ancient. Michaelis renders interrogatively, "Is my sin too, &c." and Shuckford makes Cain a penitent. The version of our last translators I prefer, as being most agreeable to the context; as in the following verse, he expresses what this punishment was:

vengeance." And Jehovah gave a token to Cain that no one who might meet with him should kill him.

16 And Cain departed from the presence of Jehovah, and dwelt in the land of Nod, on the east of Eden. And Cain knew his wife; and she conceived and bare Enoch; and as he was then building a city, he called the name of the city, after the name of his son, Enoch. And unto Enoch was born Irad; and Irad begot Methusael; and Methusael begot Lamech.

19 And Lamech took unto him two wives; the name of the one was Adah, and the name of the other Zillah. And Adah bare Jabal: he was the first of those who dwelt in tents, for the purpose of tending cattle. And the name of his brother was Jubel: he was the first who played on the harp and the pipe. And Zillah

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. How often are parents deceived and disappointed in respect to their children! They fondly hope that they will prove the best acquisitions, but frequently experience that they are the source of their bitterest sorrows. After a thousand anxieties for their real welfare, and unwearied attention to their improvement, and future respectability; they, in too many instances, become, by their wickedness, the reproach of their parents, and repay all their kindness and affection, with disregard and disobedience.

2. How suitable is it for frail man to acknowledge his dependence on God, and for sinful man to implore forgiveness and mercy! Abel, in presenting to God the choicest and fattest of his flock, discovered a sense both of his dependence and sinfulness; and in the divinely appointed way of sacrifice, sought forgiveness.

3. Real piety is necessary to our acceptance with God. Our offerings, unless accompanied with humility, repentance, and faith, will be rejected; but where these are found, every act of worship will be accepted. "By faith Abel offered unto God a more excellent sacrifice than Cain, by which he obtained witness expulsion from his native spot, and the fear of being himself murdered. The sacred writers mention him, not as penitent, but as wicked, and being of the wicked one. 1 John, iii. 12.

18. Jehovah gave a token, &c. For this version see the note Hebrew Bible. It is vain to inquire what was the token or sign which Jehovah gave, as Moses has not specified it. It was to assure him, that no one should perform the office of the blood-avenger, and slay him.

16. The land of Nod. The land received its name from Cain being a wanderer from the place where Adam and his other children dwelt. It was called the land of the wanderer; and was east of Eden.

19. Lamech took unto him two wives. Thus early was the law of marriage violated; and the race of impious Cain were first in the transgression.

And, being assaulted, a young man.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 3760. The age and death of the patriarchs from Adam to Noah.

AND Adam again knew "Eve", his wife, "and she conceived" and bare a son, and called his name Seth [A SUBSTITUTE]; "for God," said she, "hath substituted to me another seed instead of Abel, whom Cain slew." And to Seth also there was born a son; and he called his name that he was righteous, God testifying of his gifts: and by it he being dead yet speaketh."

4. How dangerous is it to indulge the passions! Cain was wroth with his brother when he ought to have been ashamed and grieved for his own sin. He suffered his envy and his anger to prey upon him, till they hurried him on to the foulest crime which he could commit. O guard against anger and resentment! Such passions rest in the bosom of fools, and produce the most dreadful effects. He that hateth his brother, is a murderer in heart and intention, and is in danger of the judgment.

5. We here see the mystery of providence. Pious Abel cut off in the bloom and prime of his days, while his wicked brother is permitted to live, have children, and build a city. Singular as is this providence, it might be suffered to answer valuable purposes; to show that there is another state, where piety shall be rewarded and vice punished; and that it is there the pious are to look for the consummation of their felicity. Let us wait till the day of retribution, and the mystery of providence, in such instances as this, will be unfolded; and all the ways of God will be found to have been equitable and kind.

20. The first of those, &c. Literally, "the father." A Hebraism, which denotes one to be the inventor of an art, or the founder of a state.

23. Lamech said, &c. Of this first polygamist Moses has preserved an address to his wives, without giving us the occasion of it. Whether he had been attacked for violating the law of marriage, or for some other cause, is not known; but it should seem he had slain a man, though in the contest he had been wounded. His wives might fear lest some blood-avenger should kill him; and to inspire confidence, he observes, that if the death of Cain, who, without any just cause, had slain his brother, was to be avenged seven times, surely his would be seventy-seven times. He contrasts the murder, which Cain had committed, with his own justifiable homicide.—I, indeed, being wounded, &c. Among the various renderings of this verse, I have given what to me seems most probable. See Lowth's Lect. vol. in loc. 26. Then began men, &c. The devout and serious part of men were denominated 'the sons of God,' or the worshippers of Jehovah. Shuckford has proved that the words בְּשֵׁם יְהוָה uniformly signify, "to be called by the name," and not "to call on the name," as the common version. Compare Gen. iv. 17, Num. xxxii. 42. Ps. xlix. 11, and Is. xliii. 7. Purver has adopted the same version.

And Jared lived a hundred and sixty-two years, 18 and he begot Enoch. And Jared lived after he 19 begot Enoch eight hundred years, and begot sons and daughters. And all the days of Jared were 20 nine hundred and sixty-two years; and he died.

CHAP. V. 3. Adam lived one hundred and thirty years. The Septuagint has two hundred and thirty. And, in like manner, a hundred years is added to the age of Seth, Enos, Cainan, Mahalaleel, and Enoch, before the birth of their successors; but this sum is subtracted from the period they lived after.

There is clearly a contrast intended, between the image of God, in which Adam was created, and that of Adam as fallen, in whose image Seth was born; and it must imply that a change had been produced in human nature. Seth indeed was a pious son, and deserved to occupy the place of his pious brother Abel.

5. The extraordinary longevity of men, in those first ages of the world, appears not at all incredible, considering how requisite this was for peopling the earth, and how probable it is that the human constitution was then proportionably strong, and the mode of living extremely temperate and simple.

18. Enoch. Jude mentions him as the seventh from Adam, and a prophet of God, ver. 14. From this we learn, that religious instruction was divinely imparted to the antediluvians.

21. Methuselah. This is a prophetic name, and signifies he dieth, and water is sent forth. Job, v. 10. And so it will intimate that Enoch foreseeing the deluge, gave his son this name; by which he proved himself a prophet, as well as a preacher of righteousness: and it is remarkable that this Methuselah died the very year in which the flood came.

24. Enoch walked with God, &c. Paul has explained Moses, Heb. xi. 5. The humble and holy conduct of Enoch was honoured in a most singular manner. He was taken up to heaven without tasting death; and if this event occurred on some public and solemn occasion, as is most probable, it would tend to confirm the doctrine of a future state, and to encourage pious men with the hope of it, when those calamities, of which he had prophesied, should come.

28. The period from the creation to the flood, according to the present Hebrew, is 1656, according to the Samaritan, 1307, and, according to the Septuagint, 2242 years.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. We here see the sentence pronounced on man, executed. Adam, for his transgression, was doomed to die; and though his life was prolonged for ages, at length he died. His descendants in like manner, successively departed; "the dust returned to dust, and the Spirit to God who gave it." Living for so many ages, they had great opportunities for improvement in knowledge and piety, and in every useful and ornamental art; yet they died, and all their glory was buried in the dust. Those who were wicked, however long they lived, would die accursed.

2. By raising up persons, eminent for piety and knowledge, God has in all ages supplied men with means of instruction. When Adam was dead, who was doubtless the teacher, as well as the father, of the human race, God raised up Enoch to supply his

CHAP. VI. 2. Sons of the Chiefs. To understand (בני מלכים) as denoting the pious, the worshippers of Jehovah, the sons of God, as opposed to the wicked, seems to me a forced and very unnatural interpretation. That such persons should act as these did, is equally inconsistent with their profession and spirit; but that the sons of the Chiefs, should become profligate from indulgence, and seize whomsoever they would for wives, is probable in itself, and but too well supported by example in every age. This version is that of the Samar. both Arabs, Onkel. Aquil. and Sym. Pious Bishop Wilson adopts it, and observes, "when great men make vice fashionable by their example and authority, it is the beginning of a total corruption, and general judgment. Luke xvii. 27."

3. My Spirit shall, &c. The sense of 'striving' attributed to the verb (נאצח) in the common version, is supported by no authority, (See Note Heb. Bible.) The sense given is obvious, and supported by the use of the words in other places. Michaelis from the Arabic renders, "My Spirit shall not be always despised among men, &c." Some of the versions read (לֹא) 'shall not always abide or dwell in man.' With other Critics I consider (נאצח) a verbal noun, signifying, in ignorance, unwarned. The war-

bare sons, who became mighty, the renowned men of antiquity.

And Jehovah saw that the wickedness of man 5 was great on the earth, and that the whole frame of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually. And Jehovah repented that he had 6 made man on the earth; and, grieved in his heart, Jehovah then said, "I will destroy man, 7 whom I created, from the face of the ground; and, together with man, the beasts, and the reptiles, and the fowls of the air; for I repent that I made them". But Noah found favour in 8 the sight of Jehovah.

These are the events which occurred in the 9 days of Noah. Noah was the most just and upright man of his generation: and Noah walked with God. And Noah had begotten three sons, 10 Shem, Ham, and Japheth. But the earth was 11 corrupted before God, and was filled with op-place, both by his example and doctrine. Let us hope, that this eminent servant of God, and preacher of righteousness, will be found not to have laboured in vain, but to have been the honoured instrument of turning many sinners to God.

3. Let us learn, like Enoch, to walk with God. Nothing can be more suitable to our rational nature; and nothing more interesting and ennobling. He conversed with God daily, by meditation, prayer and other religious exercises; and God was pleased to honour him with his presence, and the distinguishing tokens of his favour. If we cultivate his temper, and follow his example, we shall share in his happiness; and though we die, as other men, yet shall we be finally raised again, and in our whole nature everlastingly enjoy God. Let us cultivate this hope, and aspire after this glory and happiness.

ing follows, 'their days shall therefore yet be, &c.' Compare Nehem. ix. 30.

4. Lawless warriors. The word giant means a person of greater stature than others; but the term (גִּימְלִים) is not restricted to this signification. It denotes 'such persons as fall upon or attack others unjustly;' and I could not find any other terms more suitable, than those adopted. From the licentious intercourse of the sons of the Chiefs, with the daughters of the vulgar people, sprang this race of lawless warriors, and plunderers; who by violence became mighty, and notwithstanding their injustice and oppression, were considered by a corrupt race as the renowned men of Antiquity. Some would render Apostates, a sense which is unsupported by any of the Versions.

7. I repent. This, as well as the language in the preceding verse, is adapted to our capacity, and only means God's abhorrence of sin and his resolution to punish it. In the punctuation of this verse I follow the Vulg.

9. These are the events of the days of Noah. The words (אֵלֶּה הַדְּבָרִים) cannot mean here genealogy, for none is given; but an Account of the events which occurred in his days, as I have rendered.

13. From off the earth. The text has (מִן הָאָרֶץ) but one ms. reads

12 pression. And God looked upon the earth, and, behold, it was corrupted; for all flesh had 13 corrupted its way on the earth. And God said to Noah, "The end of all flesh is come before me; for the earth through them is filled with oppression. Behold, therefore, I am about to destroy them 'from off' the earth." 14 "Make for thyself an ark of gopher wood;
rooms shalt thou make in the ark, and shalt 15 cover it within and without with pitch. After this form thou shalt make it. The length of the Ark shall be three hundred cubits, the breadth of it fifty cubits, and the height of it 16 thirty cubits. A deck shalt thou make to the ark, and in a cubit shalt thou finish it above;
and the door of the ark shalt thou place in its side; lower, second, and third stories shalt thou 17 make in it. For, Behold! I am about to bring a flood of waters upon the earth, to destroy all flesh, in which is the breath of life, from under the heavens; whatsoever liveth on the earth shall die. But with thee will I establish 18

my covenant; and thou shalt go into the ark;
thou, and thy sons, and thy wife, and thy sons' wives with thee. And animals of every kind, 19 pairs of each, shalt thou bring with thee into the ark, to be kept alive; the male and his female shall they be. Of fowls according to their 20 kinds, and of cattle according to their kinds, and of all the reptiles of the earth according to their kinds; pairs of every kind shall go in with thee to be kept alive. Take thou, therefore, of 21 every sort of food, and store it up with thee,
that it may be food for thee, and for them."
Thus did Noah; according to all that God 22 commanded him, so did he.

CHAP. VI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. The love of power soon displayed itself, and the abuse of it soon followed. Impelled by their passions, the Sons of Chiefs, without any regard to justice, seized for wives, or concubines, whomsoever they chose; thus violating the original Law of marriage, and introducing the most unbounded licentiousness and profligacy: When vice presides on the throne, and is supported by the corrupt law of usage, it must be rampant among the common people. They will imitate their Leaders, and but too faithfully copy the example set before them. Let persons of power and influence, consider the mischief they do, by their wicked conduct, and the awful account they have to give to God.

2. Let us admire the divine patience, manifested to men, who had become so extremely wicked. God had already warned them by Enoch and others; and though little regard had been paid, he declares, that yet their days shall be one hundred and twenty years. He thus waited to be gracious; and seemed unwilling to execute vengeance. By the preaching of Noah, he again called them to repentance. This upright man, must have been perpetually warning them of the approaching desolation and ruin; and the building of the Ark, was at least a proof, that he was convinced of the certainty of the event he was commissioned to foretel; yet they continued impenitent. Heb. xi. 17.

(תנח) and the sense requires this reading, or at least the textual word must be understood in this sense, as Gen. iv. 1; xlix. 25; 2 Kings xxiii. 35.

14. An Ark. This term is not strictly proper; for an Ark is a square coffer or chest, such as that in which the tables of the Law were put. The Hebrew word is here different, and means a large Vessel or Ship. I have retained the term Ark, because from use it has become appropriated to denote this vessel. Gopher-wood, some think was the pine tree; while others, suppose Osiers are meant.

15. "Some unbelievers have objected that there was not room in such a vessel for all the beasts and birds and their provisions; but Bishop Wil-

3. How inveterate must be the depravity of human nature! "The whole frame of the thoughts of the heart, only evil continually." Let us humble ourselves at the recollection, that this character is but too much our own; and that the dispositions and thoughts of our hearts are so evil. Is not the world still corrupt before God, and filled with oppression? Pride, Lust, and the love of the world still prevail. Let us seek for that renovation of mind, and cultivate that purity of heart, which stamp dignity on our nature, and are essential to our future felicity.

4. God's singular favour to Noah is a strong argument in favour of singular piety. His building the ark was an instance of his piety, and a proof of the sincerity of his faith. He had truth on his side, though numbers were on the other side. He not only was good, but he did good. He did not confine his truth and goodness to himself, but showed it to others. It is the sign of a great soul, for a man to retain his integrity in the midst of public corruption. Thus did Noah. Let us learn from him not to follow multitudes to do evil, but distinguish ourselves by piety and goodness, and God will remarkably distinguish us by his favour here and hereafter. In short, let us be blameless and harmless, the sons of God without rebuke, in the midst of a crooked and perverse generation. Let our light so shine, then, that others may be led to glorify our heavenly father.

kings hath proved there was, and that a first rate man of war would be capacious enough for the purpose. The original species of beasts and birds were but few; fishes are excepted. It appears to me that this account of the ark confirms the truth of the scripture; for its proportions are well adjusted; whereas, had it been of human invention, or a Jewish tale, it would have been represented, according to our confused notion of things at first view, abundantly too large; but it was a suitable size, admirably adapted to the purpose designed."

16. A deck. The common version is window; but Schultens has proved that the word means, a roof or deck. The Hebrew word for a win-

CHAPTER VII.

B. C. 2349. Noah and his family enter the Ark; the beginning, increase and duration of the flood.

1 AND Jehovah said to Noah, "Go thou and all thy household into the ark; for thee have I seen 2 to be righteous amidst this generation. Of all the clean beasts thou shalt take in with thee seven pairs, the male and his female; and of the beasts that are not clean, two pairs, the male 3 and his female. Of the fowls of the air also that are clean, seven pairs", the male and his female; "and, of the fowls that are not clean, two pairs, the male and his female"; to keep their seed alive upon the face of the whole 4 earth. For, after seven days, I will cause it to rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights; and every living substance that I have made will I destroy from off the face of the whole 5 earth." And Noah did according to all that 6 Jehovah commanded him. And Noah was six hundred years old when the flood of waters came upon the earth.

7 And Noah and his sons, and his wife, and his sons' wives went with him into the ark, because of the waters of the flood. Of clean 8 beasts, and of beasts that were not clean, and of clean fowls, and of fowls that were not clean", and of reptiles that creep on the ground, 9 Pairs went with Noah into the Ark, the male and his female, as God had commanded Noah. 10 And it came to pass after seven days, that the waters of the flood began to come upon the earth.

dow is (דלוק, and not דלוק.) What follows justifies this sense. It was to have an elevation of one Cubit; most probably in the middle, so that the water might fall off on every side. For, unless this term mean the roof or deck, Moses would leave us to suppose, that the Vessel was open above; which it could not be, as in that case it would have afforded no safety either to Noah or to the animals with him. There was a window in some part of the Ark as appears from Ch. viii. 6, but this is called דלוק.

CHAP. VII. 1. Amidst this generation. The term (בין) is here, as in other places, a mere expletive. The common version introduces a tautology; for seen and before me, mean the same thing.

2. Of all the clean and unclean, &c. As animal food was not used before the flood, it is probable that the distinction of beasts and fowls into clean and unclean, had been made in reference to sacrifices; and that

In the six hundredth year of Noah's life, 11 in the second month, the seventeenth day of the month, on that same day all the fountains of the great deep were broken up, and the flood-gates of the heavens were opened. And 12 there was a heavy rain upon the earth forty days and forty nights. On that selfsame day entered 13 Noah, and Shem, and Ham, and Japheth, the sons of Noah, and Noah's wife, and the three wives of his sons with them, into the ark; And of 14 all the animals according to their kinds, and of all the cattle according to their kinds, and of all the reptiles that creep upon the earth according to their kinds, and of all the fowls, according to their kinds°.

So pairs of all flesh, in which was the breath 15 of life, went with Noah into the Ark. And 16 they that went in, went in thus; a male and a female, of all flesh, as God had commanded Noah: and Jehovah shut him in. And a flood 17 of forty days "and forty nights" came upon the earth; and the waters increased, and bore up the ark, and it was raised above the earth. And the waters prevailed, and were increased 18 greatly upon the earth; and the ark floated upon the surface of the waters. And the wa- 19 ters prevailed exceedingly upon the earth; and all the highest mountains, which were under the whole heavens, were covered. Fifteen cubits 20 did the waters prevail, above the mountains, which they covered. And all flesh that moved 21 upon the earth expired, both of fowls, and cattle, and animals and every reptile that creepeth on the ground; and every man also: All in 22

those called unclean, were such as were not offered, and those clean such as were. Compare Ch. viii. 20.

3. The narrative requires the readings preserved in the Sam. Copy and in the Septuagint; and so in the following verses.

11. The fountains of the deep. Compare Gen. i. 9, and Note.—The flood gates. The Sept. renders cataracts. I have followed Purver, as best expressing the sense in our language.

14—16. The different species of animals and birds must have been brought by divine power; their dispositions changed or controlled, so as for once to realize the beautiful language of the Prophet; "The wolf shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard with the kid; the cow and the bear shall feed, and the lion and the ox shall lie down together."

17—24. According to Moses, the flood was universal; for the highest whose nostrils was the breath of life, all that 23 was on the dry land, died. Thus was destroyed every living substance which was upon the face of the ground; both man, and animals, and reptiles, and the fowls of the air; thus were they destroyed from off the earth: and Noah only, and they that were with him in the ark, 24 remained alive. And the waters prevailed upon the earth one hundred and fifty days.

CHAP. VIII. 1. *So Sept. and Syr.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. We here see how hateful sin is to a holy God! By this he was provoked to destroy the creatures he had made. Nor did he on this occasion act unbecomingly his own perfections. How dreadful is it to fall into his hands when he ariseth to take vengeance! This story should be a warning to a careless world. Let us attend to that important question in Job xxii. 15, 16. "Hast thou marked the old way which wicked men have trodden? who were cut down out of time, whose foundations was overflowed with a flood." Let us hear and fear, and do no more wickedly.

2. God will as surely fulfil his threatenings as his promises. For righteous Noah, he appointed the Ark as a place of safety, and shut him in. Happy man! He had believed the revelation which announced the flood; and obeyed the divine command in preparing the Ark. It is easy to imagine with what contempt he would be treated; and what objections would be raised against the very probability of such an event, as an universal flood! But what is impossible to the divine power? All creatures, animate and inanimate, are subject to God's control, and winds and waves obey his word. He directs all events and causes, so as to accomplish his designs, whether of mercy or judgment.

3. How dreadful is the unbelieving security of sinners! and how impossible will it be for them to escape the divine judgments. No warning will arouse them, no threatening alarm them. Intent on their sinful pursuits and pleasures, they turn a deaf ear to the preachers of righteousness; and "because judgment, against an mountains under the whole heavens were covered, and whatsoever lived was destroyed. By this catastrophe, the Earth must have been greatly changed; some of the primeval hills and mountains, must have been torn asunder, earth and rocks thrown together so as to form new, and perhaps higher mountains than before; shells and lighter bodies might be carried to the tops of the highest mountains, where they are found at this day; and others might subside with the water, into the earth, where they are still discovered.

the ark; and God caused a wind to pass over the earth, that the waters might be assuaged. The fountains of the deep and the flood-gates 2 of the heavens also were stopped, and the heavy rain from the heavens was restrained; And 3 the waters continually subsided from off the earth; and at the end of one hundred and fifty days the waters were much abated, So that in 4 the seventh month, on the seventeenth day of the month, the ark rested upon one of the mountains of Ararat. And the waters were continually 5 decreasing until the tenth month; and on the first day of the tenth month, the tops of the mountains were visible.

And at the end of forty days more, Noah 6 opened a window which he had made in the ark; And let forth a raven, which "went to and fro", 7

evil work is not executed speedily, they presume it never will." Thus the very patience and long-suffering of God, emboldens transgressors. "They ate, (says our Lord,) they drank, they married wives, they were given in marriage, until the day that Noah entered into the ark, and the flood came, and destroyed them all." How awful to be surprised by death in so secure and carnal a state—to be cut off in the midst of peace and safety, perhaps of mirth and riot! No doubt, when the heavens began to pour down torrents, and from the fountains of the deep, mighty streams issued forth, horror would seize them, and every attempt would be made to escape the impending ruin; but alas, the attempt was vain! They perish in the sight of that Ark, in which safety alone was to be found. So will it be, says our Lord, at his coming! Then will unbelievers, and despisers wonder and perish! O that men were wise, and would consider their latter end!—Would fly to the Saviour as the only solid foundation of security, peace and joy.

4. Contemplate Noah amidst the awful scene. Now his faith, patience and holy fear, are rewarded. Amidst the dreadful hurricane of nature he rides secure, and while he witnesses desolation spreading around him, he is devoutly praying to God, for the souls of those who are perishing in his sight; or giving thanks to God for that mercy he had showed to him. Such will be the safety and spirit of all the servants of God; they have not only hope in life, but even in death; which hope, is an anchor to the soul, sure and stedfast.

The whole face of the Globe, and the most accurate investigation of its strata, continue to substantiate the Mosaic account of the deluge.

CHAP. VIII. 4. The greatest number of expositors consider mount Ararat as one of the mountains of Armenia. Jerom thus renders, super montes Armenia. Shuckford contends that Ararat must have been situated much more to the east. See his Connection, vol. i. p 86.

7. Which went to and fro. Some prefer the reading of the Sept. which until the waters were dried up from off the 8 earth. He also let forth a dove, to see if the waters were abated from off the face of the 9 ground; But the dove found no resting-place for the sole of her foot, for the waters were on the face of the whole earth: and she returned to him unto the ark, and he put forth his hand, and took her, and drew her in to him into the 10 ark. And he waited seven days more; and 11 again let forth the dove out of the ark; And the dove came back to him towards the evening;

and, lo! in her mouth was an olive leaf newly plucked: so Noah knew that the waters were 12 abated from off the earth. And he yet waited other seven days; and let forth the dove; which 13 returned to him no more. And in the six hundredth and first year, "of the life of Noah", on the first day of the first month, the waters were drying-up from off the earth; and Noah removed the covering of the ark, and looked, and, behold, the face of the ground was drying.
14 And on the second month, on the twenty seventh day of the month, the earth was dry:

And God spoke to Noah, saying, "Go out of ¹⁵
the ark, thou, and thy wife, and thy sons, and thy sons' wives with thee. Bring out, "also", all 17
the animals of every kind that are with thee, both the fowls, and the beasts, and every sort of reptile that creepeth on the ground "that they may be fruitful, and multiply upon the earth."
And Noah went forth, and his sons, and his wife, 18 and his sons' wives with him. And all the ani- 19
mals, and the "beasts", and the fowls, and the reptiles that creep on the ground, according to their kinds, went out of the ark.

salvation."

3. Noah must wait God's time, before he comes out of the Ark. Though he made use of natural means, to learn whether the waters had abated and the earth become dry, he did not venture abroad, till He who shut him in, commanded him to come forth. Had Noah gone forth sooner, he and all with him, might have perished, through want, or through the yet unpurified state of the atmosphere, in the low grounds. In all our straits and difficulties, let us learn submission, and quietly wait for God's salvation. His time of deliverance will be found the fittest. Let us exercise faith in his wisdom, power and grace; and rest assured, that he will finally realize all our hopes and expectations. Let us in all things wait his time, and follow his commands, and we shall be safe and happy.

17. In the common text there is a manifest tautology; and on the authority of the Sept. and Vulg. Versions, I omit (וְשָׂאָה בְּאֶרֶץ) and let them abound on the earth, as being included in the following words. The Chapter ought to terminate at the 20 verse, as what follows is closely connected with the 9 Chapter.

20. Builded an altar. This is the first express mention of an Altar;
yet there can be no doubt, but the altar must have been coeval with the rite of sacrifice. The sacrifice of Noah seems to have been an Holocaust, the whole being consumed; and, if animal food was not taken previous to the deluge, all the Sacrifices of the Antediluvians were of the same kind.

21. Jehovah accepted, &c. I have given the sense of the idiomatical phrase, 'Jehovah smelled a sweet savour, or the pacifying odour.' Dathe, Parkhurst and others, desert the Sept. who render (יִיחַהּ הַחַיִּים) a sweet,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. Let us be thankful to God, who during this year of awful judgment, watched over Noah, and the creatures with him. The ark floated on the increasing waters, and through the providence of God, it was not borne among dissolving mountains, nor suffered to become a wreck.
It contained the second father of the human race; and the various species of all other creatures, that seed might be preserved alive;
and was on this account the object of the divine care.

2. When God's purposes of judgment were accomplished, he remembered Noah and the creatures with him; and by degrees caused the waters to subside, that the earth might again become a fit habitation for man and beast. He will always remember those who fear him and hope in his mercy. "O God remember me with the favour thou bearest to thy people, and visit me with thy

'went forth, but did not return.' This suits the habit of the raven, a carnivorous bird, who dwells on the tops of rocks and mountains. She might fly around the ark, but came no more into it; for this reason I have adhered to the common text.

10, 12. Seven days. Is there a reference here to the Sabbath? I cannot but think such an upright man as Noah would regard it, as being originally appointed for divine worship; and after a day spent in prayer and praise, it might become proper to see, if the ground had become so dry, as that he and those with him could with safety come out of the Ark.

15. From comparing Ch. vii. 11, with this verse, it appears that from the commencement of the flood, till Noah came out of the Ark, was one year and seven days. If the months were Lunar, it would be one solar year or 355 days.

man's heart be evil from his youth ; neither will I again smite every animal, as I have done.
22 While the earth remaineth, seed-time and harvest, cold and heat, summer and winter, and day and night shall not cease."

1 AND God blessed Noah and his sons, and said to them, "Be fruitful, and multiply; and replenish the earth, and subdue it. And the fear of you and the dread of you, shall be upon all the beasts of the earth, and upon all the fowls of the air, upon all the reptiles of the ground, and upon all the fishes of the sea; to you do I make them subject. Whatsoever moveth, and in which there is life shall be to you for food, even as the green herb: to you I give them all: Only flesh, with its life-blood in it, ye shall not eat.
5 For surely of your life-blood will I demand an account; from whatsoever liveth will I demand it; from every man's own brother will I demand an account of the life of man. Whoso sheddeth man's blood, by man shall his own blood be shed: 7 (for in the image of God made he man). And as for you, be fruitful, and increase; bring forth abundantly on the earth, and multiply upon it."
8 Moreover God spoke to Noah, and to his sons 9 with him, saying, "Behold, I establish my covenant with you, and with your seed after you; 10 And with all the animals that are with you, with the fowls, with the cattle, and the wild-beasts; with all the animals of the earth, that went 11 with you out of the Ark. Yea with you I establish my covenant, that never again shall all flesh be cut off by the waters of a flood; neither shall there again be a flood to destroy the earth." And 12 God said, "This is the token of the covenant which I appoint between me and you, and all the animals that are with you, in all future generations. My bow in the cloud do I appoint to be 13 a token of the covenant between me and "all" the earth. So that whenever I bring a cloud over 14 the earth, and the bow appear in the cloud; Then I will remember my covenant, which is between me and you, and all kinds of animals 15 "which are with you"; and the waters shall not again become a flood to destroy all flesh: For 16 when the bow shall be in the cloud I will look upon it, that I may remember the perpetual covenant between me and the animals of all kinds which are upon the earth." And God 17 said to Noah, "This is the token of the covenant, which I establish between me and all flesh that is upon the earth."

And the sons of Noah, who had come out of 18 the ark, were Shem, and Ham, and Japheth: and Ham was the father of Canaan. These are 19 the three sons of Noah; and from these was the whole earth overspread. And Noah became an husbandman, and planted a vineyard: And he 21 drank of the wine, till he was drunk; and he lay uncovered in his tent. And Ham, the father of 22 Canaan, saw the nakedness of his father, and told of it to his two brethren, who were without. Then Shem and Japheth took a mantle, and 23 laid it upon both their shoulders, and went in savour, and observe that the noun denotes, entire rest, a total appeasement, or cessation from anger. Compare Ezek. xxiv. 13. Onkelos, whom I have followed, has given the meaning, 'Jehovah accepted with pleasure his offering.'—said in his heart, i. e. purposed and determined.

22. The seasons vary according to climate; and for this reason the promise here is general, applicable to all climates and countries. This promise is our security; and from the constant fulfilment of it, we have a striking proof of God's faithfulness.

CHAP. IX. 3. Whatsoever moveth, and in which there is life. This general grant of the creatures for food, must be limited to all such, as are in their nature suitable and fit for that purpose. The reason of the thing requires this limitation.

4. Life-blood. The reason of this prohibition seems to be that the life-blood of animals was appointed to make atonement for men's sins, and appropriated to the Altar; and perhaps to prevent cruelty to animals.

5. God intended by this to guard human Life; and he has authorised the Goel, the nearest kinsman of a person murdered, or the Magistrate to slay the murderer.

9—17 This covenant was designed to encourage Noah and his posterity; and the rain-bow was to be the constant token of it, and a divinely appointed pledge, that the waters should no more become a flood to destroy the earth.

20—23. It is probable, that the venerable Patriarch, was overcome with the fruit of the vine from inexperience; and if this does not remove his crime, it diminishes the guilt of it. The conduct of Ham was in the highest degree undutiful, and indicates a mind as void of delicate sensibility as it was of piety.

25. I have added what is implied in the context; and it ought to be considered, that this curse on Ham in his posterity, was not the expression of anger, but like the blessing on his two other sons, prophetic.

26. Archbishop Secker approves of this version as most natural and suitable. I have transposed with many Critics the 2d line of the next verse, backward, and covered the nakedness of their father, with their faces backward; and the nakedness of their father they saw not. And Noah awoke from his wine; and when he knew what his younger son had done to him, He then said, Accursed shall Ham be in his son Canaan; The most abject slave shall he be to his brethren. And he said; Blessed of Jehovah my God shall Shem be; Yea, among the tents of Shem shall he dwell; And to Shem shall Canaan be a slave. And God shall greatly enlarge Japheth; And to him also shall Canaan be a slave. And Noah lived after the flood three hundred and fifty years. And all the days of Noah were nine hundred and fifty years; and he died.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. Let us remember, that when God displays his mercy, the exercise of gratitude is an imperative duty. Jehovah wonderfully preserved Noah; and he no sooner came out of the Ark, than he built an Altar, and offered sacrifices. In these sacrifices Noah humbled himself as a sinner, and by atonement sought acceptance, nor did he seek it in vain. Jehovah accepted his offering, and revealed his gracious purpose, that he would no more destroy the earth by a flood, on account of the sin of man. The offerings of a devout and grateful heart, are still acceptable to him; and when presented in the name of Christ, will be accepted with pleasure.

2. The blessing of fruitfulness is again vouchsafed to Noah and his sons. The earth was now as a wilderness, uninhabited; but by this blessing Noah, is assured, that his seed shall live and spread abroad on the earth. To secure this design, murder is strictly forbidden, and the free use of animal food granted; and all the animals are again subjected to man. Let us be thankful for the liberal provision made for our support; and the divine restraint put on the wild beasts, lest they should destroy the human species.

3. Let us be thankful for the covenant made with Noah. By this divine charter, the seasons are secured to us; an assurance is given, that though tempests and hurricanes may occur,

Now these are the progeny of the sons of 1 Noah; Shem, Ham and Japheth: and to them were the following sons born after the flood. The sons of Japheth were, Gomer, and Ma- 2 gog, and Madai, and Javan, and Tubal, and Meshech and Tiras. And the sons of Gomer 3 were Ashkenaz, and Riphath and Togarmah. And the sons of Javan were Elishah, and Kit- 4 tim and Rodanim. From these sprang the insu- 5 lar nations, who were distinguished according to their tongues and family descents.

And the sons of Ham were Cush, and Miz- 6 raim, and Phut and Canaan. And the sons of 7 Cush were Seba, and Havilah, and Sabtah, CHAP. X. 4. v So Sam. Sept. 1 Chron. i. 7. others, Dodanim.

yet there shall no more be a general deluge. This covenant of peace and safety, should remind us of that better covenant, established upon better promises—the covenant which is established in Christ.

4. We here see the infirmity of human nature. Noah, who was righteous in his generation, was overtaken with the degrading vice of intoxication. We do not know that he ever repeated his crime, and he doubtless sincerely repented of it; yet it stands recorded as an impressive warning to all: "Be not drunk with wine wherein is excess." "At last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder." It exposed Noah to shame; and it is the disgrace of our nature. To what crimes does it not lead? Let every professing Christian be on his guard, and take heed lest he in like manner fall. We are never more in danger, than when we think ourselves secure.

5. What a proof have we of the foreknowledge of God! The prophecy of Noah hath been most remarkably fulfilled in his posterity. The descendants of Ham have been a degraded race; in subjection and slavery to their brethren. Those of Shem have been honoured with peculiar privileges; and from Shem the Messiah sprang! Japheth hath been enlarged; and now shares in a particular manner in the blessings of Messiah's reign.

Bishop Newton for the fulfilment of this prophecy.

CHAP. X. 2. Gomer is supposed to be the father of the Cimmerians, or the ancient Celts; Magog, of the Scythians or Tartars; Madai, of the Medes; Javan, of the Ionians, or more ancient Greeks; Tubal, of the Tibareni; Meshech, of the Moski, or Russians; Tiras, of the Thrasians.

3. Ashkenaz, and his sons, inhabited Phrygia Major; Riphath and his descendants, Paphlagonia; Togarmah, Phrygia Major, according to Josephus, but in the opinion of others, Armenia.

4. Elishah, or Ellis, Achaia; Tarshish, Tartessus in Spain; some Tarsus, in Cilicia; Kittim, first inhabitants of Italy, or of Macedonia; Rodanim, the inhabitants of Gallia Rhodoniensis, some, Rhodes, and others following the common reading Dodanim, Epirus.

what evidently belongs to this; as it explains in what manner Shem should be blessed. Among his posterity, Jehovah dwelt by his visible presence; first in the Tabernacle and then in the Temple. Compare Deut. iv. 7, and 3 Chron. vi. 18. Michaelis and Geddes, render the 2d clause, 'He shall dwell in Tents of renown.' If the term Shem (שם) be taken as a proper Name, the Version I have given must be adopted; if as an appellation, that of Michaelis. The sense is nearly the same which version be admitted: For if Shem dwelt in tents of renown, the renown arose from his enjoyment of the divine presence and ordinances. I hesitate between the two versions.

27. Enlarge Japheth. The name Japheth signifies, enlarged; and there is evidently a peronomasia which cannot be given in a version. See Raamah and Sabtechah; and the sons of Raamah were Sheba and Dedan. And Cush begot Nimrod; and he became mighty on the earth. He became a mighty plunderer before Jehovah: hence it is said, "like Nimrod the mighty plunderer, before Jehovah". And the beginning of his kingdom was Babel, and Erech, and Accad, and Calneh, in the land of Shinar. From that land he went into Assyria, and built Nineveh, and Rehoboth, Ir, and Calah, And Resen between Nineveh (the great City) and Calah. And from Mizraim (the father of the Egyptians) sprang the Ludites, and Anamites, and Lehabites, and Naphtuhites, And Pathrusites and Casluites, from whom came the Philistines and Caphtorites.

And Canaan begot Sidon his firstborn, and the Hethites, And the Jebusites, and the Amorites, and the Girgasites, And the Hivites, and the Arkites, and the Sinites, And the Arvadites, and the Zemarites, and the Hamathites: and afterward were the families of the Canaanites spread abroad. And the boundary of the Canaanites was from the river of Egypt to the great river, the river Euphrates, and unto the REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. We learn from this account how soon the earth was again replenished with inhabitants. God's blessing multiplied the families of Noah, like willows near the water-courses, and they were spread abroad. The fruit of the womb is his reward; and children are the glory of their parents. Noah lived to see his posterity for many generations; and he could not witness such an increase without gratitude to God for his kindness and blessing.

2. Ambition and impiety soon displayed themselves. The

6. The Hamites inhabited part of Arabia, Egypt, Lybia on the south and north-east; Babylonia, and probably Persia and Bactriana.

9. Nimrod, signifies a rebel, and it is probable he was so called, from having rejected the laws of God and man, and supported by force, a tyranny over others. Moses quotes either a proverbial saying, or a line from some historical poem, well known when he wrote, in which some other tyrant or oppressor was compared to Nimrod.—Before Jehovah, means, without any fear of his displeasure. He threw off all the salutary restraints of religion.—Plunderer, Literally, Mighty hunter.

11. The marginal rendering, which connects this verse with the preceding, and applies it to Nimrod, is preferable to the common version: "And he went forth into Assyria, &c." See Micah v. 6.

19. I have followed the Samaritan Copy of the Hebrew in this verse, because it agrees with the boundaries of the land of Canaan given us Gen. xv. 19, and Exod. xxiii. 31, &c.

21. I think with most Critics that Shem was Noah's oldest son, and Ham the youngest. For the sake of perspicuity the text is transposed a western sea". These were the sons of Ham, 20 according to their families, their tongues, their countries and their nations.

To Shem (the father of all the children of Eber, 21 the elder brother of Japheth,) were sons also born. The sons of Shem were Elam, Asshur, and Arphaxad, and Lud, and Aram. And the sons of Aram were Uz, and Hul, and Gether and Mash. And Arphaxad begot Canaan; and Canaan begot Salah; and Salah begot Eber. And to Eber were born two sons: the name of the one was Peleg [DIVISION], because in his days was the earth divided; and his brother's name was Joktan. And Joktan begot Almodad, and Sheleph, and Hazarmaveth, and Jerah, And Adoram, and Uzal, and Diklah, And Obal, and Abimael, and Sheba, And Ophir, and Havilah and Jobab. 29 All these were the sons of Joktan; And their residence extended from Mesha, unto Sephar, a mount of the east. These were the sons of Shem, 31 according to their families, their tongues, their countries and their nations. And these were the families of the sons of Noah, according to their national genealogies; and from these were the nations of the earth distinguished after the flood.

first son of Ham, who might be born soon after the flood, begot Nimrod, the rebel; who probably resisted the authority of Noah, and associating with others like himself, by superior cunning and art, contrived to establish civil tyranny. How depraved is man! The waters of the flood did not wash away the stains of human nature. Let us be thankful for the blessings of civil and religious liberty; and improve them to the glory of the giver and our own happiness; and let oppressors remember, that the measure they mete shall be measured to them again.

22—29. Elam inhabited a part of Persia, between Susiana and Media. Asshur gave name to Assyria; Arphaxad, that part of Assyria called Arapachites; Lud, some think the father of the Lydians in lesser Asia. Michaelis considers the name corrupted, and suspects it was (לוד or לוֹד), Judia, which the Arabs still call ألد. Compare Jer. xlv. 9, and Ezek. xxvii. 10. Aram, is doubtless Syria. It is most probable, that the descendants of these patriarchs, dwelt as near their original seat, as an increasing population would admit. Joktan and his descendants inhabited Arabia Felix down to the Indian Sea.

32. The accounts contained in this chapter descend to a long period after the flood; and the design of Moses seems to have been to preserve the memory of the origin of the different nations of antiquity.

CHAP. XI. 2. What has been said, concerning the situation of Paradise, and the place where the Ark rested, is supported by what we here read, They journeyed from the East. Armenia is North of Shinar; and the attempt of Bochart to remove this difficulty is sufficient to satisfy one, that

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 2347. Babel built, language confounded, and the builders dispersed; the genealogy of Shem to Abram.

1 At first all the people of the earth had but 2 one language, and one speech. And it came to pass, as a part journeyed from the east, that they found a plain in the land of Shinar; and 3 they dwelt there. And they said one to another, "Come, let us make bricks and burn them in the fire." And bricks had they instead of stone, and bitumen instead of mortar.
4 And they said, "Come let us build for ourselves a city and a tower, whose top may be in the heavens; and let us make for ourselves a distinguished monument lest we be scattered over 5 the face of the whole earth." But Jehovah came down to see the city and the tower, which 6 the children of men were building. And Jehovah said, "Behold, the people are one, and they have all but one language; and this they begin to do; nor will they be restrained from 7 doing whatsoever they have purposed. Come, let us go down, and there confound their language, so that they may not understand one 8 another's speech". Thus Jehovah thence scattered them over the face of the whole earth;

and they left off building the City and the tower". Therefore was its name called Babel 9 [CONFUSION]; because Jehovah there confounded the language of the people of the whole earth;
and thence Jehovah scattered them over the face of the earth.

This is the genealogy from Shem. Shem was 10
one hundred years old, and begot Arphaxad, two years after the flood. And Shem lived, after 11 he begot Arphaxad five hundred years, and begot sons and daughters. *So all the days of Shem were six hundred years; and he died".
And Arphaxad lived thirty five years and begot 12
Cainan. And Arphaxad lived after he begot 13 Cainan, four hundred and three years, and begot sons and daughters. *So all the days of Arphaxad were four hundred and thirty eight years; and he died. *And Cainan lived one hundred and thirty years, and begot Salah.
And Cainan lived after he begot Salah three hundred and thirty years, and he begot sons and daughters". So all the days of Cainan were four hundred and sixty years; and he died.
And Salah lived thirty years, and begot Eber. 14
And Salah lived after he begot Eber four hun- 15

the Ark could not have rested on any of the mountains of Armenia, but on some of those which separate India from Persia. It is not probable, that Noah and all his race removed to the plain of Shinar; as we never find Noah mentioned after; nor is it reasonable to think so good a man would engage in such a project as the building of Babel. Some think the Hamites only departed, and settled in the plain of Shinar, attended by some of the race of Japheth and Shem; and what is said of Nimrod, countenances this opinion.

4. The object men had in view in building a city and tower, was to make themselves a name, and prevent their dispersion. 'A tower whose top may reach unto heaven,' is a common orientalism for a high tower. Compare Deut. i. 28, and ix. 9.—Distinguished monument. Literally, a Name, which here must denote, the City and Tower, as a centre of union.

6. What was their offence in building a city and a tower? The mere wish to dwell together had nothing sinful in it. We must then suppose, either that a defection from the worship of God, or some change in civil and religious rights, was intended. As the beginning of Nimrod's kingdom was at Babel, supposing that he had reached the meridian of Life, as he was only the grandson of Noah, it might be his tyranny and oppression that caused differences and separated the builders. This event happened most probably at the birth of Peleg, the fourth in descent from Noah, and agrees to the time of Nimrod's domination. On this supposition, God's confounding the language of the builders, will most naturally signify, his sending among them a spirit of discord; so that divided in their opinions, they would not understand, or regard what one another said. That this confusion of tongues refers to sentiments and opinions, and not to articulate sounds, by which one language is distinguished from another, has been maintained by many celebrated critics and divines; and this view of the subject agrees better with the fact, that, the radicals of the Eastern Languages, appear to have been nearly the same, down to the time of the Patriarch Abraham. Various dialects had been formed; but they had not then become wholly distinct languages. These arose by degrees, from different habits, customs, arts, &c. obtaining in different countries. It is most probable, that Nimrod aimed to unite all those, who had journeyed from the East, under a military despotism; and, to support his assumption of unjust and unlawful power, he began to build the City and the Tower; and, that his design being discovered, many opposed it, and others sought freedom in new and distant settlements. The original expression must have this sense Ps. lv. 10. The whole earth can only mean, all those engaged in the design. The manner in which this is related, shows that it was the will of God, that mankind should spread abroad, and form separate and independent kingdoms; and that the mad project of universal empire, begun at Babel, should always terminate in confusion.

11. There is a considerable difference in the chronology from the flood to the time of Abraham, between the Hebrew Text, the Samaritan and the Septuagint. The two latter add a hundred years to the age of each before they begot children, which makes a difference of 700 years; and if Cainan be admitted, of 830 years. Either the Hebrew Text must have been curtailed, or some one must have thought, that it was more suitable to men, who lived to the age of four or five hundred years, to live above a hundred years before they married and had children. That the discrepancy arose from design, in one of the copies, cannot be doubted, but in which,

And Eber lived after he begot Peleg four hundred and thirty years, and begot sons and daughters. ^aSo all the days of Eber were four hundred and sixty four 18 years; and he died". And Peleg lived thirty 19 years, and begot Reu. And Peleg lived after he begot Reu two hundred and nine years, and begot sons and daughters. ^aSo all the days of Peleg were two hundred and thirty nine years; 20 and he died". And Serug lived thirty years, 23 and begot Nahor. And Serug lived after he begot Nahor two hundred years, and begot sons and daughters. ^aSo all the days of Serug were two hundred and thirty years; and he died". 24 And Nahor lived ^vtwenty" nine years, and begot 25 Terah. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. How vain are the projects of sinful and ambitious men! They aim by contrivances of their own, to obtain security, and by lasting monuments of their power, to establish and perpetuate their fame; but God often confounds folly and madness. Let us guard against pride and ambition! They are the sure forerunners of disgrace and abasement. In the great concerns of Life and Religion, let us consult the will of God, and humbly and constantly follow it, as the only solid foundation of honour and of safety.

2. We here learn, that there is a God, who rules on the earth, and that his providence inspects all things. The purposes of men are not hidden from him, nor are they in any instance exempt from his control. He has a wonderful influence over the human mind, its thoughts, views and opinions; and can, and does it is difficult, if not impossible, to decide. I have followed the Hebrew, because I now think it not probable, that the Post-diluvians would live above a 100 years before they married. The period from the flood to the birth of Abraham, according to the Hebrew Text, is 292, according to the Samaritan, 942, and to the Septuagint, 1072 years. On the authority of St Luke and the Septuagint, I have admitted Cainan into the text, which makes the period from the flood to Abraham, 422 years.

were one hundred and forty eight years; and he died". And Terah lived seventy years, and 26 begot Abram, Nahor, and Haran.

Now these are the progeny of Terah. Terah 27 begot Abram, Nahor, and Haran; and Haran begot Lot. And Haran died before his father 28 Terah, in the land of his nativity, in Ur of the Chaldees. And Abram and Nahor married; 29 the name of Abram's wife was Sarai; and the name of Nahor's wife, Milcah, the daughter of Haran, (the father of both Milcah and Iscah). But Sarai was barren; she had no child. And ³⁰ Terah took Abram ³¹ "and Nahor", his sons, and Lot, the son of Haran, his grandson, and Sarai ^v and Milcah his daughters-in-law, the wives of his sons, Abram and Nahor"; and he brought them from Ur of the Chaldees, to come into the land of Canaan; but when they came unto Haran, they dwelt there. And the days of Terah 32 were ^v one hundred and forty five years"; and he died in Haran.

CHAPTER XII.

direct them, to accomplish his own purposes. The design of Nimrod and his associates, was to lord it over others, and consolidate all the inhabitants of the plain of Shinar, under his tyranny; but God's purposes were, to scatter them abroad; and by his direction it was accomplished.

3. We learn, from the genealogy here given, that human life was gradually shortened; some lived scarcely one third of the period allotted to the Antediluvians. It has been shortened still more since; and now, but few exceed their threescore years and ten. If our days are few upon earth, let us labour while it is called to day, for the night cometh in which no man can work; let us be more diligent in seeking the one thing needful, the better part, that shall not be taken from us; for if we live to Christ, to die will be our gain.

32. Kennicott, Geddes, and de Dieu, admit the Sam. here in preference to the text. According to the text, Terah begot Abram when he was 70 years old, and died in Haran, aged 205. Abram departed from Haran in his 75 year, (Ch. xii. 4.) and in Acts vii. 4. it is said that Terah died before Abram had departed from Haran. The age of Terah, when Abram was born, added to his age when he left Haran, makes only 145 years. From this it is evident, an error has crept into the text.

from thy father's house; into a land which I will 2 show to thee. For of thee will I make a great nation; and I will bless thee, and make thy name great; and thou shalt become a blessing.
3 Those who bless thee will I bless; and those who curse thee will I curse: and in thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be 4 blessed." So Abram departed, as the Lord had spoken to him; and Lot also went with him:
and Abram was seventy five years old when he 5 departed out of Haran. And Abram took Sarai his wife, and Lot his brother's son, and all the substance which they had obtained, and all the servants which they had acquired in Haran;
and they set out to come into the land of Canaan; and into the land of Canaan they came.
6 And Abram passed through the land as far as the place of Sichem, to the Turpentine Tree of Moreh. And the Canaanites were then in 7 the land. And Jehovah appeared unto Abram, and said, "To thy seed will I give this land".
And there he builded an altar unto Jehovah, who 8 had appeared unto him. And he removed thence unto a mountain on the east of Beth-el, and pitched his tent, having Beth-el to the west, and Hai to the east. There also he builded an altar to Jehovah; and called upon the name of 9 Jehovah. Abram again removed, still going on towards the south.
10 But there happened a famine in the land;

so Abram went down into Egypt to sojourn there; for grievous was the famine in the land of Canaan. And it came to pass when they 11 had come near to Egypt, that he said to Sarai his wife, "Behold, I know that thou art a woman of a fair countenance; Therefore it may 12 happen, that when the Egyptians shall see thee, that they will say, 'this is his wife;' and they will kill me, that they may keep thee alive.
Say, I pray thee, that thou art my sister, that it 13 may be well with me for thy sake; and that my life through thee may be preserved."

Now it happened, that, on Abram's coming 14
into Egypt, the Egyptians beheld that the woman was exceedingly fair. The princes also of Pha- 15
raoh saw her, and commended her to Pharaoh;
and the woman was taken into Pharaoh's house.
And Abram was kindly treated for her sake; 16
and had flocks and herds, a very large possession; and men-servants and maid-servants,
and he-asses, and camels.

But Jehovah afflicted Pharaoh and his house- 17
hold with great afflictions, on account of Sarai, the wife of Abram. Pharaoh therefore called 18 Abram, and said, "What is this thou hast done to me? Why didst thou not tell me that she was thy wife? Why saidst thou, she is my sister, so 19 as to lead me to take her for my wife? Now here is thy wife; take her and depart." And Pha- 20 raoh gave command to certain men concerning

CHAPTER XII. 1. Stephen informs us, (Acts vii. 2.) that God had revealed himself to Abraham when at Ur, in Chaldea; and had given him the command here recorded. It is probable Abraham had informed his father Terah, how God had appeared to him, and the promises which he had received; and that in consequence, Terah had taken his family to come into Canaan, but from age and infirmities, they stopped at Haran, where Terah died.

tine tree. See Hieraboton and Michaelis's Supplement to Lex. Heb.—And the Canaanites, &c. Michaelis observes, that the descendants of Shem occupied the land of Palestine for the purpose of trade, and by degrees, possessed nearly the whole of that country. Moses makes this remark, to intimate, that the land given to Abraham by promise, was then possessed by those people whom his descendants were going to expel.

11. Fair countenance. This is Purver's version, and more literal than the common one. Though Sarai was now advanced in age, her complexion as a Syrian, was much fairer than the Egyptians; and on that account, more likely to attract notice and attention.

15. Pharaoh. This was the common Name of their kings. According to Josephus and Jablonski, it signified, in the Egyptian language, king. It was not therefore a proper Name.

17. In what manner Jehovah afflicted Pharaoh, we are not informed, nor how it was known to him that it was for the sake of Sarai. It was perhaps in a dream that God imparted this to him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. The conduct of Abraham in obeying the divine command, and leaving his native country, is highly commendable. Let us in this imitate him; and rest assured, that though we should forsake houses and lands, sisters and brothers, at the call of duty, we shall by no means lose our reward. God himself will become our guide and our guardian, and will finally conduct us to the better country, and to the new Jerusalem, the City prepared for the eternal residence of his people.

2. Like Abraham, let us humbly worship and serve God, wherever we dwell. Where the holy patriarch pitched his tent, he built an Altar, and called on the name of Jehovah. Every master of a family should be a priest in his own house, and should be ever ready to pray with and for them, and teach them the way of the Lord. Alas! how much is this part of duty neglected, and how few families are there, who call on the name of the Lord.

3. We here learn that pious men are not only blessed, but text in the first verse, are necessary to the sense of the place.

5. Tents. This term seems here to be interpolated, though it is found in the versions and mss.

7. The wealth of the Patriarchs consisted in their herds and flocks; and the pasture-grounds were now insufficient for them.

10. The common version, by following the order of the original, conveys not the sense. It makes Zoar, a city of Egypt, instead of one of the Cities of the Plain of the Jordan. I have transposed the words of the text, so as to aanites and the Perizzites dwelt then in the land). 8 And Abram said to Lot, "Let there be no strife, I pray thee, between me and thee, and between my herd-men and thy herd-men; for we are kinsmen. Is not the whole land before thee? 9 Depart, I pray thee, from me; either to the left hand, that I may go to the right; or to the right hand, that I may go to the left." And 10 Lot raised his eyes, and beheld that the whole plain of the Jordan, all the way to Zoar, (Jehovah not having then destroyed Sodom and Gomorrah,) was every where well-watered, like the garden of Jehovah, or as the land of Egypt; And Lot chose for himself all the plain of the 11 Jordan, and journeyed eastward. Thus they parted, one from another. Abram dwelled in 12 the land of Canaan; and Lot dwelled in the cities of the plain, and pitched his tents near to Sodom. Now the men of Sodom were exceed- 13 ingly wicked and sinful before Jehovah.

Then Jehovah said to Abram, after Lot had 14 departed, "Raise now thine eyes, and from the place where thou art, look northward, and south-

they are a blessing to others. Such was Abraham; and such let us aim to be. O may we aspire after Abraham's faith, and then "we shall be blessed with faithful Abraham."

4. Eminent as was the faith of the illustrious patriarch, we find that on his descent to Egypt, it failed; and that he gave way to fears unworthy of his general character. How unbecoming was his equivocation and his distrust of God! Let us on all occasions, maintain a sense of our infirmities, and watch and pray, lest we fall by temptation. "Hold thou us up, O Lord, and we shall be safe. Lord, increase our faith."

5. Let us learn the compassion of Jehovah. He is ready to forgive, and to save us from those difficulties into which our sins have brought us. Had he not interposed for Abraham, how awful the consequence! He afflicted the house of Pharaoh for his sake, and prevented the completion of Pharaoh's design, and so disposed the mind of Pharaoh, that he honourably dismissed him. Thus did God reprove the king for his sake, and show that the hearts of kings are in his hand!

give the sense to the English reader.—The garden of Jehovah. I think there is a reference to Paradise, whence arose a copious stream to fertilize it, which became four rivers. Others consider Jehovah, used here, as a term to denote excellence, and render as a divine garden, or one fertile and beautiful.

12. Land of Canaan. The Country from the Jordan to the Mediterranean sea, was called the land of Canaan; and within these boundaries, Abraham continued to dwell.

15 ward, and eastward, and westward; For all the land which thou seest, will I give to thee, and 16 to thy seed for ever. And I will make thy seed numerous as the dust of the earth; so that if one can number the dust of the earth, thy seed 17 also may be numbered. Arise, walk through the land in its length and in its breadth; for 18 to thee will I give it. Then Abram removed his tent, and came and dwelt at the Turpentine Tree of Mamre, ^a an Amorite, which was by Hebron; and he there built an altar to Jehovah.

B. C. 1914. The battle of the kings; Lot is taken prisoner; Abram rescues him; Melchizedek blesseth Abram, who gives tithe; His partners take their portions of the spoil, and the rest he restores to the King of Sodom.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. The wise man's remark, we see here verified, "that the blessing of God maketh rich." It made both Abraham and Lot rich; and their substance of every kind was increased. Though they lived a wandering life, they enjoyed its comforts; and had reason for gratitude, for that large portion of earthly good, given to them. Riches are a blessing, when connected with piety, as they enable those who possess them, to do more good; but when enjoyed by the wicked, they are often incentives to every vice.

2. How amiable the spirit which Abraham displayed! He was a man of peace. Though superior to Lot, both by nature, and by grace, he gives Lot his choice; and for the sake of peace, he is willing to sacrifice his own just claims. "Blessed are the peacemakers for they shall inherit the earth;" they shall have more real enjoyment of life, and pass through it with fewer trials, than the restless and dissatisfied. Were we to act as Abraham did, to submit to one another, to be kind and courteous, what happiness should we secure! 'We are kinsmen,' is his noble plea! Let us

CHAP. XIV. 1. The king of Shinar was the chief of the kings mentioned; and they seem to have dwelt from the Euphrates to Palestine. Hence I incline to the opinion of Rosenmüller, that Tidal was king of Galilee, often afterwards called Galilee of the Nations. As this is not certain, I have rendered (𐤕𐤁𐤍) Goim as a proper name.

king of Admah, and Shemeber king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela, which is now Zoar. All these last met together in the vale of Siddim, which is now the salt sea. Twelve years 4 they had served Chedorlaomer, and in the thirteenth year they rebelled. And in the fourteenth year came Chedorlaomer, and the kings confederate with him, and smote the Rephaites in Ashteroth Karnaim, and the Zuzites of Ham, and the Emities of Shaveh Kiriathaim, And the 6 Horites of the ^v mountains of Seir, unto Elparan, which is by the wilderness. And they 7 turned and came to En-mishpat, (which is Kadesh,) and smote all the country of the Amalekites, and of the Amorites also, who dwelt in Hazezon-tamar. And the king of Sodom, 8 and the king of Gomorrah, and the king of Admah, and the king of Zeboiim, and the king of Bela (that is Zoar,) went out and joined battle with them in the vale of Siddim; With Chedorlaomer the king of Elam, and 9 with Tidal king of Goim, and Amraphel king remember that we are fellow men, fellow-christians; and let us endeavour to keep the "unity of the spirit in the bond of peace."

3. In the conduct of Lot, we see, what is but too common in the world—the folly and danger of consulting our senses only, in the choice of a way of Life. Lot makes choice of the fruitful plains of the Jordan; not considering the danger of being in the neighbourhood of a most-wicked people.—The punishment of this unadvised choice was, he lost his property, his wife, and would have lost his life, had not Abraham prevailed with God for his deliverance. In our choice of callings and situations in life, let us consult our spiritual interests; and God will renew his promises, and honour us with his own presence.

4. Lot had no sooner departed, than Abraham was called to contemplate the rich country given unto him! O let us look by faith to the better country; and reflect, that though here we inhabit parched places, we shall there enjoy all that is delightful—the restored Garden of Jehovah. This is the inheritance of the children of light; of the believing seed of Abraham!

5. The Rephaites. So called from their stature. Ashteroth, was on the other side the Jordan, and given by Joshua, to the tribe of Manasseh. Josh. xii. 4; xiii. 12. The others were neighbouring Cities.

6. Horites. Michaelis has proved these were Troglodytes, who inhabited the Caves of mount Seir; which they found formed by nature, or which they made for dwelling-places. The name of Paran still continues as the name of a Plain in Arabia deserta, reaching to the mountains of Idumea, as Niebuhr testifies.

and Gomorrah were defeated, and many fell

the victors took all the riches of Sodom and Gomorrah, and all their provisions, and went 12 away. And Lot, Abram's brother's son, (for he dwelt in Sodom,) and all his riches, they took away, when they departed.
13 And one that had escaped, came and told Abram the Hebrew, who dwelt at the Turpentine Tree of Mamre, an Amorite, the brother of Eshcol, and of Aner, who were confederate 14 with Abram. And when Abram heard that his kinsman was taken captive, he mustered his tried servants, born in his own house, three hundred and eighteen, and pursued the enemy 15 unto Dan. And he divided his servants, and came against them by night, smote them, and pursued them unto Hobah, which is on the left 16 of Damascus. And he brought back all the riches of Sodom and Gomorrah; and also his kinsman Lot, and his riches he recovered; the

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. We here see the king of Shinar with his associates, like the founder of Babel, where probably he reigned, pursuing the same plan of ambition and conquest; and for a season unhappily succeeding. He forces other kings and their people to submit to his yoke; and when they nobly endeavour to throw it off, he goes forth in rage against them. O that kings and people would learn to do to others, as they desire others to do to them! This equitable rule, if universally followed, would maintain the peace, and promote the happiness, of the world.

2. Lot now suffered for being an inhabitant of Sodom. He had improperly associated with sinners, and he shared in their calamity. How suitable the advice, "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not. Go not in the way with them."

3. What honour God conferred on Abraham! Impelled by a regard to his kinsman, he risked his personal safety, and all he had, for his recovery. Here was no mean spirit of envy or cowardice;

12. The text here is ambiguous; but I trust the version given is both just and perspicuous. In the tenth verse, I have been obliged to insert many, as being implied in the context.

13. The Hebrew. The Septuagint Translators understood this to signify; 'one that had come from beyond the Euphrates,' i.e. Abram the trans-euphratean. And this is more probable, than that he should be so called as a descendant of Eber. See: Ch. xi. 14.

14. Mustered. I have followed the Septuagint and Vulg. in this women also, and the people.

On Abram's return from smiting Chedorlaor- 17
mer, and the kings confederate with him, the king of Sodom went out to meet him, unto the vale, which is now called the king's vale.
Melchizedek also, the king of Salem, brought 18 forth bread and wine; and being the priest of the most high God, He blessed Abram, and 19
said, "Blessed be Abram of the most high God, possessor of the heavens and the earth! And 20 blessed be the most high God, who hath delivered thine enemies into thine hand." And "Abram" gave to him the tithe of all the spoil.
And the king of Sodom said to Abram, "Give 21
me the persons, and take the riches to thyself."
And Abram said to the king of Sodom, "I 22 swear to Jehovah, the most high God, the possessor of the heavens and the earth, That I 23
will not take even a thread, or a sandal-string, of all that belongeth to thee, lest thou shouldst say, I have made Abram rich! Excepting only 24
what the young men have eaten; and the portion of the men who went with me, Aner,
Eshcol and Mamre; let them take their shares."

20. *Sam. Sept.

dice; but he displayed the most generous affection, and the most prudent and determined courage. God crowned his efforts with signal success, so that he recovered all that the enemy had taken away; there was neither person nor property lacking. For such a victory, he could not fail to be thankful; and in the tenth which he gave to Melchizedek, he ascribed the glory of it to the most High God, who has sovereign dominion, over all creatures and events; among the armies of heaven, and the inhabitants of the earth.

4. Abraham set a pattern of justice and liberality in his conduct to the king of Sodom. He nobly refused to accept the riches he had recovered. The proposal which the king of Sodom made, was one of the laws of war at that period; but the piety of the Patriarch raised him above the observance of it. Others might fight for wealth—he fought for love; and to discharge the duties which religion imposed upon him. Let all professors of religion cultivate the same noble and generous disposition; and be more ready to give than receive.

version; and this reading is more apt than the textual. I read (קרי) as they seem to have done. The learned reader may see Note Heb. Bible.

15. Without deserting the idiom of the Text, I could not render perspicuously. Matthews in his Bible rendered, "He set himself and his servants in array, and fell upon them by night."

17. The king's vale. Some of the Jews have asserted, that the place was called the King's vale, because all the kings of Canaan had there assembled to acknowledge Abram for their king. The opinion of Onkelos

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 1913. Abram encouraged; a son promised; justified by faith, and the promise of Canaan confirmed.

1 AFTER these things the word of Jehovah came to Abram in a vision, saying, "Fear not, Abram! I am thy shield; and exceedingly 2 great shall be thy reward." And Abram said, "Lord Jehovah, what wilt thou give to me, seeing I am going to die childless, and the son of 3 my steward, Eliezer of Damascus, will be my 4 heir? For, behold, said Abram, to me thou hast given no seed; and lo, one born in my 5 house will be my heir." And, behold, the word of Jehovah came to him saying, "This 6 shall not be thy heir; one sprung from thine
7 own body shall be thy heir." He then brought him forth and said, "Look now towards the heavens, and number the stars, if thou be able to 8 number them." Then said he to him, "so shall 9 be thy seed." And "Abram" believed in Jehovah; and he accounted it to him for righteousness. And he said to him, "I am Jehovah, 10 who brought thee from Ur of the Chaldees, to 11 give to thee this land for an inheritance." But said he, "O Lord Jehovah, by what shall I said to him, "Bring to me a heifer of three years old, and a she-goat of three years old, and a ram of three years old; also a turtle-dove and a pigeon." And he brought to him all 10 these, and divided them into halves, and laid one half opposite another; but the birds he did not divide. And when birds of prey came 11 down upon the carcasses, Abram drove them away. And when the sun was going down, a 12 heavy sleep fell upon Abram; and, lo! horror "and" great darkness fell upon him. Then Jehovah said to Abram, "Know for certain that thy seed shall be sojourners in a land not their own, the inhabitants of which will enslave them, and will afflict them, for four hundred years. But that nation, by whom they shall 14 be enslaved, I will judge; and afterwards shall they come out of it with great riches. Thou, 15 indeed, shalt go to thy fathers in peace; thou shalt be buried in a good old age. And they 16 shall return hither in the fourth generation; for as yet the iniquity of the Amorites is not complete." And when the sun was set, and it 17 was dark, behold, a smoke, like that of a furnace, and a flame of fire passed between those pieces. On that same day Jehovah made a 18
12 know that I shall inherit it?" And "Jehovah"

seems most probable, that the place was so called, because that there Melchizedek brought forth bread and wine, and there Abram, Melchizedek, and the king of Sodom, were refreshed with the friendly repast.

18. Melchizedek, &c. Salem was the city afterwards called Jerusalem. It is mentioned by its ancient name Ps. lxxvi. 2. "In Salem is his tabernacle, &c." The name of this king describes his character; king of righteousness. He was also "priest of the most high God;" worshipped and honoured of the same God as Abram did. Some contend that this king was Shem, and Jeurieu was of opinion, that he was Ham! Such opinions are irreconcilable with the Apostle's testimony, Heb. vii. 3. "Without father, without mother, without descent, &c." i. e. without recorded father or mother, without any account of his birth or death. We have an account from whom both Shem and Ham sprung. Some have thought, from the Apostle's expression, that this was our Lord; but this is by no means probable. The type and antitype would then be the same. In reference to the priestly office of Melchizedek, as there is no mention of its termination, he is made like to the Son of God, a king, and a priest, for ever. In this respect, he was an eminent type of Jesus, the king and priest of the church. He brought bread and wine to refresh Abram and those with him; and as a priest he blessed him, and God also, for giving him so signal a victory.

20. And Abram gave, &c. Some would confine this tenth of the spoils as a mere present to Melchizedek, in return for his hospitality. I cannot but deem it as given for a thank-offering to God, to be offered by Melchizedek as his priest.

22. I swear. Literally, "I lift my hand," because this was the form of taking a solemn oath. I have given the sense in preference to the idiom.

CHAP. XV. 1. Shall be thy reward, &c. I have followed all our old translators, who have here given a better version than the authorized one. So also Purver renders it.

2. The common version of this verse conveys no sense whatever. I have given the sense of the passage; and am supported by Theodotion and the Syriac version. The learned reader may consult note, Hebrew Bible.

6. He accounted. The Septuagint and St. Paul, render passively, "It was accounted." The sense is the same, which ever rendering be adopted. He was thus justified by faith, not being yet circumcised. Rom. iv. 3. and Gal. iii. 6.

13. Will enslave them. So all the ancient versions render; and the context requires it. The people of the land in which they are to be sojourners, are understood as the nominative of the verb; and for the sake of the English reader, I have supplied the terms in italics.—Four hundred years. This period must be dated from Abram's arrival in Canaan; from which to the birth of Isaac was 25 years, (Gen. xii. 4. and xvii. 1, 12.) Isaac was 60 years old at the birth of Jacob, (Gen. xxv. 26.) Jacob was 130, at his going down to Egypt, which three numbers make 215 years; and the same period, Jacob and his children dwelt in Egypt, Gal. iii. 7. Vid. Userii. Sacra. Chron. p. 40. &c.

15. Go to thy fathers. The Targums consider this as referring to a separate state, as they explain, In peace thy soul shall rest.

18. Made a covenant. We see from the manner in which covenants covenant with Abram, saying, "To thy seed I give this land, from the river of Egypt unto the great river, the river Euphrates; The land of the Kenites, and the Kenizzites, and the Kadmonites, and the Hethites, and the Perizzites, and the Rephaites, And the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Girgashites, and the Jebusites."

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. 1911. Sarai giveth Hagar to Abram; her flight and return. The birth of Ishmael.

1 STILL Sarai, the wife of Abram, bare him no child; and she had an Egyptian handmaid, 2 whose name was Hagar. And Sarai said to Abram, "Behold now, Jehovah permitteth me not to have children, go in, I pray thee, to my handmaid; it may be that I may obtain children by her." And Abram hearkened to the voice 3 of Sarai. And, after Abram had dwelt ten years in the land of Canaan, Sarai, the wife of Abram, REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. Abram's victory might create him enemies, but God promises to be his shield. How safe are good men under his guardian care! No weapon formed against them shall prosper. They lie down and rise up; go out and return, in security. God will not only protect them, but give them a large reward;—give them grace and glory.

2. Great were the promises made to Abram, but his faith was still tried. He had no child; and one born in his house, was likely to become his heir. All his wealth and other enjoyments, were embittered by this reflection; nor could he reconcile this circumstance, with the promise, that his seed should inherit the land of Canaan. Let us wait God's time, both for explaining and fulfilling his kind purposes towards us. And if any go childless, let them be more diligent and active in God's service, as they have more leisure and fewer cares; and then he will give them a name and a place, better than that of sons and daughters. In whatever state we are, let us learn to be content.

were made, the origin of this phrase, which occurs so frequently in the Hebrew Scriptures. Some animal suitable for sacrifice was cut into two pieces, and the confederating parties passed between them. So Jehovah, by causing the fire to pass between the parts of the victims, ratified the covenant with Abram; engaging to give him the land of Canaan.

CHAP. XVI. 1. It is reasonable to believe, that the conduct of Sarai in giving Hagar to Abram, was conformable to the prevailing custom of the age, and of the eastern nations. We have, however, the highest authority (see Matt. xix. 4, 6.) for maintaining that this custom is, in some degree, a violation of the original institution of marriage. These secondary wives, or concubines, as they have been improperly called, were always considered as slaves, and might be dismissed at pleasure, the children either being retained, as in the case of the handmaids of Lea and Rachael, or sent away, portions being given to them. Sarai having no hope of bringing forth chiltook Hagar, her Egyptian handmaid, and gave her for a wife to her husband.

And he went in to Hagar, and she conceived, 4 and when she saw that she had conceived, her mistress became contemptible in her eyes. Sarai, therefore, said to Abram, "My wrong lieth upon thee. Mine own handmaid have I given into thy bosom; and when she saw that she had conceived, I became contemptible in her eyes. Jehovah judge between me and thee." Then Abram said to Sarai, "Behold, 6 thy handmaid is in thine own power; do to her what thou seest fit."

Sarai then so humbled her, that she fled from her presence: And an angel of Jehovah found 7 her by a fountain of water in the wilderness; by that fountain which is on the way to Shur. And he said, "Hagar, handmaid of Sarai, whence 8 comest thou? and whither art thou going?" And she said, "I flee from the presence of my mistress Sarai." And the angel of Jeho- 9

4. How wonderful is the knowledge of God! He knows the end from the beginning; and how particular are the predictions made to Abram in reference to his seed. So many years they shall serve their enemies; then their enemies shall be punished, and the oppressed shall go free. He knows, not only the external circumstances, but also the moral characters of men; when their iniquity is full, and when it is time to punish. This knowledge is too high for us; we cannot attain unto it; but it is found in a perfect manner in God. All these events are ratified by sacrifice, and by the manner in which God accepted it; so in Christ are all the promises yea and amen, sure and certain to all believers.

dren herself, intended to build up the family of Abram by Hagar. For an account of this custom, the reader is referred to Harmer, vol. iv. and Bruce's Travels, vol. iv. 8vo. edit.

6. Behold, thy handmaid, &c. Sarai seems to charge Abram as the cause of the injury she received, and as encouraging the insolence of Hagar towards her. He answers, that her handmaid was in her own power. Sarai by the custom of the east had power over her own slave; and in correcting her, did only what was proper. The design of Hagar appears to have been to return to Egypt, her own country.

7. An angel of Jehovah. God, in those early times, often appeared, most probably, in a human form, to impart his will to men; and on such occasions he is called promiscuously, "Jehovah," or the "angel of Jehovah." Such appearances seem preludes of the Word becoming flesh, and dwelling among men.

10 vah said to her; "Return to thy mistress, and believe submissively to her." The angel of Jehovah also said to her, "I will multiply thy seed so exceedingly, that it shall not be numbered for multitude. For, behold, (again said the angel of Jehovah to her), thou hast conceived; and shalt bear a son, and shalt call his name Ishmael [GOD-ATTENDETH]; because Jehovah hath attended to thy affliction. And a wild and fierce man will he be; his hand against every one, and the hand of every one against him; and in the face of all his brethren will he dwell". And Hagar called the name of Jehovah, who had spoken to her, EL-ROI, [THE VISIBLE GOD;] for she said, "Did I not here see him visible, by me?" Wherefore the well was called Beer-lahai-roi [THE WELL OF THE LIVING VISIBLE ONE]; Behold, it is between Kadesh and Bered. And Hagar bare to Abram a Son; and Abram called the name of his son, whom Hagar bare, Ishmael. And Abram was eighty-six 16 years old, when Hagar bare Ishmael to him.

CHAPTER XVII.

B. C. 1898 God renews his Covenant with Abram; his name changed; circumcision appointed, and Isaac promised.

AND when Abram was ninety-nine years old, 1 Jehovah appeared to him, and said to him; "I am God the Almighty; walk before me, and be thou perfect. And I will make a covenant with thee, that I will multiply thee exceedingly." And Abram fell on his face; and God again 3 spoke to him, saying, "Behold I make my 4 covenant with thee, that thou shalt be the father of many nations; Nor shall thy name any 5 more be called ABRAM, but ABRAHAM shall thy Name be; for a father of many nations I have purposed to make thee. And I will render thee 6 exceedingly fruitful; and out of thee I will make nations; and kings from thee shall pro-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. God had promised a seed to Abraham, but had not yet said, that it should be by Sarai. Sarai now despairing of having children, gives Hagar to her husband. This was her sin; and it was the cause of domestic uneasiness and trouble. Had she waited in faith and patience, she would have found her own suspicions and doubts unfounded. Let us never repine at our trials, nor by sinful methods endeavour to get rid of them; for by so doing we shall bring upon ourselves greater.

2. Let those raised from a low condition guard against pride. Hagar shows how difficult it is to be humble in prosperity. She forget her past condition, and began to assume the authority which belonged only to Sarai. If we are distinguished by being raised to wealth and honour, let us remember to whom we are indebted, and that if many talents are committed to our trust, the greater account we have to give. Let us never become overbearing and insolent, nor forget any of God's favours.

3. How condescending and gracious is God! He regarded a poor fugitive slave, and attended to her affliction, though that affliction was the consequence of her own misconduct and sin. He meets her, and stops her in her journey; and making known to her his kind purposes, sends her back to the house of Abraham. Well might she record so wonderful an interposition, in the name given to Jehovah, and to the well, at which he had appeared to her. Let all discoveries of God's will, be thankfully received and gratefully acknowledged.

4. How hateful is the predicted temper of Ishmael. Wild and fierce; quarrelsome and restless; delighting in strife and contention! How opposed is this to the meek, peaceful, kind temper of the Christian! O may we strive to subdue every evil disposition, and to be kind to all, and forgiving to those who injure and persecute us, that we may prove ourselves the children of that God, who maketh his sun to rise on the evil and the good, the just and the unjust!

12. And a wild and fierce man, &c. Both wild and fierce are implied in the animal to which Ishmael is compared. The wild-mule is according to Pallas, untameable. Such would Ishmael and his race be.—See Note on Job xxxix. 5.—In the face of all, &c. Brethren implies any kind of relations. By his mother's side, the Egyptians were his brethren, and by his father's, all the posterity of Abraham. To both, the Ishmaelites were contiguous. They dwelt, and they continue to dwell, in the face of their brethren, unsubdued, a wild and unsettled race.

13. I have in this verse adopted the text as corrected by Geddes, and render after him; and I am satisfied that this reading and version is more conformable to the Hebrew idiom and to the context, than the common one. I read then, (באר להי רואי) and (באר להי רואי). We may perhaps consider (רואי) as understood, and render, "The well of the living visible God." See Note, Heb. Bible. Michaelis for Lahai, proposes Lehi, and takes it in the Arabic sense, a spring-well. See Jud. xv. 19.

CHAP. XVII. 1. God, the Almighty. Some would render, all-sufficient, and others, all-bountiful; but the usual sense is most appropriate to all the places where the word occurs. (Vid. Dissert. Ikenii de nomine רב.)

2. I have given the sense rather than the idiom; and the latter clause contains the great promise of the covenant, which is amplified in the following verses.

5. Abram, but Abraham. The former denotes high father, the latter, the father of a great multitude. It has been from the most remote antiquity, and it still is, the custom of the East, for persons to receive new names, expressive of some particular incident in the course of their lives, or suitable to the office they are called to discharge. See Fragments to Calmet, No. cxlii. and Compare Gen. xxxii. 28, and xli 45. Dan. i. 7. Rev. ii. 17. So Ruth i. 20, Naomi, whose name denotes pleasant, when she had lost her husband and her sons, desires to be called Mara, which signifies bitter. So Christ called Simon, Cephas or Peter. Math. xvi. 18.

7 ceed. And I will establish my covenant with thee and thy seed after thee, throughout their generations, for a perpetual covenant: to be a 8 God to thee, and to thy seed after thee. And the land in which thou art a sojourner, the whole land of Canaan, I will give, for a perpetual possession, to thee and to thy seed after thee; and their God I will be."

9 And God said to Abraham, "Thou shalt therefore keep my covenant, thou, and thy seed after thee, throughout their generations. This is my covenant between me and thee, and thy seed after thee, which ye shall keep: Every malechild
10 among you shall be circumcised. Yea, the foreskin of your flesh ye shall circumcise, that it may be a token of the covenant between me and you.
11 And every male-child among you, eight days old, throughout your generations, shall be circumcised; both he that is born in the house, and he that is bought with money of any stranger, who 12 is not of thy seed. He that is born in thy house, and he that is bought with thy money, must needs be circumcised; that my covenant may be 13 in your flesh for a perpetual covenant. And the uncircumcised male-child, the foreskin of whose flesh hath not been circumcised, that person "being eight days old", shall be cut off from his people; for he will have broken my covenant."
14 Moreover, God said to Abraham, "As for Sarai thy wife, thou shalt not call her name 15 Sarai, but Sarah shall her name be. And I will bleed her, and by her I will give thee a son, whom also I will bless". A mother of nations shall she be, and kings of nations from her shall come." Then Abraham fell upon his face, and 16 laughed, and said in his heart, "Shall a son be brought forth to one a hundred years old; and shall Sarah who is ninety years old, bear?" And 17 Abraham said to God, "O that Ishmael may live before thee!" And God said, "Sarah thy 19 wife shall indeed bear thee a son, and thou shalt call his name Isaac [LAUGHTER]; and I will establish my covenant with him, and with his seed after him, for a perpetual covenant. As for Ish-20 mael also I have heard thee: Behold I will bless him, and make him fruitful, and multiply him exceedingly; twelve princes shall he beget, and I will make of him a great nation. But my 21 covenant I will establish with Isaac, whom Sarah shall bear to thee about this very time next year." Ceasing now to speak with him, God ascended 22 from Abraham.

Then Abraham took Ishmael his son, and all 23 that were born in his house, and all that were bought with his money, every male among his own servants, and circumcised the foreskin of their flesh, on that same day, as God had commanded him. And Abraham was ninety nine 24 years old when the foreskin of his flesh was circumcised. And Ishmael his son was thirteen 25 years old, when the foreskin of his flesh was circumcised. On that same day was Abraham

CHAP. XVII.

11. The foreskin of your flesh. Luther, Matthews and the Geneva, had the good sense to render it as I have done. The Hebrews used for the sake of modesty the term flesh (בשר) for the pudenda, the foreskin of which was cut off in circumcision. This rite was to be the token or sign of the covenant, which God made with Abraham and his seed. Thus a peculiar people were separated to serve God, by such a distinction as evidently appeared to be of divine original; and was a proper emblem of purity and indifference to sensual enjoyments.

14. The addition of the Sept. and Sam. is supported by the context and the exigence of the place. It must be understood as repeating the sentiment expressed in the 12 ver. It is most probable, that (כרת) chereth is a general name for several sorts of punishment, which were to be determined by the nature of the offence. Sometimes it seems to import punishment by the judge, and sometimes, by the more immediate hand of God. The punishment threatened, Michaelis contends, consisted in the uncircumcised person being cut off from the Jewish church and state. He who was uncircumcised, could neither inherit the property, nor join in the religious ceremonies of the Israelites. Fathers had the right to circumcise their sons, masters their slaves, and judges up grown persons.

15. Sarai but Sarah: i. e. not my princess, but a fruitful woman. So Ikenius explains it from the Arabic, which is most probably the sense, from what follows in the next verse.

18. The promise of a Son by Sarah, did not abate Abraham's affection for Ishmael. He prays for him, and is heard.

20. Twelve princes, &c. For the fulfilment of this promise, See Ch. xxv. 12, &c.

21. My covenant. My spiritual covenant, my everlasting covenant. (Chap. xii. 3.) As for the temporal covenant, Ishmael was made as much a partaker of it as Isaac, and so was Esau as well as Jacob. This is the foundation of St Paul's argument to the Galatians, and fully justifies his reasoning from these two covenants.

25. Thirteen years old. The Arabians, sprung from Ishmael, to this day circumcise their sons at this age, which custom all the Mahomedans also observe.

CHAP. XVIII. 1-5. We have here a beautiful delineation of oriental manners.—A tent erected and the flocks and herds grazing around—

27 circumcised, and Ishmael his son. And all his male servants, whether born in the house, or bought with money of the stranger, were also circumcised.

CHAPTER XVIII.

B. C. 1898. Three Angels visit Abraham; Sarah's laughter; destruction of Sodom revealed to Abraham, and his intercession.

1. AGAIN Jehovah appeared to Abraham at the Turpentine tree of Mamre, as he sat in the tent 2 door in the heat of the day. For he raised his eyes and looked, and, lo! three men stood over against him; and when he saw them, he ran to meet them from the tent door, and bowed 3 himself down to the ground, And said, "My Lords, if now I have found favour in your sight, pass not by, I pray, from your servant: 4 Let a little water, I pray, be fetched, and wash your feet, and rest yourselves under the tree; 5 And I will fetch a morsel of bread, that ye may refresh yourselves, and then pass on; for to this end are ye come to your servant." And they 6 said, "So do, as thou hast said". Abraham then hastened into the tent to Sarah, and said, "Quickly knead three measures of fine meal, 7 and make hearth-cakes." And Abraham ran

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. God assumes a new Name to encourage the faith of Abraham. He is Almighty, and therefore able to accomplish all his promises, and to do abundantly above what we can ask or think. Let us never say, how can these things be? For nothing is impossible to him who is Almighty and All-sufficient.

2. The great blessing of the Covenant was, that God would be a God to Abraham and to his seed. This implies that he would employ all the perfections of his nature for their protection and happiness. It includes in it all blessings, temporal and spiritual; and has a reference to the great salvation by Christ.

3. Those who would partake of the temporal blessings of this Covenant, must submit to the terms of it, and be circumcised. The neglect of this ordinance cut them off from their people. In like manner, if we would partake of the spiritual blessings, we must be the seed of Abraham by faith. They who were circum-

to the herd, and fetched a calf, good and tender, and gave it to a young man, who quickly dressed it. He then took butter-milk, and sweet 8 milk, and the calf which had been dressed, and set them before the men under the tree; and he himself waited on them, and they ate.

And they said to him, "Where is Sarah thy 9 wife?" And he said, "Behold, here in the tent." And one of them said, "I will certainly 10 return to thee according to the time of life; and, lo! Sarah thy wife shall have a son." And Sarah heard this; for she was behind him at the door of the tent. Now Abraham and Sarah 11 were old, and far gone in years; and Sarah was past the age for child-bearing. Therefore Sarah 12 laughed within herself, saying, "After I am worn with age shall I have pleasure in a Son, my lord being old also?" And Jehovah said to 13 Abraham, "Why laugheth Sarah, saying; 'Shall I indeed bear a child, who am so old?' Is any thing too hard for the Lord? At the 14 time appointed I will return to thee, according to the time of life, and Sarah shall have a son." Then Sarah denied, saying, "I laughed not;" 15 for she was afraid. And he said, "Nay; but thou didst laugh."

cised were debtors to the whole law—were bound to observe all the ceremonies and rites appointed; so are believers in Christ bound to observe every ordinance and precept. Circumcision was a painful rite. Let us be thankful that it is done away. "In Christ, neither circumcision nor uncircumcision availeth any thing, but a new creature."

4. The conduct of Abraham, should especially remind parents of their duty. Though honoured with the most magnificent promises, respecting his posterity by Sarah, he did not forget Ishmael. O that Ishmael may live before thee, was his earnest and affectionate request; and what parent is there, who has any sense of religion, but will join in the request? O that our children may live; that they may live before God; that they may live to the glory of God, and that we may meet them at his right hand! God heard Abraham; and all praying parents are encouraged to hope that he will hear them.

10. According to the time of Life. That is, according to the time for bringing forth a living child. Others think that it means, at the same time next year. The former is more probable. Comp. ver. 14, and 2 Kings iv. 16.

15. Sarah laughed. So did Abraham when a son was promised; but it seems, her laughter was from unbelief, his from surprise. The admonition of the angel, most probably removed her doubts, as we find the Apostle

Abraham reposing at the door of his tent, 'during the heat of the day.' He raises his eyes, and sees three strangers approaching him. He instantly rises and hastens to meet them; unsolicited, he admits them to all the rights of hospitality. Water is brought to wash their feet; ample provision is made; the table spread under the friendly shade of a tree, and Abraham performs the office of waiter! Compare Heb. xiii. 2.

16 The men now rose up and thence departed towards Sodom; and Abraham went with them to 17 direct them on the way. And Jehovah said, "Shall I conceal from Abraham ^a my servant what I am 18 about to do? Seeing Abraham shall surely become a great and mighty nation, and all the na-19 tions of the earth in him shall be blessed? For I know ^a that Abraham will command his children and his household after him, to keep the way of Jehovah, by doing justice and judgment; that Jehovah may bring upon Abraham that which he 20 hath spoken concerning him." Jehovah then said, "Because the cry of Sodom and Gomorrah is great, and because their sin is exceedingly griev-21 ous; I will now go down, and see, and know, whether or not they have done altogether according to the cry which hath come to me."
22 Two of the men now turned their faces thence;
and went towards Sodom; but Abraham yet 23 stood before Jehovah. And Abraham drew near,
and said; "Wilt thou also destroy the right-24 eous with the wicked? Should there be fifty righteous persons within the city; wilt thou destroy, and not spare the place for the sake of the fifty righteous persons who are in it?
25 "Far be it from thee to do after this manner,
to slay the righteous with the wicked; and far

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. Let us learn to show kindness to strangers; for it may be, that we may become strangers, and need the same kindness from others. Nothing is more amiable, than the readiness with which Abraham treated his unknown guests; and his attention and liberality were amply rewarded. "Be not then forgetful to entertain strangers: for thereby some have entertained angels unawares." Here every thing was plain; no luxuries graced the table. Let us learn to imitate this simplicity, as conducing both to health and piety.

2. The conduct of Abraham, as a father and a master, deserves universal imitation. "I know that he will command his children and household, to keep the way of the Lord, &c." Let fathers and masters maintain proper authority, but be careful to exercise it with moderation and love; use it to promote religious instruction, and practical piety. How happy the children who have such fathers, and the servants that have such masters! But alas! how often are parents more solicitous to see their children adorned be it from thee to treat the righteous and the wicked alike. Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" And Jehovah said, "If I find 26 within the city of Sodom fifty righteous persons, I will spare the whole place for their sakes." And Abraham added and said, "Behold now, 27 I have taken upon me to speak to my Lord, though I am but dust and ashes; Should there 28 be wanting five of the fifty righteous persons; will thou, for the want of these five, destroy the whole city?" "If I find there forty five, said he, I will not destroy it." And he spoke to him yet 29 again, and said, "Should forty be found there?" "For the sake of forty, replied he, I will not destroy it." And Abraham said, "Oh! let not my 30 Lord be angry, if I speak, Should thirty be found there?" And he said, "I will not destroy it, if I find thirty there." Again he said, "Be- 31 hold now, I have taken upon me to speak unto my Lord, Should twenty be found there?" And he said, "for the sake of twenty I will not destroy it." "Oh! let not my Lord be angry, if I yet 32 speak once more. Should ten be found there?" And he said, "for the sake of ten I will not destroy it." Jehovah now ceasing to speak with 33 Abraham, went away; and Abraham returned unto his place.

with the accomplishments of the world, than with the solid and important attainments of religion; and most masters neglect the souls of their servants, neither instructing them, nor affording them leisure to attend to the means of instruction. Such characters have much to answer for at the tribunal of God.

3. The intercession of Abraham for Sodom, shows his humility and fervour; and the success of it, the regard which God has to the righteous. When standing before God, he felt his own meanness, and repeatedly acknowledged it. How becoming is it, in all our approaches to the Most High, to be humble and lowly; to confess how sinful and vile we are. This disposition of mind, will render our fervour and importunity modest and unassuming; but without it, fervour will become rudeness, and importunity degenerate into insolence. Abraham affords the most lovely example of prevailing prayer; and if ten righteous persons had been found in Sodom, it would have been spared. O may we be reminded of him, who ever lives to make intercession for us.

24-32. The intercession of Abraham for Sodom, displays the amiable qualities of his heart, and his just views of the divine character. He appears humble, fervent and compassionate. The Jews say, he pleaded and reduced the number of the righteous, until he concluded the place would be spare

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 1899. Lot receiveth two angels; the vile conduct of the Sodomites; Sodom destroyed; Lot's wife punished; his incest.

1. And two angels came to Sodom in the evening; and Lot was sitting at the gate of Sodom: and Lot, seeing them, rose up to meet them; and he bowed himself with his face to the ground; And he said, "Behold now, my lords, turn aside, I pray, into the house of your servant, and wash your feet, and lodge; and rise up early, and go on your way." And they said, "Nay; but we will lodge in the street." But he urged them greatly; and they turned to him, and entered into his house; and he baked unleavened cakes, and made a feast for them; and they ate.

4. But before they lay down, the men of the city, the men of Sodom, the whole people together, both old and young, surrounded the house; And they called to Lot, and said to him, "Where are the men who came to thee this night? Bring them out to us, that we may know them." And Lot went out of the door to them, but shut the door after him; And said, "I pray you, brethren, do not so wickedly. Behold now, I have two daughters who have not known man; let me, I pray you, bring them out to you, and do to them what is good in your eyes; only to these men do nothing; for, therefore are they come under the shelter of my roof." But they said, "Stand back." They also said, "Shall one who came in as a sojourner set himself up as a judge? We will now treat thee worse than them." And they pressed hard upon Lot, and came near to break open the door. But the men put forth their 10 hand, and pulled Lot to them into the house, and shut the door. And they smote the men 11 who were at the door of the house, both small and great, with blindness; so that they wearied themselves in vain to find the door.

Then the angels said to Lot, "Who else 12 is there here related to thee?" Thy sons, and thy daughters, and whatsoever thou hast in the city, bring out of this place; For we are 13 about to destroy this place. For great before Jehovah, is the cry of their guilt; and Jehovah hath sent us to destroy them." And Lot went 14 out and spoke to his sons-in-law, who married his daughters, and said, "Arise, get you out of this place; for Jehovah is about to destroy this city." But he seemed to his sons-in-law, as one jesting.

And when the morning dawn arose, the angels urged Lot, saying, "Arise, take thy wife, and thy two daughters, who are here; lest thou be consumed in the punishment of the city." And while he lingered, the men laid hold upon 16 his hand, and upon the hand of his wife, and upon the hand of his two daughters; (Jehovah being merciful to them;) and they brought them forth and set them without the city.

And when they had brought them forth, one 17 of them said to Lot, "Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, nor stay in all the plain; escape to the mountains, lest thou be consumed." And Lot said to one of them, "Oh, 18 not so, my Lord. Behold now, thy servant 19 hath found favour in thy sight, and thou hast

CHAP. XIX.

12. *Sam. the rest men.

CHAP. XIX. 1. From 2 Kings vii. 1, 18, it appears that the gate of cities was not only used as a place of judicature, but that markets were held there; and from Acts xvii. 18. Mark ix. 16. Mat. xxiii. 7, it appears that Philosophers gave lectures to the people, and that they met there for conversation. Is it not most natural to suppose, that Lot had resorted to the gate or market, either for the purpose of imparting or receiving instruction? Compare Ps. lxx. 12, and Prov. viii. 3, and xx. 21.

4. For the honour of human nature, one cannot help wishing, that this shameful vice had perished from the earth, together with the cities of the plain! The prohibitory and severe laws of Moses, imply that it was practised in his day; and history unblushingly records it, as prevalent in the best days of Greece and Rome. See Rom. i. 24, 26, 27.

7. The conduct of Lot proves the sense he entertained of the rights of hospitality, and justifies the remark of Peter. See 2 Pet. ii. 7.

8. Lot's proposal of giving his two daughters, seems to us strange and unwarrantable. But it was perfectly consonant with the usages of those times and countries; where the rights of hospitality were considered as the strongest of all laws; and a violation of them was accounted the greatest crime. It would have, in this case, been greatly enhanced, by Lot's having urged them to be his guests. Lot, however, should not have made such a proposal. It was doing evil that good might come.

11. Blindness. Geddes supposes, that they were struck by a flash of lightning, which for a season deprived them of the use of their sight; others, more probably, with a vertigo, so that they knew not what they were doing.

13. I have preferred the sense in this verse to the idiom; for (אֲנָפִים) clearly denotes their crying guilt, meaning the inhabitants.

magnified thy mercy, which thou hast showed to me in saving my life; but I cannot escape to the mountains, lest some evil take me, and 20 I die. Behold now, that city is nearer to flee unto, and it is but a little one. Let me, I pray, escape thither, that my life may be saved: is it not a small one? ¹ Hence, its name was called 21 ZOAR (SMALL).” And he said to him, “See, I have accepted thee concerning this thing, so that I will not overthrow this city, for which 22 thou hast spoken. Quickly escape thither; for until thou art come thither, I cannot do any thing.”

23 The sun had now risen upon the earth, and 24 Lot had entered into Zoar; When Jehovah himself rained from the heavens sulphur and fire 25 upon Sodom and Gomorrah; And he overthrew those cities, and the whole plain, with all the inhabitants of the cities, and the growth of the 26 ground. And Lot’s wife also, looked earnestly back from behind him, and she became like a pillar of salt.

27 Now Abraham rose early in the morning, and went to the place where he had stood before 28 Jehovah: And he looked towards Sodom and Gomorrah, and towards all the plain country; and he saw, and lo! the smoke of the land went 29 up as the smoke of a furnace. But when God destroyed the cities of the plain, he remembered Abraham, and sent away Lot from amidst the overthrow, when he overthrew the cities in which Lot dwelt.

And Lot, together with his two daughters, 30 went up out of Zoar, and dwelt in the mountains; for he feared to dwell in Zoar; and he and his two daughters dwelt in a cave. And the first- 31 born said to the younger, “Our father is old, and there is not a man in the country to come in unto us, according to the custom of all the earth; Come, let us make our father drink wine, and 32 let us lie with him, that we may preserve seed to our father.” And they made their father drink 33 wine that night; and the firstborn went in, and lay with her father; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose. And on the 34 morrow, the firstborn said to the younger, “Behold, I lay last night with my father, let us make him drink wine this night also; and go thou in, and lie with him, that we may preserve seed to our father.” And they made their father drink 35 wine that night also; and the younger arose, and lay with him; and he perceived not when she lay down, nor when she arose. Thus were both 36 the daughters of Lot with child by their own father. And the firstborn bare a son, and called 37 his name Moab. The same was the father of the

the end of verse 22.

16. The next verse proves, that the pronominal affixes should be taken in a collective sense, and rendered in the plural. Lot lingered, being probably loath to leave the City, as he had great wealth in it.

20. I have here made a small transposition, as being more connected than the present order.

24. Jehovah himself. Literally, ‘Jehovah from Jehovah,’ but the noun is used for the pronoun.—Sulphur and fire, mean burning sulphur, or a dreadful storm of lightning. Compare Ps. xi. 5, and Ezek. xxxviii. 28. Le Clerc has proved, that Sodom was most probably destroyed by lightning, as this is usually called the ‘fire of God.’ 2 Kings i. 12. Jos. i. 16. The plain of Sodom was full of bituminous pits, which being kindled by the lightning, must have produced the most dreadful conflagration. This plain, Josephus informs us, was 72 miles long and 19 broad. It became in consequence of this destruction, a receptacle of water, now called the dead sea, or sea of Sodom.

26. Looked earnestly back. So the verb signifies; and it implies that she stood still, if she did not actually return. Our Lord seems to countenance the latter supposition, Luke xvii. 31, 32.—Like a pillar of salt. If (נֶזֶב) denote a pillar, the particle of similitude must be understood, as it is in many places: ‘Ephraim is (like) a cake not turned.’ And some kind of rock or metallic salt, which was durable, must be referred to. The meaning is, she was struck dead, and became a stiffened corpse, which might be crusted over with saline and bituminous matter. Dathe and some others contend, that (נֶזֶב) never signifies a pillar, but is here a participial adjective, and that (נֶזֶב) is the same as (נֶזֶב), and that (נֶזֶב) denotes a salt land. They therefore render, and she was fixed in the suluginous soil. I prefer the version given, as I conceive (נֶזֶב) may signify what is placed, fixed, and so be synonymous with (מַצְבָּה) a pillar.

30. In a cave. The mountains of Moab are full of caves, which are both dry and so spacious, that thousands may inhabit them.

31–38. It is justly inferred from the circumstance of Lot’s daughters having wine, that he had not lost all his property. For they would scarcely think of taking wine, if they had not other necessities. We may then conclude, that Lot and his two daughters had brought provisions with them from Sodom; and the conjecture of Michaelis, that a part at least of his flocks and herds, and female slaves had been given to him, is reasonable to believe. As the power of masters over their female slaves was absolute, it is not improbable, that Lot, whose spirits had been raised by wine, might command one of them to be brought him, and that his daughters availed themselves of this circumstance, to go and lie with him. ‘And he knew not, &c.’ he did not know that she was his daughter. The conduct of his daughters, from whatever motive it arose, was as unwarrantable as it was singular. They were probably influenced by a regard to their own family-connexions, out of which they thought it not right to marry, especially fearing the fate of their sisters, who had married men of Sodom, and had perished with them.

38 present Moabites. And the younger also bare a son; and called his name Ben-ammi. The same was the father of the present Ammonites

CHAPTER XX.

B. C. 2298 Abraham denieth Sarah his wife; Abimelech taketh her, but God punisheth him, and he returneth her to Abraham.

1 And Abraham removed thence towards the south country, and dwelled and sojourned in 2 Gerar, between Kadesh and Shur. And Abraham said of Sarah his wife, "She is my sister:" "for he was afraid to say, "She is my wife;" lest the men of the City should kill him, on her account"; and Abimelech, king of Gerar, 3 sent, and took Sarah. But God came to Abimelech in a dream by night, and said to him, "Behold, thou art but a dead man, on account of the woman whom thou hast taken; for she hath a husband." But Abimelech had 4 not come near her, and he said, "Lord, wilt thou slay also a righteous nation?" Said 5 he not unto me, 'She is my sister?' and did not she herself also say, 'He is my brother?' In the integrity of my heart, and in the innocence of my hands, have I done this." And 6 God said to him in the dream, "Yea, I know that in the integrity of thy heart thou hast done this; therefore I also have withheld thee from sinning against me; and for this cause I suffered thee not to touch her. Now, therefore, 7 restore the man his wife; for he is a prophet, and he shall pray for thee, and thou shalt live; but if thou restore her not, know that thou shalt surely die; thou, and all that are thine."

And Abimelech rose early in the morning, 8 and called for all his servants, and spoke all

CHAP. XX. 2. *Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. From this History we learn, that there is no vice, however shameful, degrading, or unnatural, but what depraved sinners are ready to commit. The Sodomites were wholly given up to that sin, for which, their name has become infamous; nor did they observe the least secrecy in the commission of it. Young and old were alike criminal. Well might Peter charge them, "with filthy conversation and unlawful deeds." Let us remember the causes of such dreadful depravity and wickedness—They were "pride, fulness of bread, and abundance of idleness." Guard against these sins, as leading to the commission of others.

2. The deliverance of Lot, was an answer to the prayer of Abraham; God would not treat the righteous as the wicked. How dear are such characters to him. Lot had not followed the example set before him, but even in Sodom had kept himself undefiled. He had, however, the daily mortification of seeing their vile and wicked conduct, and hearing their filthy conversation; and he could not enjoy that satisfaction in such a place, which he might have enjoyed elsewhere. But God, being merciful to him, brought him out; and thus shewed, that he knows how to deliver the godly out of temptation.

3. Lot's affectionate address to his sons-in-law, and their unbelief, ought to remind us, how often God's warnings are still disregarded. Ministers call to sinners to turn and live; they say, "arise, and get you out of this place;" but their message is

CHAP. XX. 1. Gerar. This was the most southern City in the land of Canaan, Gen. x. 19, situated between the two deserts of Kadesh and Shur; a fertile district surrounded it, which in the time of Jerom, was called the district of Gerar. To give the sense, I have transposed the order of the words of the Text.

Rosenmüller contends, that what is related in this chapter, must have occurred when Abraham returned out of Egypt; and that the Historian has not followed the exact order of time. For Sarah was now ninety years treated, as if it were but a jest. Sinners refuse to hearken, and boldly, but foolishly go on in their wickedness, vainly persuading themselves, that they shall have peace in their latter end. Learn, O sinners, that the day of retribution and righteous judgment is approaching, and that wrath will come upon you to the uttermost. See how terribly God punished the Sodomites! "Upon these wicked men he rained snares, fire and brimstone, and an horrible tempest: this was the portion of their cup." They are represented as suffering the vengeance of eternal fire; and their destruction, as an emblem of that of all the ungodly. Accordingly Hell is described, as a lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. O be warned, and flee from this impending wrath. Flee to the rock of salvation, as the only hiding place; to Christ the atoning Lamb. Remember Lot's wife, and look not back; nor tarry in all the plain.

4. Let serious persons also remember, that they are never out of the reach of temptation! Lot had honoured God in Sodom, but how disgraceful was his conduct in the mountains! Overcome twice with wine, and cohabiting with his own daughters! It is probable, he was now off his guard, and being no longer exposed to the temptations of Sodom, thought himself safe. O let him that thinketh he stands—stands firm, stands securely, take heed lest he fall. "Hold thou me up, O Lord, and I shall be safe;" and never suffer me, by any misconduct, to become the reproach of the foolish.

old, and also with child of Isaac, if what is here said occurred after the destruction of Sodom; and it should seem from verse 18, that Abraham made some considerable stay in Gerar.

2. I have admitted the addition of the Septuagint, as at least highly probable. The words occur in reference to Isaac Ch. xxvi. 7, in the Hebrew Text; and they assign a reason for the Patriarch's conduct.

10. Dimock ingeniously conjectured, that we should read (מִן) what didst thou fear, instead of what didst thou see. The reading of the Samari-guilt on me and on my kingdom? Deeds which ought not to be done, hast thou done to me." 10 Moreover Abimelech said to Abraham, "What sawest thou, that thou hast done this thing?"

11 And Abraham said, "Because I was afraid."
For I said, "Surely the fear of God is not in 12 of my wife. And yet indeed she is my sister, the daughter of my father, but not the daughter of my mother, though she is also my wife.

13 And when God caused me to wander from my father's house, *and from the land of my nativity", I said to her, "This is the kindness which thou shalt show to me; to whatsoever place we come, say of me, 'He is my brother'." 14 Then Abimelech took "a thousand pieces of silver", and flocks and cattle, and men-servants and maid-servants, and gave them to Abraham; 15 and he restored to him Sarah his wife. And Abimelech said, "Behold, my land is before thee; dwell where thou pleasest." And to 16 Sarah he said, "Behold, I have given to thy brother a thousand pieces of silver, to purchase veils for thee, and for all who are with thee;

thus she was reproved."

Then Abraham prayed to God; and God 17 healed Abimelech, and his wife, and his handmaids, so that they might bear children. For 18
every womb in the house of Abimelech Jehovah had wholly restrained from bearing, on account of Sarah, the wife of Abraham.

CHAPTER XXI

B. C. 1898 Isaac is born; Hagar and Ishmael dismissed; Abimelech cometh and maketh a covenant with Abraham.

AND Jehovah visited Sarah as he had said; 1 and he did for Sarah as he had spoken. For 2 Sarah conceived, and bare a son to Abraham in his old age, at the set time which God had mentioned to him. And Abraham called the 3 name of his son that was born to him, (whom Sarah bare to him,) Isaac, [LAUGHTER]. And 4
Abraham circumcised his son Isaac, when eight

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. We here learn the truth of the Proverb, "That the fear of man bringeth a snare." This fear was a snare to Abraham, and led him a second time to dissemble. He had before exposed both himself and his wife to danger in Egypt, and though mercifully delivered, he falls into the same sin. How painful is it to find a man, who in general, displayed the most manly piety and heroic virtues, guilty of a sin of this nature. This seems to have been Abraham's besetting sin. Let us study our own weakness, and ever be on our guard, lest we in like manner should fall.

2. The conduct of Abimelech, strongly enforces integrity.
In taking Sarah, supposing her unmarried, he acted properly, according to the custom of those times; and from what he says to God, it is probable, that like Melchizedek, he was a worshipper of the Most High. The Lord kept him from sinning, by some tan in the next verse, strongly supports this conjecture.

13. And when God caused us to wander. In the common text the verb is in the plural, as it is Ch. xxxv. 7, and 2 Sam. vii. 23, whence some have deduced the doctrine of the trinity; but the various reading in each place, and the consent of the versions, shows, that the plural is a mere error of the scribes. The doctrine of the trinity, rests on much better ground, than on the ambiguous term Aleim, and plural verbs connected with it.

16. Thus she was reproved. Geddes renders, 'even for every one married. The sense which Geddes gives, he supports by the meaning of (נכר) in the Arabic. That married women wore veils, when they went affliction on the women of his house; and let us ever consider, that it is better to suffer than to sin. Whatever may be the means, if we are but kept from offending God, we ought to be thankful.

In all things let us aim to keep a conscience void of offence.

3. Let us learn to temper our rebukes, as Abimelech did, with kindness and gentleness. Many a reproof loses its force, by being delivered with too much heat. Men are ready to think, that zeal for God and holiness will vindicate this: but they are mistaken.
"The wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of God." Let us then in meekness, instruct those who oppose themselves, and with gentleness reprove those who do amiss; and endeavour by real kindness, to show that we wish them well, and should be glad to see them happy. An arrow winged with love, is most likely to reach the heart. So God deals with us, and so should we deal with each other.

abroad, of a peculiar kind or colour, is certain; and by the present Abime-lech made, it is implied, that Sarah and others had not the veils appropriated to those married. See Note Heb. Bible. and Geddes.

CHAP. XXI. 3. Isaac. His birth was miraculous, as was that of Christ. He disputed not his father's will, though it was to cost him his life; Jesus Christ became obedient even to death. Isaac carried the wood on which he was to have been sacrificed; Jesus Christ carried the cross on which he was to be crucified. They both carried them to the very same place, Mount Moriah; being the place where the Temple was afterwards built.

days old, as God had commanded him.
 5 Now Abraham was a hundred years old, when 6 his son Isaac was born to him. And Sarah said,
 "God hath made me to laugh for joy; and every one that heareth will laugh for joy with me."
 7 And she said, "Who will now say to Abraham, shall Sarah suckle children? for I have born to him a son in my old age."
 8 And the child grew, and was weaned; and Abraham made a great feast on the day that 9 his son Isaac was weaned. And Sarah saw the son of Hagar the Egyptian, (whom she had born to Abraham,) deriding her son Isaac; 10 And she said to Abraham, "Cast out this bond-maid and her son; for the son of this bond-maid shall not be heir with my son; with 11 Isaac." Now this thing greatly displeased Abra-12 ham because of his son. But God said to Abraham, "Let it not be displeasing to thee on account of the boy, and on account of thy handmaid; in all that Sarah hath said to thee, hearken to her voice; for by Isaac shall thy 13 seed be reckoned. And of the son of that bondmaid also will I make a great nation; 14 because he is thy seed." And Abraham rose up early in the morning, and took bread, and a skin-bottle of water, and gave them to Hagar, (putting them on her shoulder,) and the child,
 and sent her away.

"And she having departed, wandered in the 15 wilderness of Beer-sheba, Until the water in the skin-bottle was spent; and she placed the 16 child under one of the shrubs. And she departed about the distance of a bow-shot, and sat down over against him. For she said, "Let me not see the death of the child." So she sat over against him. And the child raised his voice", and wept; And God heard the voice of 17

 the lad; and an angel of God called to Hagar from the heavens, and said to her, "What distresseth thee, Hagar? Fear not; for God hath heard the voice of the boy there where he lieth. Arise, raise up the lad, and support 18 him with thine hand; for of him I will make a great nation." Then God opened her eyes, 19 and she saw a well of water; and she went,
 and filled the bottle with water, and gave to the lad to drink. And God was with the lad; 20 and he grew up, and dwelt in the wilderness, and became an expert archer. He dwelt in 21
 the wilderness of Paran; and his mother took for him a wife from the land of Egypt.

It was about this time, that Abimelech and 22
 Phichol, the chief captain of his host, spoke to Abraham, saying, "God is with thee in all that thou doest. Now, therefore, swear to me, by 23
 God, that thou wilt not deal falsely with me, nor with my son, nor with my son's son; but according to the kindness that I have done unto thee, thou wilt do unto me, and to the land in which thou sojournest." And Abraham said, 24
 "I will swear." And Abraham expostulated 25 with Abimelech concerning a well of water, which Abimelech's servants had violently seized.
 And Abimelech said, "I know not who hath 26 done this thing; for thou never toldest me, nor did I ever hear of it until this day." And 27
 Abraham took sheep and oxen, and gave them

7. My old age. The variation found in the Sept. is no improbable reading. The age of Abraham had been stated in the 5th verse, and it is natural for Sarah to glauce at her own.

9. Deriding her son Isaac. Without the addition now happily preserved in the Sept. and Vulg. the object of Ishmael's resentment and ridicule could not be ascertained. It appears from comparing 1 Sam. i. 24, with 2 Macc. vii. 27, that it was usual for some to suckle their children till they were three years old; and if Isaac had attained this age, Ishmael was 16 or 17 years old. From the feast Abraham made, his jealousy was excited, and he saw in the child a formidable rival—hence his conduct.

10. However this language might displease Abraham, it was agreeable to the usages of the times; and on the birth of Isaac, Ishmael could have no just claim to the inheritance. Paul has adverted to this, to illustrate the nature of the Jewish and Christian dispensations. See Gal. iv. 30.

14. Took bread, &c. By bread and water, is frequently meant provisions of every kind. Isa. iii. 1, and xxxiii. 16. Is it not probable that they are to be understood in this latitude here?—A bottle. This conveys a wrong idea to the English reader. The bottles or casks of the east, are made of skin, and their dimensions are according to the size of the animal of the skin of which they are made.

16. The reading of the Septuagint, which I have followed, is supported by the next verse.

19. It should seem the want of water was the cause of the distress of Hagar and her son; a spring being discovered, the lad was refreshed and revived.

22. The Septuagint reads here, as Ch. xxvi. 26; I have given it among the various readings, as it may be borrowed from the parallel place, as neither mss. nor other Versions support it. Abraham's increasing pro-unto Abimelech; and both of them made a cove-28 nant. And Abraham set apart by themselves se-29 ven ewe lambs of the flock. And Abimelech said to Abraham, "What mean these seven ewe lambs, which thou hast set apart by themselves?" 30 Then "Abraham said", "These lambs shalt thou take from my hand, that they may be a witness for me, that I digged this well." 31 Wherefore, because they both of them there swore, that place was called BEER-SHEBA [THE WELL OF THE OATH]; for at Beer-sheba they 32 made this covenant. Then Abimelech, and Phichol, the chief captain of his host, arose and returned into the land of the Philistines.

 33 And "Abraham" planted tamarisk-trees at Beer-sheba, and called there on the name of 34 Jehovah, the eternal God. And Abraham sojourned many days, in the land of the Philistines.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. We here learn the faithfulness of God. He had long exercised the faith and patience of Abraham and Sarah; but according to the last promise, at the appointed time, Sarah brought forth a son. Now their hopes were realized; and in this child of promise, they saw an heir to their property, and the root of a posterity, numerous as the stars of heaven. Let this encourage us to rely on God's holy word; for in the end he will do as he hath spoken to us. Faithful is he that hath promised, is the assertion of the Apostle, and it is supported by the experience of good men in all ages.

2. Let parents learn to imitate Abraham in devoting their children to God. He, according to the divine command, circumcised Isaac, when eight days old; thus initiating him into the Covenant, God had made with him and his seed. May we thankfully remember, that the promise of spiritual blessings is to us and to our children; and let us bring them to God our Saviour, that he may bless them.—And let mothers learn from the example of Sarah, to suckle and nurse their own children. This is a natural duty, and, except in cases of necessity, cannot be neglected without sin. "Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast, they perity, led Abimelech to enter into this alliance with him.

33. Tamarisk-trees. Celsius and Michaelis have proved that this is the import of (לְחֵט); and that this species of-tree is common in Egypt and the neighbouring countries.

CHAP. XXII. 2. The land of Moriah. Wells, Reland, and others, consider it as certain, that Moriah was one of the mountains, on which Abraham, and said to him, "Abraham, 'Abraham'!" And he said, "Behold, here am I." And he said, "Take now thy son, thine only 2 son Isaac, whom thou lovest, and go to the land of Moriah; and there offer him for a burnt-offering upon one of the mountains which I will mention to thee."

And Abraham rose early in the morning, and 3 having saddled his ass, and cloven the wood for the burnt-offering, took with him two of his young men, and Isaac his son, and set out to go to the place which God had mentioned to him. And, on the third day, Abraham raised 4 his eyes, and saw the place afar off. And Abra- 5 ham said to his young men, "Abide ye here with the ass; and I and the lad will go yonder and worship; and then return to you." And 6 Abraham took the wood of the burnt-offering, and laid it upon Isaac his son; and he took in his hand fire and a knife; and they both of them went on together. And Isaac spoke to 7 Abraham his father, and said, "My father;"
 and he said, "Here am I, my son." And he give suck to their young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostrich in the wilderness." What a reproach was this to the daughters of Israel! and I may add to many of my fair readers.

3. The son of the bondmaid derided and persecuted the son of the free woman; a striking example of the difference between "those born after the flesh, and those after the spirit." Gal. iv.
 29. The latter being the heirs of the promises, and devoted to God, are often exposed to the insults and reproaches of the former. The best men are exposed to cruel mockings; but they have this consolation, that if they suffer with Christ, they shall also reign with him.

4. Let us cultivate friendship with those who are the friends of God. So Abimelech did with Abraham; and "a companion of wise men shall be wise." Such persons are able, and will be ever ready, to advise and counsel us; and by their piety and holy conversation, will encourage and animate us in the path of duty.
 They are the excellent of the earth; and in them let us delight;
 and the heirs of heaven, and let it be our great concern, that we may dwell with them for ever.

Jerusalem afterwards stood. Maimonides says, that the place where David built his altar, on the threshing floor of Araunah, and where the temple was built, was the spot where Abraham built his, and bound Isaac. Others think it was Calvary.—The command given to Abraham, has been considered irreconcilable with the divine perfections; and infidelity, on this ground, has raised objections against divine revelation. We answer, that said, "Behold the fire and the wood; but 8 where is the lamb for a burnt-offering?" And Abraham said, "My son, God will provide for himself a lamb for a burnt-offering." So they 9 both of them went on together; And they came to the place which God had mentioned to him.

And there Abraham built an altar, and laid the wood in order, and bound Isaac his son, and 10 laid him on the altar upon the wood. And Abraham had stretched forth his hand, and 11 taken the knife to slay his son, When the angel of Jehovah called to him from the heavens, and said, "Abraham, Abraham!" And he said, 12 "Here am I." "Stretch not forth thine hand," said he, against the lad, nor do to him any harm: for now I know that thou fearest God, since thou hast not withheld thy son, thine only 13 son from me." And Abraham raised his eyes, and looked, and, behold, a ram in a thicket was caught by his horns; and Abraham went and took the ram, and offered him up for a burnt-14 offering instead of his son. And Abraham called the name of that place Jehovah-jireh [JEHOVAH WILL PROVIDE]; as it is said to this day, "In the mount, Jehovah will provide."

CHAP. XXI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. 1. The command given to Abraham, should remind us, that our greatest blessings and dearest comforts are at God's disposal. We receive them from him, and he has an unquestionable right to resume them when he pleaseth. In all such instances, submission and obedience will be accepted and rewarded.
It is often necessary for our spiritual welfare, that we should be exposed to trials; for in the enjoyment of the gift, we are apt to forget the giver of it. Let us then possess, as though we possessed not; and unreservedly aim to honour God, both in possession, and in surrendering at his call, our blessings.

2. The obedience of Abraham, alike displays, his wisdom, confi- dence and love, and affords a noble example to us. Had he made known the divine command to Sarah, or consulted flesh and blood, he would have delayed; and delay would have nourished doubts, and terminated in disobedience. It was his wisdom to consider, that the

the giver of life has a right to take it away; and to do or command it to be done in what manner he pleaseth. To offer a human victim to him, without his express warrant, would be to commit murder; but to do so by his authority, would be an act of obedience. But the design of God in this command was to prove Abraham, that his faith, love and obedience might be manifest, and not that he should, in fact, offer up Isaac.

3. And he set out to go. By following the order of the words of the text, the common version is confused. I have given the sense, and I trust clearly.

And the angel of Jehovah called to Abraham 15
from the heavens the second time, And said, 16
"By myself have I sworn, saith Jehovah, because thou hast done this thing, and hast not withheld 'from me' thy son, thine only son,
'That I will abundantly bless thee, and exceed- 17
ingly multiply thy seed; as the stars of the heavens, and as the sand which is on the sea shore; and thy seed shall possess the gates of their enemies; And in thy SEED shall all nations 18
of the earth be blessed; because thou hast obeyed
my voice." So Abraham returned to his young 19 men, and they rose up and went together to Beer-sheba; for Abraham dwelt at Beer-sheba.

And after these things it was, that one told 20 Abraham, saying, "Behold, Milcah hath also born children to thy brother Nahor. Huz his 21
firstborn, and Buz his brother; and Kemuel
(the father of Aram,) And Chesed, and Hazo, 22 and Pildash, and Jidlaph, and Bethuel. And 23 Bethuel had begot Rebekah. These eight Milcah had born to Nahor, Abraham's brother."
And his concubine, whose name was Reumah, 24 bare also Tebah, and Gaham, and Thahash, and Maachah.

16. *Sam. Sept. Syr. Vulg.

Will of God must not be disputed; for as he has a right to command, his perfections lead us to infer, that he will command nothing but what is worthy of himself. The Apostle observes, "that by faith, Abraham offered up Isaac; and he that had received the promises, offered up
'his only son.'" He believed the promises made to him, "accounting that God was able to raise up Isaac, even from the dead." Here is the main-spring of his obedience, belief in the power and faithfulness of God. He assured himself, that God would fulfil the promise; and that, though he should sacrifice Isaac, God could as easily reanimate his ashes, as give vigour to old age, to conceive and bring him forth.
His faith wrought by love. Never was a sacrifice more dear demanded from man. Take thy son, thine only son Isaac, whom thou lovest.
Every word contained a dagger, which could not fail to pierce the heart, possessed of the least sensibility. There is a climax, calculated to awaken all the sympathies and emotions of the heart;—yet Abra-

13. I have followed the versions, which read one or a ram, instead of behind. The common text is absurd, for how could he see behind him?

14. The name given to the place, evidently alludes to the reply Abraham had made to the question of Isaac, (see ver. 8.) and to the merciful substitution of the ram for a burnt-offering, instead of Isaac. It should seem, that this name given to the mount, had become a proverb in the time of Moses. 'As it is said at this day, in the mount, Jehovah will provide.' Others render, 'In the mount, Jehovah will appear, or be seen; and refer it to the appearance and sacrifice of Christ. This version seems

- 6 "Nay, hear us my lord: thou art a mighty prince among us; in the choicest of our sepulchres bury thy dead; none of us will hinder thee from burying thy dead, even in his own sepulchre."
- 7 Then Abraham stood up, and bowed himself to ham rose above nature, and manifested, that his love to God, was superior to his love to his son; or rather, that in giving his son to God, he was expressing the highest regard to both. Our Lord requires the same supreme regard from his disciples. "If any man come to me, and hate not his father, and mother, and wife, and children, and brethren, and sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be my disciple."

3. Let this intended sacrifice of Isaac, remind us of the real one of our Lord. Do we admire Abraham's love to his God? He was but discharging an imperative duty. How ought we then to admire the love of God to us sinners? "Behold, herein is love, not that we loved God, but that he first loved us, and gave his son, his only son, to me forced; the same word being rendered differently here, from what it is in the 8th verse. I prefer with Secker, the version given. The birth and offering of Isaac, were evidently typical of our Lord.

CHAP. XXIII. 1. The order of the common Text has evidently suffered, and that given, has the authority of the Septuagint and Vulgate. See Note Heb. Bible.

2. Kirjath-Araba. Joshua informs us, that this City was so called from Arba, the father of Anak. Josh. xxi. 11. This City was very ancient. Numb. xiii. 22.—Abraham came, &c. It is usual with the Greeks, to place their dead near the doors of their houses, and to attend them there with mourning; and Harmer thinks that a like custom might obtain in the days of Abraham. His coming to mourn for Sarah, seems to mean, his coming from his own tent, and placing himself near the door of her tent, where her corpse was placed, in order to perform the solemn rites, which both decency and affection led him to.

of Zohar, 'the Hethite', That he may give 9 me the cave which he hath in Machpelah, which is in the end of his field; for as much money as it is worth he shall give it to me, for a burying-place-possession among you. And Ephron 10 who was sitting among the sons of Heth, (for Ephron was an Hethite,) answered Abraham in the hearing of the sons of Heth, of every one that went in at the gate of his city, saying, "Nay, my lord, 11 hear me; the field I give to thee, and the cave that is therein, I give to thee; in the presence of the sons of my people I give it to thee: bury thy dead." And Abraham bowed down himself 12 before the people of the land; And he spoke 13 to Ephron, in the hearing of the people of the land, saying, "But if thou wilt give it, I pray thee, hear me; I will give to thee money for the field; take it of me, and I will bury my dead there." And Ephron answered Abraham, 14 saying, "'Nay', my Lord, hearken unto me; 15 the land is worth four hundred shekels of silver; what is that between me and thee? bury therefore thy dead." And Abraham hearkened unto 16 Ephron; and Abraham weighed to Ephron the

to be the propitiation for our sins." This love truly passeth knowledge. God so loved the world, as no created mind can conceive, much less express. Blessed be God for the unspeakable gift of his love. He did not spare his son; but when his sufferings were necessary to show his hatred of sin, to maintain the honour of his moral government, and to be the meritorious cause of man's salvation; he gave him up to the death of the cross. In the transactions on Mount Moriah, as well as in the promises, Abraham saw his day and was glad. Let us imitate the Patriarch, and look through all the shadows, to our Lord, as the substance, in whom only we have redemption, and through whose merits we have forgiveness of sin.

3. Sons of Heth. This denotes, not his immediate sons, but his remote descendants in general.

5. I have adopted the Samaritan reading, which is supported by the Sept. and the Text itself verse 11. So also verse 15.

6. Mighty prince. Literally, 'a prince of God.' I notice this to show, that God, in the Hebrew scriptures, is used as an epithet, to denote excellence, in the opinion of James's translators. See Note, Ch. i. 2.

10. 'For Ephron dwelt.' So our version after the Vulgate. This seems to imply, that Ephron was not an Hethite, but a stranger who had settled among them; and yet he is immediately called Ephron, the Hethite. The interlinear ver. Ainsworth, Purver, Geddes, and others, with the Sept. render, sicens, 'who was sitting.'

16. It seems that in the time of Abraham, money was not coined, but weighed, which custom long continued.

17 And the field of Ephron, which was in Machpelah, which was opposite Mamre, the field, and the cave which was in it, and all the trees that were in the field, and that were in all the borders round about, were made sure to Abraham for a possession, in the presence of the sons of Heth, before all that went in at the gate of their city. And after this, Abraham buried Sarah his wife in the cave of the field of Macpelah, opposite Mamre, (the same with Hebron) in the land of Canaan. For the field and the cave that was in it, were made sure to Abraham for a burying-place-possession, by the sons of Heth.

CHAPTER XXIV.

B. C. 1867 Abraham sendeth his servant to his own kindred, to take a wife for Isaac; God prospereth his journey, and Rebekah is sent, whom Isaac marries.

1 ABRAHAM was now old, and far advanced in days, (for in every thing Jehovah had blessed 2 Abraham); And Abraham said to the eldest servant of his house, who ruled over all that he had; "Put, I pray thee, thy hand under my thigh; And I will adjure thee by Jehovah, the 3 God of the heavens and of the earth, that thou wilt not take a wife for my son "Isaac", of the daughters of the Canaanites, among whom I dwell; But that thou wilt go unto my country, 4 and to my kindred, and thence take a wife for my son Isaac." And the servant said to him, 5 "Perhaps the woman will not be willing to follow me unto this land: must I then return with thy son unto the land whence thou camest?" And Abraham said to him, "Beware that thou 6 return not with my son thither. Jehovah, the 7 God of the heavens "and of the earth", who took me from my father's house, and from the land of my kindred, and who spoke to me, and swore to me, saying, 'To thy seed will I give this land;' he shall send his angel before thee, and thence shalt thou take a wife for my son. But 8 if the woman will not be willing to follow thee, then thou shalt be clear from this my oath; only return not with my son thither." And the ser- 9 vant put his hand under the thigh of Abraham, his master, and swore to him concerning that matter.

And the servant took ten of the camels of his 10 master, and some of the best of his master's

10. v So the Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. How affecting is the change which death makes on the human frame. The lovely and beautiful Sarah dies; and Abraham is constrained to say, even of Sarah, 'let me bury my dead out of my sight!' All that had once delighted was now gone; her countenance was changed, and she must be carried to the land of darkness. Let such as pride themselves in the beauty of their persons remember, that it is fading as the flower; and let them cultivate those inward graces of the mind, which constitute a species of beauty which will never fade, but become more perfect in eternity.

2. Abraham yielded to the impulse of nature, and gave vent to his sorrow. He mourned and wept for her. Religion, while it forbids us to sorrow, as those who have no hope, sanctifies our social affections, and permits us to express our griefs. They had been long united by the closest earthly ties; and doubtless had enjoyed sweet fellowship together. The stroke that separated them, must have been felt as severe, and lamented with becoming submission; but Abraham had the consolation of the promises, and could hope to meet again his Sarah in the heavenly Canaan.

3. The respect paid to Abraham by the Hethites, is a proof that he had conducted himself among them, with honour and integrity. He lived down their prejudices, and constrained them to admire the man, however they might disapprove of his religion. Let us in this imitate him, and show out of a good conversation, that our faith is unfeigned. His conduct, in not accepting the offer even of a sepulchre, without paying for it, displays his generosity; he followed the things which were of good report. After all the promises made to him, respecting the land in which he sojourned, he had no part in it, but the field of Machpelah; and this continued to be the possession of his children. His was a better Canaan, a heavenly one; and let us ever be mindful, that whatever we possess here, it will end in a burying place. O seek then a better inheritance suppose, that this servant was Eliezer of Damascus. Compare Ch. xv. 2. —Put thy hand under my thigh. The Jews explain this, as strictly signifying the part circumcised, the token of the Covenant, God had made with Abraham, and, as expressing his faith in the promises. Had such a custom obtained on this account, it must have continued among the Jews, who were all circumcised; but we find no trace of it, except here, and Ch. xlvii.

49. Whatever might be the origin of this mode of adjuration, it seems to signify a promise, faithfully to perform what was specified.

10. I have followed the reading of the Sept. in this verse, as conveying the clearest arrangement, and the sense of the genuine original. See Note, Heb. Bible.—The City of Nahor. From Ch. xxvii. 43, it is clear, that Laban, the brother of Rebekah, dwelt at Haran; and it is most probable, things with him, and he set out, and went to 11 Mesopotamia, unto the city of Nahor; And he caused his camels to kneel down without the city by a well of water, about the time of the evening; when the women went out to draw 12 water. And he said, "O Jehovah, the God of my master Abraham, I pray thee, grant me

 this day success, and show kindness to my master 13 Abraham. Behold, I stand here by this well of water; and the daughters of the men of the 14 city are coming out to draw water. Grant, therefore, that the damsel to whom I shall say,
 "Let down thy pitcher, I pray thee, that I may drink; and she shall say, 'Drink, and I will let thy camels drink also;' may be she whom thou hast appointed for thy servant Isaac; and I shall know that thou hast by this showed kindness to my master ^a Abraham."

15 And before he had done speaking ^a thus to himself, behold, Rebekah, who was born to Bethuel, son of Milcah, the wife of Nahor,
 Abraham's brother, came forth with her pitcher 16 upon her shoulder. And the damsel had a very fair countenance, a virgin, for no man had known her; and she went down to the well, 17 and filled her pitcher, and came up. And the servant ran to meet her, and said, "Let me,
 I pray thee, drink a little water out of thy pit-18 cher." And she said, "Drink sir," and she hastened, and lowered her pitcher upon her hand, 19 and let him drink. And when she had done letting him drink, she said, "I will also draw water for thy camels, until they have all drunk." 20 And she quickly emptied her pitcher into the trough, and ran again to the well to draw water, that by the 'city of Nahor,' Haran is meant, situated on a river of the same name, and called Charræ by the Romans; famous for the defeat of Crassus.

16. This fountain or well, seems to have been furnished with steps down to the water; but most wells in the East are deep, so that it is usual for travellers, to carry with them leathern buckets and cords, to draw up water, as an essential part of their travelling furniture. Hence may be explained, John iv. 12.

21. Silently reflecting. So I think the word (חורש) here signifies. The Doway version is to the same purpose as mine, 'musing, he held his peace.'

22. Pendant. So Jerom explains the word, as meaning a circular pendant, and not an ear-ring; and at this day the women of Arabia wear and drew for all his camels. And the man 21 wondered at her, silently reflecting, that he might know whether or not Jehovah had prospered his journey. And when the camels had done 22 drinking, the man took a golden pendant of the weight of half a shekel, ^a and put it on her face", and two golden bracelets for her hands of the weight of ten shekels; And he said, "Whose 23 daughter art thou? tell me, I pray thee. Is there room in thy father's house for us to lodge in?" And she answered him, "I am the 24 daughter of Bethuel, the son of Milcah, whom she bare unto Nahor." She said moreover to 25 him, "We have both straw and provender enough, and room to lodge in." The man 26

 now bowed his head, and worshipped Jehovah;
 And said, "Blessed be Jehovah, the God of 27
 my master Abraham, who hath not withdrawn from my master ^a Abraham" his kindness and his truth: Jehovah hath led me in the ^o right way, unto the house of my master's own kinsman."

The damsel then ran, and told her mother's 28 house-hold these things. Now Rebekah had a 29 brother, and his name was Laban. And when he saw the pendant and the bracelets upon his 30 sister's hands, and when he heard the words of Rebekah his sister, saying, "Thus spoke the man unto me;" ^a Laban ran to the man, unto the well"; and when he came unto the man, behold! he stood at the well by the camels.
 And he said, "Come in, thou blessed of Jeho- 31 vah! Why standest thou without? for I have a house prepared, and room for the camels."

And he brought the man into the house; 32

such pendants. The reading of the Sam. is confirmed by the 47 verse.—On her face, i. e. on the forehead. The pendant and the bracelets were worth about 20l; a valuable present.

27. Hath not withdrawn, i. e. who does not cease to shew his kindness, &c.—I am in the right way. I have followed the versions noticed, which omit (אני), and thus render. Compare verse 48.

28. Her mother's household. Whether they dwell in tents or in houses, it is the custom of the east, for women to have their own apartments.

29. The latter part of this verse, is evidently out of its place, and renders the narrative confused. With Dimock, Houbigant and others, I have transposed it to the next verse.

32. And he brought the &c. This version arises, from considering the verb (בא) in the co-active voice; and it is more probable, that Laban un-

and he ungirded his camels, and gave straw and provender for the camels, and water to wash his feet, and the men's feet who were with 33 him. And food was set before him; but he said, "I will not eat until I have told my busi-34 ness." And they said, "Tell it." "I am," said 35 he, "the servant of Abraham; And Jehovah hath blessed my master, and he is become very great; and he hath given him flocks and herds;
silver and gold; man-servants and maid-servants;
36 camels and asses. And Sarah, my master's wife, bare a son to my master when she was old,
and to him hath he given all that he hath.
37 And my master adjured me, saying, 'Thou shalt not take a wife for my son of the daughters of the Canaanites, in whose land I dwell; 38 But thou shalt go unto my father's house, and to my kindred, and thence take a wife for my 39 son.' And I said to my master, 'Perhaps the 40 woman will not follow me.' And he said to me, 'Jehovah, before whom I have walked, will send his angel with thee, and prosper thy way;
and thou shalt take a wife for my son from my 41 own kindred, and from my father's house. But thou shalt be clear from this my oath, if, when thou comest to my kindred, they will not give thee one: then thou shalt be clear from my oath.'
42 Now I came this day unto the well, and said,
'O Jehovah, the God of my master Abraham,
if now thou makest my journey prosperous; 43 Behold, I stand by this well of water, and the daughters of the men of the city are coming to draw water"; grant, therefore, that when a virgin cometh forth to draw water, and I say to her, 'Give me, I pray thee, a little water out 44 of thy pitcher to drink;' And she say to me,
'Both drink thou, and I will also draw for thy camels,' she may be the woman whom Jehovah hath appointed for my master's son. Now, be- 45

fore I had done speaking to myself, behold, Rebekah came forth with her pitcher on her shoulder; and she went down to the well, and drew water; and I said to her, 'Let me drink,
I pray thee.' And she quickly lowered her 46 pitcher from her shoulder on her arm", and said, 'Drink; and I will let thy camels drink also:' so I drank, and she let the camels drink also. And I asked her, and said, 'Whose 47 daughter art thou?' And she said, 'The daughter of Bethuel, Nahor's son, whom Milcah bare unto him!' Then I put the pendant on her face, and the bracelets on her hands; And I bowed 48
my head, and worshipped Jehovah, and blessed Jehovah the God of my master Abraham, who had led me in the right way to take the daughter of my master's kinsman, for his son. So 49
now if ye will do a true kindness to my master, tell me; and if not, tell me; that I may know what course to take." Then Laban and Beth- 50 uel answered, and said, "From Jehovah this matter hath proceeded; nor is it right for us to say any thing against it. Behold, Rebekah 51 is before thee. Take her, and depart; and let her be the wife of thy master's son, as Jehovah hath ordained." And, when Abraham's servant 52 heard their words, he worshipped Jehovah, bowing himself to the earth. And the servant 53 brought forth jewels of silver, and jewels of gold; and raiment, and gave them to Rebekah.
He gave also to her brother, and to her mother, valuable presents. Then both he and the men 54 who were with him, ate and drank and lodged all night.

When they arose in the morning, the servant
said, "Send me away unto my master." And 55
the brother and the mother of Rebekah said,

girded the camels, and brought water to wash the feet of his guests, than that Abraham's chief servant, should do this for himself and the other servants who were with him. In the days of antiquity, such acts of service, were not thought too mean for a man of wealth to perform.

49. Do a true kindness. Literally, 'do a kindness and truth,' which is a frequent idiom, and signifies as I have rendered.—That I may know &c. I have preferred the sense to the idiomatical expression, 'that I may turn to the right hand or to the left.'

50. Then Laban and Bethuel: It is well known, that unmarried sisters, are in the east, as much under the protection of their brothers, as they are under that of the father. Here we find them jointly acceding to the proposal of Abraham's servant, without either consulting Rebekah or her mother. From the simple statement of facts, they justly concluded this affair was from God, and to his will and pleasure they cheerfully submitted. See Note, Heb. Bible, for the reason of the version.

55. A few weeks. So I have rendered the ambiguous and uncertain terms of the text, as containing what is as probable as any of the versions given.

"Let the damsel abide with us a few weeks ; 56 after that she shall go." But he said to them,
 "Hinder me not ; seeing Jehovah hath prospered my journey, send me away, that I may 57 return to my master." And they said, "We will call the damsel and enquire at her mouth." 58 And they called Rebekah, and said to her,
 "Wilt thou go with this man ?" And she said, 59 "I will go." They then sent away Rebekah their sister, and her nurse, and Abraham's 60 servant, and his men. And they blessed Rebekah, and said to her, "Mayest thou our sister become the mother of thousands and ten thousands ; and may thy seed possess the gate 61 of their enemies." Then Rebekah arose, and her hand-maids, and they rode upon the camels, and followed the man. So the servant of Abraham took Rebekah and departed.
 62 Now Isaac had come from Beer-lahai-roi ; (for 63 he dwelt in the south country). And Isaac had gone out to meditate in the field in the evening ;
 and he raised his eyes, and saw, and behold 64 the camels were coming. Rebekah also raised her eyes, and when she saw Isaac, she alighted 65 off the camel ; And she said to the servant,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. 1. Serious parents should be concerned, that their children may be united to suitable partners. On this subject, the Apostolic precept is, "be not unequally yoked with unbelievers." Abraham would on no account, suffer Isaac to marry one of the daughters of Canaan ; nor did this arise from family pride, but doubtless from a concern, that his son might not be tempted to idolatry. He was aware of female influence, and desirous that his son might have an help-mate in religion as well as in life. Most inquire now, whether the person be rich ; and wealth is esteemed above all other considerations. No wonder that there are so many unhappy marriages.

2. Abraham's servant teaches us on all occasions, to ask divine guidance and direction. Charged with an important commission, he made haste to fulfil it ; and prayed to the God of his master Abraham to prosper his journey. His prayer is simple, but fervent ; and the proposal he makes, by which he might know the will of God, is natural. How good is it to acknowledge God in all our ways ; for then he

63. Isaac, acquainted with the journey of his father's servant, had come to visit his father at Mamre, and to wait for the return of the servant. It is probable, he went out for the purpose of devout meditation, and to implore the kind interposition of Jehovah, in an event so intimately connected with his future happiness.

65. So she took out a veil. It is still customary in that country,

"What man is this that walketh in the field to meet us ?" And the servant said, "It is my master : " therefore she took a veil, and covered herself. The servant then told Isaac all 66 that he had done. And Isaac took Rebekah, 67 and brought her into his mother Sarah's tent, and she became his wife ; and he loved her ; and Isaac was comforted after the death of his mother.

CHAPTER XXV.

B. C. 1853 The sons of Abraham by Keturah ; division of his goods ; age and death of Abraham ; sons of Ishmael ; Esau and Jacob born.

AND Abraham yet took another wife ; and 1 her name was Keturah : And she bare to him 2 Zimran, and Jokshan, and Medan, and Midian, and Ishbak, and Shuah. And Jokshan begot 3 Sheba, and Dedan. And the sons of Dedan were the fathers of the Ashurites, and Letu- shites, and Leummites. And the sons of Mi- 4 dian were, Ephah, and Ephher, and Hanoah, and Abidah, and Eldaah. All these were the offspring of Keturah.

Now Abraham gave all that he had to * his 5 son Isaac. But to the sons whom Abraham 6 will direct our steps. Let us be assured, that God, in some way or other, will answer our sincere petitions, and show himself to be a God 'hearing prayer.'

3. Let servants learn from this example to be diligent and faithful. This servant made no unnecessary delays ; he would not be detained, until he had accomplished the design of his journey. Religion teaches us to be diligent in business, while fervent in spirit. Learn then to show all fidelity in service, and you will find your reward in it, both here and hereafter.

4. Every man ought to set apart some portion of his time for reflection. Isaac appropriated the Evening for this purpose. The works of Nature, the providence of God, and the truths of Divine Revelation, afford ample matter for devout meditation ; and it is in this way, the most pleasing emotions are excited. The greatness and variety of God's works ; his condescension and grace, alternately strike and affect us. "I will meditate on all thy works," was the language of the devout Psalmist. O may we imitate both Isaac and David.

when a woman meets a man on the way, for her to alight, and sit down at a distance veiled, until he be past.

CHAP. XXV. I. From the narrative, this seems to have been after the death of Sarah ; and Abraham lived above 30 years after that event.

2. Midian the third son of Abraham, by Keturah, most frequently occurs in the Mosaic history, and other parts of the scripture. Wells had by his concubines, he gave presents ; and while he yet lived, sent them away eastward from his son Isaac, to the east country (Arabia). And these are the number of the years of the life of Abraham, one hundred and seventy-five. And Abraham expired, and died in a good old age ; and, being old and full of days, was gathered to his people. And his sons Isaac and Ishmael buried him in the cave of Machpelah ; in the field of Ephron, the son of Zohar the Hethite, which is opposite to Mamre. The field which Abraham had purchased of the sons of Heth. There was Abraham buried, and there Sarah his wife.

And after the death of Abraham, God blessed his son Isaac ; and Isaac dwelt at Beer-lahai-roi.

Now these are the decendants of Ishmael, Abraham's son, whom Hagar, the Egyptian, Sarah's handmaid, bare to him. And these are the names of the sons of Ishmael, according to their genealogies : the firstborn of Ishmael was,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1. At length Abraham, the friend of God, and the father of the faithful, dies. His years were many, and like a shock of corn he was gathered to his people. His spirit ascended to inherit the heavenly Canaan, while his sons Isaac and Ishmael, paid the last tribute to departed worth, by conveying the mortal part to his own burying-place. That better country was what he had sought ; and our Lord has honoured his name, by calling heaven, "the bosom of Abraham." He had been distinguished on earth, by the Covenant God had made with him ; by repeated divine manifestations to him ; by great worldly prosperity, and the most magnificent promises respecting his posterity,—and he is still distinguished, as the progenitor of our Lord, in whom all nations are blessed. O that we may live and die like him ; and as children, by faith in the same Saviour, share with him in the glories and bliss of heaven.

2. Let those who possess property, like Abraham dispose of places him on the south east of the lake of Sodom, adjoining the Moabites, Numb. xxii. 4, and xxv. 1—6. The other children are not noticed as heads of clans, and probably died without leaving a numerous posterity.

3. The two sons of Jokshan, Sheba and Dedan, became heads of people, and settled most probably in Arabia Petrea. Wells considers the Sabæans, mentioned Job i. the descendants of Sheba. Dedan was situated near to his brother. Isa. xxi. 13. Jer. xxv. 23. and xlix. 7.

6. To the east country. From other places it is evident, that this phrase here denotes Arabia ; but in many passages, it seems to denote the east in general.

13. The sons of Ishmael were situated on the borders of Egypt, along the Red sea ; and across the desert to the Persian gulph. From Nebaioth, Nebaioth ; then Kedar, and Adbeel, and Mibsam, And Mishma, and Dumah, and Massa, 14 And Hadar, and Tema, and Jetur, and Naphish, 15 and Kedemah. These were the sons of Ishmael, 16 and these their names, according to their towns, and their strong-holds ; twelve chiefs of nations. And these are the years of the life of Ishmael, 17 a hundred and thirty-seven years ; and he expired and died, and was gathered to his people. And he dwelt from Havilah, as one goeth towards Assyria, unto Shur, which is on the borders of Egypt, lying near to all his brethren.

THIS is the account of Isaac the son of Abraham. Abraham begot Isaac. And Isaac when forty years old married Rebekah, the daughter of Bethuel, a Syrian of Padan-aram ; sister to Laban, a Syrian. And Isaac entreated Jehovah for his wife, because she was barren ; and Jehovah heard his entreaty, and Rebekah his wife conceived. And the children struggled together it to their children, and settle them in the world, so as to prevent future quarrels and contentions. Isaac, as the child of the free woman, was the Heir of his chief property ; but to all his other children he gave suitable presents. He acted both wisely and justly, in this as in other things. Let all parents go and do likewise.

3. Ishmael became rich, and great in the days of his father ; and had no fewer than twelve sons, according to God's promise. These were spread abroad and soon became numerous, while Isaac, had but two sons, and these at an advanced period of life. Were we to look at outward circumstances, we might conclude Ishmael preferred to Isaac ; but in this we should be mistaken. God was with him, though dwelling in tents, and almost unknown in the world. So it is now, the poor and obscure, are often the most pious, and pursue their course without noise, towards their eternal rest.

we have the Nabatheans of profane writers. Kedar seems to have become one of the most powerful tribes, as he is most frequently mentioned by the prophets. Tema, doubtless gave his name to that part of Arabia called Tehama. Dumah, Jetur and Naphish are only once mentioned. Isa. xx. 11. and 1 Chron. v. 19, and the other sons of Ishmael are no more noticed.

18. Lying near. I consider (נֶפֶל) as a participle, and here denoting the land allotted to Ishmael, which lay near to the other sons of Abraham, by Keturah.

22. Is it usually so ? i. e. with those pregnant—To consult Jehovah. In what manner this was done, we are not informed. It is most probable it was by Abraham, her father in law, who is styled a prophet.

23. This answer to the enquiry of Rebekah is evidently poetic ; and, in the womb; and she said, "Is it usually so? Why, do I find it thus? And she went to en-23 quire of Jehovah. And Jehovah said to her,

 "Two nations are in thy womb;
 and two sorts of people from thee shall proceed:
 one shall be more valiant than the other;
 and the greater shall be subdued by the less."
 24 And when her days to be delivered were fulfilled, behold, twins were found in her womb.
 25 And the first who came forth was of a reddish colour, and was covered all over as with a hairy garment, and they called his name Esau
 26 [COVERED]. And after that, came forth his brother, and his hand had hold on Esau's heel; therefore his name was called Jacob [SUPPLANTER]. Now Isaac was sixty years old when she 27 bare them. And the boys grew up, and Esau became an expert hunter, a man of the field; but Jacob was a mild man, dwelling in tents.
 28 And Isaac loved Esau, because he ate of his venison; but Rebekah loved Jacob.
 29 Now it happened, that Jacob was boiling some pottage, when Esau came from the field, 30 and was faint, And Esau said to Jacob, "Let me eat, I pray thee, some of that RED, RED, (hence his name was called Edom [RED], for I am faint." And Jacob said, "Sell to me this day 31 thy birthright." And Esau answered, "Behold, 32 I am going to die; and what profit shall this birthright be to me?" And Jacob said, "Swear 33 to me this day;" and he swore to him; and sold his birthright to Jacob. Then Jacob gave Esau 34 bread and boiled lentiles; and he ate and drank, and arose and went his way. Thus Esau despised his birthright.

CHAPTER XXVI.

B. C. 1872. Isaac goeth to Gerar; God instructeth and blesseth him; he is reproved by Abimelech; grows rich; diggeth wells, and makes a covenant with Abimelech; Esau's wives.

AND there was a famine in the land, (beside 1 the first famine which had been in the days of Abraham): and Isaac went unto Gerar, to Abimelech, king of the Philistines. For Jehovah 2 had appeared to him, and said, "Go not down into Egypt; dwell in the land which I mention to thee. Sojourn in this land, and I will be with 3 thee, and will bless thee; for to thee and to thy seed, I will give all these lands, and I will confirm the oath which I swore to Abraham thy father. And I will make thy seed as numerous 4 as the stars of the heavens, and will give to thy

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1. Let us cultivate the spirit of prayer; and in all our trials, seek relief from God. Isaac was twenty years married, before he had children; doubtless this would be his cross, especially when it is considered, that it was by him, Abraham's seed was to be so numerous. He at length pleaded God's promise, and intreated him concerning this thing. He had not from impatience, taken other women to his bed, that by them the promise might be fulfilled. In this he excelled his father, and most of his successors; and at length, God answered him, to the great joy of himself and Rebekah. Such proofs of the efficacy of prayer, should animate us to cry daily to God, for all temporal and spiritual blessings.

2. We learn from the history before us, that children often prove crosses, instead of blessings. The disposition of Esau, must have affected his pious parents. He discovered a disregard to spiritual things; and showed, by selling his birth-right, that he was destitute of every principle of piety. O let us never indulge our appetites, at the expence of duty; let us highly prize our spiritual birth-right, and improve all its advantages, to our own good, and the divine glory:

as such I have printed it. The Idumeans were a numerous people, and became the most formidable enemies of Israel. They were, at last, under David, subdued, and then was this prediction fulfilled.

27. Mild man. The term seems used here in opposition to Esau, who was a wild man.

34. Esau is called profane on account of this deed. Heb. xii. 16. In the family of Abraham, either the first-born, or one divinely appointed, was properly considered as standing in his place, and conveying to his posterity the blessings of the covenant, which God had made with the Patriarch; such as a right to the promised land, a numerous seed, and particularly to be the progenitor of that seed, in whom all nations were to be blessed. Esau did not suppose he had sold his right to the blessing of Abraham, with the birth-right. This blessing God conferred on whom he pleased. It was not withheld from Esau, or given to Jacob, on account of any particular demerit in the one, or merit in the other. God gave it to Isaac, rather than to Ishmael, to Judah and not to Reuben. See Rom. ix. It is generally believed, that before the law of Moses, the first-born son had a right to the priesthood; it belonged solely to him to offer sacrifices. Hence, the first-born or the elders of Israel, were called priests before the Levitical priesthood was established. See Exod. xix. 22. and Job 1. Yet this privilege could only be enjoyed and exercised, while brothers dwelt together, or on public occasions; as it is evident, that when they married, and had families, younger sons might offer sacrifices. Shuekford considers that Esau sold the right of offering sacrifices to Jacob; and on this account he might be justly deemed profane. Vol. ii. p. 7.

CHAP. XXVI. 2. God fulfilled his promise to Abraham, by revealing his will to Isaac; and it could not fail to encourage him, when he heard the high commendation of his father.

10. The remonstrance of Abimelech shows, either that the strictest regard was paid to chastity; or else, that the memory of the calamity, or seed all these lands; for in thy seed shall all the 5 nations of the earth be blessed; Because Abraham thy father obeyed my voice, and kept my charge, my commandments, my statutes and 6 my laws." So Isaac dwelt in Gerar; And the men of the place asked him concerning his wife;

 and he said, "She is my sister;" for he feared 7 to say, "She is my wife;" lest the men of the place should kill him on account of Rebekah;
 for she was a woman of a fair countenance.
 8 But when he had been there a long time, it happened that Abimelech, king of the Philistines, looked out at a window, and saw, and behold, 9 Isaac was playing with Rebekah his wife. And Abimelech called Isaac, and said, "That woman is certainly thy wife; and why saidst thou, 'She is my sister'?" And Isaac answered him, "Because I thought, I may perhaps be put to death 10 on her account." And Abimelech said, "What is this thou hast done to us? One of the people might readily have lain with thy wife, and thus thou wouldst have brought guilt upon us." 11 And Abimelech charged all his people, saying,
 "He that toucheth this man or his wife shall be put to death."
 12 Then Isaac sowed in that land, and received in the same year a hundred-fold increase; for 13 Jehovah blessed him. And he increased in wealth, and continued increasing until he be-14 came very great: For he possessed flocks, and herds, and a great number of servants; so that 15 the Philistines became jealous of him. And all the wells, which the servants of his father
 Abraham had digged, the Philistines stopped up, 16 and filled them with earth. And Abimelech said to Isaac, "Depart from us; for thou art become much mightier than we."
 17 And Isaac departed thence, and pitched his tent in the valley of Gerar, and dwelt there.

peculiar affliction, sent in consequence of Sarah's having been taken, now excited his fears. See Gen. xx. &c. The command given to the people, serves to justify the latter supposition.

And Isaac digged again the wells of water, 18 which the servants of Abraham his father had digged; (for the Philistines had stopped them after the death of Abraham,) and he called their names after the names by which his father had called them. And Isaac's servants digged in the 19 valley, and found there a well of spring-water.
 And the herd-men of Gerar strove with Isaac's 20 herd-men, saying, "The water is ours!" He therefore called the name of the well Esek [STRIFE;] because they strove with him. And 21 they digged another well, and they strove for that also; and he called its name Sitnah [OPPOS-22 TION.] And he removed thence, and digged another well; but for that they strove not; so he called its name Rehoboth [ROOM.] "For now, said he, Jehovah hath made room for us, that we may be fruitful in the land. And thence he went up 23 to Beer-sheba; And Jehovah appeared to him 24 on that night, and said, "I am the God of Abraham thy father. Fear not; for I am with thee, and will bless thee, and multiply thy seed for the sake of my servant Abraham." And there 25 he built an altar, and called upon the name of Jehovah; he also pitched his tent there; and there, his servants digged a well.

Then Abimelech came to him from Gerar, 26 and Ahuzzath his friend, and Phichol the chief captain of his army. And Isaac said to 27 them, "Wherefore come ye to me, seeing ye hate me, and have sent me away from you?"
 And they said, "We have clearly seen that 28 Jehovah is with thee; we therefore propose, that there may be a mutual oath between us and thee.
 Let us make a covenant with thee, that as we have 29 not touched thee, and have done nothing but good to thee, and have sent thee away in peace, so thou wilt do to us no harm, now thou art blessed by Jehovah. And he made for them a feast, 30 and render accordingly.

 32 departed from him in peace. And on the same day it happened, that Isaac's servants came, and told him concerning a well which they had digged; and said to him, "We have found water."
 33 And he called it Sheba [THE SWEARING-WELL;] therefore the present name of the city is Beer-sheba.
 34 Esau was now forty years old, and he married Judith the daughter of Beeri a Hethite, and Bashemath the daughter of Elon, also a Hethite;
 35 And they were the cause of much grief both to Isaac and Rebekah.

B. C. 1796 Isaac sendeth Esau for venison; Rebekah instructeth Jacob to obtain the blessing, when he dissembles and obtains it; Esau bringeth Isaac venison, who trembles; Esau complaineth, and by importunity obtaineth another blessing.

- 1 ISAAC had now become old, and his eyes were so dim, that he could not distinctly see; and he called Esau his eldest son, and said to him, "My son;" and he answered him, "Behold, I am here!" And he said, "Behold now, I am old; and the day of my death I know not.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVI. 1. How comfortable is it to converse with God, as the God of our fathers! It was so to Isaac; undoubtedly he was glad, to be heir to so good a man, and to have the promise, made to Abraham, renewed to him and his seed. As we desire the God of our fathers to bless us, let us see to it that we walk in their steps. "Know thou the God of thy fathers, and serve him with a perfect heart and a willing mind." As our God, let us praise him; as our fathers' God, let us exalt him.

2. We here see the son, manifest the same frailty as his father had done. Twice had Abraham been ensnared, by the unbecoming fear of man; and Isaac was not warned by his example. Let us copy the virtues, but avoid the frailties, even of our

to it, as that before called by the same name. Gen. xxi. 31. Here was afterwards built a city, and which is mentioned as the boundary of Judea on the south.

CHAP. XXVII. 3. Thy quiver. Mercer renders, thy sword, or faulchion; and I doubt, whether this is not the sense of the word.

4. That my soul may bless thee. Here, as often, the term soul is used for the pronoun, 'that I may bless thee.' I have retained the idiom, because it cannot be misunderstood.—Isaac seems to have been influenced by a very low motive, in this instance; unless we suppose with Lightfoot,

Now, therefore, take, I pray thee, thy weapons, 3 thy quiver and thy bow; and go into the field, and take for me some venison; And make 4 me savoury meat, such as I like, and bring it to me, that I may eat; that my soul may bless thee before I die."

Now Rebekah heard when Isaac spoke to 5 Esau his son. And Esau went out into the field to hunt for venison, to bring to his father. And Rebekah spoke to Jacob, her "younger" 6 son, saying, "behold, I heard thy father speak to Esau thy brother, saying, 'Bring me venison, and make for me savoury meat, that I may eat, and bless thee in the presence of Jehovah before my death.' Now therefore, my 8 son, obey my voice according to what I command thee. Go now to the flock, and thence 9 bring to me two kids "tender and good"; and I will make of them savoury meat for thy father, such as he liketh; And thou shalt bring it to 10 thy father, that he may eat, and that he may bless thee before his death." But Jacob said 11 to Rebekah his mother, "Behold, Esau my brother is a hairy man, and I am a smooth man. My father perhaps may feel me, and I 12 shall seem to him a deceiver; and bring on myself a curse, and not a blessing." And his mo- 13 fathers. We should learn wisdom by their very errors; and the frailties of good men are recorded, to show us, that salvation is of grace, and not of debt; and to be as mementos to us, not to be self-confident, but to trust in the Lord.

3. We witness in the men of Gerar, the spirit of the world. They were jealous of the growing prosperity of Isaac. Jehovah was with him, or otherwise, they would most probably, not only have stopped his wells, but have seized all he had. Fear, not love, led them to propose a Covenant with him; but as a man of peace, he accepted the proposal. Let us endeavour as far as possible, to live peaceably with all men; and should we meet with envy and opposition, let us study to conquer both by kindness and gentleness, and God will make room for us.

that he adopted this method in order to learn, whether Esau was the proper object of the blessing. Isaac knew, that in some way Esau was to be inferior to Jacob; he knew also, that he had sold his birth-right to Jacob; but seems not to have known, which of his two sons, God had destined to enjoy the blessing, or to inherit the promise made to Abraham. It is evident he was partial to Esau, and probably, secretly wished, that he might enjoy the blessing; yet when he found, that God had given it to Jacob, however criminal the method used to obtain it, he acquiesced.

13. The design of Rebekah might be good, being persuaded of the ther said, 'Upon me be thy curse, my son; only obey my voice, and go bring to me the kids.'

 14 And he went, and took, and brought them to his mother; and his mother made of them savoury meat, such as his father liked. And Rebekah took the choicest raiment of her elder son Esau, which she had by her in the house, 15 and put them on Jacob her younger son; And the skins of the kids she put on his hands, and on the smooth part of his neck. And she gave the savoury meat, and the bread, which she had prepared, into the hand of her son Jacob.
 16 And he came unto his father, and said, "My father!" And he said, "here I am; who art thou, my son?" And Jacob said to his father, "I am Esau thy firstborn; I have done as thou badest me; arise, I pray thee, sit and eat of my venison, that thy soul may bless me." And Isaac said to his son, "How is it that thou hast found it so quickly, my son?" Because Jehovah thy God, said he, brought it to me." Again Isaac said to Jacob, "Come near, I pray thee, that I may feel thee, my son, and know whether or not thou be my very son Esau." And Jacob went near to Isaac his father; and he felt him, and said, "The voice is the voice of Jacob, but the hands are the hands of Esau."
 23 And he discerned him not, because his hands were hairy, like the hands of his brother Esau; so he blessed him. Yet he said, "Art thou my very son Esau?" And he said, "I am." And Isaac said, "Bring it near to me, and I will eat of my son's venison, that my soul may bless thee." And he brought it near to him, and he ate; and he brought him wine, and he drank.
 26 And his father Isaac said to him, "Come near now, and kiss me, my son." And he came near, and kissed him; and Isaac smelled the smell of his raiment, and blessed him, and said, "See, the smell of my son is as the smell of a full grown" field which Jehovah hath blessed."

 "May God give thee of the dew of the heavens, 28 and of the fatness of the earth; abundance also of corn, of wine and of oil! To thee may people be subject; 29 to thee may nations bow down! be thou Lord over thy own brethren; and let thy mother's sons to thee pay homage. Accursed be he who curseth thee; and be he blessed who blesseth thee."

Now when Isaac had made an end of blessing 30 Jacob, and Jacob was scarcely gone out from the presence of Isaac his father, Esau his brother came in from his hunting. And he also had 31 made savoury meat, and brought it to his father, and said to his father, "Let my father arise, and eat of his son's venison, that thy soul may bless me." And Isaac his father said to him, "Who 32 art thou?" And he answered, "I am thy son, thy firstborn, Esau." Isaac now, in the greatest 33 fear, trembled and said, "Who or where is he that hath taken venison, and brought it to me, of all which I have eaten before thou camest? for Him I have blessed, and blessed shall He be." And when Esau heard the words of his father, 34 he cried with a great and exceedingly bitter cry, and said to his father, "Bless me, even me also, O my father." And Isaac said, "Thy brother 35 came deceitfully, and hath got thy blessing." "Is he not, said Esau, rightly called Jacob [sup- 36 PLANTER]? for twice he hath supplanted me. He before got my birth-right; and behold, now he hath got my blessing." Yet he said, "Hast thou not reserved a blessing for me?" And Isaac answered and said to Esau, 37 "Behold, I have made him thy Lord; all his brethren I have made subject to him; corn, wine and oil I have given for his support; and now my son, what can I do for thee?" Again Esau said to his father, "Hast thou but 38 truth of the prediction, "that the greater should be subdued by the less;" but the method she adopted, was altogether unlawful. She ought to have informed Isaac, how she understood the prediction; and have prayed to God, to direct him in the bestowment of the blessing; and not to have been guilty of imposing on her husband, and teaching her son Jacob, deliberately to tell a lie and persist in it. The principle, that the goodness of the end sanctifies the means, ought to be held in abhorrence.

28. Of wine and of oil. The word (סמך) is generally rendered in the common version, new wine. It denotes whatever is expressed from fruit; and here implies the juice of the vine and the olive.

38. Raised his voice and wept. The Septuagint makes Isaac raise his voice and weep, when he heard the language of Esau. Geddes supposes that one blessing, my father? bless me, even me also, O my father!" And Esau raised his voice and wept. And Isaac his father answered and said to him,

"Behold, remote from the fatness of the earth, and the dew of the heavens, shall be thy dwelling:
40 On thy own desert thou shalt live, and to thy brother thou shalt be subject; but the time will come, when thou shalt prevail, and break his yoke from off thy neck."

CHAPTER XXVIII.

B. C. 1760. Esau threateneth Jacob; Rebekah counseleth Jacob; Isaac blesseth him; Esau marrieth; Jacob's vision; the stone of Bethel, and Jacob's vow.

41 ESAU now hated Jacob, because of the blessing, with which his father had blessed him. And Esau said in his heart, "The days of mourning for my father will soon come; then will I slay my brother Jacob." But these words of Esau, 42 her elder son, were told to Rebekah; and she sent and called Jacob, her younger son, and said to him, "Behold, thy brother Esau comforteth himself in respect to thee, having resolved to kill thee. Now, therefore, my son, hearken to 43 my voice; arise, and flee thou unto Haran, to Laban my brother; And abide with him for some 44 time, until thy brother's rage be over. When 45 thy brother's anger towards thee is over, and he hath forgot what thou hast done to him; then I will send for thee and bring thee thence: for why should I be deprived of you both in one day?"

And Rebekah said to Isaac, I am weary of my 46 life, because of these daughters of Heth; should Jacob take for a wife, one of the daughters of Heth, one like these daughters of the land, what will my life be to me?" Isaac then called Jacob, I

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVIII. 1. What infirmities often attend old age! Isaac was nearly blind, and in a great measure dependent on others. Though he could meditate and pray, yet he could no longer go abroad, to view the beauties of nature. Painful is it to lose any of our senses, and most of all, that of sight. Let young persons be admonished, to "remember their Creator, before the evil days of old age come, in which they shall say, they have no pleasure." While they enjoy sight, let them improve it, by reading God's holy word, and treasuring it up in their hearts. Let the aged set their house in order, and prepare for death. We know not how soon we may die. Let this excite us to greater diligence in our religious duties.

2. See the wisdom of God in carrying on his own gracious purposes. He can over-rule the misguided passions of men, to perfect his own schemes, as in the case of Isaac, who, contrary to his partial affection for Esau, was led to confer, and afterwards to confirm, the blessing on Jacob. The means by which it was obtained on the part of Jacob, cannot be vindicated. This, however is no objection against the credibility of the fact itself, which was undoubtedly under the divine direction, for it is said, "By faith Isaac blessed Jacob and Esau concerning things to come." Heb. xi. 20.

that they thus read, (וַיִּתְּעַב יִצְחָק אֶבְרָהָם וְיִעֲקֹב וַיֹּאמֶר) "And Isaac his father was grieved, and answered and said." Though this is ingenious, as there is no variety of lection in the Sam. or mss. I adhere to the text.

39. The version I have given, is that of Castalio, Le Clerc, Houbigant, and of Purver; and unless we understand the term (מִסְמָרִים) in this sense, there would be no contrast between the benediction of Jacob and that of Esau; nor was Idumæa, or the land of Edom, in fact, a fat, fertile soil, but a barren, mountainous country. Malachi i. 3.

40. The ambiguity of the word, (חֵרֶב) as it is pronounced, makes the difference in the version. Had the word here meant a sword, it would have been (בְּחֵרֶב) as it is usually expressed, and not (עַל חֵרֶב); literally

3. How unaccountably does God dispose of his favours! This is Paul's reflection from this story; Rom. ix. 16. "It is not of him that willeth, nor of him that runneth, but of God that showeth mercy." Esau was willing, and ran; but God knew him to be a profane man, and gave the blessing to Jacob. In all this he doeth according to his own will, and acts with unerring wisdom, even when his dispensations are darkest: this is a good reason why we should submit to his determinations; "there are many devices in the heart of man, but the counsel of the Lord, that shall stand."

4. Let us be careful not to despise the blessing, lest it be too late to obtain it. This is another reflection of Paul's in Heb. xii. 16, 17, "for (speaking of profane Esau, he says) ye know how that afterward, when he would have inherited the blessing, he was rejected: for he found no place of repentance, (i. e. no way to change his father's mind,) though he sought it carefully with tears." Esau wept when it was too late, and so will impenitent sinners hereafter; they will cry with an exceeding bitter cry, but there is no blessing for them; they will know how to value it when it is too late. "To day, therefore, if ye will hear his voice, harden not your hearts; but seek the Lord while he may be found, and call upon him while he is near."

on thy sword. As the word often denotes 'dry, waste, barren places,' this sense is most apposite here, and explains the former verse. It is scarcely necessary to remind the reader, that these predictions refer more to the posterity of Jacob and Esau, than to themselves.

41. Said in his heart; i. e. purposed. He had given some indications of his purpose, as his words were told to Rebekah. I join these verses to the following Chapter, as evidently making a better division.

45. Rebekah evidently feared, that in case Esau accomplished his design, it would be the death of both her sons, as Esau must have been punished as a murderer.

46. This seems an expedient to induce Isaac to send away Jacob;

and blessed him, and charged him, and said to him, "Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan. Arise, go to Padan-aram, to the house of Bethuel, thy mother's father; and thence take a wife from among the daughters of Laban thy mother's brother. "And may God; the Almighty, bless thee, and make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, that thou mayest become a multitude of people! And may he give to thee the blessing of thy father" Abraham, both to thee, and to thy seed; that thou mayest inherit the land in which thou sojournest, which God gave to Abraham." So Isaac sent Jacob away, that he might go unto Padan-aram, to Laban, (son of Bethuel, a Syrian), the brother of Rebekah, the mother of Esau and Jacob.

And Esau saw that Isaac had blessed Jacob, and sent him away to Padan-aram, thence to take a wife; and that, as he blessed him, he gave him a charge, saying, "Thou shalt not take a wife of the daughters of Canaan"; And that Jacob had obeyed his father and mother, and was gone to Padan-aram: Thus Esau seeing that the daughters of Canaan pleased not Isaac his father; He went to Ishmael and took to be his wife (beside the wives which he had) Mahalath, the daughter of Ishmael, Abraham's son, the sister of Nebaioth.

Now Jacob had departed from Beer-sheba, to go to Haran; And he lighted upon a certain place, and lodged there, because the sun was set; and he took one of the stones of the place, and put it under his head, and lay down in that place. And he dreamed, and behold, he saw a ladder set up on the earth, the top of which reached to the heavens; and lo, the angels of God were ascending and descending on it. And, behold, Jehovah stood near to him, and said, "I am Jehovah, the God of Abraham thy father, and the God of Isaac. This land on which thou liest, I will give to thee and to thy seed. And thy seed shall be as numerous as the dust of the earth, and thou shalt spread abroad to the west, and to the east, and to the north, and to the south; and in thee, and in thy seed, shall all the families of the earth be blessed. And, behold, I am with thee, and will keep thee wheresoever thou goest, and will bring thee back into this land; for I will not leave thee, until I have done what I have promised to thee." Jacob now awoke out of his sleep, and said, "Surely Jehovah is in this place, though I knew it not." And he was afraid, and said, "How awful is this place! This is nothing less than the house of God; yea, this is the gate of the heavens!"

And Jacob arose early in the morning, and took the stone which he had put under his head, and set it up as a pillar, and poured oil upon the top of it. And he called the name of that place Beth-el [THE HOUSE-OF-GOD]; whereas the name of that city was at first Ulam-Luz. And Jacob made a vow, saying, "If thou, O God, wilt be with me, and keep me in the way I am going; and wilt give me bread to eat and raiment to put on, And bring me back to my father's house in peace; and if thou Jehovah and it does not appear, that Rebekah informed him of Esau's wicked purposes.

CHAP. XXVIII. 10, 11. I follow the reading of the Samaritan, as being more appropriate; and the manner in which Jacob lodged, is yet the custom of the Arabs. Wrapping their head in their mantle, they often sleep abroad with a stone for their pillow.

12. This vision represents the providence of God over all things in heaven or on earth; and that the angels are his servants to do his pleasure. Is there not an allusion to this ladder, in what our Lord says to Nathaniel, John i. 51? For it is by him, that all things in heaven and earth are reconciled; and by him, that divine intercourse is opened and maintained.

13. Near to him. The word (עָלַי) our translators referred to the ladder, and render, above it; and it may doubtless be so referred: but it will bear the version I have given, and it is much more probable, that Jacob saw Jehovah in the vision, not standing at the top of the ladder, which we are told, reached to the heavens, but at the foot of it, standing near to him. Beside, if Jehovah stood above the ladder, he stood above the heavens, and I cannot conjecture, how in this case Jacob could behold him.

18. Poured oil on it. From this it appears, Jacob had taken provisions for his journey, and might have attendants, though no mention is made of any. Oil was an article of food; and by anointing the stone, he consecrated it, and called the place by a new name, to perpetuate the memory of his remarkable vision.

19. I have followed the Sam. and Sept. in making Ulam, a part of the name of the place. Indeed it would be an useless pleonasm, viewed in any other light.

21. And if thou Jehovah wilt be, &c. Our common version makes this clause a part of the conditions annexed to the vow. 'Then shall the Lord

22 wilt be a God to me, Then shall this stone which I have set up as a pillar be a House of God; and the tenth part of all which thou shalt give to me, I will surely devote to thee."

CHAPTER XXIX.

B. C. 1763 Jacob cometh to the well at Haran; is entertained by Laban; covenanteth for Rachel and is deceived with Leah; but afterwards marryeth Rachel.

1 THEN Jacob went on his journey, and came
2 into the eastern country. And he looked, and behold, a well in a field, and, lo, there were three shepherds with their flocks lying by it; for out of that well were the flocks watered. (Now a great stone was upon the mouth of the 3 well; But when all the "shepherds" were there assembled, they rolled the stone from the mouth of the well, and watered the flocks, and then put the stone again in its place upon the mouth
4 of the well). And Jacob said to them, "My brethren, whence are ye?" And they said, 5 "Of Haran are we." "Do ye know, said he to them, Laban the grandson of Nahor?" And 6 they answered, "We do know him." Again

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVIII. 1. How suitable is it, when our children are going from under our care and inspection, to commend them to God, to pray that they may be under his guidance and direction. So Isaac did, and his prayer was soon answered! How highly should children value the prayers of their parents, and endeavour to improve by them, in cultivating a like devotional spirit.

2. God spoke to the fathers in divers manners, is the remark of the Apostles. One of these ways was by dreams and visions; and how interesting, how delightful must have been the vision of Jacob! It showed, that wherever he might be, God was there; and that he employed in some way, unknown to us, his holy angels as the ministers of his providence, and especially as "ministering to the heirs of salvation." The language addressed to him was full of mercy and kindness. He is assured, that the promise made to his fathers, was entailed on him; that God would keep him, and bring him back in safety. This be my God.' So the Vulg. Syr. and Persian. The other ancient versions make it a part of the vow. 'And thou Lord be a God to me.' This rendering is adopted by Delgado, Geddes, Michaelis and others.

CHAP. XXIX. 2. The common text, makes Jacob hold a conversation with three flocks of sheep; but the context and the Samaritan text, happily lead us to the true sense of the passage.

3. I include this verse and the close of the preceding, in a parenthesis as relating the custom which the shepherds observed, when watering the flocks. The reason of this custom, Chardin has stated; for he says, "In these arid climes, they cover their wells, lest the sand, which is put in motion by

he said to them, "Is he well?" And they replied, "He is well; and lo! yonder cometh Rachel his daughter with the flock." Again he 7 said, "Lo, it is yet high day, nor is it time that the cattle should be gathered in; water ye the flocks, that they may go and feed." But 8 they said, "We cannot, until all the "shepherds are assembled, and have rolled the stone from the mouth of the well; that so we may water the flocks."

And while he was yet speaking with them, 9 Rachel came with her father's flock; for she was the shepherdess. And as soon as Jacob saw 10 Rachel, the daughter of Laban, his mother's brother, and the flock of Laban his mother's brother, Jacob went near, and rolled away the stone from the mouth of the well, and watered the flock of Laban, his mother's brother. And 11 Jacob kissed Rachel, and raised his voice, and wept. And when Jacob had told Rachel that 12 he was her father's kinsman, and that he was the son of Rebekah, she then ran and told her father. And when Laban heard the report of 13 Jacob, his sister's son, he ran out to meet him, was calculated to yield support, amidst those difficulties which he had to encounter. Let us read and believe the promises God has made for our encouragement and comfort, in our spiritual journey; and cheerfully rely on the conducting hand of God in his providence.

3. Let the discovery of God's love and kindness to us, lead us to renew our vows to him. Thus Jacob did; solemnly engaging, that if the Lord would be with him, and keep him, he would devote the tenth of all to his service. He did not ask great things here. If thou wilt grant me food and raiment, is his modest request. Nature indeed is content with little, and grace with less; but pride and ambition are never satisfied. Let us imitate Jacob in his pious design. He would build an Altar on his return, and there he would worship. We cannot but feel a kind of regard, to the places where God has remarkably blessed us! Let us thankfully remember all such Bethels—they are to us the gates of the heavens.

the least wind, should fill them up." Hence, the propriety of the custom, of not removing the stone, till all the shepherds were assembled. And hence is also answered, the difficulty which some have started, that if three shepherds could not remove the stone, how could Jacob? It was not for want of strength, but they could not violate an established custom. Compare verse 8. and Ch. xxiv. 25.

13. The words added seem necessary to complete the sense; and it was natural for Laban to inquire, why he had left his father; and come so long a journey.

14. My flesh and my bone. A strong orientalism to express near and brought him to his house. And Jacob told Laban the whole matter, respecting his journey. And Laban said to him, "Surely thou art my bone and my flesh."

When Jacob had dwelt with him one full month, Then Laban said to him, "Because thou art my kinsman, shouldst thou therefore serve me for nought? Tell me what thy wages shall be." Now Laban had two daughters; the name of the elder was Leah, and the name of the younger Rachel. Leah was tender-eyed; but Rachel was beautiful, both in form and in countenance. And as Jacob loved Rachel, he therefore said, "I will serve thee seven years for Rachel, thy younger daughter." And Laban said, "It is better that I should give her to thee, than that I should give her to any other man: abide with me." So Jacob agreed to serve seven years for Rachel; yet, through his love for her, they seemed to him as only a few days.

Now Jacob said to Laban, "Give to me my wife, for my days are full, that I may go in to her." And Laban assembled all the men of the place, and made a feast. But when the evening had come, he took his daughter Leah, and brought her to his apartment, that he might go in to her. And Laban gave his maid-servant Zilpah, to his daughter Leah for a hand-maid. But when the morning came, behold, Jacob saw that it was Leah; and he said to Laban, "What is this thou hast done to me?"

27. v So Sam. and Versions.

Did I not agree to serve thee for Rachel? Why hast thou deceived me?" And Laban said, "To give the younger before the elder, must not be done in our country. Complete this one's marriage-week, and I will give to thee the other also, for the service with which thou shalt serve me yet other seven years." And Jacob consented to do so; and when he had completed her marriage-week, Laban also gave to him his daughter Rachel for a wife. And Laban gave his maid-servant Bilhah, to his daughter Rachel, for a hand-maid. And he went in also to Rachel; and he loved Rachel more than Leah, and served him for her yet other seven years.

And when Jehovah saw that Leah was not esteemed, he made her fruitful; but Rachel continued barren. And Leah conceived, and bare to Jacob a son, and she called his name Reuben [BEHOLD-A-SON]; for she said, "Surely Jehovah hath beheld mine affliction; now, therefore, my husband will love me." Again she conceived, and bare a son; and said, "Because Jehovah heard that I was not esteemed, he hath, therefore, given to me this son also;" and she called his name Simeon [HE HEARETH THE AFFLICTED]; Again she conceived, and bare a son; and said, "Now at length will my husband be attached to me, because I have born to him three sons;" therefore was his name called Levi [ATTACHMENT]. Again she conceived, and bare a son; and she said, "Now will

26. Must not be so done. I acquiesce in the opinion of those commentators, who consider this as a mere artifice, designed to hide his governing motive. Had such a custom obtained, he ought to have mentioned it to Jacob; but the feast he prepared, and the invitation of his neighbours, prove that no such custom did obtain. In the following verse, he discloses his real motive for this base transaction. He knew the love Jacob had for Rachel, and considering it as certain, that he would serve him other seven years for her, he makes the offer, which Jacob accepted.

27. Marriage-week. This proves the period of feasting, on account of marriage, which obtained in Judea, and throughout the east in remote ages. See Judg. xiv. 12. According to Chardin, the bride and bridegroom, with the friends of their own sex, kept the feast in their own apartments. Hence may be explained, the phrase of the prophet. "The voice of the bride, and the voice of the bridegroom." Jer. xxvi. 10. The festal noise of each, was heard from their separate apartments.

CHAP. XXX. 3. Bare for my knees. It appears from this, that when a woman gave to her husband one of her slaves, the children were relationship.

17. Serve thee seven years. Jacob, according to the custom of those times, purchased his wife; but considering the wealth of Laban, it should seem, he did not treat his daughters with becoming respect.

31. My days are full. I have so rendered, as conveying the ambiguity of the original. The sense I take to be, "It is now time for me to marry; I am growing old." Jacob was now more than sixty years old. Others apply the words to the expiration of his seven years' service, but this application I think impossible. It is evident that the fourteen years of Jacob's servitude, ended on the birth of Joseph, his eleventh child, (see Ch. xxx. 25;) and if Rachel did not give her handmaid Bilhah to Jacob, till after Leah had born to him three sons; nor Leah give him Zilpah, till after she found that she had ceased to bear; it will be utterly impossible to reconcile this with the supposition, that Jacob had all these children born to him in the short space of less than seven years.

23. From the privacy of female apartments in the east, Laban might easily thus impose on Jacob.

I praise Jehovah;" therefore she called his name Judah [PRAISE]. She then ceased to bear.

CHAPTER XXX.

B. C. 1762 Rachel, being barren, giveth to Jacob her maid; so also Leah giveth hers. Rachel at length bringeth forth Joseph. Jacob's wealth.

1 AND when Rachel saw that she bare to Jacob no children, she envied her sister, and said to Jacob, "Give to me children, or else I die."
2 And Jacob was angry with Rachel; and he said, "Am I in the place of God, who hath withheld from thee the fruit of the womb?" But she said, "Behold my hand-maid Bilhah; go in to her, that she may bear for my knees, that, through her, I also may have children." So she gave to him Bilhah, her hand-maid for a wife;
3 and Jacob went in to her. And Bilhah, the hand-maid of Rachel, conceived, and bare to Jacob a son. And Rachel said, "God hath done justice to me; for he hath heard my voice also, and hath given to me a son;" therefore called she
4 his name Dan [HATH DONE JUSTICE]. And Bilhah, Rachel's hand-maid, again conceived, and bare to Jacob a second son. And Rachel said, "With great wrestlings have I wrestled with my sister, and have prevailed." So she called 5 his name Naphtali [MY WRESTLING]. When Leah saw that she had ceased to bear, she took Zilpah, her hand-maid, and gave her for a wife to Jacob; and he went in to her". And Zilpah, the hand-maid of Leah, conceived, and bare to Jacob a son. And Leah said, "I am 11 prosperous;" therefore she called his name Gad [PROSPERITY]. Again Zilpah, the hand-maid of Leah, conceived, and bare to Jacob a second son. And Leah said, "Happy am I; for women will call me happy." So she called his name Asher [HAPPY].

Now Reuben went out in the days of wheat harvest, and found mandrakes in the field, and brought them to his mother Leah. And Rachel said to Leah, "Give to me, I pray thee, some of thy son's mandrakes." And she said to her, "Is it so small a matter that thou hast taken away my husband, that thou wouldst take away my son's mandrakes also?" And Rachel said, "Not so; to night he shall lie with thee, for thy son's mandrakes."

And when Jacob came from the field in the evening, Leah went out to meet him, and said, "Thou must come in to me to night"; for I have certainly hired thee with my son's mandrakes." So he lay with her that night. And God hearkened to Leah, and she conceived, and bare to Jacob a fifth son. And Leah said, "God hath given to me my reward, because I gave my hand-maid to my husband." So she called his name Issachar [A REWARD IS HE].

CHAP. XXX. 5. * Sept. 9. * Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIX. 1. Animated by the vision at Bethel, Jacob pursued his journey, and arrived at the country of his ancestors. He arrived safe through the protecting hand of God. So far God was with him. If we have had any divine communications, any comforts in religion, let this animate us to pursue our heavenly journey, to run the Christian race, and "press forward towards the mark, for the prize of our high calling." "O may we never be weary in well-doing; for in due time we shall reap if we faint not."

2. Jacob was courteous and candid; courteous to the shepherds he met with, and candid in avowing to Laban the reasons of his journey. Let all Christians imitate him in the practice of these virtues. Nothing is more unbecoming the profession of Christianity, than rudeness and incivility, or more contrary to its genuine spirit. This reckoned hers; and in this way they consoled themselves, for the want of having children.

8. With great wrestlings. Literally, 'with wrestlings of God;' where the divine name is again used as an epithet.

11. I am prosperous. Our old versions rendered, 'in good Luck,' and consists in meekness, gentleness and love; and where these graces obtain, they will produce a courteous behaviour. Let us on all occasions, be candid, frank and open. Where no ill designs are cherished, there is no need of secrecy and guile.

10. * Sept. 15. * Sept. 16. * Sam.

3. Let us learn from Jacob, that God will not let the sins of his own people go unpunished; and in the punishment, he often marks the nature of their sin. Jacob had obtained the birth-right artfully, and the blessing, by an act of falsehood and deceit; and now he is punished by the wiles of Laban. He felt tenderly on this occasion; and the circumstance could not fail to bring his sin to remembrance. In this manner, God humbles us and brings us to repentance. Let us in all our afflictions, inquire, Is there not a cause? Is not God marking some of our sins? Let us hear the rod, and benefit by it.

Geddes adopts this version. Castel explains the word to mean, 'Fortune, Prosperity;' and this sense I have preferred. The various reading is not inapposite, 'prosperity cometh.'

14. Mandrakes. Some have doubted, whether the word signifies mandrake, or whether it may not denote, some particular species of melons.

19 Again Leah conceived, and bare to Jacob a 20 sixth son. And Leah said, "God hath endowed me with a good endowment. Now will my husband delight in me, because I have born to him six sons." So she called his name Zebulun 21 [MILK]. And she afterwards bare a daughter, and called her name Dinah.
22 God now remembered Rachel; and he heark-23 ened to her, and made her fruitful. And she conceived, and bare to Jacob a son; and she said, "God hath taken away my reproach."
24 And she called his name Joseph [MAY HE ADD];
for she said, "May Jehovah add to me another son."
25 And it was about the time when Rachel bare Joseph, that Jacob said to Laban, "Send me away, that I may go to my own place, and 26 to my own country. Give to me my wives, for whom I have served thee, and my children, and let me go; for thou knowest what service I 27 have done for thee." And Laban said to him,
"Let me, I pray thee, find favour in thine eyes.
I have learned by experience that Jehovah hath 28 blessed me for thy sake. Appoint unto me therefore," said he, "thine own hire, and I 29 will give it." And he said to him, "Thou knowest what service I have done for thee, and what, through me, hath been thy acquisition.
30 For the little which thou hadst before I came,
is now increased into an abundance; for, through my labour, hath Jehovah blessed thee. And now, when shall I also provide for mine own house?" And Laban said, "What must I give to thee?" And Jacob said, "Thou shalt not give to me any thing; but if thou wilt do this thing, I will again tend and keep thy flock. Pass thou 32 to day through thy whole flock, and remove thence every speckled and spotted beast among the goats, and every brown beast among the sheep; then let the spotted and speckled among the goats, and the brown among the sheep, be hereafter my hire. So shall my right-33 eousness answer for me, when, in time to come my hire shall come before thee; let every one that is not speckled and spotted among the goats, and brown among the sheep, found with me, be accounted stolen." And Laban said, 34

"Behold it shall be according to thy own words."

And he removed that day the he-goats that 35 were ringstreaked and spotted, and all the she-goats that were speckled and spotted, (every one that had any white in it,) and all the brown among the sheep, and gave them in charge to his own sons. And he set three days' journey 36 between them and Jacob. And Jacob tended the rest of Laban's flocks.

*Now the angel of God spoke to Jacob in a dream, and said, "Jacob?" And he answered,
"I am here." And he said, "Raise now thine eyes, and see how all the rams that leap on the flocks are ringstreaked, speckled or grizzled!
For I, the God of Bethel, (where thou anoint-

The reasons why Rachel desired this fruit are not known. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

29. It appears from this instance, that the idea of disgrace was attached thus early to barrenness. We find it obtained down to the times of the gospel.

30. Through my labour. Literally, 'through my feet;' but the word, Hittington has proved, means metaphorically labour, and not 'coming,' as it is rendered. By the version given Isa. lviii. 13, may be explained,
"Blessed are they who employ the labour of the ox and the ass."

32. The proposal of Jacob to Laban is uncommonly obscure. No-bilus observes, that Jerom thought the present text was corrupted. No opposite sense can be elicited from the whole as it now stands; and neither the nature of the proposal furnish aid in this exigence. Happily the context, and the nature of the proposal furnish aid in this exigence. By admitting two words into the text, the whole is clear; the first, indeed, is supported by one ms. and the second from verse 35. The various reading, 'pass thou,' is supported by the 35 verse, where it is evident it was Laban, not Jacob, who passed through the flock, and separated the spotted and brown from the rest.

36. That the long paragraph, only found now in the Sam. was once in the text, is most probable, if not absolutely certain, from the narrative of Jacob in the following chapter. Shuckford, and many of the best Critics, consider the whole genuine. If this vision succeeded the bargain Jacob had made, as is most probable, it was evidently designed to assure him, that he should receive an ample reward.

37. The method Jacob used, by peeling rods, and placing them before the cattle in coupling time, has given rise to various opinions and warm disputes. It has been said, that this was a natural means, sufficient to produce the effects noticed. Aristotle, Pliny, and others have been cited, to prove, that impressions made on the imagination of the dam at the time of conception, may have a powerful influence on the shape and colour of the young. Admitting this, is it supposeable that Jacob possessed a secret, unknown to others? The opinion of Shuckford, seems to me the most rational. He supposes, that God, who had seen the injustice of Laban, determined to punish him and to reward Jacob; and that as he appeared to Jacob in a dream, and showed him the produce of his flock to be according to his wishes, he ordered him to make use of the rod as a trial of his faith, and as a test of his obedience;—that Jacob obeyed, not believ-

CHAPTER XXXI.

edst a pillar, and where thou madest a vow to me), have seen all that Laban hath done to thee. Arise now, and depart from this country; and return to the land of thy father; for I will prosper thee."

37 And Jacob took green rods of poplar, and of the hazel and of the palm tree; and peeled white streaks in them, by making bare the white of the rods. And he set up the rods which he had peeled by the gutters of the watering places, opposite the flocks, when they came to drink; that when they came to drink they might also couple. And the flocks coupled before the rods, and brought forth ringstreaked, speckled, and spotted young. And Jacob separated the young, and set aside from the flock, all the ringstreaked, and all the brown among the flocks of Laban; and he set them apart for a flock to himself, and set them not among the flocks of Laban. And so it was, that whensoever the stronger part of the flock were coupling, Jacob laid the rods before their eyes, in the gutters, that they might couple at the rods; But for the feebler part of the flock he put in no rods. So the feebler part were Laban's, and the stronger Jacob's. Thus the man increased exceedingly, and had much cattle, and maid-servants, and man-servants, and camels, and asses.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXX. 1. Let us learn the sin and misery occasioned by envy. Rachel, seeing the fruitfulness of her sister, indulged this vice, and it was her own torment. It embittered her life, and all her comforts. It is indeed the rottenness of the bones, injurious to health, and occasions many differences, among those who ought to be united. It is a sin against God, who gives to one and withholds from another; it is arraigning the wisdom and equity of his proceedings. Let us guard against it, as being a violation of the great command, "Thou shalt love thy neighbour as thyself."

2. The quarrels and contentions of the wives of Jacob, forcibly paint the evils of polygamy. It is impossible to reflect on such a scene, without admiring the wisdom of the original law of marriage. This

ing this to be any more a sufficient cause of the effect, than Naaman, that washing in the Jordan could cure the leprosy.

40. There is so much obscurity in the text and in the versions, that it is difficult to know what to select. Onkelos, Johnathan and Saad, read instead of לִבְיָדָא, and Houbigant and Geddes adopt this reading. The text thus corrected, and giving to (וּבְיָדָא) the sense of beside, apart from, the whole will yield an excellent sense which I have given.

CHAP. XXXI. 1. This wealth. Coverdale renders, 'riches,' seve-

AND he heard the words of Laban's sons, saying, "Jacob hath taken away all that belonged to our father; and of what belonged to our father, hath he gotten all this wealth." Also 2 Jacob saw the countenance of Laban; and, behold, it was not towards him as in times past. And Jehovah having said to Jacob, "Return 3 unto the land of thy fathers, and to thy kindred, and I will be with thee;" Jacob now 4 sent and called Rachel and Leah to the field unto his flock; And said to them, "I see that 5 your father's countenance is not towards me as in times past: but the God of my father hath been with me. And ye know that with all my 6 might I have served your father. And your 7 father hath deceived me, and hath, ten times, changed my wages; but God hath not suffered him to hurt me. If he said thus, 'The speck- 8 led shall be thine hire;' then all the flocks brought forth speckled. And if he said thus, 'The ringstreaked shall be thine hire;' then all the flocks brought forth ringstreaked. Thus 9 God hath taken away the substance of your father, and given it to me. For at the time when 10 the flocks were coupling, it was, that in a dream I raised mine eyes and saw, and lo! the rams is conformable to nature and reason, and our blessed Lord has restored it. The Apostle commends it: "Nevertheless, to avoid fornication, let every man have his own wife, and let every woman have her own husband." 1 Cor. vii. 2.

3. In whatever station we are placed, let us so conduct ourselves, as to secure the blessing of God on ourselves and on others. So did Jacob. He was faithful and diligent, and Laban owns, that God had blessed him for his sake. Good men are a blessing, wherever their lot is cast. Their fidelity, diligence, integrity and holy zeal, naturally tend to prosperity, while the opposite vices, bring poverty and misery in their train. "Godliness has the promise of this life, and of that which is to come."

ral, 'honour,' and Purver 'grandeur.' I have given the sense which our translators themselves have given Ch. xiii. 2.

5. This justifies the paragraph now in the Sam. which I have inserted in the preceding Ch. verse 36.

7. Ten times, i. e. several times. Compare Numb. xiv. 22: Job xix. 3.

14. Have we as yet &c. This is the version of the Bishop's Bible; and I conceive the genuine one. The meaning is, he has treated us not as which leaped upon the flocks were ringstreaked, 11 speckled, or grizzled. And the angel of God spoke to me in the dream, saying, "Jacob!" 12 And I said, "Here am I." And he said, "Raise now thine eyes, and see how all the rams which leap upon the cattle are ringstreaked, speckled, or grizzled: for I have seen all that Laban hath 18 done unto thee. I am the God of Beth-el, where thou anointedst the pillar, and where thou madest a vow unto me. Now, arise, and depart from this land; and return unto the land 14 of thy kindred." And Rachel and Leah answered and said to him, "Have we yet had any portion or inheritance in our father's house?

16 Have we not by him been accounted, 'as strangers'? for he hath sold us, and our price 18 he hath wholly devoured. Since, therefore, all that wealth which God hath taken from our father, belongeth to us and to our children; now
then do whatsoever God hath said to thee."

17 Then Jacob arose, and set his sons and his 18 wives upon camels; And he took away all his cattle, and all his goods which he had gotten ° in Padan-aram, purposing to go to Isaac his father, 19 into the land of Canaan. Now Laban had gone to shear his sheep; and Rachel stole the images 20 which belonged to her father. Jacob also stole away unawares from Laban the Syrian, not giv-21 ing any intimation of his flight. So he fled with all that belonged to him; and he speedily passed over the river, and set his face towards mount Gilead.

Jacob had fled. And he took his brethren with 23 him, and pursued after him a journey of seven days, and overtook him; on mount Gilead.
Now God had come to Laban the Syrian in a 24 dream of the night, and said to him, "Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob either good or bad."

When Laban overtook Jacob, he had pitched 25 his tent on the mountain; and Laban, with his brethren, pitched also on mount-Gilead. And 26 Laban said to Jacob, "Why hast thou done
this—stolen away unawares from me, and carried off my daughters, as captives of war?
Wherefore didst thou flee away secretly, and 27 steal away from me, and not tell me; that I might have sent thee away with mirth, and songs;
with tabret and harp? Thou didst not even 28 permit me to kiss my sons and my daughters.
In thus doing thou hast acted foolishly. It is in my power to do 'thee' hurt: but the God of 'thy' father spoke to me last night, saying, 'Take heed that thou speak not to Jacob, either good or bad.' And now be it, that thou wouldst 30 needs be gone, because thou greatly longedst
after thy father's house; yet why hast thou stolen my gods?" And Jacob answered and 31 said to Laban, "I fled because I was afraid;
for I thought that thou wouldst perhaps take from me, by force, thy daughters, and all that belongeth to me". As for thy gods, with 32 whomsoever thou findest them, let him die. In the presence of our brethren discern what is thine, with me, and take it." For Jacob knew daughters, but as aliens. He has not only made a traffic of our persons, but he has appropriated the price to his own use; instead of reserving it for ours.

16. Our price. Money is here improper. For Jacob had not paid for them in money, but in labour.

17. It has been thought a difficulty to account for the manner in which Jacob could collect his family together, and thus decamp, without the knowledge of Laban. Harmer has removed the difficulty, by adverting to the still prevailing custom of the shepherds of Mesopotamia. It is usual for them who dwell in houses to spend their summer in tents. Hence Jacob might, without any suspicion of his design, send for his wives and children, and the domestic articles that belonged to him. It was the season of sheep-shearing, a time of feasting, when Laban had gone to his flocks; and it is natural to suppose, that Jacob having left the flock of Laban, to him and to his sons, went to shear his, which, from the history, were removed some days journey from those of Laban. Hence he might depart as mentioned, with all that he had, with the greater privacy. See Harmer vol ii.

18. The words omitted, embarrass the narrative, and are evidently an interpolation. The authorities for omitting them are sufficient. See Ken- nicott's 1st Dissertation, p 365.

19. Images. Hebrew, Teraphs. These Teraphs were little images of the idols, which they had in their temples; these they kept in their houses, and called them household gods.

20. I have rendered the latter clause rather freely. Purver has 'unknown.'

21. And speedily passed. The Sept. and Vulg. seem not to have read (קָסַם) and unless it be rendered adverbially, to denote the haste he made, it is improper. The river was the Euphrates.

26. Why hast thou done this. Rosenmüller observes that the words (עָשִׂיתָ וְיָמַנְתָּ) are a Hebraism, and the former is pleonastic. Compare 1 Kings viii. 32; Judges ix. 16, and Dan. viii. 12.

29. Neither good nor bad. Literally, 'from good, to bad;' i. e. say.

not that Rachel, ^ahis wife", had stolen them.
 33 Laban then went ^aand searched" in Jacob's tent, and Leah's tent, and in the tents of the two hand-maids; but he found them not. Then he went out of Leah's tent, and entered into Ra-34 chel's tent. Now Rachel had taken the images, and put them in the camel-pillion, and she sat
 upon them. And Laban searched all the tent, 35 but found them not. And she said to her father,
 "Let not my lord be displeased, that I cannot rise up in thy presence; for I am in the state of a removed woman." And he searched, but found not the images.
 36 And Jacob was wroth, and sharply reasoned with Laban; and Jacob spoke and said to Laban, "What is my transgression, what is my 37 sin, that thou hast so hotly pursued me? Seeing thou hast searched all my furniture, what one thing, of all thy household furniture, hast thou found? Set it here before my brethren and thy brethren, and let them judge between us two.
 38 These twenty years that I have been with thee, neither thy ewes nor thy goats have cast their young; nor the rams of thy flock have I eaten.
 39 What was torn by beasts I brought not to thee,
 I was accountable for it; at my hands didst thou require what was stolen by day, or stolen by 40 night. By day the drought consumed me, and by night the frost; and my sleep departed from 41 mine eyes. Thus have I been twenty years in thy house; fourteen years I served thee for thy two daughters; and six years for thy flocks:
 and thou hast changed my wages ten times.
 42 Except the God of my fathers, the God of Abraham, and the REVERED ONE of Isaac, had been with me, surely thou wouldst have now sent me away empty. My afflictions and the labours of my hands God hath seen; therefore he rebuked thee last night."

nothing to him, so as to produce a quarrel.

33. The reading of the Sam. and Sept. is here necessary; and the word is found in the 35 verse. He went into the Tent to search.

49. The Arabic has preserved the words added; and they are supported by the 55 verse.

53. The words omitted are clearly an error of some scribe! See Ken- nic. 1 Diss. Though these are the words of Laban, who appears to have

And Laban answered and said to Jacob, 43
 "These daughters are my daughters, and these children my children, and these flocks my flocks;
 yea, mine is all that thou seest: and what can I now do to these my daughters, or to the children which they have born? Come, now, let us 44 make a covenant, I and thou; and let it be for a witness between me and thee." And Jacob 45 took a stone, and set it up for a pillar. And 46
 Jacob said to his brethren, "Gather stones." So they took stones, and made a heap; and they ate ^aand drank" upon the heap. And 47 Laban called it Jegar-saha-dutha; but Jacob called it Galeed. For Laban said, "Let this 48 heap be to day a witness between me and thee." Therefore was the name of it called Gilead [THE WITNESS-HEAP]; And ^athe stone set up was 49 called" Mizpah [THE WATCH]; because Laban said, "May Jehovah watch between me and thee, when we are absent one from the other. If thou shalt afflict my daughters, or if thou 50 shalt take other wives beside my daughters, (no one else being then present) let God be witness between me and thee."

Again Laban said to Jacob, "Behold this heap, 51 and behold this pillar, which ^athou hast set up". Between me and thee, let this heap be a 52 witness, and this pillar be a witness, that I will not pass over this heap ^aand this pillar" to thee; and that thou wilt not pass over this heap and this pillar to me, for harm. The God of Abra- 53 ham, and the God of Nahor, judge between us. And Jacob swore by the REVERED ONE of his father Isaac. Then Jacob slaughtered victims 54 on the mountain, and called ^aall" his brethren to eat of the food; and they ate of the food, and abode all night on the mountain. And early in 55
 the morning Laban arose, and having kissed his sons and his daughters, and blessed them;

been guilty of some Idolatry, as he mentions the God of Nahor, and of Abraham, he could not, I conceive, mean two Gods, but the God they both served.

CHAP. XXXII. 1. This is the camp of God; i. e. the place where his angels assemble together. God now honoured Jacob with this peculiar appearance of angels, to shew him, that he was under the divine protection, and that he would still keep him. It is probable he saw something he then departed; and returned unto his own place.

CHAPTER XXXII.

3. C. 1789. Jacob's vision; his present and message to Esau; he wrestleth with an angel; his name called Israel.

1 JACOB now went on his way; and he raised his eyes and saw a great camp formed", and 2 angels of God approaching towards him. And when Jacob saw them, he said, "This is the camp of God." Therefore he called the name of that place Mahanaim [THE CAMPS]. 3 Now Jacob had sent messengers before him, to Esau his brother, unto the land of Seir, (the 4 country of Edom.) And he commanded them, saying, "Thus shall ye speak to my lord Esau; Thus saith thy servant Jacob; I have sojourned 5 with Laban, and stayed until now. And I have oxen, and asses, and flocks, and man-servants, and maid-servants; and I have sent to tell my lord, that I may find favour in thy sight." 6 And the messengers now returned to Jacob, saying, "We came to thy brother Esau; and also he cometh to meet thee, and four hundred 7 men with him." Then Jacob was greatly afraid and distressed; and he divided the people that were with him, and the flocks, and herds, and the camels, into two camps; And he said, 8 "If Esau come to one camp, and smite it, then the other remaining camp may escape."

Then Jacob said, "O God of my father 9 Abraham! and God of my father Isaac! Jehovah, who saidst to me, "Return to thy own land, and to thy kindred, and I will deal kindly with thee. I am not in the least worthy of all 10 the mercies, and of all the faithfulness, which thou hast showed to thy servant; for with my staff I passed over this Jordan; and now I am become the master of two camps. Deliver me, 11 I pray thee, from the hand of my brother, from the hand of Esau; for I fear him, lest he come and smite me, and the mothers with the children." Yet thou saidst, "I will surely deal 12 kindly with thee, and make thy seed as the sand of the sea-shore which cannot be numbered for multitude."

And he lodged there on that night; and took 13 of what he had brought with him a present for Esau his brother; Two hundred she-goats, 14 and twenty he-goats, two hundred ewes, and twenty rams, Thirty milk-camels with their 15 colts, forty heifers and ten steers, twenty she-

CHAP XXXII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXI. 1. How wonderfully did God bless Jacob! In a few years his property was increased to abundance; and though his growing prosperity grieved Laban, and led him to change his wages, yet did God continue to favour him. In God's hands are all the treasures of nature; the cattle on a thousand hills are his property; and he giveth them to whom he chooseth. When a man's ways please the Lord, he makes the schemes of his enemies subservient to his interest; and from his crosses, in the acquisition of property, to seek the 'true riches.' If riches increase, let us not set our hearts on them, so as to provoke God, and injure our own souls; but let us make unrighteous mammon, a friend to our best interests, by relieving the distressed, and aiding all good institutions.

2. The patience, fortitude and continued diligence of Jacob, and the rigorous exaction of Laban, show us two different characters. Laban was alike covetous and avaricious. Like the horse-leech, he was ever craving, 'give, give;' nothing satisfied him. He made gain of his daughters; nor did he confer on them, or on their children, similar to what is related 2 Kings vi. 13—17.

3. Mahanaim. This was the place to which David fled on the rebellion of Absalom.

7. The approach of Esau, attended with 400 men, excited in Jacob's mind the most painful apprehensions. Conscious of his own guilt, and any gifts. The world was his God; and few worse men, view him in all respects, are noticed: a hard-hearted father, and a severe and cruel master. Jacob sustained for twenty years the rigours of severe service. His own account shows, that his life, was not a life of ease and indulgence. He bore the heat by day, and the frost by night. Let us learn to 'show all good fidelity' in our service, and God will at last reward us.

3. We see how God can influence the minds, even of wicked men. Laban, most probably, intended by force to bring back Jacob; but the Lord having rebuked him, he then proposes to make a covenant with Jacob, who assents to the proposal; and forgetting the treatment he had received, engages to adhere to the conditions specified. God is made the witness of this covenant, and the avenger of the violation of it. In all our engagements, let us remember that God is a witness. Let us set the Lord 'always before us,' and 'sanctify him in our hearts,' and 'make him our fear,' and then we shall be delivered from the fear of others.

knowing the disposition of his brother, he trembled for his own safety. He adopted the wisest measure to secure it, by offering up fervent petitions to God, and selecting a noble present for Esau.

10. Geddes renders, "I am unworthy of the true kindness." This I consider deficient in spirit, and as not giving the full sense.

16 asses, and ten foals; And he gave them in charge to his servants, each drove by itself; and said to his servants, "Pass on before me, and put a space between drove and drove." 17 And he commanded the foremost, saying, "When Esau my brother shall meet thee, and ask thee, saying, 'Whose servant art thou? And whither goest thou? And whose are these before thee?' Then thou shalt say; 'They are thy servant Jacob's; this is a present to my lord Esau; and, behold, he also is behind us.'" And so commanded he the second, and the third, and all that followed the droves, saying, "After this manner ye shall speak to Esau, when ye 20 meet him; And say moreover, 'Behold, thy servant Jacob is behind us.'" For said he, "I will appease him with the present that goeth before me, and I afterwards will see his face; 21 perhaps he will then accept me." So the present passed on before him; but he himself lodged 22 that night in the camp. And on that night he arose, and took his two wives, and his two handmaids, and his eleven sons, to pass over the 23 ford Jabbok. So he took them, and sent them over the brook; he also sent over "all" that belonged to him. 24 Now Jacob was left alone on the other side;

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXII. 1. It is the pious remark of David, "that the angel of the Lord encampeth around those who fear him." Good men of old, were now and then favoured with visions of these heavenly guards; and there can be no doubt, that though they are invisible, they are the agents of divine providence, and employed for the good of God's servants. They are God's "ministers that do his pleasure." May it be our happiness to be made like them, when we are to be conducted by them to Abraham's bosom.

2. In difficulties, let us give ourselves to prayer. So Jacob did; and he found, that while it relieved the mind, it also secured

24. Most Critics consider this as what passed in a dream. It is not probable, that Jacob would have had the temerity, really to have wrestled with an unknown man, in a solitary place, during a whole night! The text informs us, that he remained alone on the other side of the river, and most probably wrapping his head in his mantle, reposed on the ground, and dreamed 'that some one, wrestled with him, &c.'—Vide Saurin's Diss. Crit. et Hist. The person whom he thought wrestled with him, Hosea informs us, was God: "By his strength he had power with God: Yea, he had power over the angel, and prevailed." Perhaps, in the vision, if it was one, he appeared as an angel, as he often did.

28. I have followed Jerom and Sept. in this version; Onkelos has given and one wrestled with him until the rising of the morning dawn. And when he saw that he could 25 not prevail against him, he struck the hollow of his thigh; so that the hollow of Jacob's thigh was strained while he wrestled with him. And 26 he said, "Let me go, for the morning dawns." But Jacob said, "I will not let thee go, unless thou bless me." Again the person said to him, 27 "What is thy name?" And he answered "Jacob!" "Thy name, then said he, shall not 28 only yet be called Jacob, but ISRAEL [ONE THAT HATH POWER WITH GOD]; for, as a prince thou hast power with God, and with men also thou shalt prevail." And Jacob asked, and said, 29 "Tell me, I pray thee, thy name." And he said, "Why dost thou ask after my name?" And he there blessed him. And Jacob called 30 the name of the place Peniel [THE FACE OF GOD]; for I have seen said he, God face to face, yet my life is preserved." And as he passed over 31 Peniel, the sun arose upon him, and he halted on his thigh; "for Jacob's thigh had been strained". Therefore the children of Israel eat 32 not to this day the chief sinew, which is on the hollow of the thigh; because the hollow of Jacob's thigh had been struck on the chief sinew.

a gracious deliverance. "Is any afflicted? let him pray," is the Apostle's advice; and the direction and promise of God is; "Call upon me in the day of trouble; I will deliver thee, and thou shalt glorify me."

3. In prayer, let us ever maintain a humble sense of our unworthiness. Nothing is so hateful to God as a proud self-righteous spirit, nor so lovely to him, as a humble one. This disposes us to gratitude for favours, and prepares for the reception and improvement of others. "God giveth grace to the humble, but resisteth the proud." It is with the humble, the lowly, and the contrite, that he promises to dwell; and such

the same turn. This was designed to assure him, that as he had obtained the blessing of God, so he should prevail in his contests with men, and especially with Esau.

31. If what is related from the 24 verse be regarded as a vision, it is clear, that the sinew of Jacob had been really affected, and on his arising and attempting to walk, he halted. On the whole, to understand what is here said literally, is very improbable. If this were not a vision, we must regard what is said, as figurative; and by wrestling, understand Jacob's fervent prayer to the person who had appeared to him; and as a proof of his ardour, he laid hold of the person, or on his robe, and would not let him go without a blessing. I incline to think this is the sense of the para-

CHAPTER XXXIII

B.C. 1781. Jacob and Esau meet; their mutual kindness; Jacob cometh to Shechem and buyeth a field, where he buildeth an altar.

1 JACOB now raised his eyes, and behold he saw "his brother" Esau coming, and with him four hundred men. And he divided the children to Leah and to Rachel, and to the two hand-
2 maids. And he put the hand-maids and their children foremost, and Leah and her children
3 after; and last of all Rachel and Joseph. He then passed on before them; and bowed himself to the ground seven times, until he came 4 near to his brother. And Esau ran to meet him, and embraced him, and fell upon his neck, and 5 kissed him; and they "both" wept. And he raised his eyes, and saw the women and the children, and said, "Who are these with thee?"
And Jacob said, "The children whom God hath 6 given to thy servant." Then the hand-maids with their children drew near, and they bowed 7 themselves. And Leah also with her children drew near, and bowed themselves; and after Joseph and Rachel drew near, and bowed them-8 selves. And he said, "What meanest thou by all that drove which I met". And Jacob said, "That "thy servant" may find favour in the 9 sight of my lord." And Esau said, "I have abundance my brother; keep what thou hast for thyself." But Jacob said, "Nay, I pray 10 thee, if now I have found favour in thy sight, receive my present from mine hand; for on this account do I appear before thee, as I would appear before a prince, that thou mayest accept me. Take, I pray thee, my gift which 11

"I have brought for thee: because God hath been gracious to me, and because I have every thing." So he urged him, and he took it.

Esau then said, "Let us proceed on our jour- 12 ney; and let me go before thee." But Jacob 13 said to him, "My lord knoweth that the children are tender; and I have with me flocks and herds giving suck; and should "I over-drive, but one day, the whole flock will die. Let my 14 lord, I pray thee, pass on before his servant; and I will drive on gently according as the cattle and the children that are with me shall be able, until I come to my lord unto Seir." Then 15
Esau said, "Let me, I pray thee, leave with thee some of the people, that are with me." But he answered, "What need of this? let me only find favour in the sight of my lord!"

So Esau returned that day, on his way, unto 16 Seir. And Jacob journeyed to Succoth, and 17 built for himself a house, and made sheds for his cattle; therefore the name of the place was called Succoth [SHEDS]. Thus Jacob came safe 18

a temper, as it is most suitable to guilty creatures, so it is a happy temper. "I am not in the least worthy of all thy mercies," said Jacob; and who is? "Not to us, not to us, O Lord, but unto thee be all the glory, for thy mercy and kindness towards us, in thy dear Son Jesus."

4. From Jacob let us learn holy importunity in prayer. "By the strength of his faith and fervour, he had the power of a prince with God; yea, he had the power of a prince with the angel, and by might he prevailed when he made supplication to him." Hos. xii. 3, 4. In this manner let us wrestle for the divine blessing, nor doubt but we shall obtain it. The fervent prayer will be effectual, and avail much. Let us then come boldly to a throne of grace, and let the great importance of the blessings we solicit, make us earnest and importunate.

5. To our fervent prayers, let us add prudence and caution. The conduct of Jacob in this deserves our imitation." He adopted the most prudent measures to turn away the displeasure of Esau, and to conciliate his love and esteem; and then solicited God's blessing on his endeavours. It would be high presumption to intreat God to bless us, when we are neglecting our duty by supineness, or doing what is foolish and sinful. "Be wise as serpents and harmless as doves."

graph. On the first appearance of this divine person, Jacob might be satisfied, that he was some angel, one of those he had seen at Mahanaim.

CHAP. XXXIII. 3. Seven times. Some consider, that a definite number is here used for an indefinite; and that the sense is, that Jacob bowed himself often. Others think, that it might be the custom, to show the highest degree of respect, to bow precisely seven times.

10. This verse as usually rendered, conveys a meaning, not very suitable to the character and piety of Jacob. Give a passive sense to the verb, and the whole is clear and consistent. "I would appear before thee, as I would appear before a chief;" i. e. a prince, an earthly god. It is a known custom of the east, that no inferior ever approaches a superior, without making a present suitable to his rank; and the neglect of this, would not only be considered as a breach of decorum, but as an insult. See Harmer vol. ii. and compare Psalm xlii. 3; Prov. xviii. 16.

13. Giving suck. Our translators have rendered with young; but as in 1 Sam. 6, 7, 10, it must signify cattle which have brought forth; it should here and in Psalm lxxviii. 71, and Isa. xl. 11, in which only places it occurs besides, be so interpreted.

to the city Shechem, which is in the land of Canaan, when he came from Padan-aram; and 19 he pitched his tent before the city. And he bought a parcel of a field, where he had spread his tent, at the hand of the children of Hamor, Shechem's father, for a hundred pieces of money. And there he erected an altar, and called it the altar of El-elohe Israel [THE MIGHTY GOD OF ISRAEL].

CHAPTER XXXIV.

B. C. 1739. Dinah is ravished; the Shechemites submit to circumcision on the proposal of an union with the sons of Jacob; they are slain by Jacob's sons and the city spoiled.

1 AND Dinah, the daughter of Leah, whom she bare to Jacob, went out to see the women of the 2 land. And when Shechem, the son of Hamor, a Hivite, prince of the country, saw her, he

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIII. 1. Submission and kindness disarm even anger and malice; and by these we may often make our enemies become our friends. The conduct of Jacob, as the younger brother was proper; and had he stood on some point of honour, and refused to show his regard, who can say what would have been the consequence? Esau, from the number of his attendants, might easily have destroyed the family of Jacob, and taken all his property; but Jacob's humility and submission pacify him. For peace-sake, let us be willing to make every reasonable sacrifice; and as the sons of God, let us remember that we must be the sons of peace. "Follow peace and holiness, without which no man shall see the Lord."

2. How pleasant and interesting is it, when interrupted friendships are again renewed. A house divided cannot prosper. It is unnatural for brother to set himself against brother. Many years had rolled over, since Jacob and Esau had seen one another; nor is it probable they had heard much of one another. When they met, a thousand tender recollections must have occurred; and it seems natural, that they should run to meet each other and both weep for joy. "Behold, how good and how pleasant it is, for brethren to dwell together in unity. It is like the precious ointment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the skirts of his garments."

14. To Seir. Jacob has been accused of insincerity in stating, that he meant to visit Mount Seir. Jacob might intend to comply with the friendly invitation of his brother, when he made the reply under consideration; but found it necessary from other circumstances, to change his purpose. What man does not often thus act, without being in the least suspected of insincerity? So Paul acted, Rom. i. 13.

18. Safe. The common version renders, Shalem, as if a proper name, which is certainly improper. Coverdale, Matthews, Ainsworth and Purver, render as I have done. This is one instance where James's translators perverted the version of their predecessors.

and he loved the damsel, and spoke kindly to her. And Shechem spoke to his father Hamor, 4 saying, "Get me this damsel for a wife."

And Jacob heard that Shechem had defiled 5 Dinah his Daughter, but as his sons were with the cattle in the field, Jacob was silent until they were come. Now Hamor the father of 6 Shechem went to Jacob to treat with him. But on hearing what had been done, the sons 7 of Jacob had come out of the field; and the men were grieved, and greatly enraged that so base a deed should have been done against Israel, as lying with his daughter; for such a deed ought not to have been done.

Yet Hamor treated with them, saying, "The 8 soul of my son Shechem longeth for your daughter; I pray you give her to him for a wife. And make ye marriages with us; give ye to us 9 your daughters, and take our daughters to you. And ye shall dwell with us; and the land shall 10

ment upon the head, that ran down upon the beard, even Aaron's beard, that went down to the skirts of his garments."

3. Let the example of Jacob teach us, to own our obligations to God. "When asked, 'Who are these?' He replies, 'The children whom God hath graciously given thy servant.' These are God's gifts, and we should be careful to train them up in his service. He in like manner gives God all the glory of his success. 'God hath been gracious to me,' says he, 'in giving me herds and flocks, and men-servants and maid-servants.' Who is it that gives us power to get wealth? Thine, O Lord, is the gold and the silver, and the cattle on a thousand hills. 'Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not any of his benefits.'"

4. From Jacob's tenderness to his flock, let parents and ministers learn their duty. The weakness of reason, and the infirmities of age or disease are to be considered; and no hard or impossible tasks imposed. Children must be taught as they are able to learn; must be won to the love and practise of their duty. Let ministers know the state of their flock, and give to all a portion of food in due season. Be tender to the lambs of the flock, Jesus has set us an example. "He shall feed his flock like a shepherd: he shall gather the lambs with his arm, and carry them in his bosom, and shall gently lead those that are with young."

CHAP. XXXIV. 2. By force. Literally, humbled. I have followed the sense of Coverdale, Matthews and Cranmer. This is acknowledged to be the meaning of the text; and it exculpates Dinah from all blame. Josephus supposes, that Dinah had gone to see the women of the land at one of their festivals.

7. Against Israel. It is not probable, that this name had become, in so short a space of time, patronymic; so that the name ought to be considered as personal, and the sense of against, given to the preposition.

14. The Sept. confines this address to Simeon and Levi, the Uterine brothers of Dinah; the other versions agree with the text. The 25 verse be before you; dwell and trade in it, and get 11 possessions therein." And Shechem said to her father and to her brethren, "Let me find fa-12 vor in your eyes, and what ye shall say to me I will give. The dowry and the gifts make ever so great; and according as ye shall say 13 to me I will give." But the sons of Jacob answered Shechem and Hamor his father, and spoke deceitfully, because he had defiled Dinah 14 their sister. And they said to them, "We cannot do this thing, to give our sister to one that is uncircumcised; for that would be a reproach to 15 us. But on this condition will we consent to you. "If ye will be as we are, so that every 16 male of you be circumcised; Then will we give to you our daughters, and we will take your daughters, and we will dwell with you, and we 17 will become one people. But if ye will not hearken to us, to be circumcised; then will we 18 take our daughter and be gone." And their words pleased Hamor, and Shechem; Hamor's 19 son. And the young man delayed not to do this thing, because he delighted in Jacob's daughter;

 and he was the most honourable person of all his father's house.

20 Now Hamor and Shechem his son went to the gate of their own city, and spoke to the men of 21 their city, saying, "These men are peaceable
 among us; therefore let them dwell in the land, and trade therein; for behold, the land is large enough for them. Let us take their daughters for wives, and let us give to them our daughters.

CHAP. XXXIV. 28. *1 ms.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIV. 1. In the conduct of Dinah, young women may see, how often the desire of 'seeing and being seen,' leads to the most unhappy consequences. She perhaps had no other design than to gratify her own curiosity;
 but, when no longer under the care of her natural protectors, she fell a prey to unchaste violence. This shows the reasonableness and propriety of Paul's admonition, "that young women should be chaste; keepers at home." The latter part of this admonition, is one reason and ground of the former; for if they will not keep

But on this condition only will the men consent 22
 to dwell with us, so as to become one people;
 that every male among us be circumcised, as they are circumcised. Shall not their substance 23 and their goods, and all their cattle be ours?
 Only let us consent to them, and they will dwell with us." And to Hamor, and to Shechem his 24 son, hearkened all that went out at the gate of his city; and every male that went out of his city, was circumcised. But on the third day, 25
 when they were sorest, two of the sons of Jacob, Simeon and Levi, Dinah's brethren, took each his sword, and came upon the city secure, and slew all the males. And they slew Hamor, and 26
 Shechem his son, with the edge of the sword, and took Dinah out of Shechem's house, and went out. The other sons of Jacob came upon 27
 the slain, and spoiled the city, because they had defiled their sister. Their flocks, and their herds, 28 and their asses; both "all" that were in the city, and "all" that were in the field, They took away, 29
 even all their wealth; and all their little ones,
 and their wives, they made captives; and plundered every thing that was in their houses.
 And Jacob said to Simeon and Levi, "Ye have 30 troubled me by making me abominable among the inhabitants of the land, among the Canaanites and the Perizzites; and as I am but few in number, they will assemble against me, and slay me; and both I and my household will be de-31 stroyed." And they said, "Should he deal with our sister as with an harlot?"

at home, but follow the gaieties of the world, they run into temptations, and have often to lament their folly, in the loss of their chastity, purity and honour.

2. The deceit of the sons of Jacob, merits the utmost abhor-rence. Nothing can be conceived more vile and base. They covered their design with the mask of religion; and converted a sacred rite, to an instrument of the most atrocious murder; the token of God's covenant, to a mean of destruction. How detestable was their hypocrisy; and how must religion have been dis-

his sons; and retained a deep sense of their injustice, even to his death.
 Wicked as their conduct was, the providence which permitted it may be justified, by considering, that the Shechemites, were induced to submit to the rite of circumcision, through the hope of obtaining their flocks and their herds, and all their property.

seems to support the Sept.

23. Upon the city secure; not expecting any attack. This is the most natural sense of the text, and gives a reason for their success. Men unarmed, in a state of pain, might be soon dispatched.

30. Jacob expresses his just abhorrence of the unprincipled conduct of

CHAPTER XXXV.

B. C. 1732. Jacob sent to Bethel; he first purifieth his house from idols; goes to Bethel, and buildeth an altar there; Death of Isaac.

- 1 Now God said to Jacob, "Arise, go up to Beth-el, and dwell there; and make an altar there to God, who appeared unto thee when thou fleddest from the face of Esau thy brother."
- 2 Then Jacob said to his household, and to all that were with him, "Put away the strange gods that are among you, and purify yourselves, and
- 3 change your garments; And let us arise, and go up to Beth-el; and I will make there an altar to God, who answered me in the day of distress, and was with me in the way which I
- 4 went." And they gave to Jacob all the strange gods which they had, and all the pendants which were in their ears; and Jacob hid them under
- 5 a turpentine tree which was by Shechem. They then removed "from Shechem": and the terror of God was upon the cities that were round about them, so that they did not pursue after the sons of Jacob.
- 6 So Jacob came to Luz, (that is Bethel,) in the land of Canaan; he and all the people that
- 7 were with him. And he built there an altar, honoured by such professors! They had God in their mouths, and malice and murder in their hearts. Jacob was deeply affected at this unprincipled deed, and doubtless, often did he weep, when he reflected on the ruthless, barbarous, and cruel scene.

3. How often do the sins of children pierce the hearts of pious parents! They have watched over them, instructed them, and showed them the way of life; and what can be more distressing, than to see them walking in the way of destruction. Such children reflect disgrace on their parents, and sometimes bring

CHAP. XXXV. 1. This address reminds us of Jacob's vow, in the 28 Chapter. He had now been some time in the promised land, but had not yet fulfilled his vow.

2. Strange gods. Shuckford, whom Purver follows, renders, "gods of the strangers." As the terms often occur, where they cannot be rendered more properly than in the common version, I adhere to it. He probably alludes to the idols found in Shechem, or among his Syrian servants. —Purify yourselves. This is the first time purification is noticed; and from the connection seems to denote only simple ablution.

4. Strange gods. From this it is probable, little images were the objects of their superstitious regard, like to what are mentioned Amos v. 26; Acts vii. 43.—The pendants. Had these pendants or ear-rings been only used for ornament, they would have been retained, but as they were given up with the gods, they were doubtless worn in honour of them; as according to Augustine, was the ancient custom.

and again called the place ° Beth-el [HOUSE OF GOD]; because there God had appeared to him, when he fled before the face of his brother ° Esau". And Deborah, Rebekah's nurse, died, 8 and there was buried below Beth-el, under a turpentine tree, and the name of it was called Allon-bachuth [THE TURPENTINE TREE OF WEEPING].

Again God appeared to Jacob, (after he had 9 come from Padan-aram) "in Luz", and blessed him. And God said to him, "Thy name is 10 Jacob. Thy name shall not only yet be called Jacob, but Israel also shall be thy name." So he called his name Israel. And God said to 11 him, "I am God, the Almighty; be fruitful and multiply. Nations, yea numerous nations, shall spring from thee, and kings from thy loins shall proceed. And the land which I gave to Abra- 12 ham and to Isaac, that same land I will give to thee, and to thy seed after thee." And God 13 went up from him, at the place where he had talked with him. And Jacob set up the pillar 14 in the place where he had talked with him, a pillar of stone; and he shed thereon a drink-offering, and poured oil upon it. Again Jacob 15 down their grey hairs, with sorrow to the grave. This deed Jacob could not forget, and expresses his hatred of it, with his dying breath. "Simeon and Levi are brethren: instruments of cruelty are in their habitation. O my soul, come not thou into their secret; unto their assembly, mine honour, be not thou united: for in their anger they slew the men, and in their self-will cut off princes. Cursed be their anger for it was fierce; and their wrath for it was cruel: I will divide them in Jacob, and scatter them in Israel."

5. Terror of God. This might be rendered, 'a great terror;' but in this instance I conceive, the writer not only intended to express the degree of terror, but the author of it. Bishop Wilson renders, 'a mighty terror.'

7. Bethel. I have omitted, El (אֱל), as here certainly improper. It is wanting in the authorities noticed. To call the place, the God of Bethel, would certainly be strange.

8. Rebekah's nurse; who, on her mistress's death, had probably been taken into Jacob's family, and regarded as a sort of mother.

10. The text is here uncertain. Thy name is Jacob, is wanting in Sept. and Syr. as is also the last clause, So his name was called Israel. The text seems perfect without these clauses, and the sense complete.

14. A pillar. It might be the same stone he had before anointed, which had been thrown down.

15. I have followed the order of the Sept. which has here what is now found in the 21 verse of the Hebrew. This is clearly its proper place.

called the name of the place where God had spoken with him, Beth-el.

21 And Jacob removed from Beth-el, and pitched his tent beyond the tower of Edar, And had but a little way to come to Ephrath, when Rachel fell in labour; and she had a hard delivery. And when she was in hard labour, the midwife said to her, "Fear not; thou shalt have this son also." And as her soul was departing, (for she died,) she called his name Ben-oni [THE SON OF MY SORROW]; but his father called him Benjamin [THE SON OF MY RIGHT HAND]. Thus Rachel died, and was buried in the way to Ephrath, which is now Bethlehem. 20 And Jacob set a pillar upon her grave, which is called the pillar of Rachel's grave unto this day.

22 And while Israel dwelt in this country it was, that Reuben went and lay with Bilhah, his father's concubine; and Israel heard it, and was greatly displeased. Now the sons of Jacob were twelve. The sons of Leah; Reuben, Jacob's firstborn, and Simeon, and Levi, and Judah, and Issachar, and Zebulun. The sons 24 of Rachel; Joseph and Benjamin. And the 25 sons of Bilhah, (Rachel's handmaid); Dan and Naphtali. And the sons of Zilpah, (Leah's 26 handmaid); Gad and Asher. These were the sons of Jacob, that were born to him in Padan-aram.

And Jacob came to Isaac his father, unto 27 Mamre, in the land of Canaan, the city of Arbah, (which is Hebron,) where Abraham and Isaac had sojourned. And the days of Isaac 28 were now one hundred and eighty years. And 29 Isaac expired and died, and was gathered unto his people, being old and full of days; and his sons, Esau and Jacob, buried him.

B. C. 1796 Esau's wives; his removal to mount Seir; his sons.

Now these are the progeny of Esau, who is 1 Edom. Esau took for his wives, from among 2 the women of Canaan, Adah the daughter of Elon the Hethite, and Aholibamah the daughter

CHAP. XXXVI. 2. *Sam. Sept. Syr. ibid. *So-verse 20. 3. *Sam.

He has the hearts of all men in his hands, and can awaken or allay the passions of men at his pleasure. With what cheerfulness then should we commit our way to the Lord, and rest secure, that when following the path of duty, he will not forsake us.

3. Let the example of Rachel teach us, how often we are mistaken in our desires. For years she was barren, and ready to die for grief. In language, which at once discovered impatience, and gross ignorance, she said to Jacob, Give me children or I die. He was justly angry at her; but God at length granted her request, and lo! on the birth of her second child, she died. How often should we be ruined at our own request, if God were not merciful to us. Let us learn to moderate our desires, and to be content in the circumstances in which God has placed us; and to say in our request to him, "not our will, but thine be done." Submission to him will be found to be our interest, as well as our duty.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXV. 1. "It is better not to vow, than to vow and not perform," said Solomon. Jacob appears not to have acted properly in delaying to perform the vow he had made at Beth-el; and hence he is graciously reminded of his duty. How prone are we to forget, amid our cares and troubles, our most solemn engagements! We have need to have our impure minds, again and again excited to remembrance; and we ought to be thankful, when God arouses us to a sense of our neglected duty. Jacob now made haste to perform his vow; and began by examination. He commanded his household to put away their strange gods. Let us put away every idol, as the best preparation for holy intercourse with God.

2 We see from this Chapter, that God is a present help in time of need. Jacob dreaded the combination and the resentment of the Canaanites, for the atrocious deed of his sons; but his God avenged them by his terror, so that they remained quiet.

16. Ephrath; i. e. Bethlehem, called also Bethlehem-Ephrath, where our blessed Lord was born.

18. Benjamin. The Samaritan has Benjamin [SON OF DAYS]; and the remark of Jacob Ch. xlv. 20, supports this reading. Houbigant and others, consider the present reading as a Chaldaism, and give the same sense. If the former be Hebrew, it must be rendered, son of my right hand, i. e. one dear to me. Compare Ps. lxxx. 18.

20. A pillar on her grave. Perhaps some unhewn stone, erected to perpetuate the spot where the ashes of one so dear were laid.

22. The Jews themselves, acknowledge, that some words have been here omitted, as a space is left in most copies. The Sept. has preserved the words omitted, which obviously complete the sense and the period. —Lay with Bilhah, &c. Which base action brought a curse upon him; he forfeited the right of primogeniture and the priesthood; the one was given to Judah, the other to Levi. —Were twelve. Called afterwards the twelve Patriarchs, because they became the heads of numerous families.

CHAP. XXXVI. 2. That errors have crept into this genealogy, is generally admitted. It is impossible to reconcile this account of Esau's wives with Gen. xvi. 21; unless from mss. and the versions. Without recurring to conjecture, it is observable, that here we have only two wives of Esau, daughters of the Canaanites; as is stated Ch. xxvi. Here, also, we have one sprung from Ishmael, as Ch. xxviii. Hence, it may be inferof Anah the "son" of Zibeon the "Horite"; 3 And "Mahalath", Ishmael's daughter, sister of 4 Nebaioth. And Adah bare to Esau Eliphaz;

 5 and "Mahalah" bare Reuel; And Aholibamah bare Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah. These were the sons of Esau, that were born to him 6 in the land of Canaan. And Esau took his wives, and his sons, and his daughters, and all the other persons of his house, and his substance together with all his cattle; even the whole property, which he had got in the land of Canaan; and he went "from the land of Canaan" into the land of "Seir" from the presence 7 of his brother Jacob. For their wealth was so great that they could not dwell together; nor could the land in which they sojourned sup-8 port them, on account of their substance. So Esau dwelt in mount Seir. Esau is the same with Edom.

9 Now these are the progeny of Esau the fa-10 ther of the Edomites, in mount Seir; "And"
 these are the names of Esau's sons; Eliphaz, the son of Adah, the wife of Esau; Reuel, the 11 son of "Mahalath", the wife of Esau. And the sons of Eliphaz were Teman, Omar, Zepho, 12 Gatam, and Kenaz. And Timna was concu-bine to Eliphaz, Esau's son; and she bare to Eliphaz, Amalek. These were the grand-sons 13 of Adah, Esau's wife. And these were the sons of Reuel; Nahath, Zerath, Shammah, and Mizzah. These were the grand-sons of "Mahalath", Esau's wife.

14 And these were the sons whom Esau's wife, Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah, the "son"

of Zibeon, bare to Esau: Jeush, and Jaalam, and Korah.

These were the princes, sprung from the sons 15 of Esau: the sons of Eliphaz the first-born of Esau, were, prince Teman, prince Omar, prince Repho, prince Kenaz, ° Prince Gatam, prince 16 Amalek. These were the princes, sprung from Eliphaz, in the land of Edom; and these were the grand-sons of Adah.

And these were the sons of Reuel, Esau's son, 17
 prince Nahath, prince Zerah, prince Shammah, prince Mizzah. These were the princes, sprung from Reuel, in the land of Edom; and these were the sons of "Mahalath", Esau's wife.

And these were the sons of Esau's wife Aho- 18
 libamah; prince Jeush, prince Jaalam, prince Korah. These were the princes that sprang from Esau's wife Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah. These were the sons of Esau, (who is 19
 the same as Edom) and these were their princes.

These are the sons of Seir the Horite, who 20
 formerly inhabited the land; Lotan, and Sho-bal, and Zibeon, and Anah, And Dishon, and 21 Ezer, and Dishan. These were the princes of the Horites, the sons of Seir, in the land of Edom. And the sons of Lotan were Hori and 22
 Heman; and the sister of Lotan was Timna.
 And these were the sons of Shobal; Alvan, 23
 and Manahath, and Ebal, and Shepho, and Onam. And these were the sons of Zibeon; 24 Ajath, and Anah. It was this Anah that found the waters in the wilderness, as he fed the asses of Zibeon his father. And these were the 25 sons of Anah; Dishon, and Aholibamah, the red, that the error is only in the names. For new names might be imposed from some circumstances not mentioned, as in other instances. Or we may conjecture, that Judith dying, or having no children, is not noticed; and that Aholibamah, the daughter of Anah, was an Horite, whom Esau married, which seems most probable from verse 25.

3. Here the reading of Sam. and Sept. agrees with Ch. xxviii. 9.

6. The additions to this verse are necessary to the sense; for what appropriate sense is there, in Esau "went into the country?" Had he lived in some City? The conduct of Esau in this instance was submissive; and according to the divine appointment, he left to Jacob Canaan, and departed to occupy his own inheritance.

13. 14. 17. I have followed the Sam. in these verses, as consistently retaining the proper name of this wife of Esau.

16. The two first words in this verse (prince Korah) are interpolated.

Now it is certain from verse 4, that Eliphaz was Esau's son by Adah; and from verse 11, 12, that Eliphaz had but six sons—Teman, Omar, Zepho, Gatam, Kenaz, and (by his concubine Timnah he had) Amalek. It is also certain from verse 5 and 14, that Korah was the son of Esau (not of Eliphaz) by Aholibamah; and, as such, he is properly enumerated in verse 18—"And these are the sons of Aholibamah, Esau's wife; duke Jeush, duke Korah."

20. Calmet considers it certain, that the posterity of Seir, and of Esau, were united. It might be so, but this account, will by no means prove it.

24. The waters. Perhaps some copious spring or lake. I have followed Jerom in this version, as I conceive there is no just foundation for rendering mules. These are not mentioned till the time of David, and a different term is used to denote them. Asses, as well as camels, are said to be very sagacious in discovering water, even under ground, and smelling

26 daughter of Anah. And these were the sons of Dishon; Hemdan, and Eshban, and Ithran
27 and Cheran. And these were the sons of Ezer; 28 Bilhan, and Zaavan, and Akan. And these 29 were the sons of Dishan; Uz, and Aran. These were the princes of the Horites; prince Lotan, prince Shobal, prince Zibeon, prince Anah, Prince Dishon, prince Ezer, prince Dishan.
30 These, among the princes in the land of Seir, were the princes that sprung from Hori.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

B. C. 1729. Joseph hated by his brethren; his two dreams; his brethren conspire against him and sell him to the Ishmaelites, who carry him down to Egypt, and sell him to Potiphar.

1 AND Jacob dwelt in the land, in which his fa-2 ther had sojourned, the land of Canaan. This is the history of what now befel Jacob. Joseph, when seventeen years old, fed the flock with his brethren; and the lad was with the sons of Bilhah; and with the sons of Zilpah, his father's wives. And Joseph brought to his father an 3 evil report of them. Now Israel loved Joseph more than any of his children, because he was the son of his old age; and he made for him a 4 coat of various colours. And when his brethren saw that their father loved him more than any of his sons, they hated him, and could not speak peaceably to him.

And Joseph dreamed a dream, and told it to 5
his brethren; and they hated him still the more.
And he said unto them, "Hear, I pray you, this 6 dream which I have dreamed! For behold, 7
we seemed to be binding sheaves in the field,
and, lo, my sheaf arose, and also stood upright;
and, behold, your sheaves stood up around,
and made obeisance to my sheaf." And his 8 brethren said to him, "Shalt thou indeed reign over us? Or shalt thou indeed have dominion over us?" And they hated him still the more for his dreams, and for his words.

He also dreamed another dream, and told 9
it to his father, and to his brethren, and said,
"Behold, I have dreamed another dream; and,
behold, the sun and the moon and eleven stars made obeisance to me." But when he told this 10 to his father, and to his brethren, his father rebuked him, and said to him, "What is this dream that thou hast dreamed? Shall I, and thy mother, and thy brethren, indeed come to bow down ourselves to the earth to thee?" And 11 his brethren became jealous of him; but his father observed the saying.

Now his brethren had gone to feed their 12 father's flocks in Shechem. And Israel said to 13
Joseph, "Do not thy brethren feed the flocks

CHAP. XXXVII. 4. v Sam. Sept. 4 mss.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXVI. 1. These details afford another proof of God's faithfulness. He now began to multiply the seed of Abraham by Isaac. His two sons had numerous families, which were rapidly multiplying into nations. Let us then learn to trust the promises of God, being assured, that faithful is he who hath promised, and will also do it.

2. Though Esau is styled profane for selling his birth-right, it at a considerable distance. It might then be the asses, which Anah fed, that led him to the discovery of some copious spring, or perhaps lake, of water; which, in those arid regions, would be accounted a capital discovery, and recorded by the historian as an important event.

3. I have rejected the following verses, as being an early interpolation. They are evidently inserted from the 1 Chronicles; and a comparison of the two texts proves, that one is a copy of the other. That Moses could not write these is certain, and it seems most probable that some Scribe, to render the history of the Edomites complete, first inserted them in the margin of Genesis, and others admitted them into the text. See Kennicott's Diss. § 18. and Shuckford's Con. vol. ii. p 260.

CHAP. XXXVII. 2. An evil report of them. Some Rabbis explain this, as meaning, that they eat raw flesh; and Grotius, that they were and though Jacob is preferred, so as to be the progenitor of Messiah, it does not appear that he was personally an abandoned profligate.

Let us hope, that he repented of the sin, he had in rage intended to commit; as we now find him living in peace and harmony with his brother; and without one effort to occupy the promised land, quietly withdrawing to Mount Seir. Nor does what the Prophet and the Apostle say, militate against this hope. (See Notes upon the passages.)

guilty of the sin of Sodomy. The fact is, that Jacob's sons, seem not to have been governed by any principle of virtue and honour; and it is probable, that Joseph told his father how evil their conduct was.

3. Of various colours. It was probably formed of different pieces and of different colours. It was a coat of distinction; such as the unmarried daughters of kings afterwards wore. Vid. 2 Sam. xiii. 18; and Harmer vol. ii. p 398.

4. The various reading is more apposite than the textual. Bishop Law would render the last clause, "And they would not give him the salutation of peace." So Rosenmuller.

9. Mede has selected from Achmet, in what manner the eastern nations were accustomed to interpret the objects which occur to the mind in dreams, and he applies their interpretation to explain the prophetic.

- 14 "Go see, I pray thee, said Jacob to him, whether it be well with thy brethren, and well with the flocks, and bring me word again." So he sent him from the vale of Hebron; and he came to Shechem.
- 15 A certain man found him, and, behold, he was wandering in the field; and the man
- 16 asked him, saying, "What seekest thou?" And he said, "I seek my brethren; tell me, I pray
- 17 thee, where they feed their flocks." And the man said, "They are departed hence; for I heard them say, 'Let us go to Dothan.' And Joseph went after his brethren, and found them in Dothan.
- 18 Now when they saw him afar off, even before he had come near to them, they conspired
- 19 against him to put him to death. And they said one to another, "Behold, this dreamer cometh.
- 20 Come now, therefore, and let us slay him, and cast him into some pit, and let us say, 'Some wild beast hath devoured him: we shall then
- 21 see what will become of his dreams.' But when Reuben heard this, he contrived to deliver him out of their hands; and said, "Let
- 22 us not kill him." Again Reuben said to them, (purposing to deliver him out of their hands, and to send him back to his father), "Shed no blood. Cast him into that pit which is in the wilderness, but stretch not forth a hand against him."
- 23 Now when Joseph had come to his brethren, they stript off his coat, the coat of various co-

emblems. According to Achmet, 'the sun signifies a king, and the moon, the person next to him in dignity; the morning star, the third in rank, and the other stars, inferior nobles.' These images have a striking reference to Jacob and his family.

10. Thy mother. Rachel being dead, Jacob must mean Leah, or one of his concubines.

17. Dothan. Jerom says this was not far from Shechem.

20. Wild beast. I consider the words as equivalent to (חית השדה), rendered "wild beast, or beast of the field."

21. Purposing to deliver him. Though Reuben had been guilty of a most flagrant sin (Chap. xxxv. 22.) he appears to have had more humanity than the rest of his brethren. His grief, when they had sold Joseph, strongly denotes this, verses 29, 30.

23. Ishmaelites. In the 28 verse they are called Midianites. It is lours which he had on; And they took him, 24 and cast him into a pit; but the pit was empty, no water being in it. They had now sat down 25 to eat bread, when they raised their eyes, and saw, and, behold, a company of Ishmaelites were coming from Gilead with their camels, bearing storax, balsam, and laudanum, which they were carrying down to Egypt. And Judah 26 said to his brethren, "What would it profit us, should we slay our brother, and conceal his blood? Come, let us sell him to the Ish- 27 maelites, but let us not put him to death; for he is our brother and our flesh." And his brethren consented. And as the Midianite mer- 28 chants then passed by, they drew up Joseph out of the pit, and sold him to the Ishmaelites for twenty pieces of silver; and they brought Joseph into Egypt.

And Reuben returned to the pit; and, be- 29 hold, Joseph was not in the pit; and he rent his clothes. And he came back to his brethren, 30 and said, "The child is not; and I, whither shall I go?" And they took Joseph's coat, and 31 killed a kid of the goats, and dipped the coat in the blood; And they sent the coat of vari- 32 ous colours, and commanded those who brought it to their father, to say, "This we found: know now whether it be thy son's coat or not!" And he knew it, and said, "'This is my son's 33 coat! Some wild-beast hath devoured him! Torn, torn in pieces is 'my son' Joseph!" And Jacob rent his garments, and put sack- 34 cloth upon his loins, and mourned for his son many days. And all his sons and his daughters 35 probable they were a mixed multitude; or as Harmer thinks, Ishmaelites by descent, and Midianites from the country they inhabited. I have followed Junius in rendering (שן) laudanum.

26. Judah appears to have also commiserated Joseph, and as he found he could not rescue him out of his brother's hand, he made the proposal to sell him. They consented; and thus contributed, (undesignedly on their part) to the accomplishment of his dreams.

28. Twenty pieces of silver. The weight is not specified, and it is not possible to decide of what value the pieces might be.

33. Here our Language admits the strong expression of the Original; and how must the venerable Patriarch have felt when he thus spoke!

36. Officer. Some would render Eunich; but I conceive it means any chief officer, and was only appropriated to Eunuchs, as being generally the chief officers of the eastern courts—Captain of the guard. It was attempted to comfort him; but he refused to be comforted: and said, "Surely I will go down to the grave mourning for my son." Thus his father wept for him; But the Midianites had sold him in Egypt to Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, and captain of the guard.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

B. C. 1729. Judah's sons, Er, Onan, and Shelah; Er married Tamar; Onan's sin and punishment; Judah's incest with Tamar.

1 DURING this period it was, that Judah went down from his brethren, and pitched his tent beside a certain Adullamite, whose name was Hirah. And Judah saw there a daughter of a certain Canaanite, whose name was Shuah; and he took her and went in to her. And she conceived, and bare a son; and she called his name Er. And she conceived again, and bare a son; and she called his name Onan. And she yet again conceived, and bare a son:

REFLECTIONS, UPON CHAPTER XXXVII. 1. We have here the effects of parental partiality and of envy, dreadfully portrayed. How imprudent for a parent to make so marked a distinction? He might, from the mild and pious disposition of Joseph, have solid reasons to love him more than his other children; but it would have been his wisdom, to have kept them more secret. He might be sure, that his avowed preference could not fail to displease; and from his own experience he ought to have known, that a brother offended is not easily reconciled. Their envy did not arise solely from Joseph's being a favourite, but from his dreams. These divine communications indicated his future greatness, and their submission to him. This they could not endure; and to prevent the accomplishment of these, they conspired to take away his life. Their conduct was like that of their descendants to a greater than Joseph, when they said, "We will not have this man to reign over us."

2. See how secretly the providence of God works to bring about its own purposes, and in how mysterious a manner! This was the beginning of the whole scheme of the Jewish economy. Observe on how many circumstances this depended; on Reuben's interposition—on Judah's proposal—on the merchants coming by at that time—on not his office to guard the king, but to execute his sentence, by slaying and putting criminals to death.

CHAP. XXXVIII. 1. During this period. Not at the precise time mentioned in the last chapter; but, indefinitely, during the time of Jacob's residence in the land of Canaan. Some think this historical fragment is out of its place, and would refer it to ch. xxxiii. 17. At any rate, it is an incidental history of Judah, and takes in a period of many years.—Hirah, Compare Josh. xv. i. 35. Some think, that he kept a kind of lodging-house, and that Shuah lodged with him; but she might be his relative, and under his protection.

and called his name Shelah. And Judah was in Chezib, when she bare him. And Judah took a woman, whose name was Tamar, for a wife to his first-born son, Er. And Er, Judah's first-born, was wicked in the sight of Jehovah; and Jehovah slew him. And Judah said to Onan, "Go in to thy brother's wife, and perform the duty of next kinsman to her, and raise up seed to thy brother." And, as Onan knew that the seed would not be accounted his own; so, though he went in to his brother's wife, yet did he avoid raising up seed to his brother. But what he did was so wicked in the sight of Jehovah, that he slew him also. Then Judah said to Tamar, his daughter-in-law, "Remain a widow at thy father's house, till Shelah, my son, be grown up." For he thought, that perhaps he also might die, as his brethren had done. So Tamar went and dwelt in her father's house.

CHAP. XXXVIII. 3. v Sam. Chald. Arab. 10 mss. others, he.

Joseph's being sold into Egypt, to one of Pharaoh's officers! In all this, we see the finger of God. "There are many devices in the heart of man, but the counsel of Jehovah shall stand." This is a key to many circumstances in the course of our lives, which may seem trifling in themselves, but on which great and important events depend.

3. How often are inordinate passions, in some degree, their own punishment. From Jacob's love to Joseph, arose his bitterest griefs and sorrows. He thought him dead, and refused to be comforted. He would go after him to the separate state, sorrowing till he came thither. God alone should possess our whole heart, should have our supreme affection; and to other things let us die daily; for our Josephs and Benjamins, and whatever else we are idolizing, may soon be snatched from us.

4. Much of our sorrow for departed friends, arises from ignorance and mistakes. Jacob's sorrow is an emblem of ours: he saw the garment torn, and concluded Joseph was destroyed. We see the body, which is but the clothing of the soul, torn and breathless, and we conclude the soul is lost, at least we too often act as if it was; when we ought to believe, that like Joseph, they are gone to reign, and to be ten thousand times happier than they could be with us.

5. Chezib. Ainsworth thinks this place was called Aczib. Josh. xv. 44. Micah, i. 14.

7. Wicked. His crimes are not specified; but it is clearly denoted, that he was a great offender, and cut off by some signal judgment.

8. Here is the first instance of what was afterwards sanctioned by the law, of a brother marrying the widow of a deceased brother, who had no children, in order to raise up seed for him. It seems to have been an established custom, that the widow, in such a case, should marry some one of her late husband's family, and that she had a right to demand, that they would perform the office of kinsmen.

12 And after many days, the daughter of Shuah, Judah's wife, died; and Judah was comforted, and went up unto his sheep-shearers to Timnath; he and his friend Hirah, the Adullamite.

13 Now one told Tamar, his "daughter-in-law", saying, "Behold, thy father-in-law goeth up to 14 Timnath to shear his sheep." And she put off the garments of her widowhood, and put on a veil; and she wrapped herself up, and sat at the gate of Enaim, which is on the way to Timnath. For she saw, that though Shelah was grown up, yet she was not given to him for a

15 wife. When Judah saw her, he thought her to be a harlot; for she had so covered her

16 face, "that he did not know her". And he turned aside to her from the way, and said, "Come now, I pray thee, let me come in to thee." (For he knew not that she was his daughter-in-law.) And she said, "What wilt thou give me, that thou mayest come in to me?"

17 And he said, "I will send thee a kid from the flock." And she said, "Wilt thou give to me

18 a pledge, until thou send it?" And he said, "What pledge shall I give to thee?" And she said, "Thy signet, and thy bracelet, and thy staff that is in thy hand." And he gave them to her, and went in to her, and she conceived

19 by him. And she arose, and went away; and laid aside her veil, and put on the garments

20 of her widowhood. And Judah sent the kid by his friend, the Adullamite, to recover the pledge from the woman; but he found her not.

21 Then he asked the men of that place, saying,

13. ^a Sam. Sept.

10. The sin of Onan was double, his refusing to raise up seed to his brother, and the manner in which he did it; and the Lord cut him off.

14. Enaim. I have rendered as a proper name after the Septuagint, so called from the springs found there. The Samaritan version makes it the same as Chezib in verse 5. The conduct of Tamar appears to us highly blameable; but Judah afterwards acknowledges, that she was "more righteous than he." He did not give to her Shelah, as he ought to have done, according to the established usage. In failure of brothers, it is thought, widows might lawfully marry the father; and it has been rendered probable, that Tamar, in this instance, only acted according to custom. We find such a custom, however singular it may appear to us, yet obtain in the east. Asiatic Researches, vol. iii. p. 35.

15. A harlot. It appears, that in those early times, harlotry was scarcely regarded as a crime, though adultery was severely punished. Indeed, they had no written code of laws, and it would be wrong to judge them by our rules.

"Where is that harlot, who was at Enaim by the way-side?" And they said, "There was no harlot in this place." And he returned to Judah, and said, "I cannot find her; and also the men of the place said, 'There hath been no harlot in this place.'" And Judah said, "Let her keep what she hath, lest we be ashamed. Behold, I sent this kid, and thou hast not found her."

Now about three months after, some one told Judah, saying, "Tamar, thy daughter-in-law, hath played the harlot; and also, behold, she is with child by harlotry." Then Judah said, "Bring her forth, and let her be burnt." When she was brought forth to be burned, she sent to her father-in-law, saying, "By the man to whom these belong, am I with child." And she said, "Discern, I pray thee, to whom belong this signet, bracelet, and staff." And Judah acknowledged them, and said, "She hath been more righteous than I, since I gave her not Shelah, my son." And he knew her again no more.

Now when the time of her labour was come, lo! twins were found in her womb. And while she was in labour, one of them presented the hand, and the midwife took and bound on his hand a scarlet thread, saying, "This will be the first-born!" But when he drew back his hand, behold, his brother came forth: and she said, "What breach is this thou hast made?" Therefore his name was called Pharez [BREACH-MAKER]. And afterwards came forth his brother, who had

18. Bracelet. Geddes renders, ribbon, and explains it as a twisted silk cord, by which the signet or ring was suspended.

21. The word here rendered harlot, is קדשה, and is supposed to denote a person who prostitutes herself in honour of some god; but as it refers to the same person called in the 15th verse קדשה, I have retained the same word.

24. Burnt. Tamar is considered as the wife of Shelah, though the marriage had not been consummated, and Judah adjudges her to suffer as an adulteress.

26. Acknowledged them. The pledges, especially his own signet, could not be denied, and Judah confesses himself more wicked than Tamar.

CHAP. XXXIX. 3. I consider the preposition בין as an expletive in this construction, as it is in the 1st verse, and often elsewhere.

4. Waited on him. Pilkington has justly observed, that the verb שרת should never be translated, to serve; but, minister unto, or attend upon; and the noun, not a servant, but, a minister, or attendant. See 2 Sam. xiii.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

B. C. 1727. Joseph advanced in Potiphar's house ; resisteth the solicitation of his mistress ; is falsely accused and cast into prison.

1 Now Joseph was brought down to Egypt ; and Potiphar, an officer of Pharaoh, and captain of the guard, an Egyptian, bought him of the Ishmaelites, who had brought him down thither. And Jehovah was with Joseph, so that he prospered, and was taken into the house of his Egyptian master. For his master saw that Jehovah was with him ; and that whatsoever he did Jehovah made to prosper. And Joseph found favour in the eyes ^aof his master so that he waited on him ; he made him also overseer over his house ; and all that he had he put under his care. And from the time he had made him the overseer of his house, and of all that he had, Jehovah blessed the house of the Egyptian for Joseph's sake ; and the blessing of Jehovah was upon all that he had, both in the house and in the field. And he left all that he had under the care of Joseph ; and he concerned not himself with aught he had, except the food which he ate.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXVIII 1. How reprehensible the character of the sons of Judah ! They must have been young in years, and yet alas ! how old in sin, and wicked in the sight of the Lord. Modesty and chastity are the virtues which adorn youth ; but what can be more disgraceful to youth than impudence and lust ? These were the vices for which these young sinners were early cut off. Let my young readers remember the Apostle's advice, and be careful, to flee youthful lusts.

2. How many dread shame more than sin. It is a happy circumstance, that this principle sometimes operates as a check, when a better is wanting. Judah seems insensible to the sin of his whoredom, but he is afraid of being exposed. How stupid and forgetful must we

18. 2 Kings iv. 43.—vi. 15. Michaelis renders, dass er sein Kammerdiener wurde, "so that he made him his own vallet."—Under his care. This is the sense Noldius attributes to the word, and evidently more proper than 'in his hand.'

6. Beautiful. The beauty of Joseph has been celebrated throughout the east ; and it is so to this day.

8. 9. This reply of Joseph is so just and proper, equally showing his gratitude to his master, and his humble, holy fear of God, that one would have thought it sufficient to have checked the criminal passion of his mistress.

Now Joseph was beautiful both in form and in countenance. And after these things it was 7 that his master's wife cast her eyes upon Joseph ; and she said, "Lie with me." But he refused, 8 and said to his master's wife, "Behold, my master concerneth not himself with aught I do in the house, and hath committed all that he hath to my care. No one is greater in this house than 9 I ; nor hath he kept back aught from me but thee who art his wife. How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God ?" And though 10 she spoke to Joseph, from day to day, he hearkened not to her, either to lie with her, or to be with her. But on a certain day, it happened 11 that ^aJoseph went into the house to do his ^ahousehold business ; and none of the other men-servants were within. And she caught 12 him by his upper garment, saying, 'Lie with me.' But he left his garment in her hand, and fled, and got away. And when she saw that he 13 had left his upper garment in her hand, and had fled and got away, She called to her men- 14 servants, and spoke to them, saying, 'See, he hath brought in a Hebrew to us to mock us ! He came in to me, to lie with me, and I cried with a loud voice. And when he heard 15 that I raised my voice and cried out, he left his

be, not to think, that there is no place where the workers of iniquity can hide themselves ; nor can we conceal our sins from the omniscient and all-seeing Judge.

3. From Judah's sentence on Tamar, let us learn, that it is much easier to condemn others for their crimes, than to judge and condemn ourselves. In this case we are ready to go to the rigour of the law ; but to cover our own transgression like our father Adam. To such a man, how suitable are the words of our blessed Lord ; "Thou hypocrite, first take the beam out of thine own eye, and then pluck the mote from thy brother's eye. Let us cultivate an opposite temper, and be more severe with ourselves than others ; be more ready to forgive than to condemn, that we may be forgiven.

11. 13. The readings of the versions complete the text, and seem necessary.—Upper garment. The Hyke or mantle, which being loose, might easily be thus seized, and from which Joseph might as easily escape.

14. To mock us. The wife of Potiphar is thought by most, to speak as a woman of dignity, when she uses the plural for the singular. Perhaps she was afraid lest Joseph should expose her ; and adopted this method to secure herself, as well as to avenge herself on him. Her language shows, that ^aHebrew was then regarded with contempt in Egypt.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIX. 1. "I am with thee" said God to Jacob; and how evidently was he with Joseph! His brethren had sold him as a slave, but God disposes circumstances so, that he obtains a situation in a wealthy family; his conduct secures the confidence of his master, and he makes him first his own attendant, and finally raises him to be the overseer of his house. His master saw that God was with him; and that he blessed him for his sake. The irreligious can see how God distinguishes his own servants; and though they will not follow their example, they will avail themselves of their diligence, fidelity and integrity. Let it be our care to enjoy the presence of God, and his blessing; for this will give peace to our minds in every situation, and advance both our temporal and spiritual interests.

2. The conduct of Joseph, in resisting the solicitations of his mistress, displays the force of genuine religious principles. The crime might have been committed with the utmost possible secrecy, and his own secular interest greatly promoted; but he consulted not with flesh and blood. He chose to run all risks, rather than injure a benefactor, defile his own conscience, and sin against God. "How then can I do this great wickedness, and sin against God?" was his noble reply. In this reply, are combined, 'wisdom, integrity, and a holy fear of God.' Wisdom, to discern the magnitude of a crime, which stabs a man in the most tender part, destroys the peace of families, and entails indelible disgrace; integrity, in advocating the right and the honour of his master; and an holy fear of God, who will not suffer such a sin to go unpunished. "My son, if sinners entice thee consent thou not."

3. Joseph fled and got away, as the only method he had to maintain his innocence, and has left us a pattern to imitate in similar temptations. To stay, or to reason in such circumstances, would be the occasion of our fall; to fly is the only way of safety. Let young persons learn, not to be ensnared by self-confidence, but to keep out of the way their prisons were built in this form.

CHAP. XL. 1. Baker. The word signifies a Cook, and is applied to

of the keeper of the prison. And the keeper 22 of the prison, committed to Joseph's care all the prisoners that were in the prison; and whatsoever they did there, Joseph directed to be done. The keeper of the prison looked not 23 to any thing that was under Joseph's care; for Jehovah was with him; and "all" that he did Jehovah made to prosper.

CHAPTER XL.

B. C. 1731. Pharaoh's butler and baker cast into prison; Joseph interprets their dreams; they come to pass accordingly, but the butler forgets Joseph.

AND after these things it was, that the "chief" 1
 butler and the "chief" baker of the king of Egypt, offended their Lord the king of Egypt.
 And Pharaoh was enraged against his two offi- 2 cers, against the chief butler, and against the

of temptation, if possible; or should it befall them, let them flee from it, as being the only way to shun the danger.

4. We see that Innocence itself is sometimes so circumstanced, that it may be easily construed into guilt; and how ready the wicked are to avail themselves of such circumstances, to vindicate themselves and accuse others. Those especially who tempt, are often the first to betray; for when they fail in their object, disappointment produces malice, and malice prompts to accusation. What is too base for one of the spirit of Potiphar's wife? Circumstances were in her favour, and her tale seemed to bear the marks of consistency and truth. The flight of Joseph, his garment in her possession, and the probability arising from female delicacy, that he, not she, had made the attempt; all conspired to support her accusation. To all it would seem, that Joseph had been justly condemned. Let false accusers remember, that there is an omniscient God, who judgeth.

5. The maxim, that it is better to suffer than to sin, is exemplified in Joseph. Though shut up in prison, he had innocence for his support; and by the favour of God, was even there singularly distinguished. He had no upbraidings of conscience, 'no compunctious visitings of nature,' no gloomy forebodings, to cloud his mind, embitter his days, and make his prison the emblem of hell; nor did guilt separate him from God, and pierce his soul with sorrows;—no, his mind was the temple of peace, his conscience his friend, and communion and high converse with God, his felicity. He was upright; and the irradiating beams of eternal truth, shone on him with noon-day brightness, even in a prison, and dissipated its 'darkness visible;' his prison was the way to his future dignity. If we are called to suffer, let it not be as evil doers, but for our integrity; and let us be satisfied, that at last God will bring forth our righteousness as the light, and our judgment as the brightness of the noon-day.

preparing, or getting ready any sort of food.

in the same prison-house of the captain of the 4 guard, where Joseph was prisoner. And the captain of the guard committed them to the charge of Joseph, and he attended on them;
and they continued some time in custody.
5 And they both dreamed a dream (the butler and the baker of the king of Egypt, who were in the prison), each his own dream on the same night, and the dream of each admitted 6 a proper interpretation. And Joseph came in to them in the morning, and looked at them, 7 and, behold, they were troubled. And he asked Pharaoh's officers, who were with him in custody, in his master's prison, saying, "Why 8 are your countenances so sad to day?" And they answered him, "We have each of us dreamed a dream, but there is no one to interpret it." And Joseph said to them, "Do not interpretations come from God? Tell me your 9 dreams, I pray." And the chief butler told his dream to Joseph, saying, "In my dream, 10 behold, a vine appeared before me; And on the vine were three branches; and they seemed to bud, and to shoot forth blossoms; and 11 the clusters of grapes became ripe. And Pharaoh's cup was in my hand; and I took the grapes, and pressed them into Pharaoh's cup, and I gave the cup into Pharaoh's hand." 12 And Joseph said unto him, "This is the interpretation of it: The three branches are three 13 days. Three days hence, Pharaoh will decide concerning thee, and restore thee to thy place;

and thou shalt deliver Pharaoh's cup into his hand, in like manner as formerly, when thou wast his butler. But when it shall be well with 14 thee' think on me, and show kindness, I pray thee, to me; and make mention of me to Pharaoh, and bring me out of this house: For 15 indeed I was stolen away from the land of the Hebrews; nor have I done aught here, for which they should put me into a dungeon."

When the chief baker saw that the interpre- 16
tation was favourable, he said unto Joseph, "I, also, had my dream; and behold, there were on my head, three wicker baskets; And in the up- 17
permost basket there were all kinds of pastry work for Pharaoh's eating; and the birds of the air, ate them out of the basket upon my head."
And Joseph answered and said, "This is the in- 18 terpretation of it: The three baskets are three days. Three days hence, shall Pharaoh decide 19 concerning thee, and will hang thee on a tree;
and the birds 'of the air' shall eat thy flesh
from off thee."

Now on the third day, which was Pharaoh's 20 birth-day, he made a feast for all his servants;
and he decided concerning the chief-butler and the chief baker, among his servants. And the 21 chief butler he restored to his butlership, that he might give the cup into Pharaoh's hand;
But the chief baker he hanged, as Joseph had 22 interpreted to them. Yet the chief butler did 23 not remember Joseph, but forgot him.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XL. 1. In the events here related, we may see the wonderful providence of God. Pharaoh's chief servants are brought to the same prison, where Joseph was—they each dream a significant dream—they are anxious and troub-

time is doubtful, I have preferred an indefinite expression.

6. Admitted a proper interpretation. So I think we must render, from the context; and the design of the remark is, to intimate, that these were not ordinary dreams, the mere ravings of a disordered fancy, but prophetic.

8. Come from God. Joseph properly ascribes the right interpretation of prophetic dreams to God; i. e. it is only He who gives wisdom to interpret and explain them.

11. From this verse we find, that the juice of the grape, without any fermentation, was anciently drunk in Egypt, and perhaps in other countries.

12. Are three days; i. e. the three branches signify three days. The led—Joseph inquires the reason and they tell him.—The Butler first tells him his dream, and the favourable interpretation—induces the baker to tell his. Had the baker told his first, the butler might have been discouraged, and have never told his; nor in Hebrew language has no word answering to our terms, denotes, signifies, represents; but they say, such a thing is for signifies or denotes. Hence the words of our Lord are explained, "This is my body; this cup is the &c. i. e. represents, denotes."

13. Decide concerning thee. Bishop Law proposes to render, "will call thee to account." Others, "will bring thee to trial." But, as the kings of Egypt were absolute, and their will the law, I have preferred the version given.

16. Wicker baskets. So our old versions, and I think rightly; for it is more natural to mention the material or sort, than the colour.

19. I render as in the 13th verse, as I cannot find any proof, that the words signify, 'to take off the head.' See Note, Hebrew Bible. The CHAPTER XLI.

B. C. 1715. Pharaoh's dreams; Joseph interprets them; giveth Pharaoh counsel; is advanced next to Pharaoh; his sons Manasseh and Ephraim.

- 1 AND it happened at the end of two full years, that Pharaoh dreamed; and, behold, he seemed to be standing by the river. And, lo! there came up out of the river seven beautiful fat heifers; and they fed in a meadow. And, behold, there came up after them, seven other heifers, ill-looking and lean; and they stood by the other heifers on the brink of the river.
- 4 And the ill-looking and lean heifers eat up the seven beautiful and fat heifers. Then Pharaoh awoke. Again he slept, and dreamed a second time; and, behold, there sprang up, on one stalk, seven ears of corn, plump and good. And, behold, after them, sprang up seven other ears, thin and blighted with the east wind. And the "seven thin and blighted" ears, devoured the seven plump and full ears. And Pharaoh awoke, and, behold, it was a dream.
- 8 But when the morning came, his spirit was troubled; and he sent and called for all the magicians, and all the wise men of Egypt;

this case would Joseph ever have been mentioned in the house of Pharaoh. Thus, without destroying the freedom of human actions, does God control and dispose them for the accomplishment of his own wise and holy purposes. "Wonderful is he in counsel, and mighty in working."

2. Joseph's humanity and kindness to his fellow prisoners, should teach us to esteem none below our notice. From his own case Joseph knew, that they might be innocent; but if they were guilty of the greatest crimes, religion demanded that he should pity them. If men are suffering, whatever may have been the cause, they have claims on our sympathy, and we should be ready to do them any service in our power. "Remember those that are bound, as bound with them."

22 verse explains this.

CHAP. XLI. 1. Seemed to be standing. I have followed the Sept. and Vulg. as most clearly expressing the sense.

5. Seven ears on one stalk. It is probable, that abundant as this increase appears in the vision, it was not more than was usual in fertile years. There is a species of Egyptian wheat, which has a very strong stem full of pitch, and which usually has seven full ears, on one stalk.

6. East-wind. All the mischief done to corn or fruit, is said to be by the east-wind. Compare Exod. x. 13; xiv. 21; Ps. lxxviii. 26; Ezek. xvii. 10.

and Pharaoh told them his "dreams"; but none of them could interpret them to Pharaoh. Then spoke the chief butler to Pharaoh, saying, "My fault I do this day remember. Pharaoh was enraged against his two servants, me and the chief butler, and put us in custody in the prison of the captain of the guard. And we dreamed; both I and he, on the same night, a dream; and we dreamed, each his own dream, admitting a proper interpretation. And there was with us a young man, an Hebrew, servant to the captain of the guard; and we told him, and he interpreted to us our dreams; to each man according to his dream did he interpret. And as he interpreted to us, so it came to pass. Me Pharaoh restored to mine office, and him he hanged."

Then Pharaoh sent and called for Joseph; and they brought him hastily out of the dungeon. And when he had shaved himself, and changed his raiment, he went in to Pharaoh. And Pharaoh said to Joseph, "I have dreamed a dream, and no one hath been able to interpret it. Now I have heard say of thee, that when thou hearest a dream, thou canst interpret it." And Joseph answered Pharaoh, saying, "This belongs not to

8. *So Sam. Syr. Arab. the rest, dream.

3. The modest request of Joseph and the ingratitude of the Butler, teach us, how often favours are forgotten in prosperity. Joseph simply stated his innocence, and desired his case might be considered. He railed at none of the instruments of his confinement; nor mentions his brethren who had sold him into Egypt. Yet the Butler forgot him;—forgot him who had soothed his sorrows, and raised his dejected spirits, by showing him his future safety and honour. When restored to his office, he might think it beneath him to mention a fellow prisoner; or in the dissipation of a court, he might strictly forget him. Let us strive to forget injuries, but be careful to remember favours. "Bless the Lord, O my soul, and forget not any of his benefits," but gratefully acknowledge them by prayer and praise.

8. Magicians. These are thought to be persons, who understood hieroglyphicks, and their sacred rites; and the wise men, such as studied the sciences, and the mysteries of nature.

14. Shaved himself. Herodotus informs us, that the Egyptians shaved as the Europeans now do. Joseph adopted their custom, that he might appear more decently before Pharaoh.

16. But may God, &c. I have followed the textual reading, and am satisfied this is the sense. Joseph modestly denies, that he can of himself interpret dreams; and as properly directs Pharaoh to God, by praying, that he may answer him satisfactorily. This is nearly the same, as the me: but may God give to Pharaoh an answer of 17 peace. Then Pharaoh said to Joseph, "In my dream, behold, I stood upon the bank of the ri-18 ver. And, lo! there came up out of the river seven heifers, fat and beautiful; and they fed in 19 a meadow. And, behold, there came up after them, seven other heifers, poor, very ill-looking, and lean, such as I never saw in all the land 20 of Egypt, for bad. And the "seven" lean and ill-looking heifers, ate up the first seven "beau-21 tiful" and fat heifers: And when they had swallowed them, it could not be known that they had swallowed them; for their appearance was as bad as before. Then I awoke.

 22 Again, I saw in my dream, and, behold, there came up, on one stalk, seven ears of corn, 23 full and good. And, behold, there sprang up after them, seven other ears, withered, thin, 24 and blighted with the east wind. And the seven thin "and" blighted ears, devoured the seven full, good ears. And I told this to the magicians; but no one could explain it to me.
 25 Then Joseph said to Pharaoh, "The dreams of Pharaoh have one design. God hath shown 26 to Pharaoh, what he is about to do. The seven good heifers, are seven years; and the seven good ears of corn, are seven years "of plen-27 ty": the dream is one. And the seven lean and ill-looking heifers, that came up after them, are seven years; and the seven ears of corn, thin and blighted with the east wind, are "seven 28 years"; and they will be years of famine. This is the thing which I have spoken to Pharaoh:

What God is about to do, he hath shown to Pharaoh. Behold, there will come seven years 29 of great plenty, through the whole land of Egypt: But seven years of famine will suc- 30
 ceed them, so that all the plenty in the land of Egypt shall be forgotten; for the famine will consume the land. And the former plenty 31 will not be known in the land, on account of the succeeding famine; for very grievous will it be. And as for the repetition of the dream 32 to Pharaoh, it was, because the thing is established by God, and God will soon bring it to pass. Now, therefore, let Pharaoh look out 33 for a discerning and wise man, and set him over the land of Egypt. Let Pharaoh do this also; 34 let him appoint inspectors over the land, and take up the fifth part of the produce of the land of Egypt, during these seven years of plenty;
 And let them collect all the food of those "se- 35
 ven" good years that come; and let them store up corn under the authority of Pharaoh, that food may be preserved in the cities. Thus shall 36
 there be food in store for the people of the land, against the seven years of famine, which shall be in the land of Egypt; so that the people of the land may not perish through famine.

This counsel seemed good to Pharaoh and 37
 to all his servants: And Pharaoh said to his 38 servants, "Can we find another like this man, in whom is the spirit of God?" Pharaoh then 39 said to Joseph, "For as much as God hath shown all this to thee, there is none so discerning and wise as thyself. Thou shalt be 40

various lection: "No one, without God, can give, &c."

25. God hath shown. The scene of these visions is the banks of the Nile, on the over-flowing of which, depends the fertility of Egypt. When the country is but partially overflowed, the consequence is, a failure of vegetation, and a famine. Joseph here intimates to Pharaoh, that God overruled natural causes, and could make them subservient to his designs; and that it was therefore his duty to worship him, and not the Nile.

34. The fifth part, &c. A tenth part of ancient right belonged to the king, and it is probable he bought the other tenth; for it would have been great injustice to have sold that after, which he never paid for; besides Joseph, who had advised this, would have been hated by the people, which he was not, but extremely honoured.

38. The spirit of God. They inferred this from his superior wisdom; and though idolaters, they considered the God he worshipped, as at least one among others. The next verse explains this.

40. Be subject. Secker justly observes, that (על פ' שם) cannot signify 'to kiss the mouth.' Geddes derives the word from (פ'ש) and takes it in the meaning of discursitare, to be ready to run one an errand at his desire: to move at his pleasure; like the Centurion's servants in Matt. vii. 9. Perhaps another meaning, equally probable, might be drawn from the same root, in the sense which we give to it, Gen. iii. 16. The Sept. and Vulg. must be so understood. Rosenmuller gives the Arabic sense of (פ'ש) "And on thy word shall all my people depend."

42. Muslin. Forster has proved, that this is the sense of the term; and Pliny describes it, and observes, that the Priests preferred it for their robes on account of its softness and whiteness. The ring or signet was the badge of his authority.

43. Abrech. I consider this word as of Egyptian Origin, and signifying, as given on the authority of Origen, 'a native Egyptiau,' and of Jerom, who was well acquainted with the Oriental languages. The Sept. renders a cryer; which is here improper, as no proclamation follows. I conjecture they retained the original word, which has since been dropped.

over my house ; and to thy word shall all my people be subject. Only on the throne will I 41 be greater than thou." And Pharaoh said to Joseph, "See I have set thee over all the land 42 of Egypt." And Pharaoh took his ring from off his hand, and put it upon the hand of Joseph, and arrayed him in robes of muslin, and 43 put a chain of gold about his neck ; And made him ride in the second chariot which he had ; while one cried before him, ABRECH [BEND THE KNEE]. Thus he made him ruler over all the land
 44 of Egypt. Again Pharaoh said to Joseph, "I am Pharaoh ; and without thee shall no man lift up 45 his hand or foot in all the land of Egypt." And Pharaoh called Joseph's name, Zaphnath-paaneath ; and he gave him for a wife, Asenath, the daughter of Potipherah, priest of On.
 46 And Joseph was thirty years old when he stood before Pharaoh, king of Egypt. And Joseph departed from the presence of Pharaoh, 47 and went through all the land of Egypt. And in the seven years of plenty the earth brought 48 forth by handfuls. And he collected all the unused food of the seven years "of plenty", which was in the land of Egypt, and laid it up in the cities ; the food of the field, which was round about every city, he laid it up in the same.

45. °Sept. And Joseph went over all the land of Egypt.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XLI. 1. God's influence on the human mind is here manifest ; first, in the singular dreams of Pharaoh, and next, in giving Joseph wisdom to interpret them. The hearts of kings are in his hand ; and he can turn them as easily as the water-furrows are turned. Be it our care to reverence and serve him, "and may he work in us to will and to do of his own good pleasure."

2. See how easily God can deliver his people, and turn their captivity into triumph and joy. This, Joseph little expected, after a delay of two full years. Deliverances are often nearest, when least expected ; and when most unlikely, they are most seasonable and welcome. 'Behold one hour has changed his fetters, into a chain of gold ;—his prison garments, into robes of fine muslin ;—his stocks into a chariot, and his gaol, into a palace ;—Potiphar's slave, to be his master's lord ; and the noise of his chains, into the acclamation of the people, Bow the knee.' "The Lord knoweth how to deliver the godly out of all their tribulations ;" and those who suffer for well-doing, shall at length join the blood redeemed

So Joseph collected corn as the sand of the sea- 49 shore ; so very much, that he ceased to number it ; for it was without number.

Now before the "seven" years of famine came, 50 to Joseph were born two sons ; whom Asenath, the daughter of Potipherah, priest of On, bare to him. And Joseph called the name of the 51 first-born, Manasseh, [MAKING-FORGETFUL]. For God, said he, hath made me forget all my toil, and all my father's house". And the name of 52 the second, he called Ephraim, [FRUITFUL]. For God, said he, hath made me fruitful in the land of my affliction.

The seven years of plenty, that were in the 53 land of Egypt, were now ended ; And the se- 54 ven years of famine began to come, as Joseph had said. And though the famine was in all other lands, yet in all the land of Egypt there was bread. And when all the people of Egypt 55 began to famish, they cried to Pharaoh for bread ; and Pharaoh said unto all the Egyptians, "Go to Joseph ; and what he shall say to you, do." And the famine was over the whole land ; and 56 Joseph opened all the storehouses, and sold corn to the Egyptians°. And the people of all coun- 57 tries came into Egypt to Joseph to buy corn ; for in every land the famine prevailed.

3. When there was no written revelation, it pleased God by dreams and visions to make known his designs ; but it would be vain for us to expect him to do so now. This method of communicating wisdom and knowledge has ceased ; and we are directed to search the scriptures, to lay up God's word in our hearts, and to make this our counsellor and guide. In the days of Solomon, "In the multitude of dreams, there were divers vanities." Some dreams may yet be monitory, but in general they are worthy of no regard.

4. While we admire the foreknowledge of God, let us observe his kindness, in pointing out means to support men in famine. If, in some seasons, the harvest nearly faileth, in others, he gives abundance ; and if one sort of supply be cut off, he often opens another. In short, were men provident, they would find, that promise fulfilled, "That bread shall be given them, and water shall be sure." CHAPTER XLII.

B. C. 1727. Jacob sendeth his sons to buy corn; Joseph treats them as spies; sets them at liberty on condition of their bringing down Benjamin. Simeon is kept as a pledge; Jacob refuseth to send Benjamin.

- 1 Now when Jacob understood that there was a sale of corn in Egypt, Jacob said to his sons,
 2 "Why gaze ye one at another?" And he said, "Behold, I have heard that there is a sale of corn in Egypt. Go down thither, and buy for us thence", that we may live, and not die."
 3 So ten of Joseph's brethren went down to buy corn in Egypt; But Benjamin, Joseph's own brother, Jacob sent not with his brethren;
 4 "Lest, said he, some mischief should befall him."
 5 Among those who came to buy corn, came also the sons of Israel: for the famine was in 6 the land of Canaan. Now Joseph being the governor of the land, he it was that sold corn to all the people of the land. And Joseph's brethren came, and bowed themselves before
 7 him to the ground. When Joseph saw his brethren, he knew them; but he made himself a stranger to them, and spoke harshly to them, and said, "Whence come ye?" And they said, "From the land of Canaan, to buy food."
 8 (For, though Joseph knew his brethren, yet they knew not him).
 9 Now Joseph remembered the dreams which he had dreamed in regard to them, and said to them, "Ye are spies; to see the defenceless
 10 parts of the land ye are come." And they said to him, "Nay, my lord, but to buy food are 11 thy servants come. We are all the sons of one man; we are honest men; thy servants are 12 no spies." And he said to them, "Nay; but to see the defenceless parts of the land ye are come." And they said, "Thy servants were 13 twelve brethren, the sons of one man, in the land of Canaan; and, behold, the youngest is this day with our father, and one is no more." Again Joseph said to them, "This is what I have 14 spoken to you, saying, 'Ye are spies.' Hereby 15 ye shall be proved. As Pharaoh liveth ye shall not depart hence, unless your youngest brother come hither. Send one from among you, and 16 let him fetch your brother, and ye shall be kept prisoners, that, if there be any truth in you, your words may be proved; or else, as Pharaoh liveth, ye are indeed spies." They then said, "The lad cannot leave his father; for if he should leave his father, his father would die." And he put them altogether in custody three 17 days. And Joseph said to them on the third 18 day, "This do, that ye may live; for I fear God. If ye be honest men, let one of your 19 brethren remain bound in the house, in which ye are in custody; and go carry the corn purchased for the famine at home. But bring next 20 your youngest brother to me; that your words may be verified, and that ye may not die." And they did so. And they said one to ano- 21 ther, "We are verily guilty concerning our brother; for we saw the anguish of his soul, when he entreated us, and we would not hear him; therefore is this distress come upon us." And 22 Reuben answered them, saying, "Did I not speak to you," saying "Do not sin against the lad; but ye would not hear me? Therefore, behold, an account of his blood is now demanded." And they knew not that Joseph un- 23 derstood them; for he spoke to them by an interpreter. But he turned about from them, 24 and wept; he then returned to them, and talked with them, and took from among them, Simeon, and bound him before their eyes.

25 Then Joseph commanded their sacks to be filled with corn, and every man's money to be restored in his sack, and provisions to be given them for the way; and so his servants did to 26 them. And they loaded their asses with the 27 corn, and thence departed. And, as one of them opened his sack, at the lodging place, to give his ass provender, he spied his money! for, behold! it was in the mouth of his sack.

28 And he said to his brethren, "My money is restored; for, lo! it is even in my sack." Their hearts then failed them, and they trembled with fear, saying one to another, "What is this that God hath done to us?"

29 And they came to Jacob their father unto the land of Canaan, and told him all that had 30 befallen them; saying, "The man, who is the lord of the land, spoke harshly to us, and took 31 us for spies of the country. But we said to him, "We are honest men; we are not spies. 32 We were twelve brethren, the sons of one" father; one is no more, and the youngest is now with our father in the land of Canaan.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XLII. 1. We here see, how trials and personal sufferings, arouse the sleeping conscience and bring sins to remembrance. More than twenty years had now elapsed since Joseph's brethren had sold him, and, perhaps, they had concerned themselves little about what had become of him; but in their distress, they recollect their conduct to him, and acknowledge their own sin and cruelty. "They saw the anguish of his soul," but showed no pity. For this, they justly considered, their present distress had come upon them. Let us be assured, that there is a retributive providence, and that the measure of injustice, cruelty, or dishonesty, we deal out to others, will be rendered to us again; and sins forgotten, thus brought to remembrance and punished.

2. It is a comfort to a man, though he suffer with others, to know, that he did not consent to their sin. Reuben had this

24. Simeon. He had probably been the most guilty of all his brothers towards himself. That he was of a violent and sanguinary disposition, is plain from the murder of the Shechemites.

27. Lodging place. They have no Inns in the East; nor frequently have travellers so much as a shed to cover them. They generally lodge in the open air, near some fountain; where there is pasture for beasts, and whence they may obtain a supply of water for themselves.

28. What is this &c. They seem now to be under the strongest im-

And the man, the lord of the country, said 33 unto us, 'Hereby shall I know that ye are honest men; leave one of your brethren here with me, and take the corn purchased for the famine at home, and be gone. And bring next, 34 your youngest brother to me; then shall I know that ye are not spies, but honest men; so will I deliver to you your brother, and ye shall traffick in the land."

Now it was, that they emptied their sacks; 35 and behold, every man's bundle of money was in his sack; and when they and their father saw the bundles of money, they were afraid. And Jacob their father said to them, "Me have 36 ye bereaved. Joseph is not; and Simeon is not; and ye would now take away Benjamin. All these things are against me." And Reu- 37 ben spoke to his father, saying, "Slay my two sons, if I bring him not to thee. Give him to my charge, and I will bring him to thee again." But Jacob said, "My son shall not 38 go down with you; for his brother is dead, and he only remaineth: if mischief should befall him by the way in which ye go, ye will bring down my grey hairs in sorrow to the grave."

consolation. He aimed to deliver his brother; and appeared to grieve sincerely that they had sold him. He had no part in this base deed, unless in not telling his father the truth, which, perhaps, both prudence and duty prevented. How delightful is it to have the testimony of a good conscience! This will support under any crosses or trials; but a wounded spirit, a mind lacerated and torn, by conscious guilt, who can bear? This is the worm that dieth not, in those who perish, and which will gnaw the vitals of the damned through eternity.

3. How often do the ways of providence seem to us dark, and perplexed; and the conclusions we draw, are often found to be erroneous. So the Patriarch said, "All these things are against me." They appeared to be so; he could not see any tendency in these events, to promote his interest or happiness. Every circumstance seemed a dagger to pierce his heart, and bring down pressions of their guilt, and every circumstance arouses their fears.

32. One father. The text has, 'our father,' but the Vulg. renders as I have done, which is obviously more proper. The true reading seems to have been (אבי אחי) and the latter word has been omitted, from its being immediately repeated.

36. All these things &c. Matthews renders, "all these things fall upon me." The preposition has various senses and may be rendered either upon or against.

CHAPTER XLIII.

B. C. 1729. Jacob, with reluctance, is persuaded to send Benjamin; Joseph entertaineth his brethren.

1 Now the famine was still grievous in the land.
2 And when they had eaten up the corn which they had brought out of Egypt, their father said to them, "Go again, and buy for us a little food." And Judah spoke to him, saying, "The man, who is lord of the land" did solemnly protest to us, saying, "Ye shall not see my face, unless your brother be with you. If thou wilt send our brother with us, we will go down and buy food for thee; But if thou wilt not send him, we will not go down. For the man said, 'Ye shall not see my face, unless your brother be with you.'" Then Israel said, "Wherefore dealt ye so ill with me, as to tell the man that ye had yet another brother?" And they replied, "The man strictly inquired concerning ourselves, and our kindred, saying, 'Is your father yet alive? Have ye another brother?' and we told him according to the tenor of those words. Could we certainly know that he would say, 'Bring down your brother?'"
8 And Judah said to Israel his father, "Send the young man with me; and let us arise and be gone; that we may live, and not die, both we, and thou, as well as our little ones. I will be surety for him; from me thou mayest require an account of him. If I bring him not back to thee, and set him before thee, then let me his grey hairs with sorrow to the grave. Providence appeared to connect events, and to bring them to pass in a manner, wholly at variance with the promises made to him, and the hopes of his family. His conclusion, seemed justified by the events; yet we know it was erroneous. Let us then, "judge nothing before the time;" but patiently wait the unfolding of God's designs;

CHAP. XLIII. 7. These words. The Vulg. and Sept. give the sense, "And we told him according to this inquiry:" i. e. We answered his inquiries.

9. I will be surety. It is plain, from other circumstances, that Jacob had more confidence in Judah than in the rest; and we shall soon see, that it was not without reason.

11. A present. This is now, and from the most remote antiquity has been, throughout the East, the method of introduction to the great. Prov. viii. 16.

lingered, we might have returned a second time." And their father Israel said to them, "If it must now be so, do this; take of the best fruits in the land in your vessels, and carry down, as a present to the man, storax and laudanum, a little balsam, and a little wild honey, pistachio-nuts, and almonds. And take double money with you, and carry back the money that was returned in the mouth of your sacks; perhaps it was an oversight. Take also your brother, and arise, and return to the man. And may God, the Almighty, give you favour before the man, that he may send away your other brother, and Benjamin. But if I be bereaved, bereaved I must be."

And the men took the present, and they took double money with them, and Benjamin; and they set out, and went down to Egypt, and stood before Joseph. And when Joseph saw his brother Benjamin, the son of his own mother with them, he said to the ruler of his house, "Bring these men home, and make ready; for these men must eat with me at noon." And the man did as Joseph bade; and he brought the men into Joseph's house. And the men were afraid, because they were brought into the house of Joseph; and they said to themselves, "On account of the money that was formerly returned in our sacks are we brought in; that he may find some pretext against us, and fall on us, and make us bondmen, and take our asses." And they came and we shall experience, that God can produce good, and promote the happiness of his people, by events and providences, which, to us, appear most opposite. Let us cheerfully resign ourselves to his disposal, in the belief of the delightful promise, "That all things work together for good to them that love God; to them who are the called according to his purpose."

14. That any man who understands the Original, should regard this as a prediction, is to me astonishing, the whole connection justifying the sense of the authorised version: The last clause is supported by a parallel idiom, Esth. iv. 16. "And if I perish, I perish;" i. e. I will die in this cause, if it be necessary for the deliverance of my people. So Jacob, having prayed that God might restore His children; adds; "But if I be bereaved, bereaved I must be; i. e. Circumstances seem to demand this sacrifice of the objects of my affection, and I will submit to the disposition."

 20 And said, "O! sir, we indeed came down for-21 merly to buy food. And when we had come to the lodging-place, it was, that we opened our sacks, and, behold, every man's money was in the mouth of his sack, our money in full weight. But we have brought it back with us
 22 again; And other money have we brought with us, to buy food. Who put our money into 23 our sacks, we know not." And he said, "Peace be to you, fear not. Your God, and the God of your father, hath given you a hidden treasure in your sacks. I had your money." He 24 then brought Simeon out to them. And the man brought them into Joseph's house, and gave them water, that they might wash their feet; and to their asses he gave provender.
 25 And they made ready the present against Joseph should come at noon; for they had heard that they were to dine there.
 26 And when Joseph came home, they brought him the present, which they had with them, into the house, and bowed themselves to him, to 27 the ground. And he asked them of their welfare, and said, "Is your father well, the old man, of whom ye spoke? Is he yet alive?"

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XLIII. 1. Let us learn to be prudent in making resolutions, as unforeseen circumstances may occur, which make it necessary for us to change them. Jacob had resolved, that Benjamin should not go to Egypt; but the growing pressure of the famine constrains him to submit, and let even Benjamin go. How justly is bread called the staff of life: Other articles of food may be dispensed with sooner than this; nor without this would the richest delicacies long be supportable. Jacob was rich and had flocks and herds in abundance, but wanted bread. Let us be thankful, that God has fed us with the finest of the wheat—and that we have not known what absolute famine is.

2. We here see the integrity, piety and submission of the

18. House of Joseph. It is not the custom in the East for persons to be admitted into the interior part of the house, but into a kind of Hall or Court. Hence they were afraid, from this unusual circumstance, that some design was formed against them.

23. This steward seems to have known, who they were; and what it was, Joseph intended to do. His kind address must, in some degree, have soothed their agitated minds.

28. The clause, now found in the Sam. and Sept. as it is natural, so it seems supported by what Joseph says respecting Benjamin in the next verse.

And they answered, "Thy servant our father 28 is well; he is yet alive." * And Joseph said, "Blessed of God be that old man." And they bowed their heads, and made obeisance. And he raised his eyes, and saw his brother Benjamin, the son of his own mother, and said, "Is this your younger brother, of whom ye spoke unto me?" And he said, "God, be gracious to thee, my son." And Joseph made haste, (for 30 his bowels yearned towards his brother) and sought where to weep; and he entered into his chamber, and wept there. He then washed 31 his face, and came out, and restrained himself, and said, "Set on the dinner." And they set 32 on for him, by himself, and for them, by themselves, and for the Egyptians, who ate with him, by themselves; for the Egyptians might not eat food with the Hebrews; that would be an abomination to Egyptians. And his 33 brethren sat before him, the first-born according to his birthright, and the youngest according to his youth; and they marvelled one at another. And he took and sent messes to them from what was before him; but Benjamin's mess was five times as much as any of their's. And they drank with him, and were merry.

Patriarch. He returns the money found in the sacks of his sons; considering that it might be an oversight. He would not eat bread at the expence of others. So should every man act; giving to all their due. To keep what does not belong to us is scarcely less sinful than stealing or robbing. With fervent prayer he commends his children to God. He had once wrestled and prevailed; and there can be little doubt, that when his sons had departed, he interceded for them; for their safety and their acceptance with the governor of Egypt, so that they might return in peace. But still he prepared for the worst, that if God should bereave him of all that was dear, he might bow his head, and say, 'thy Will be done.' Such a temper, would in some degree calm the mind, and

32. Might not eat. Two reasons have been assigned; 1 Because they were shepherds; and 2 because they eat cattle which the Egyptians worshipped. Whether this be the reason or not, it is certain, that the different sects in the east, would consider themselves defiled, and made impure, by being touched by one not of their own faith, or by eating out of the same dish with him.

34. Five times. It appears to be still the custom in Persia, and many other parts of the east, to honour a person of quality, by sending either a larger quantity of provisions, or a greater variety of dishes, than to others.

CHAPTER XLIV.

B. C. 1715. Joseph's contrivance to detain his brethren; Judah's admirable address to him; Joseph at length makes himself known to them and sends for his father.

1 Now he commanded the steward of his house, saying, "Fill the men's sacks with as much food as they can carry, and put every man's money in the mouth of his own sack. And put my cup, the silver cup, along with his corn-money, in the sack's mouth of the youngest. And he did according to the word which Joseph had spoken. As soon as the morning was light, the men were sent away, they and their asses. They had not yet gone far from the city, when Joseph said to his steward, "Arise, pursue after the men; and when thou overtakest them, say to them 'Wherefore have ye rendered evil for good? Why have ye stolen my silver cup?' Is it not that in which my lord drinketh, and for which, he indeed, will make inquiry? Ye have done evil in so doing." And he overtook them, and he spoke to them these same words. But they said to him, "Why speaketh my lord these words? Far be it from thy servants to do such a thing. Behold, the money, which we found in the mouths of our sacks, we brought again to thee from the land of Canaan: how then should we steal out of thy lord's house, either silver or gold? With whomsoever of thy servants, 'the cup'"

if not deliver from anxiety, at least abate it. Let us regard it as one important branch of duty, to be ever resigned to the will of God.

3. The guilty sons of Jacob construe every circumstance and occurrence against themselves. When fear prevails, it magnifies evils endured, and anticipates others which may never come.

CHAP. XLIV. 5. Why have ye stolen, &c. Without this addition to the Text, the questions addressed to the sons of Jacob, must have been wholly unintelligible.—He divineth. That divination by Cups was anciently practised, is certain, as Lucian rallies the Egyptians for making a divinity of a cup; yet as the terms will bear the sense given, I have preferred it, as more suitable to the piety and character of Joseph. When a term is ambiguous, I think we ought always to adopt that sense, which is most suitable to the context, and character of the person, respecting whom it is employed, &c.

16. What shall we say? The language of Judah marks the greatest confusion, and proves, that he thought Benjamin really guilty of the theft.

17. Joseph's great object was to detain Benjamin, to try the rest of his brethren.

shall be found, let him die; and let us also be made bonds-men to my lord." Then he said, 10 "Now, be it so far, according unto your words. Let him with whom 'the cup' is found, become my slave; but ye shall be blameless." Then 11 they speedily let down every man his sack to the ground; and every man opened his own sack. And the steward searched, beginning at 12 the oldest, and ending at the youngest; and the cup was found in Benjamin's sack. Then 13 they rent their garments, and loaded every man his ass, and returned to the city.

And Judah and his brethren came to Joseph's 14 house; (for he was yet there): and they fell down before him on the ground. And Joseph 15 said to them, "What deed is this that ye have done? Knew ye not that I should certainly make inquiry?" And Judah said, "What shall 16 we say to my lord? what shall we speak? or how shall we clear ourselves? God hath found out the iniquity of thy servants. Behold, we are my lord's bonds-men; both we, and he also with whom the cup is found." And he said, 17 "Far be it from me to do so! The man with whom the cup is found shall become my bonds-man; and as for you, go ye in peace to your father."

Then Judah came near to him, and said, "Oh! 18 my lord, let thy servant, I pray thee speak a word, in my lord's hearing, and let not thine

Though treated with a degree of kindness, they had no reason to expect, they tremble with the apprehension of slavery—of that condition, to which they had unfeelingly consigned their innocent brother. They felt the misery of bondage in the dread of it. How true is it, "that the wicked flee, when no one pursueth, and fear where no fear is, while the righteous are bold as the lion."

18. Judah had become bound for the safe return of his youngest brother, and he properly pleads his cause. The whole of this speech, has been deservedly admired, as the most perfect pattern of natural and affecting eloquence ever delivered: what gives it all its interest, is its truth. It is remarkable, that Judah does not acknowledge the crime, for that would have been to reflect on Benjamin; nor does he deny it, for that would have reflected on the justice of Joseph. All his efforts are directed to move his pity;—his pity for the old man their father, whose grey hairs would, if Benjamin was detained, "be brought down in sorrow to the grave." His filial affection, and his regard for his brother, in offering to become himself a slave in his stead, touches all our sympathies and melts the soul into pity. Joseph could no longer act a part in the melting scene; he felt for his father—he realized the heart-rending agony of the anger burn against thy servant: for thou art 19 even as Pharaoh. My lord asked his servants, saying, 'Have ye a father or a brother?

 20 And we said to my lord, 'We have a father, an old man, and a child of his old age, a little one; and his brother is dead, and he alone is left of his mother, and his father loveth him.'
 21 And thou saidst to thy servants, 'Bring him down to me, that I may set mine eyes upon 22 him.' And we said to my lord, 'The lad cannot leave his father; for should he leave his 23 father, his father would die.' And thou saidst to thy servants, 'Unless your youngest brother come down with you, ye shall no more 24 see my face.' Now when we came up unto thy servant, 'our' father, we told him the words
 25 of my lord. And our father said, 'Go again and buy for us a little food.' But we said, 26 'We cannot go down. If our youngest brother be with us, then will we go down; for we may not see the man's face, unless our 27 youngest brother be with us.' And thy servant, 'our' father, said unto us, 'Ye know that my 28 wife bare to me but two sons. And the one went out from me, and I said, "He is torn, torn 29 to pieces; and I have not since seen him. And if ye take this one also from me, and mischief should befall him, ye will bring down my grey 30 hairs in sorrow to the grave." Now therefore, when I come to thy servant, 'our' father, and 31 the lad be not with us; It will be, when he seeth that the lad is not with us, that he will die: 'for his life is bound up in the life' of the lad. Thus thy servants will bring down the grey 32 hairs of thy servant, our father in sorrow to the grave. For thy servant became surety for the a bonds-man to my lord; and let the lad go up with his brethren. For how can I go up to my 34 father, if the lad be not with me? lest I see the evil that will come on my father."

THEN Joseph could not refrain himself before all that stood by him; and he cried, "Cause every man to go out from me." And there stood no one by him, while Joseph made himself known to his brethren. And he wept 2 aloud; and the Egyptians, and the house of Pharaoh, heard. And Joseph said to his brethren, 3 "I am Joseph! Is my father yet alive?" But his brethren could not answer him, they were so confounded at his presence. Again, Joseph said to his brethren, "Come near to me, I pray you." And they came near. And he said, "I am Joseph your brother, whom ye sold into Egypt. Now, therefore, be not grieved, 5 nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither; for God sent me before you, to preserve life. For these two years hath the 6 famine been in the land; and there are yet five years to come, in which there shall be neither plowing nor reaping. Therefore, God 7 sent me before you to preserve to you a posterity on earth, and to save your lives by a great deliverance. So then, it was not you 8 only that sent me hither, but God: and he hath made me a father to Pharaoh, and lord of all his house, and ruler of all the land of Egypt. Haste ye, and go up to my father, 9 and say unto him, 'Thus saith thy son Joseph, God hath made me lord of all Egypt: come down unto me; tarry not. And thou shalt 10 dwell in the land of Goshen, that thou mayest be near to me; thou, and thy children, and thy children's children, and thy flocks, and thy herds, and all that thou hast. And 11 there will I support thee, (for there are yet to be five years of famine) lest thou, and thy house

5. This address of Joseph, was admirably calculated to soothe and to calm the minds of his brethren; to awaken their confidence and cherish their hopes. He forgave their sin against himself, and piously attributed their base deed, to an over-ruling providence.

10. Goshen. This is in Ch. xlvii. 11, called the land of Ramesses; but what particular region of Egypt it was, has been much disputed. That 12 And, behold, your eyes see, and the eyes of my brother Benjamin, that it is my mouth which speaketh to you. And ye shall relate to my father all my glory in Egypt; and all that ye have seen; and haste ye and bring down my father, hither. And he fell on his brother Benjamin's neck, and wept; and Benjamin wept on his neck. Moreover, he kissed all his brethren and wept on them; and afterward, his brethren talked with him.

16 And it was reported in the house of Pharaoh, saying, Joseph's brethren are come; and it was pleasing to Pharaoh, and to "all" his servants. And Pharaoh said to Joseph, "Say to thy brethren, 'This do ye; load your beasts, and depart, and go unto the land of Canaan. And take your father and your households, and come to me; and I will give you the best of "the land of Egypt; and the fat of the land ye shall eat.'" Now thou art commanded to say to them, do this, 'Take with you wagons from the land of Egypt for your little ones, and for your wives, and take up your father, and come down. Also regard not your furniture; for the best of all the land of Egypt shall be yours." And the sons of Israel did so: and Joseph gave them wagons, according to the command of Pharaoh, and gave them provision for the way. To every one of them he gave two suits of raiment; but to Benjamin, he gave three hundred pieces of silver, and five suits of raiment. And to his father he sent likewise, ten asses loaded with the best things of "the land of" Egypt, and ten she-asses loaded with corn, and bread, and meat, for his father on the way. So he sent away his brethren, and they departed; and he said to them, "See that ye quarrel not on the way."

So they went up out of Egypt, and came into the land of Canaan, to Jacob their father. And they told him, saying, "Joseph is yet alive, and he is governor over all the land of Egypt." And Jacob's heart palpitated; though he believed them not. But when they told him all the words of Joseph, which he had said to them; and when he saw the wagons which Joseph had sent to carry him, the spirit of Jacob their father revived. And Israel said, "It is enough. Joseph, my son, is yet alive. I will go and see him before I die."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XLIV & XLV. 1. The conduct of Joseph towards his brethren, was evidently designed to bring them to remembrance, and to effect their humiliation. Nothing could be better contrived to produce these ends, than the method adopted. He treated them with distinguished kindness, that their offense in taking his silver cup, might appear more aggravated; and though they were innocent, yet they might still conclude all this mischief had been done them for their past sin. Has not God the same design in view, in those afflicting dispensations with which he tries his people? There is some idol they have set up in their hearts, and he snatches it from them; some sin for which they have not been humbled, and he finds it necessary to bring them into such circumstances, that they repent, and are ashamed and confounded because of their folly.

2. The filial tenderness and affection of Judah, deserves general imitation. It is impossible that children should ever fully repay parents, for their cares, anxieties, and love to them; but they ought, at least, to endeavour to diminish their cares, sooth their sorrows, and in their old age, administer to their comfort and joy in every way pos-

11. And I will support thee; By affording sufficient supplies of corn during the remaining years of famine.

12. Your eyes see, &c. You have the strongest evidence that you are not deceived, the evidence of your own eyes and ears.

14. Fell on his neck and wept. Joseph manifested the greatest affection to his uterine brother, and this burst of tears, after an absence of twenty years, is the genuine expression of nature. These two sons of the same mother, discover the most amiable sensibility. Joseph, having given this proof of his peculiar attachment to Benjamin, embraced and wept over, all his brethren.

18. The best of the land. This must be understood to signify, not the best land, absolutely considered, but the best for them as shepherds and herdsmen. If the remark on the land of Goshen be just, in this relative sense, the words must be explained.

19. Wagons. This intimates, that nothing of this kind was used as yet in Canaan. They conveyed their moveables on the backs of beasts; and the sight of these wagons, might very obviously make a strong impression on Jacob's mind, and satisfy him, that what his sons told him was true.

20. Your furniture. This may refer more particularly to their earthen ware, and other cumbersome things, which could not be so easily conveyed to so great a distance. They are charged not to regard the loss of such things, when they are assured, that they should obtain more than they lost.

22. Two suits of raiment. Some understand, "splendid and valuable raiment." I have followed the Sept. and Vulg. and consider the term. (ἡνὶν) refers to the upper garments.

CHAPTER XLVI.

B. C. 1707. Jacob, by a vision, encouraged to go down to Egypt; the number of his family; Joseph meeteth them.

- 1 AND Israel removed with all that belonged to him, and came to Beer-sheba, and offered sacrifices to the God of his father Isaac. And God spoke to Israel in the visions of the night, and said, "Jacob! Jacob!" And he said,
- 3 "Here am I." He then said, "I am the mighty one, the God of thy father; fear not to go down into Egypt, for I will there make of thee
- 4 a great nation. I will go down with thee into Egypt; and I will also bring thee up again: and Joseph shall close thine eyes."
- 5 Jacob then set out from Beer-sheba; and the sons of Israel carried their father Jacob, and their little ones, and their wives, in the wagons which Pharaoh had sent to carry them.

sible. Jacob had seen in the spirit of his sons much to lament; but in the conduct of Judah, becoming responsible for Benjamin, and pleading his cause with so much truth, interest and success, we see a son reformed, and one who nobly preferred the peace of his aged father to his own—the comfort of his father, to his own freedom. He could not bear the thought of seeing the old man, his father, again wounded, for the loss of his Benjamin. Disobedient child, learn thy duty. Remember, that the first command which has a promise connected with it, is this, "Honour thy father and thy mother."

3. The generous and forgiving temper of Joseph, admonishes us not to avenge ourselves when it is in our power, but to overcome evil with good. Had Joseph now treated his brethren as they had treated him, and sold them for slaves, according to the spirit of the world, he would have acted justly; but what lustre does it reflect on his character, that he nobly forgave their sin, and seemed peculiarly anxious, that they should forgive themselves, and not hereafter think of it! What must have been their feelings, when he said, "I am Joseph. Doth my father live?" He saw their confusion; he knew their fears, and, anxious to comfort them, said, "Now, therefore, be not grieved,

24. Quarrel not; that is, do not provoke one another, by mutual recriminations respecting me; but as I have forgiven you, forgive ye one another, and maintain affection and peace.

26. Palpitated. Some render, became chill; but this is not probable. He might doubt and hesitate, but he could not be cold. I derive with Geddes from (פגס), which in Arabic has the sense given, and which seems most suitable here. An event so unexpected, to which he could not give full credit, yet could not fail strongly to agitate the heart of an affectionate father, and almost deprive him of the full exercise of his reason.

CHAP. XLVI. 1. To Beer-sheba. This was to the south of Hebron, and on the way to Egypt. Abraham dwelt here and built an altar, and planted Tamarisk trees, Gen. xxi. 23. Here also Isaac had dwelt; Ch. xvi. 32, 33; and here, now Jacob offers sacrifices to the God of his father; and he appeared to him, and sanctioned his descent into Egypt.

3. The mighty one. I render (הוא) as an appellative, as here giving

And they took their cattle, and their wealth 6 which they had acquired in the land of Canaan, and went into Egypt; Jacob, and all his seed with him. His sons, and his grand-sons, his 7 daughters, and his grand-daughters; even all his seed brought he with him into Egypt.

And these are the names of the sons of Israel, 8 who went into Egypt. Reuben, Jacob's first-born. And the sons of Reuben; Hanoch, and 9 Phallu, and Hezron, and Carmi. And the sons of Simeon; Jemuel, and Jamin, and 10 Ohad, and Jachin, and Zohar, and Shaul, the son of a Canaanitish woman.

And the sons of Levi; Gershon, Kohath, and 11 Merari. And the sons of Judah; Er, and 12 Onan, and Shelah, and Pharez, and Zarah: but Er and Onan died in the land of Canaan. [And the sons of Pharez were Hezron and Ha-nor angry with yourselves, that ye sold me hither; for God did send me before you to preserve life." Every word is emphatical, and must have administered strong consolation. Here Joseph exhibits an impressive example of the power of religion, raising him superior to the mean, but natural passion of revenge, and leading him to view the hand of God in his sufferings, and the design of God, in this wonderful work of providence.

4. In this whole scene, we have a striking emblem of the state of a convinced sinner, and of the method of relief by a Saviour. Joseph's brethren strongly represent the former. The law comes with power to the conscience, forgotten sins are revived, the awful consequences of them are felt; the soul is filled with confusion, and sometimes with unutterable distress. Various expedients are tried to obtain relief, but in vain. The cares, amusements, pleasures and occupations of Life, are equally inefficient to give peace, or heal the wounds of the soul. But when Jesus is beheld as the Saviour;—when he says, "I am Jesus," the discovery melts the soul into the deepest repentance; but awakens hope; and hope, arising from dependence on him, brings the joy of salvation.

a strong reason to encourage the Patriarch, to expect the fulfilment of his promise.

4. Bring thee up; that is, bring up thy posterity; for Joseph is to close his eyes, perform the last kind office to his dear father. It was the custom of those most esteemed, to be desired to perform this office.—Close thine eyes. Literally, 'put his hand on thine eyes.' I prefer the sense to the idiom, as removing the ambiguity.

7. Daughters. Jacob had but one daughter; and all must admit either an enallage of number, or an error of some scribe.

8. Jacob and his sons. I have omitted these words with 1 ms. and internal evidence. It is clear, that they form no part of the text, but have been added, as the Head of the following genealogy.

10. Ohad. In the parallel places, Numb. xvi. 12; and 1 Chron. xiv. 24, this name is wanting.

12. And the sons of Pharez. These could not be born when they 13 ^{mul}]. And the sons of Issachar; Tolah, and 14 Phuvah, and 'Jashub', and Shimron. And the sons of Zebulun; Sered, and Elon, and Jahleel.

15 These were the sons of Leah, whom she bare to Jacob in Padan-aram, with his daughter Dinah.
All the persons, sons and daughters, who sprung from Leah, were thirty-three.

16 And the sons of Gad; Ziphion, and Haggi, and Shuni, and Ezbon, and Eri, and Arodi, 17 and Areli. And the sons of Asher; Jimnah, and Ishuah, and Isui, and Beriah, and Serah,
their sister: [and the sons of Beriah; Heber, 18 and Malchiel.] These were the sons of Zilpah, whom Laban gave for an hand-maid to his daughter Leah. And these she bare unto Jacob, sixteen persons.

19 The sons of Rachel, Jacob's wife, were Jo-20 seph and Benjamin. [And unto Joseph, in the land of Egypt, were born Manasseh and Ephraim, whom Asenath the daughter of Po-21 tipherah, priest of On, bare to him.] And the sons of Benjamin, were Belah, and Becher, and Ashbel, Gera, and Naaman, Ehi, and Rosh, 22 Muppim, and Huppim, and Ard. These were the sons of Rachel, who were born to Jacob.
All the persons were fourteen.

23 And the son of Dan was Hushim. And the sons of Naphtali, were Jahzeel, and Guni, and 24 Jezer, and Shillem. These were the sons of Bilhah, whom Laban gave for a hand-maid to Rachel his daughter; and she bare these to

Jacob. All the persons were seven. All the 26 persons that came with Jacob into Egypt, (that had come out of his loins), beside Jacob's wives, all the persons were sixty-six. And the sons 27
of Joseph, who were born to him in Egypt, being two persons, all the persons of the house of Jacob, who came into Egypt, were seventy.

Now Jacob sent Judah before him to Joseph, 28
to request that he would meet him in Goshen;
for to the land of Goshen 'he was coming'.
And Joseph made ready his chariot, and went 29 up to meet Israel his father, to Goshen; and presented himself to him, and fell on his neck, and wept on his neck a good while. And Israel 30 said to Joseph, "Now I can die, since I have seen thy face! since thou art alive!" And Jo- 31 seph said to his brethren, and to his father's house, "I will go up, and inform Pharaoh, and say to him, 'My brethren, and my father's house, that were in the land of Canaan, are come to me. And the men are shepherds, (for their 32 occupation hath been to rear cattle), and they have brought their flocks, and their herds, and all that belongeth to them.' And when Pha- 33 raoh shall call you, and say, 'What is your occupation?' Then ye shall say, 'Thy servants 34 have been occupied about cattle from our youth even until now; both ourselves and our fathers,' to the end ye may dwell in the land of Goshen;
for every shepherd is an abomination to the Egyptians."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XLVI. 1. "In all thy ways acknowledge God, and he shall direct thy steps." Jacob did so, and God was with him. He sought divine direction, and it was imparted;
he offered sacrifices, and they were accepted. It was an important step to go down to Egypt, and to leave the land promised to his fathers;
he might fear lest in this he should do wrong, or lest the land he forsook should be occupied by others, and his children be led to incorporate with the Egyptians, and the hopes of his family be thus defeated.
God assured him that all his fears were vain—that he would, in Egypt make of him a great nation, and bring him up again to Canaan. In every removal, or undertaking, let us seek the divine presence and blessing; let us begin our journeys, and our employments with God, and then we may cheerfully hope, that he will protect and prosper us.

2. How, delightful is it to see those whom we tenderly love, after a long absence! Jacob had long ceased to expect this pleasure.
He had considered his Joseph as certainly torn to pieces by wild beasts;
and as existing no more in the land of the living. What indescribable sensations must he have felt, when he again beheld Joseph! He might say with peculiar propriety, "This my son was lost, and is found; he was dead, and is alive again!" O what pleasure will it be to see in heaven, those we have loved on earth! There pious parents, and children will meet, and be separated no more. Their union shall went down to Egypt; and must have been added afterwards.

13. Jashub. This I deem the true reading. Jab in Arabic has the same signification; and this error might creep in, by some one using the Arabic instead of the Hebrew term.

CHAPTER XLVII.

B. C. 1706. Joseph presenteth some of his brethren and his father to Pharaoh; Joseph's policy towards the Egyptians; Jacob's age, &c.

- 1 THEN Joseph came and told Pharaoh, and said, "My father and my brethren, and their flocks, and their herds, and all that belongeth to them, are come from the land of Canaan; and, behold, they are in the land of Goshen."
 2 Now he had taken "with him", from among his brethren, five men; and he presented them to 3 Pharaoh. And Pharaoh said to Joseph's brethren, "What is your occupation?" And they said to Pharaoh, "Thy servants are shepherds,
 4 both ourselves, and our fathers." They said moreover to Pharaoh, "To sojourn in the land are we come; for, so grievous is the famine in the land of Canaan, that there is no pasture for thy servants' flocks; now therefore, we pray thee, let thy servants dwell in the land of Goshen."
 5 And Pharaoh spoke to Joseph, saying, "Thy father and thy brethren are come to 6 thee. The land of Egypt is before thee; in the best of the land make thy father and brethren to dwell; in the land of Goshen let them dwell. And if thou know any man of ability among them, make them rulers over my 7 cattle." And Joseph brought in his father Jacob, and presented him to Pharaoh. And Jacob 8 blessed Pharaoh. And Pharaoh said to be lasting as eternity; and their fellowship complete! They shall be one in Christ, as he is one with the father; and their joy shall be full, without any interruption.

3. The promise and the prediction made to Abraham, we now see begin to be fulfilled. His seed have now multiplied—they have become seventy, and are still to go on increasing, till they become a neighbours, the Arabians.

CHAP. XLVII. 2. I adopt the Sam. reading, and consider (מֵאִתָּךְ) as denoting here, nothing but from among, as the Sept. renders.

4. No pasture &c. This shows the cause of the famine to be the want of rain; so that the pastures were parched up; and the same cause might operate in reference to that part of Egypt overflowed by the Nile. The want of rain in Abyssinia, at the usual season, would occasion the want of the usual inundation of the Nile, and of the consequent sterility of the land.

6. Men of ability. Pharaoh desires they may be promoted to such a situation; as their previous habits and qualifications made suitable.

7. Blessed Pharaoh; that is, saluted him, praying for his welfare, and giving thanks for his bounty and kindness.

Jacob, "How many are the days of the years of thy life?" And Jacob said to Pharaoh, 6 "The days of the years of my sojourning, are one hundred and thirty years: few and evil have the days of the years of my life been, and have not attained unto the days of the years of the life of my fathers, in the days of their sojourning." Again Jacob blessed Pharaoh, 10 and went out from his presence.

And Joseph settled his father and his brethren, 11 and gave them a possession in the land of Egypt; in the best of the land, in the land of Rameses, as Pharaoh had commanded. And 12 Joseph supported his father, and his brethren, and all his father's household, with bread, according to their families.

Now there was no food in all the land; for 13 so grievous was the famine, that the land of Egypt, and the land of Canaan, were distressed by reason of the famine. And Joseph collected all the money that was found in the land of Egypt, and in the land of Canaan, for the corn which they bought; and Joseph brought the money into Pharaoh's house. And 15 when money failed in the land of Egypt, [and in the land of Canaan,] all the Egyptians came to Joseph, and said, "Give us food; for why should we die in thy presence, though the money fail?" And Joseph said, "Give to me 16 great nation. They have now gone down to Egypt, where they are to be afflicted, till the iniquity of the Amorites be complete. Neither promises nor predictions can ever fail; for they both rest on the immutable perfections of God. We have, on every subject connected with our spiritual interests, a sure word of promise and prophecy, to which we shall do well to take heed.

9. I have given the idiom, in Pharaoh's inquiry, that the answer may appear more explicit. In the 28 verse, the words are rendered, 'The whole age of Jacob.'—Sojourning. The Patriarch considers a man in this world, but as a traveller, who visits a distant country, and carries but a short season at a place. He is a sojourner, not an abiding inhabitant. The image is striking, and ought to remind us, that we should be travelling forwards to the land of eternal rest.

11. See Note, Ch. 45. 10. The Alexandrian Jews who translated the Hebrew, seem to have used Rameses as synonymous with Goshen. Perhaps the district might be thus called in their time, from the city of Rameses, which the children of Israel were compelled to build: Exod. i. 11.

14. To the house of Pharaoh; that is, to the royal treasury.

15. And in the land of Canaan. Though this be in all the copies, it your cattle; and I will give you "food" in exchange for your cattle, since money faileth." 17 So they brought their cattle to Joseph; and Joseph gave them food in exchange for the horses, and for the flocks, and for the herds, and for the asses; and he granted them food in exchange for all their cattle that year. 18 When that year was ended, they came to him the next year, and one said to him, "It is not hidden from my lord, how that our money is spent; my lord hath also got our herds of cattle; there is not aught left in the sight of my lord, but our bodies, and our lands. 19 Why should we die before thine eyes, or our land lie desolate? Buy us, and our land in exchange for food, and we and our land will be subject to Pharaoh. Give us seed only that we may live and not die; and that the 20 land may not be desolate." Thus Joseph bought the whole land of Egypt for Pharaoh; for the Egyptians sold every man his field, because the famine prevailed over them. So the land became the property of Pharaoh. And the people he "made servants", from one extremity of 22 Egypt even to the other. Only the land of the priests he bought not; for the priests had a portion assigned them from Pharaoh, and were sustained by the portion which Pharaoh gave them; 23 therefore they sold not their lands. Then Joseph said to the people, "Behold, I have bought you this day, and your land, for Pharaoh. Here is seed for you, that ye may sow the land. But 24 of the increase, ye shall give the fifth part to Pharaoh; and four parts shall be your own, for seed for the field, and for your own food, and for food for your households, and your little ones." And they said, "Thou hast saved our 25 lives; let us find favour in the sight of my lord, and we will be Pharaoh's servants." And Joseph 26 made it a law over the land of Egypt, which continues to this day, that Pharaoh should have the fifth part of the produce; except of the land of the priests, which became not the property of Pharaoh.

Thus Israel dwelt in the land of Egypt, in the 27 country of Goshen; and they had possessions therein, and increased and multiplied exceedingly. And Jacob lived in the land of Egypt 28 seventeen years; so that the whole age of Jacob was a hundred and forty-seven years. And the 29 time drew near that Israel must die; and he called for his son Joseph, and said to him, "If now I have found favour in thy sight, put, I pray thee, thine hand under my thigh, and deal kindly and truly with me. Bury me not, I pray thee, in Egypt; For with my fathers I would 30 lie. Thou shalt, therefore, carry me out of Egypt, and bury me in their burying-place." And he answered, "I will do as thou hast said." And Israel said, "Swear to me." And he swore 31 to him. And Israel bowed himself, leaning on "his staff".

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XLVII. 1. Let Jacob's reflection on his own life remind us, that here we have no permanent abode. This, said a prophet to a sensual and worldly-minded people—"this is not your rest." Miserable are they who place all their hopes of happiness upon Earth; for soon they must quit it for ever. Life's journey is ever passing on; and the moment is not far distant, when it will

21. The reading of the Sam. Sept. and Vulg. is doubtless entitled to preference. The textual reading conveys a sense highly improbable. The inconveniences attending such a removal from one city to another, must be obvious to every one; and it will be difficult to assign any politic or good ends for such a removal.

2. Let not the most devoted servants of God, think it strange, if many evils befall them during the period of their sojourning on earth. The most severe trials, the heaviest calamities, are less than our ini-

they provided what was necessary for the sacred rites. Thus long after the times of Joseph the same privilege was attached to this body.

24. The justice and the wisdom of this policy of Joseph, have been called in question. It may be said, that necessity led the people cheerfully to submit to the proposal of Joseph—that they must have contributed some other way to the expenses of the state—and that it is highly probable, the claims of the crown, before this time, were not certain or defined, and that in such cases, the people often suffer more, and are subject to greater exactions, than those which Joseph now appointed.

And one told Jacob, and said, "Behold, thy son Joseph is come to thee." Then Israel exerted his strength; and sat on the bed. 3 And Jacob said to Joseph, "God, the Almighty, appeared to me at Luz, in the land of Canaan, 4 and blessed me, And said to me, 'Behold, I will make thee fruitful, and multiply thee, and I will make of thee a numerous people; and this land will I give to thee and" to thy seed after 5 thee, for a perpetual possession.' quities deserve; and are often permitted to exercise our graces, and improve our tempers. "Whom the Lord loveth, he chastiseth, and scourgeth every son in whom he delighteth." What a train of evils do we see in the life of Jacob! From the period, when he left his father's house, till his descent into Egypt, one trouble succeeded another. In what was he distinguished in this world? How then could the promises be fulfilled to him, unless they respected a better state?

way to Ephrath;" (the same is now Bethlehem).

And Israel beheld Joseph's sons, and said, 8 "Who are these?" And Joseph said to his 9 father, "These are my sons, whom God hath given me in this place." And Israel said, "Bring them, I pray thee, to me, that I may bless them." Now the eyes of Israel were so 10 dim for age, that he could not see clearly. And he brought them near to him; and he kissed them, and embraced them. And Israel said 11 to Joseph, "I once thought, that I should never see thy face; and, lo! God hath shown me also thy seed!" And Joseph brought them out 12 from between his father's knees, and they bowed themselves with their faces to the ground". And Joseph took them both, and 13 brought them near to him; Ephraim in his right hand, towards Israel's left hand, and Manasseh in his left hand, towards Israel's right hand. And Israel stretched out his right hand, and 14 laid it upon the head of Ephraim, though he was the younger; and his left hand upon the head of Manasseh, (intentionally so directing his hands), though Manasseh was the first-born. And he blessed the sons of Joseph, and said, 15 "God, before whom my fathers, Abraham and Isaac, walked; the God who hath fed me all my life long unto this day; The Angel who hath 16

ral bounties, with which God in his goodness crowns our days. Extreme want will conquer every passion; and lead the rich to sacrifice their wealth, and the brave to yield up their freedom. Let us be thankful, for ample supplies of better bread—for the spiritual provision so richly provided. Dreadful is the state of that people, where there is a famine of the word; and dreadful must be the account those have to render, who possess this bread, but refuse to break and distribute it to the souls of men! "Bless, Lord, this provision, and ever give us the bread of life."

beloved wife, whom he had buried on the way to Ephrath.

10. Could not see clearly. Dean Pilkington has properly observed, that [this adverb frequently means, not only, or scarcely, or rather than. To understand it as an absolute negative, here, is to make the writer contradict what he has stated verse 8th.

12. They bowed themselves. This reading, which makes the lads, bow down to Jacob, after he had embraced them, and not Joseph, is more agreeable to the design of the narrative, and the customs of Egypt.

14. Hath fed me; that is, tended and fed me as a shepherd does his flock. Compare Psalm xxiii. 1.

16. The angel. He refers to the angel with whom he wrestled, Ch. xxxii. 24, and whom he regards as his deliverer.

redeemed me from every evil, bless "these" lads; and may my name be named on them, and the name of my fathers, Abraham and Isaac; and may they increase abundantly in the midst of the earth." And when Joseph saw that his father had laid his right hand upon the head of Ephraim, it displeased him; and he raised the hand of his father, to remove it from the head of Ephraim, to the head of Manasseh. And Joseph said to his father, "Not so, my father: for this is the first-born; put thy right hand upon his head." But his father refused, and said, "I know it, my son, I know it. He also shall become a people, and shall also be great; but truly his younger brother shall be greater than he; and his seed shall become the head of many tribes." And he blessed them that day, saying, "From you shall the sons of Israel bless, saying, 'May God make thee as Ephraim and as Manasseh.'" So he set Ephraim before Manasseh. And Israel said to Joseph, "Behold, I am about to die; but God shall be with you, and bring you again unto the land of your fathers. Moreover, I give to thee one portion above thy brethren, which I took out of the hand of the Amorite, with my sword and with my bow."

CHAPTER XLIX.

B. C. 1689. Jacob on his death-bed blesseth all his sons, and predicts their future condition; he chargeth them to bury him in the sepulchre of his fathers.

THEN Jacob called to his sons, and said, "Assemble, that I may tell you, what shall befall you in the latter days.

Assemble, and hear, ye sons of Jacob; 2
Yea, hearken to Israel your father.

REUBEN! my first-born wast thou; 3
The beginning of my vigour and strength;
Superior in excellence—superior in power!
Unstable wast thou as water; thou shalt not excel 4
Because thou ascendedst thy father's bed:—
Ascending my couch, then wast thou degraded.

SIMEON and LEVI are brethren; 5
They "accomplished" by violence their schemes.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XLVIII. 1. We here learn, that a grateful remembrance of God's kindness and mercy to us, during our lives, will cheer and comfort the mind, on a dying bed. Jacob records the many divine appearances to him, and interpositions in his favour; and hence infers his interest in the God of his fathers, and his right to the heavenly inheritance. Delightful state!—to view the wilderness passed—the battle won, and to be just ready to seize the crown of life.

2. We here see the piety of Joseph, and his concern for the benediction of his father, to rest upon the head of his children. While solicitous for our own salvation, and the enjoyment of every spiritual blessing, let us not forget our children. Be it our endeavour to train them up in the knowledge and practice of every religious duty, and especially to set before them the wise and good, to encourage and animate them. To hear the language, to witness the peace, the joy and confidence of a dying saint, is calculated to make a deep impression, even on the minds of youth; and the blessing of so eminent a character as Jacob, his grandsons could not forget.

3. How sovereign is God in the bestowing of his favours. He gave the blessing to Isaac in preference to Ishmael; to Jacob, rather than to Esau; and now, to the grief of Joseph, Ephraim is put before Manasseh. In such instances, God shows, that his favours are not due to merit, but are free and undeserved—and that he has wise reasons, for this conduct, it would be rash, not to suppose. However our children may be one preferred to another, O! that they may live before thee—that their souls may be precious in thy sight, and saved for ever. O! that they may have an interest in the merits of the Redeemer, and be adopted into the family of the first-born.

19. The head of many tribes. This, doubtless refers to the future pre-eminence of Ephraim, who should become the head of the ten tribes.

22. One portion. Geddes says, from Ch. xxxiii. 19, we learn, that Jacob bought a piece of land from Hamor at Shechem; to which he no doubt here alludes. It should therefore seem, that this spot had afterwards fallen into the hands of the Amorites, after the destruction of the Shechemites, and had been retaken from them, by Jacob, by the force of arms, though this transaction is nowhere else mentioned. Michaelis considers that there is an allusion to Shechem, which Jacob's sons destroyed; and which might, in respect to him, be denominated a conquest. The conjecture of Geddes is much more probable.

CHAP. XLIX. 1. Some have doubted, whether the Patriarch declared their predictions in the same words, or manner, in which they usually spoke, or in the poetic form, as we now have them; or whether they might not be reduced to this form by some of their children, for the sake of being better retained in memory. It is of no importance to decide on this subject; but if they spoke by the Spirit, as they evidently did, surely he could so invigorate their strength, and aid the powers of their minds, as to enable them to speak in the most lofty strain of eloquence, and in measured language.

4. Unstable. Some render, 'teemed, swelling with pride, like water, &c.' I prefer the usual sense,—Degraded. Literally profaned. By this shameful deed, Reuben lost the birth-right, which naturally rendered him superior in excellence and power. I have followed the Sam. Version and the Arabic, in considering (חלל) in the passive voice.

5. They accomplished. This reading gives a sense, suitable to the context; and it is so slight a variation in the original (לעל for לעל) that there can be no doubt it is the genuine one. The word rendered in the common version, habitation, a sense which it cannot have; a sense, which the versions do not countenance, denotes their scheme, their stratagem, in proposing to the Shechemites, submission to circumcision, as the condition of a permanent union with them; when their real design was, to fall on them and destroy them—Cut off the prince. I have followed the reading of Kennicott, (שׁר and not שׁר,) as I cannot see what connexion digging down a wall has, with the transaction to which there is a reference. Others would render, 'they cut off the Oxen; regarding (שׁר and שׁר) as parallel, and equally denoting the men of Shechem; but I doubt whether this can be supported by any instance in the Hebrew Scriptures. The sense given is so apposite, and supported by the History, that I see no necessity for any doubt. See Note, Heb. Bible, and Kennicott.

7. I will divide them; that is, I am influenced to say in the name of God, 'I will divide, &c.' So we find they were afterwards dispersed among the other tribes; yet this curse was turned to a blessing: Deut. xxxiii. 9, 10.

8. Judah thee, thee, &c. It is an idiom of the Hebrew, as Schultens has observed, to use both the pronoun and the affix for greater emphasis. Compare 1 Sam. xxv. 24; Ps. ix. 7; Hosea viii. 6. There is a peronomasia on the name Judah, which signifies 'praise;' Ch. xxix. 35. This tribe, we see, enjoyed, in fact, the pre-eminence. They lead the van of the host; Numb. x. 14. They were the first, on the death of Joshua, appointed to expel the Canaanites; Judg. i. 2, &c. The first of the Judges was from this tribe; Judges iii. 11; and the family of Jesse, was selected to possess the royal power.

10. Sceptred chief. It is evidently the design of Jacob to show the future glory of the tribe of Judah; and no expressions ought to be interpreted in a sense contrary to this design.—The (שׁבט) sceptre, is taken in a lower sense than royal power, and denotes only the power of judgment. See verse 16, and Judg. v. 14. Hence there is no necessity to understand (שׁבט) and (מִשְׁכָּה) of royal power exclusively; but the sense is, 'Judah shall enjoy authority as one of the tribes of Israel, shall live under his own laws, and shall have judges of his own offspring,' (for in this sense I understand (מִשְׁכָּה וְשִׁבְטוֹ), 'to enforce them.'—Nor a judge. Strictly speaking, the Jews never had any Law-giver, but Moses, who in communicating his laws, acted under the authority of Jehovah, the Supreme Law-giver. Hence the term (מִשְׁכָּה) cannot, when applied, to any other, under the Mosaic dispensation, mean, 'to legislate, or make new laws,' but, 'to explain, enforce, and apply those that God had given,' which is the proper office of a Judge. Hence the Chaldee renders, a scribe, the Syriac, a teacher, and the Septuagint, a leader. The kings of Israel, were bound by the same laws as the people. Deuteronomy xvii. 18. See Bishop Newton, on the place.—Until the Shiloh come. Some would render, 'Until he come to Shiloh.' So Eben Ezra, Delgado, Teller and others. This place did not belong to the tribe of Judah, but to that of Ephraim, according to Eusebius and Jerom; and it forms no part of the dignity of Judah, that he should come to worship there along with the other tribes of Israel. This opinion therefore, is not consonant to the general design of the passage, nor is there any notice taken of a place so called, till the time of Joshua. The best Jewish and Christian expositors, understand it as a name of Messiah, denoting, 'he who gives or makes peace.' The following clause seems to support this sense; as well as the order and construction of the original words.—Be obedient. Literally, 'And to him shall be the obedience of nations.' The Sept. Syr. and Vulg. 'And he shall be the expectation of the nations.' The Arabic, 'And to him shall the nations be gathered.'

11. 12. This represents the fertility of the land which fell to the lot of this tribe, so that wine and milk, should abound like water.

14. Boundaries. Jerom thus rendered; and this sense is most suitable. Others render, bars, and Greeu, stall—The lot of Issachar lay in a fine vale, surrounded by a chain of high ground, to which the term may allude.

15. Becometh a tributary servant. This is highly characteristic of a patient laborious people, addicted to the culture of the ground, and willing to pay tribute to their more warlike neighbours, rather than have their own repose disturbed.

16, 17. As one of the sceptred, &c. He shall not be inferior to the other tribes—Bochart has proved, that (שׁרפן) means the Cerastes, which is about two feet long, and lies concealed in the sand; and often when the

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XLIX. How interesting is it to contemplate this death-bed scene. Their conduct had frequently pierced his heart with grief and sorrow; but he had forgiven horse is passing on, darts around one of his fore-legs, and bites so dreadfully as to make the horse rise on his hind legs, and throw his rider backward, who then falls a prey to this venomous and destructive kind of serpent. This intimates, that the Danites would be an artful people, and yet formidable in their attacks.

18. This verse seems to have no connexion with the context; and is either an interpolation, or at least introduced from some other place. I have transposed it after the 27th verse, as making a good conclusion of the address.

19. There is a play on the name Gad, through the whole verse, which cannot be given in a version. The Patriarch predicts his future prosperity, (Compare Ch. xxx. 11.) and that he should be contiguous to hostile hordes, yet he should be successful in repelling their attacks; defeating and pursuing them, 1 Chron. v. 18.

21. The common version is doubtless improper; the two members have no connexion. The version given is that of the Greek translators, whom Bochart hath followed and illustrated. It arises from pronouncing the Hebrew words differently; and represents in a most striking manner, the secondly of this tribe, and the fertility of the land it should possess.

22, 23. Though the archers, &c. The metaphor applied to Joseph is beautiful and appropriate, nor is this less so, by which his unnatural brethren are characterized. Like archers they shot at him and pierced him, but through the power of God he was preserved.

24–26. Michaelis renders, His arms and his hands were active, following the Arabic sense of the verb. Some render, 'the nerves of his hands.' Geddes equivalently, "And his arms retained their strength."

26. Mountains. The common text has (ררי) rendered 'progenitors,' a forced sense; for as a verb, it is only used concerning a woman, never in relation to man. By omitting the vau, the sense given arises, which the connexion and parallelism require, and the authorities support it.—The remaining part of this benediction is delightful, and surpasses any thing of the kind. How ample and fine a description of Mount-Ephraim and Mount-Gilead, and the territories of the two tribes! Every earthly blessing is here accumulated, that the heart of man can desire:—dews from the heavens—springs from the earth—fish from the seas and lakes—a numerous offspring, both of children and of cattle—a fertile and salubrious soil—peaceful days and lasting prosperity—are all wished for Joseph, by his affectionate dying father.

27. He shall tear, &c. I have followed Teller in rendering (דור) shall tear, as divide does not agree to the Wolf, to which the tribe of Benjamin is compared.

28. Chiefs. So the context leads us to understand (שכט) here; for

B. C. 1689. The mourning for Jacob; his funeral; Joseph consoles his brethren; and after a long life, foretels their return to Canaan; dies, and charges them concerning his bones.

3 physicians embalmed Israel. And when forty days were fulfilled for him, (for so many days were spent in embalming); then the Egyptians

Now therefore, let me go up, I pray thee, and bury my father, 'as he made me swear', and I will return."

He had now done with the world;—the sorrows and the joys of it, were alike uninteresting to him. The dust was ready to return whence it had been taken; and the spirit to God who gave it, to repose in the bosom of Abraham. "Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his."

2. In the blessing of Judah, the promised seed is prominently exhibited. His name Shiloh, 'a peace maker,' included an obscure representation of his office. He hath made peace by the blood of his cross, and hath reconciled all things which are in heaven, and which are on earth."—His descent from the tribe of Judah, and the existence of that tribe till his coming, are implied. The blessed effects of his mediation are stated; "To him shall the nations be obedient." Here is a reference to the calling of the gentiles. Those who had not been the people of God, were now to be called, 'his people.' This prediction has been accomplished; and may we be found among those, who render the obedience of faith.

as yet they had not become tribes.

CHAP. L. 1. This act of Joseph shows his filial piety, and is extremely natural. Though Jacob's life had been prolonged, yet when terminated the stroke was felt, the sympathies of nature excited, and the fountain of grief exhausted by a copious flood of tears.

3. It was usual for fortydays to be spent in embalming, and for the body to be laid in nitre for thirty more; and Calmet supposes, that in the seventy days which the Egyptians mourned for Jacob, the forty first mentioned, are included. Shuckford, on the other hand, contends, that besides the forty days of embalming, the Egyptians mourned seventy, to do Jacob the greater honour; for they performed but seventy two days mourning for their kings.

father, according as he made thee swear."

And Joseph went up to bury his father; and 7 with him went up all the servants of Pharaoh, the elders of his house, and all the elders of the land of Egypt; And all the house-hold of Joseph, and his brethren, and his father's household: only their little ones, and their flocks, and their herds, left they in the land of Goshen. And there went up with him both chariots and 9 horsemen, so that they made a very great host. And they came to the threshing-floor of Atad, 10 which is beyond the Jordan, and there they mourned with a great and very grievous lamentation; for Joseph there made a mourning of seven days for his father. And when the inhabitants of the land, the Canaanites, saw the mourning at the threshing-floor of Atad, they said, "A grievous mourning is this to the Egyptians." Therefore the name of the place, (which is beyond the Jordan), was called Abel-mizraim [THE MOURNING OF THE EGYPTIANS]. Now the 12

3. The various dispositions of Jacob's sons, in some degree, account for their different lot in the world. Instability, is physically and morally, the cause of failure in our plans and pursuits. Cruelty and Injustice are often punished in this life, by being exercised towards the persons of those, who have exercised them towards others. Praise is the reward of virtue; and the noble and filial piety of Judah, deserved this reward. Industry and Enterprise characterized Zebulon; and he was favoured with a state to call them into exercise. Issachar loved ease; and he enjoyed it at the expense of his independence and freedom. Dan would assert his rights and exercise justice; and Gad, though harrassed, would yet conquer. In this, he represents the Christian soldier, who is often attacked, sometimes wounded, but in Christ, is finally made more than conqueror. Asher, Naphtali, and particularly Joseph, are filled with the blessing of the Lord. May this blessing come upon us, and upon our children for ever and ever.

4. Joseph could not approach Pharaoh himself on account of the death of his father; and hence applied for leave, through some of the Officers of the Court.

5. It has been observed, that Jacob being interred in the cave of Machpelah which Abraham bought, there is here some error; but to this it may be replied, that it is highly probable, that Jacob had dug a place for himself, in that vast cave which the Patriarch had purchased of the sons of Heth.

7. Elders of his house, &c. These were the chief Officers; for Elder here, does not denote age, but dignity and rank. So the elders of the land signify, the chief magistrates of the Cities.

10. The threshing-floor of Atad. Jerom describes this place as about sons of Jacob did as he had charged them.

 13 For his sons carried him into the land of Canaan, and buried him in the cave of the field of Machpelah, which Abraham bought together with the field, for a burying-place possession, of 14 Ephron the Hethite, opposite Mamre. And Joseph after he had buried his father, returned into Egypt; he and his brethren, and all who had gone up with him to bury his father.
 15 And Joseph's brethren were afraid when their father was dead, and they said, "Will not Joseph persecute us, and return to us" all the 16 evil which we did to him?" And they sent a messenger to Joseph, saying, "Thy father before he died, charged us, saying, 'Thus shall ye say to Joseph, 'Forgive, I pray thee, now, the trespass of thy brethren and their sin, though they did evil to thee.' And now, we pray thee, forgive the trespass of the servants of the God of thy father." And Joseph wept
 18 when they thus spoke to him. And his brethren went and fell down before him, and said, "Behold, we are thy servants." And Joseph said

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER L. 1. When one who is venerable by age, justly entitled to esteem for moral and spiritual excellence, is removed by death, from the church on earth, to that in heaven, the forms of mourning are natural, as expressing the emotions of the mind, and the respect we entertained for such a character. Thus devout men carried Steven to his burial, and made great lamentation over him; and thus Joseph, his brethren, and the Egyptians, mourned for Jacob. In the removal of such characters, the world and the church sustain a great loss; for they are the lights of the world, and the glory of the church; and their loss will be felt and regretted by all, who came within the sphere of their activity.

2. What a torment to the mind is guilt, and how lovely is a pious, forgiving spirit. Joseph's brethren, on the death of their father, again discover their fears; they now suspect, that Joseph would retaliate on them, their evil treatment of himself. Their proposal, discovers the sense they entertained of their own conduct, and their complete humiliation. Joseph, in the spirit of three miles from Jericho, and two from the Jordan.

15. Were afraid. This version depends on the pronunciation of the original term, as it may be derived either from (מִתַּיִשׁ) to see, or (מִתַּיִשׁ) he feared. I derive from the latter, as more agreeable to the context and scope of the writer. So Dean Pilkington renders. I follow also the Sam. Text, supported by the Sept. in the next clause.

16-18. Whether this was an invention of Joseph's brethren, or not, it is impossible to determine. The circumstance strongly expresses their conscious guilt.—The servants of the, &c. This was designed to move his

to them, "Fear not, for I also 'revere' God. That which ye devised for evil against me, God 20 devised for good; that he might accomplish his purpose, as it appears this day, in preserving alive many people. Now therefore, be not 21 afraid. I will support both you, and your little ones." Thus he comforted them, and spoke kindly to them.

And Joseph dwelt in Egypt, he, and his 22 father's house. And Joseph lived a hundred and ten years. And Joseph saw Ephraim's 23 grand-children. The children of Machir also, the son of Manasseh, were born in the days of Joseph. And Joseph said to his brethren, "I 24 am about to die; but God will surely visit you, and bring you out of this land, into the land which he swore, that he would give to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. And Joseph took an 25 oath of the children of Israel, saying, "God will surely visit you, and my bones ye shall carry up hence 'with you'. So Joseph died, 26 being a hundred and ten years old; and they embalmed him, and he was put in a coffin in Egypt.

that religion he professed, again assures them of his entire forgiveness; states the views of the all-wise God, in the singular event, and promises still to support them and their little ones. Let us on all occasions, when our brother acknowledges his fault, go and do likewise.

3. At length Joseph, full of age and of faith, dies; giving command concerning his bones, and testifying, that God would surely visit them, and bring them up to the land of Canaan. The character of Joseph stands unimpeached; the events of his life, are most interesting; and it has been thought, that he was designed to be a type of our Lord. Sold by his brethren; sold to strangers; sold for a few pieces of money: The bargain proposed by his brother Judah, the very name-sake of that disciple and brother, (for so Christ vouchsafes to call him) who sold his Lord and Master, and after all, becomes the Saviour of them, and of all the neighbouring nations. All which came to pass, by the direction of a wise, great, and good God, who would not let the world want such instances, to confirm their faith in Him.

compassion, by reminding him of their relation to the same God. They offer to become slaves to him, provided he thought proper.

19-21. This address of Joseph, equally discovers his forgiving temper, and the just views he had of that wonderful providence, which had over-ruled his sufferings, to accomplish the most interesting and benevolent designs.

23. The common text is here obviously erroneous, as no just sense can be elicited from it. Happily the Sam. has preserved the true lection, which I have followed.

EXODUS.

INTRODUCTION.

The Title of the second Book of Moses, is likewise descriptive of its Contents. The word Exodus, is derived from the Septuagint, and means, going out, or departure; and the book, after giving some account of the oppression of the Israelites, relates the call of Moses, the miracles he wrought, and the departure of the people from Egypt. It gives us also an account of their passage of the red sea, and journies to mount Sinai; of the solemn promulgation of the Law, and the appointment and erection of the Tabernacle. It contains the History of about 145 years, beginning at the death of Joseph, and ending at the commencement of the first year from their departure out of Egypt.

From the Book itself, we might infer, that it was written either by Moses, or by some one he employed; as the transactions are described with a particularity, and in such terms as manifest that the writer was present, and a witness of them. It is quoted as the work of Moses, by David, Daniel, and other Sacred Writers. It is cited also by Heathen Writers, Palemon, Manetho, Trogus Pompeius, and Tacitus.

CHAPTER 1.

B. C. 1635. The children of Israel multiply; oppressed by a new king; the midwives commanded to kill their male children; but they preserve them; Pharaoh orders them to be cast into the river.

1 Now these are the names of the sons of Israel, who went into Egypt, with Jacob ^a their father";
2 each one and his household went. Reuben,
3 Simeon, Levi, and Judah; Issachar, Zebulun, 4 and Benjamin; Dan, Naphtali, Gad and 5 Asher. And all the persons sprung from the loins of Jacob, with Joseph who was already in 6 Egypt, were seventy. And Joseph and all his 7 brethren, and all that generation, died; But the children of Israel were fruitful, and increased abundantly, and multiplied, and became exceedingly strong; so that the land was filled with them.

CHAP. I. 1. ^a Sept.

CHAPTER I. 5. Seventy. The Greek here, as Gen. xli. 27, has seventy-five. See Note there.

8. A new king. Expositors consider wn as denoting a king of another race, one who had conquered Egypt, deposed the ancient kings, and laid the foundation of a new dynasty. Josephus, from Manetho, has mentioned the conquest of Egypt by a race of adventurers. On this principle, it is easy to account for the oppression exercised over the descendants of Jacob, who had not incorporated with the Egyptians, and who might, for this reason, be considered, by this new king, dangerous to his newly acquired empire. See Shuckford's Connection, vol. ii. p. 296.

10. Let us treat them artfully. The Sept. gives this sense of the term. Compare Acts vii. 19.—Get out of the land. This clearly indicates, that the Israelites did not conceal their intention of leaving Egypt, and

Now there arose a new king over Egypt, 8 who knew not Joseph. And he said to his people, "Behold, the people of the children of Israel are more numerous and stronger than we. Come let us treat them artfully, so that they 10 may not multiply; lest it should come to pass, when war occurreth, that they join themselves to our enemies, and fight against us, and get out of the land." So ^v he set over them task-mas- 11 ters to oppress them with their burdens; and they built for Pharaoh store-cities, Pithom and Rameses. But the more they oppressed them, 12 the more they multiplied and spread. And the Egyptians were alarmed on account of the children of Israel; And they made the children of 13 Israel serve with rigour. And they made their 14 lives bitter with hard labour in mortar and in returning to Canaan; and to prevent this, and secure their service, was one state reason of their oppressions.

11. ^v Sept. Vulg.

11. Task-masters. So the Sept. renders, and what follows supports this sense. Compare 1 Kings. v. 13—And they built, or fortified; for the term is employed to denote both.—Pithom, is thought to be the place which Herodotus calls Patumus, and not far distant from the Arabic Gulph.—Rameses, some consider as the same with Pelusium, which is called (Ezek. xxx. 15.) 'the strength of Egypt;' but this is contested.

12. Were alarmed. The context supports this sense of the word (wp); for it is evident they were more than vexed, or grieved—they were alarmed at their growing numbers, and apprehensive of a revolt.

14. In mortar and in bricks; that is, in making mortar into bricks.

15, 16. The command of Pharaoh is at once a proof of his fear and brick; and with every kind of labour in the field; all their service, wherein they made them serve, was with rigour.

- 15 And the king of Egypt spoke to the Hebrew midwives, (of whom the name of one was Shiphrāh, and the name of the other Puah).
 16 And he said, "When ye do the office of a midwife to the Hebrew women, then ye shall inspect the cisterns; and if the child be a son, ye shall kill him; but if a daughter, let her live."
 17 But the midwives feared God, and did not as the king of Egypt commanded them, but let 18 the male children live. And the king of Egypt called for the midwives, and said to them, "Why have ye done this thing, and saved the 19 male-children alive?" And the midwives said to Pharaoh, "Truly the Hebrew women are not like the Egyptian women; for they are more vigorous, and are delivered ere the midwives come in to them." Thus God favoured 20 the midwives; and the people multiplied, and became very strong. And because the mid- 21 wives feared God, he prospered their own families. Then Pharaoh commanded all his 22 people, saying, "Every son that is born * to the Hebrews" ye shall cast into the river; but every daughter ye shall let live.

CHAPTER II.

B. C. 1571. Moses born, and exposed on the Nile; found by Pharaoh's daughter, and brought up for her; he slayeth an Egyptian, and is obliged to fly into Midian, where he marries.

Now there went a man of the family of Levi, 1 and took a wife, a daughter of Levi. And the 2 to wear down, and to wear out, the saints of the Most High. Vain are their efforts; for by these very efforts, their numbers are increased;—the more they are afflicted the more they grow. Thus it was in Egypt; and the page of History confirms the fact, that Persecution has generally established what it meant to destroy.

3. What a contrast have we between the king of Egypt and the Hebrew midwives: The order, to stifle the life of children at their birth, marks the tormenting jealousy, fear, rage, and cruelty of Pharaoh; and their noble spirit, in daring to disobey his command, displays their humanity, sympathy, and the fear of God. This holy principle restrains from doing evil, though it might be done privately. The order of Pharaoh, appears to have had privacy in view; at first he wished to attain his end by secret devices, but finding himself disappointed, the sanguinary Tyrant threw off the mask, and commanded, that every Hebrew male-child, should be seized and cast into the river. The midwives, God honoured, by prospering their own families. Thus, "they that honour him he will honour, but they that despise him shall be lightly esteemed."

19. More vigorous. The word (חיות) will admit this sense, and it is more suitable than lively; nor is it improbable, that this assertion was, at least, in most instances strictly true. For it is well known, that women inured to hard labour, have but little pain in child-bearing, compared to those who are accustomed to ease.

21. Prospered their own families. That (בית) denotes household, or family, is generally admitted; and that (עשר) has the sense attributed, see Isa. v. 4; and xxxvii. 31. No other sense can be here given. See the Author's Reflections, on the authorized Version, p. 32.

22. Let live. This order implies that the Hebrew females were preferred; and it is certain they were fairer and more beautiful than the Egyptian women. It has been supposed this edict did not continue long in force, as the male race, must have been destroyed.

CHAP. II. 2. Beautiful. The term has this sense Gen. xli. 22, and often elsewhere. Stephen says, "He was divinely beautiful." Acts vii. 20. This is mentioned as one reason, why his mother endeavoured to REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. We here see the uncertainty and instability of earthly power and grandeur. Kings die and princes are brought to nothing. The ancient royal race of Egypt is vanquished and dethroned, and a new king, one of a new race, grasps the sceptre, and, for a season, oppresses, both the Egyptians and the Israelites: The latter were indeed most cruelly treated; but this might be deserved for their defection from the God of their fathers, and their growing attachment to the idols of Egypt. God made Egypt to them a house of bondage, and an iron furnace, that they might be desirous of returning to the land of promise; and how often does he afflict his people, that he may improve them, wean them from the world, and make them meet for the enjoyment of a better.

2. How often does God, by his wisdom and over-ruling providence, convert persecution itself into a means of accomplishing his own designs! Persecutors are alarmed at the growing numbers of God's Israel. They suspect that they have designs, hostile to the interests of the state, or opposed to their own peculiar views and prejudices; and by injustice and oppression, they aim his cruelty. It is difficult to ascertain what is the sense of (על האבנים), rendered in the common version upon the stools. It is allowed, that (אבנים) denotes stones, and in Exod. vii. 19, stone-cisterns; and why may it not here have the same sense? If this idea be admitted, there is a reference to the eastern custom of washing new-born infants; and when the midwives performed this part of their office, they were to put the male children to death. The respectable Editor of Calmet's Dictionary, (see Fragments 313.) adopts this sense of אבנים. From the known custom of the eastern Monarchs, whose jealousy leads them to sacrifice their own children or those of their relations or chief officers, who may be supposed to have any claim to the crown, he contends, that the order of Pharaoh respected only the children of the Jewish Chiefs. This he supports by observing, that two midwives could not attend all the females of Israel—that the great body of the people dwelling in Goshen, unmixed with the Egyptians, the order could not be there safely executed, but might be done in the royal city, where the chiefs occasionally resided.

woman conceived, and bare a son; and when she saw that he was a beautiful child, she hid him three months. But when "his mother" could no longer hide him, she took for him an ark made of papyrus, and daubed it with bitumen and with pitch, and put the child in it, and laid it among the sedges, by the brink of the river. And his sister stood afar off, that she might know what would be done to him. Now the daughter of Pharaoh came down to wash herself at the river; and her maidens walked along by the river's side; and when she saw an ark among the sedges, she sent her hand-maid to fetch it. And when she opened it, she saw the child in it; and, behold, the babe wept. And "the daughter of Pharaoh" had compassion on him, and said, "This is one of the children of the Hebrews." Then said his sister to Pharaoh's daughter, "Shall I go and call to thee a nurse of the Hebrew women, who may nurse the child for thee?" And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, "Go." And the damsel went and called the child's own mother. And Pharaoh's daughter said to her, "Take away this child, and nurse it for me, and I will give thee thine hire." And the woman took the child, and nursed him. And the child grew, and being weaned she brought him to Pharaoh's daughter, and he became her son; and she called his name Moses [ONE DRAWN OUT OF THE WATER]; because said she, "Out of the water I drew him."

Now it was in those days, when Moses was grown up, that he went forth to his brethren, and saw their oppressions; and he spied an Egyptian smiting a Hebrew, one of his own brethren; And he looked this way and that, and when he saw no man by, he slew the Egyptian, and hid him in the sand. And he went out a second day, when, behold, two men, Hebrews, were fighting; and he said to the aggressor, "Wherefore smitest thou thy neighbour?" But he said, "Who made thee a prince and a judge over us? Intendest thou to kill me, as thou killedst the 'other day' the Egyptian?" Moses was, therefore, afraid, and said, "Surely this thing is known."

Now when Pharaoh heard of this thing, he sought to slay Moses. But Moses fled from the face of Pharaoh, and "went into" the land of Midian; and he sat down by a well. Now a priest of Midian had seven daughters; and they came and drew water, and filled the troughs to water their father's flock. And cer-conceal him. Moses was not her first-born son; both Aaron and Miriam were born before him, (Ch. vi. 20;) and it is probable before the royal Ordinance, mentioned in the close of the former chapter, had been given.

3. She took, that is, prepared an Ark, or small vessel, which might float on the water. This term, (תבה) Forster considers of Egyptian origin, formed from Ou, a ship, and Bai, a branch. The Papyrus is a very thirsty plant, that grows in marshy ground on the banks of rivers. A considerable part of it is under; and it grows to the height of nine or ten feet.— The pith or marrow of the stalk was used for food; the ligneous parts were constructed into arks and small ships; and the bark was made into paper.

5. The daughter of Pharaoh. Josephus calls her, Thermutis, and others, Meris, who is said to have been married, but not to have had any children. Harmer conjectures, that she came, not for the simple purpose of ablution, but to express her devotion to the river as the source of fruitfulness and plenty.

6. The daughter of Pharaoh. This addition to the common text seems here necessary to remove the ambiguity; and the next verse supports it.

10. And she brought him. It was usual in Egypt to nurse children till they were three years old; and it is most probable, that his mother delivered up her dear charge at this period, when he was weaned—He became her son. She adopted him, and he was educated as one of royal birth. Stephen informs us, that he was brought up at court, and learned in all the wisdom of the Egyptians; such as arithmetick, geometry, astronomy, and natural philosophy, and thus fitted for his future station. Stephen adds, that he was mighty in words and deeds; an eloquent man, (though not a good speaker) as his admirable compositions testify; a wise counsellor; and some add, a mighty general; with many other particulars of his early life, which cannot be depended upon.

11. In those days. In scripture this phrase denotes a period considerably remote from that of prior occurrences. Moses, according to Stephen, Acts vii. 23, was 40 years old, when he went to visit his brethren. That he was brought up at court, and had considerable prospects of personal aggrandizement it is natural to believe, if we had not the testimony of Paul, Heb. xi. 24—27.

12. He slew the Egyptian. Stephen says, (Acts vii. 25.) he supposed that the Israelites by this, would have known that he was to deliver them. Probably he exhorted them to return to Canaan, promised to lead them, and told them the time for their deliverance was near; but they understood not, therefore their captivity was prolonged.

16. A Priest or Prince, for the term (כהן) denotes either; and I incline to believe the latter, the true sense. This priest or prince was Raguel, and according to the reading of the Sept. Jethro was his son. From a comparison of all the places where these relations of Moses are mentioned, Geddes concludes Raguel was the father of Jethro, whose daughter Moses married, and that Hobab was most probably the son of Jethro, who accompanied the Israelites through the wilderness. Compare Chap. iii. 1; iv. 18, and Numb. x. 29. No solid objection can be made against this, from Raguel being called 'their father,' ver. 18th, as this frequently denotes a tain shepherds came, and would have driven them away; but Moses stood up and defended them, and watered their flocks. And when they came to Raguel their grand-father, he said, "How is it that ye are come so soon to day?" And they said, "An Egyptian delivered us out of the hand of the shepherds; and also continued drawing for us, until he had watered the flocks." And he said to his daughters, "And where is he? Why have ye thus left the man? Call him, that he may eat bread." And Moses consented to dwell with the man; and he gave to Moses Zipporah his grand-daughter ^afor a wife. And she ^aconceived and bare to him a son; and he called his name Gershom [A STRANGER HERE]; "because," said he, "I am a stranger in a foreign land." ^aAnd she bare to him another son whose name he called Eliezer [GOD MY HELP]; "because," said he, "the God of my father hath helped me, and delivered me from the sword of Pharaoh."

Now after many days the king of Egypt died; 23 yet the children of Israel groaned on account of their bondage; and they cried, and their cry, on account of their bondage, went up to God. And 24 God heard their groaning; and he remembered his covenant with Abraham, with Isaac, and with Jacob. And God looked upon the children of Israel; and he ^ahad respect to them.

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1491. Moses tends Jethro's flocks; God appeareth to him in a burning bush, and sendeth him to deliver Israel; the message which God sendeth to Israel.

Now Moses kept the flock of Jethro, his father-in-law, a priest of Midian; and he led the flock to the extremity of the wilderness, and came to the great mountain of Horeb. And 2

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. How admirable is that providence, which appoints the time and circumstances of our birth, and which watches over, and preserves us in infancy! Utterly helpless in ourselves, we are then especially the children of providence. Exposed to a thousand dangers, life appears wholly uncertain; yet, when one is destined to some important work, these dangers are escaped, and life preserved by methods the most surprizing. The circumstances attending the birth and early days of Moses, are truly wonderful; and strikingly display the hand of God. That he should be exposed—that the daughter of Pharaoh should come to wash—that his own mother should be appointed his nurse—that he should be adopted by the daughter, and educated in the court of Pharaoh—are events which clearly show, "that God ruleth on the earth."

2. The conduct of Moses, when grown up, in visiting his brethren and sympathizing with their afflictions, supports the remark of the Apostle. "By faith Moses, when he was come to years, refused to be called the son of Pharaoh's daughter; Choosing rather to suffer affliction with the people of God, than to enjoy the pleasures of sin for a season; Esteeming the reproach of Christ greater riches than the treasures of Egypt: for he had respect unto the recompense of the reward." Thus should we all act; for however alluring the pleasures of sin may be, they are but of short duration, and followed by endless misery; and however discouraging the afflictions and persecutions of good men, they are but for a short season, and terminate in the enjoyment of an eternal recompence.

25. ^aSept. Vulg. Arab. manifested himself to them.

3. The conduct of the offending Jew to Moses, is a proof, that sin hardens, and that the kindest interference often provokes evil-doers to oppose and insult. Moses had, by rescuing an Israelite from an Egyptian, showed his love to his brethren; but when he offers himself as mediator between two Israelites, the aggressor insults him; "Who made thee a ruler and judge over us?" He upbraids him with his former generous and heroic conduct, "Intendest thou to kill me as thou didst the Egyptian?" Thus is our good often represented as evil; and he that rebukes a transgressor gets to himself a blot. Let us not on this account shrink from duty, nor suffer the sin of our brother to go unreprieved.

4. The flight of Moses, and his long abode in Midian, in some degree prepared him for the office, to which he was divinely appointed. Here he had an opportunity of learning the events, which might have occurred in Egypt; and he was doubtless growing in experience and wisdom. No doubt he was animated with the hopes of his race, and anxiously expecting the deliverance of his brethren in some way or other; and often imploring the divine interposition, in behalf of an oppressed and much injured people. God heard their groans, remembered his covenant, and had respect to them. Let us confide in him at all times; for when the proper season arrives, he will save us from the hand of our enemies.

22. I have transposed from Chap. xviii. 4, the Account of Eliezer, as being more suitable to the context here, than there. The 20 verse of the 4th Chapter mentions sons, which justifies the transposition.

CHAP. III. 1. Great mountain. Literally 'mountain of God,' but I consider (צור) used here as an epithet, as often; and as the words are rendered Ps. xxvi. 6. It is afterwards called the 'mountain of God,' from his descent upon it, and the giving of the Law.

2. Bush of thorns. So the term (סִרְסִי) denotes, and it is probable the mountain received its name, from this species of thorn growing upon it. The bush burning, but not consumed, was a striking emblem of the state of the Israelites.

the angel of Jehovah appeared to him in a flame of fire, from amidst a bush of thorns; and he looked, and, behold, the bush was not consumed. And Moses said, "I will now turn aside, and view this great sight; why it is that the bush is not burnt. And when Jehovah saw that he turned aside to view, he called to him from amidst the bush, and said, "Moses! Moses!" And he answered, "Here am I." He then said, "Approach not hither; pull thy sandals off thy feet; for the place on which thou standest is holy ground." Also he said, "I am the God of thy fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob." Then Moses hid his face; for he was afraid to look at God.

Jehovah now said, "I have surely beheld the affliction of my people who are in Egypt, and have heard their cry on account of their taskmasters; yea I know their sorrows; And am come down to deliver them from the hand of the Egyptians; and to bring them up out of that land into a good and spacious land, into a land flowing with milk and honey; into the place of the Canaanites, and the Hethites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites, and the Girgasites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites. Lo, as now the cry of the children of Israel hath come to me; and I have also seen the oppression with which the Egyptians oppress them; Come, now, therefore, and I will send thee to Pharaoh, that thou mayest bring my people, the children of Israel, from the land of Egypt."

But Moses said to God, "Who am I, that I should go to Pharaoh, and that I should bring the children of Israel from the land of Egypt?" Then God said, "Truly I will be with thee. And this shall be a token to thee, that I have sent thee: When thou hast brought my people out of Egypt, ye shall serve God on this very mountain." And Moses said to God, "Behold, when I come to the children of Israel, and shall say unto them, 'The God of your fathers hath sent me to you;' and they should say to me, 'What is his name?' what shall I say to them?" And God said to Moses, "I AM because I AM: and he said, 'Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel, 'I AM hath sent me to you.' And God moreover said to Moses, "Thus shalt thou say to the children of Israel, 'Jehovah the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath sent me to you.' This shall be my name for ever; and this my memorial to all generations. Go thou, and assemble the elders of the children of Israel, and say to them, 'Jehovah the God of your fathers, the God of Abraham, of Isaac, and of Jacob, hath appeared to me,' saying, 'Surely I have attended to you, and to what

5. Pull thy sandals. It is a custom of the east, to enter temples and worship bare-foot. Does not this custom owe its origin to the circumstance here recorded?—Is holy ground; that is, consecrated by the visible presence of God.

6. Thy fathers. So the Sam. and Stephen, Acts vii. 32; and the following words require the plural.

8. Flowing with milk, &c. Such is the description, which is often given of the land of Canaan; as containing excellent pasture ground for cattle, and flowers from which bees form honey in abundance. The multitude of inhabitants which this country afterwards supported, is a sufficient proof of the truth of this description.

12. A token. Some Critics contend, that what follows is not the token, but something not expressed; but no just construction of the text can support such an opinion. Moses had no doubt, that it was Jehovah who spoke to him; but he doubts concerning the result of such an attempt; and God promises, that he and the people should worship him on that very mountain.

14. I am, because I am, or 'I exist, because I exist:' that is, I am without any cause of existence, but in my own nature.—I am self-existent, and necessarily self-existent. No other reason can be assigned for his existence, but that he exists by a necessity of nature; 'he exists, and will exist, because of, or by reason of, his self-existence. He hath existed—he doth exist—and he will exist—because he must exist, and cannot cease to exist,' is all that can be said of his existence. These words are not a Name, which God attributes to himself; for in the next verse, he calls himself, Jehovah; nor is he ever called Eieh in the Holy Scriptures. The sense seems to be: 'By whatsoever name the Israelites call me, I will prove myself to be the independent, self-existent God.'

15. This is my name, &c. Geddes considers this name as the 3d person singular of הוּא, with ו inserted instead of the ו to convert it into a noun, and renders, "He that will be." The Rabbis assert, that this word includes all time past, present and to come; and it is supposed by commentators, that John has given the sense of it Rev. i. 8. I refer the Name, not to Jehovah only, but to what follows, 'the God of Abraham, &c.'

16. Elders. That the Israelites had some kind of government among them during the life of Joseph is probable; and it might be continued long after; but considering their long oppression, it is not to be supposed, that any civil power was now enjoyed. The Elders then, mean not magistrates,

17 hath been done to you in Egypt;" And I said, "I will bring you up from the affliction of Egypt, into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hethites, and the Amorites, and the Perizzites; and the Girgasites", and the Hivites, and the Jebusites; into a land flowing with milk and honey.' And they shall hearken to thy voice; and thou shalt go, thou and the elders of Israel, to the king of Egypt, and ye shall say to him, 'Jehovah the God of the Hebrews hath met with us. And now let us go we beseech thee, a journey of three days, into the wilderness, that we may sacrifice to Jehovah our God. Yet I know that the king of Egypt will not let you go, but by a mighty hand. I will therefore stretch out my hand, and smite Egypt with all my wonders which I will do in the midst of it; after which he will let you go. And I will give this people such favour in the sight of the Egyptians, that it shall be when ye go, ye shall not go empty. But every man shall ask of his neighbour and every woman of her neighbour, that dwelleth by her", or sojourneth in her house, articles of silver, and articles of gold, and of raiment; and ye shall put them upon your sons, and upon your daughters, and thus shall ye spoil the Egyptians."

CHAPTER IV.

B. C. 1491. Moses' rod becomes a serpent; his hand is turned leprous; his unwillingness to go to Egypt; Aaron appointed to assist him; God's message to Pharaoh.

Again Moses answered and said, "But, behold, they may not believe me, nor hearken unto my voice; for they may say, 'Jehovah hath not appeared to thee.'" Then Jehovah said to him, "What is that in thine hand?" And he said, "A rod." And Jehovah said, "Cast it on the ground." And he cast it on the ground; and it became a serpent; and Moses fled from before it. But Jehovah said to Moses, "Put forth thine hand, and take it by the tail." And he put forth his hand, and took hold of its tail and it became a rod in his hand. "Do this that they may believe that Jeho-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. I. At length the predicted period of Israel's deliverance drew near, and God appeared to Moses. He was tending his flock, when this divine appearance was made; and when the Saviour was born, it was announced to Shepherds keeping their flocks by night. Let us ever attend to our calling, whatever it may be, and therein serve God, that he may regard us and bless us; nor let us think any calling, by which things honest may be provided in the sight of all men, beneath our rank. Moses became a shepherd, when it was necessary; and Paul could say, "These hands have ministered to my necessities."

2. How lively an emblem was the burning bush of the state of the church! Many fires have been kindled to consume and destroy it, but it subsists to this day, and all is owing to the good will of him who dwelt in the bush. It was an emblem of the church in Egypt, which was afflicted, but not destroyed. The bush is still burning, as it were, but is not consumed. Let us adore the power that preserves it, and that keeps his people: God but the heads of their tribes, and chief families.—I have attended to you. Visit seems here improper. The verb denotes 'to inspect, oversee, attend to,' which last I have preferred.

18. Hath met with us. I prefer the usual sense of this clause, because I think, Jehovah must be known already in Egypt as the God of the Hebrews, and because his meeting with them, is a reason for their request.

22. Thus shall ye spoil. &c. Michaelis renders, 'And take them with you out of Egypt.' The meaning is, that the Israelites begged of their neighbours, and on their departure, took with them what they had obtained.

CHAP. IV. 4. v Sept.

is to none, but his enemies, a consuming fire. His church shall never perish, nor shall the gates of hell prevail against it.

3. Let us learn reverence in all our approaches to God: "Pull thy sandals off thy feet," was his command to Moses. Let us keep at an humble distance. So Solomon exhorts, Eccles. v. i. "Keep thy foot when thou goest to the house of God." No ground is now holy, but we have a holy God to do with, holy duties to be employed in, "and holiness becometh his house; he will be sanctified by all them that draw nigh unto him, and by all the people he will be glorified. He must be approached with holy reverence. However this may be an emblem of the dispensation of the law, which was a dispensation of terror, yet the gospel permits us "to draw near with boldness and confidence, but still with reverence and godly fear." Nothing light, or trifling, should be found in his presence or worship; "God is a spirit, and they that worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth."

There is no reference to any thing unjust or improper.

CHAP. IV. 1. They may not, &c. I have rendered in the conditional mood, as what is here more suitable; for how could Moses positively say, 'they will not believe?'

2. A rod. The Keri admit, that it has been dropped out of the text, and the reading of the Sam. is unquestionably right. The rod was probably the crook, with which he tended Jethro's flock.

5. Do this. This addition is implied in the text, and without it the sense would be incomplete.

vah the God of their fathers, the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob, hath appeared to thee.

- 6 And Jehovah said also to him, "Put now thine hand into thy bosom." And he put his hand into his bosom; and when he ^adrew his hand out of his bosom, behold, his hand was 7 leprous as snow. And he said, "Put thine hand again into thy bosom." And he put his hand again into his bosom; and when he drew it out of his bosom, behold, it was turned again 8 as his other flesh. "So that it may be, said Jehovah, if they will not believe thee, nor hearken to the testimony of the first sign, that they may believe the testimony of the latter 9 sign. But if they should not even believe these two signs, nor hearken to thy voice, then thou shalt take of the water of the river, and pour it upon dry land; and the water which thou shalt take out of the river shall become blood upon the dry land."
- 10 And Moses said to Jehovah, "O my Lord, I am not eloquent, neither heretofore, nor since thou hast spoken to thy servant; for I have a 11 slow and impeded utterance." And Jehovah said to him, "Who giveth utterance to man? or who maketh him dumb, or deaf, or seeing, or 12 blind? Is it not I, Jehovah? Go, now therefore; and I will be with thy mouth, and teach 13 thee what thou shalt say." And he said, "O my Lord, send, I pray thee, by him whom thou 14 shouldst send." And the anger of Jehovah was kindled against Moses, and he said, "Is not Aaron the Levite thy brother? I know that he can speak well. And also, behold, he cometh forth to meet thee; and when he seeth thee, he will be glad in his heart. And to him 15 thou shalt speak, and put words in his mouth; and I will be with thy mouth, and with his mouth, and will teach you what you shall do. And he shall speak, for thee, to the people; 16 and he indeed shall be to thee instead of a mouth, and thou shalt be to him instead of God. And 17 take thou that rod in thine hand, ^a(which was turned into a serpent)", with which thou shalt do the signs."

And Moses departed, and returned to Jethro, 18 his father-in-law, and said to him, "Let me go, I pray thee, and return unto my brethren who are in Egypt, and see whether they be yet alive." And Jethro said to Moses, "Go in peace." Jehovah said to Moses in Midian, 19 "Go, return into Egypt; for all those men are dead who sought thy life."

Moreover, Jehovah said to Moses, "When 21 thou shalt have returned into Egypt, see that thou do all those wonders before Pharaoh, which I have given thee power to do; yet I will permit his heart, to be so hardened that he will not let the people go. And thou shalt say to Pharaoh, Thus saith Jehovah, 'Israel is my son, my first-born. And I say unto thee, Let 23 my son go, that he may serve me; and if thou refuse to let him go, behold, I will slay thy son, thy first-born.'"

So Moses took his wife and his sons, and set 20 them upon asses, and he returned to the land of Egypt. Moses also took the rod of God in

8. Testimony. Purver renders, 'to what the former sign declares.' Literally, voice; but the sense is that given. The signs were testimonies of his divine mission.

10. For I have a slow, &c. Literally, 'For I am heavy of mouth, &c.' I have given the sense in preference to the idiom; and so next verse.

11. Who giveth, &c. The verb (יָדַע) is often used for (יָדַע), and vice versa; and this sense appears more apposite. God can both give and take away the power of utterance from a man, as he can deprive him of any of his senses.

13. Thou shouldst send. So Ainsworth; that is, some one better qualified than I am. He pleads his unsuitness improperly, after God had promised 'to be with his mouth,' that is, to give him both utterance and matter.

16. Instead of God; that is, thou shalt deliver my commands to him, and he shall declare them to Pharaoh and the people.

21. Yet I will permit his heart, &c. It is well known that verbs in the Hiphil Conjugation signify, 'to permit, or suffer to be done, as well as to cause to be done. See Common Version, Gen xxiv. 17; xxv. 20. Exod. xxi. 28. Hence nothing more is meant than to leave a man to the bent and tendency of his own disposition. So Pharaoh was left, and he is said to have made his own heart stubborn against God, Chap. ix. 34. There is nothing in this procedure of God, in the least repugnant to his moral character, unless we suppose the crimes of men, give them a claim to his distinguishing favour, which must be deemed an absurd principle.

24. And sought to kill him. This some refer not to Moses, but to his

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. We are here taught that every natural or spiritual excellence is the gift of God; and that he can and will furnish his servants for every work to which he calls them. Moses pleaded his unfitness for the important mission to Egypt; and to a certain degree his humble diffidence was commendable; but after the most explicit promise of divine support, it became sinful. Let us always be ready to own our weakness, yet through grace ever willing to do what God commands. Let us plead his promise, that strength may be given equal to our day; and not shrink from any service which may glorify him, and advance the interests of his Church.

2. From what occurred to Moses on the way, those who are employed in distinguished offices in the Church, should be careful to walk in all the ordinances of the Lord, blameless. Circumcision was the seal of the Covenant made with Abraham.

son who had not been circumcised. The connexion is certainly obscure, but on the whole, it is more probable, that Moses himself is meant, and that God afflicted him with some dangerous disease for having neglected the ordinance of circumcision; perhaps in compliance with his wife's desire; but she being informed of the cause, immediately performed the sacred rite.

25. A blood-bought husband. I have followed Geddes, and consider this as the language of affection. Circumcision was not practiced by the Midianites; but to save her husband's life she performed it.—The Sept. and Vulg. clearly support the rendering, that Zipporah threw herself at his feet, and said, &c. This she said because of the circumcision. Some consider that Zipporah threw the part she had cut off, at the feet of Moses, and in anger said, a bloody husband, &c. Others, that she laid it at the feet of Jehovah or the Angel, who represented him; while others again think, that she threw it at her son's feet, and that the following words were

B. C. 1707. Pharaoh disregards the message of Moses and Aaron; increases the tasks of the Israelites, and insults them on complaining; they cry to Moses, and he complains to God.

Now after this, Moses and Aaron went in, 1

Pharaoh said, "Who is Jehovah, that I should

'the children of' Israel go." And they said, 3

Moses had neglected it; but God would not suffer him to go on the most important business to Egypt, till he had brought his sin to remembrance, and him to repentance and reformation. How necessary it is for all persons in office in the church, to walk circumspectly; lest others should be led astray, or hardened in sin by their example.

3. Affliction had humbled the pride of the Israelites; and they now received the intimation of deliverance with joy. "And the people believed, and when they heard that the Lord had visited the children of Israel, and that he had looked upon their affliction, they then bowed their heads and worshipped." Let us in like manner, with all readiness receive the word; and when God comes to us in a way of mercy and grace, let us meet him in the way of obedience; and instantly honour him by humble, holy worship.

used when circumcision was performed. Mede has stated and defended this last opinion with his usual ability. The authors of the Universal History adopt the opinion of Mede, and render the passage, "Thou art to me a joyful circumcised son."—So Jehovah let him go. Some would make Moses the nominative; and render, "So Moses let Zipporah go;" but the original will not bear such a version. Owing to the difficulties of the journey it is certain Moses sent both his wife and children back to her father, Ch. xviii. 2; but whether now or after, is uncertain.

CHAP. V. 1. Who is Jehovah? Pharaoh owns not his authority, but dares to disobey his command. He worshipped the gods of Egypt, and thought no other had any claim to his regard.

3. Journey of three days. Distances in Countries, where there are no public roads, are measured by the time spent in travelling. Mount Horeb was so far distant from Goshen, that three days were spent in reaching it.—That we may sacrifice. They could not sacrifice in Egypt, without incur-

4 or by the sword. But the king of Egypt said to them, "Why do ye, Moses and Aaron, take off the people from their works? Go ye to your burdens."

5 Pharaoh then said to his counsellors, "They are more numerous than the people of the land, and would ye suffer them to rest from their 6 burdens?" And Pharaoh commanded that same day the taskmasters of the people, and 7 their inferior officers, saying, "Ye shall not as heretofore, give the people straw to make brick; let them go and gather straw for them- 8 selves. Yet the stated number of bricks, which they made heretofore "daily" shall ye lay on them; ye shall not diminish aught thereof. For because they are idle, therefore they cry saying, 'Let us go and sacrifice to our God.' 9 Let more work be laid upon the men; that on it they may attend; and not attend to vain words."

10 So the taskmasters of the people went out, and their officers, and they spoke to the people, saying, "Thus saith Pharaoh, I will give to 11 you no more straw. Go ye, get straw where ye can find it: yet not aught of your work 12 shall be diminished." Thus the people were dispersed through all the land of Egypt to gather 13 stubble instead of straw. And the taskmasters urged "the people" saying, "Fulfil your daily 14 tasks as when straw was "given to you". And the officers of the children of Israel, whom Pharaoh's taskmasters had set over them, were beaten, and asked, "Why have ye not fulfilled your task neither to day nor yesterday, in making brick, as heretofore?"

Then the officers of the children of Israel 15 came and cried to Pharaoh, saying, "Why treatest thou thy servants thus? There is no 16 straw given to thy servants; yet they say to us, 'Make brick.' And, behold, thy servants are beaten; although the fault be in thine own people." But he said, "Ye are idle, ye are idle; 17 therefore ye say, 'Let us go and sacrifice to Jehovah "our God"! Now therefore be gone, 18 and work; for there shall no straw be given to you, yet shall ye deliver in the stated number of bricks."

Now the officers of the children of Israel saw 19 how distressing a state they were in, from this saying, "Not aught of your daily task of bricks shall be diminished." And they met Moses and 20 Aaron, who were standing in the way, as they came from "the presence" of Pharaoh; And they 21 said to them, "May Jehovah look on you and judge; for ye have made us abominable in the eyes of Pharaoh, and in the eyes of his servants; so that ye have put a sword into their hand to slay us." Then Moses returned to Jehovah 22 and said, "O Lord, why afflictest thou this people? and to what purpose hast thou sent me? For since I came to Pharaoh to speak in thy 23 name, he hath the more afflicted this people; nor hast thou at all delivered thy people." Then Jehovah said to Moses, "Now thou 1 ring the greatest risque; as they immolated those very animals the Egyptians worshipped. In making this request, Moses and Aaron lay stress on this circumstance, and represent the neglect of offering sacrifices as likely to incur God's displeasure, so as to bring on themselves pestilence or the sword of some foreign foe.

5. Pharaoh spoke not this to Moses and Aaron, to whom he had said much the same before, but to his own counsellors, or officers; which is more likely, as he assigns the reason, his jealousy of their increasing numbers, which he would scarcely have owned to Moses and Aaron. A Pharaoh his predecessor, says the like to his people, i. 9. Further, it is more natural to suppose, that by 'the people of the land,' he means his own people, the Egyptians, and not the Israelites, whom he regarded, as strangers, and intruders. The Samaritan confirms this conjecture, by reading ^{וְיִשְׂרָאֵל} instead of ^{וְיִשְׂרָאֵל}.

9. I have followed the various reading mentioned; and cannot but think the sense is more explicit than that of the common version.

11. No more straw. This was mixed with clay, which was then formed into a proper shape and dried in the Sun. Such were the bricks then, and they are made in the same manner still, in various parts of the East. The conduct of this Pharaoh, was as cruel as unjust; to demand what was impossible, and then to punish for not performing.

13. Urged the people. I have followed Houbigant in this version. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

14. Were beaten. Some conjecture, that they were bastinadoed; but the term (כָּדָה) cannot be confined to this kind of correction. It certainly means smiting in any way.

17. Ye are idle. This was adding insult to oppression; but the heavier their affliction the nearer their deliverance.

19—21. Moses and Aaron were observing the result of this application to Pharaoh for redress; and the officers soon informed them, how their interference had operated to increase their oppression.

22—1. This language of Moses shows the strong feelings of his heart; but as nothing is said, which implies disapprobation, it must have been justified by the circumstances of the case. The answer of God is encour-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. Ignorance, or improper views of the divine nature and perfections, is the foundation of disobedience. "Who is Jehovah, &c." Such was the bold, haughty language of the king of Egypt. He ought to have inquired who Jehovah was; and if on inquiry he found, that he was the most High God, the Creator and Governor of all things, submission and homage, and not resistance and obstinacy, would evidently have been both his duty and his interest. How many in practice imitate this example? They reject the commands of Jehovah, and refuse subjection to his authority. But let such consider, "that none ever hardened themselves against him and prospered!"

2. Serious attention to religious duties has ever been deemed by the ungodly, a loss of time, and imputed either to weakness or idleness. They affect to pity the shallow views, or inactive turn, of devout men. Yet it may be said with truth, that no sentiment is more unfounded. The time they spend in devotional aging. I have added the 1 verse of the next Chapter to this, as it was in Coverdale's, Mathew's, and Cranmer's Bibles.

CHAP. VI. 3. I was not known to them. There is a designed Antithesis between the name God assumed, when he appeared to the Patriarchs, and that he now assumed; and this seems to me the most natural and consistent sense of this passage; "I appeared to, and entered into Covenant with, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as God, the Almighty, but by my Name, Jehovah, I was not known to them, as their Covenant God; but by this name I now enter into Covenant with you, and by this name I will be known as your God." Hence in the following History, this name generally occurs; and by it he claims their submission and obedience. "I am Jehoof the Egyptians, and will deliver you from their bondage, and will redeem you with a stretched-out arm, and with great judgments. And I will take you to be my own people, and 7 I will be to you a God; and ye shall know that I am Jehovah your God, who bringeth you out from under the burdens of the Egyptians. And I will bring you into the land, which I 8 swore I would give to Abraham, to Isaac and to Jacob; and I will now give it to you for an inheritance. I am Jehovah." Moses thus spoke 9 to the children of Israel; but, from anguish of spirit and cruel bondage, they hearkened not to Moses; ^a but said to him, "Let us alone, and let us serve the Egyptians; for it is better for us to serve the Egyptians than to die in a wilderness".

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Go, ¹⁰ ¹¹ speak to Pharaoh the king of Egypt, that he let the children of Israel go out of his land." And Moses spoke to Jehovah, saying, "Be- 12 exercises, never encroaches on that which is due to the duties of social life. They know how to unite fervency of spirit, with diligence in business; and what tends more to their present advantage, they know how to husband the fruits of their labour. The wicked spend much more time and money in the pursuit of vanity and vice; yea it may justly be said, that one vice costs both more time and property, than the cultivation of many virtues. Let all professors of religion, put to silence, by diligence in their callings, the ignorance of foolish men.

3. We may here learn how difficult it is, for an oppressed people to obtain redress. Often are their oppressions increased by their natural endeavours to obtain deliverance; but oppressors should be reminded, that when they carry them to a certain point, they contribute to effect, what they intend to prevent. Let all engaged in pleading the cause of the oppressed, and promoting the interests of justice and humanity, follow the example of Moses, and to prudent remonstrance, add fervent prayer. Let such remember, that their labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.

vah, or I am Jehovah, your God," is the reason assigned for his various laws. The name Jehovah was known to the Patriarchs, if the present text be any authority, (for there is much variety of Lexion), but it was not appropriated to him as their God.

4. They dwelt as sojourners. Literally, 'the land of their sojournings, in which they sojourned.' I have preferred the sense to the idiom.

6. I am Jehovah. The addition of the Syriac, I deem genuine; and this passage supports the sense given verse 3.

9. The Sam. has preserved the answer of the children of Israel to Moses, which is nearly the same as we have it, Ch. xiv. 12; whence it is evident it should be supplied here.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. Let us remember, that he who as God, the Almighty, made a Covenant with the fathers, as Jehovah, the self-existent, unchanging and faithful God, in due time, fulfilled it to their children. He now came to rescue them from Egypt, by signs and mighty wonders; and made himself known as Jehovah their God to all generations. I AM, says Jehovah, this is my peculiar Name, and my glory I will not give to another. Let us honour this holy name, and ever confide in his faithfulness.

And Eleazer, Aaron's son, 25 took for a wife one of the daughters of Putiel; and she bare to him Phinehas. These were the heads of the fathers of the Levites according to their families. These were that Aaron and 26 Moses, to whom Jehovah said, "Bring the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, with their hosts. will not hear, how should Pharaoh? If serious characters, through grief or unbelief will not obey, what is to be expected from sinners? God can and will render his own word useful; and when he commissions to speak, we may confidently hope for success in the end.

3. Every kind of excellence has some defect, some blemish connected with it, to prevent pride. Moses was beautiful, but had not a ready utterance; was learned and wise, but could not communicate his knowledge with ease or gracefulness. Paul laboured under the same defect; his speech to some was contemptible. The wisest and best men, should learn not to think too highly of their personal endowments, but remember, that they have received them; nor should they despise others for the want of them.

particularly the pedigree of the illustrious leaders of Israel. The whole from this to the 28 verse, I have included in a parenthesis, as it is evident, it has no other connexion with the subject than what is suggested. Reuben, Simeon, and Levi, sprung from the same mother; and for this reason they seem united in this genealogy.

20. Uncle's daughter. So both the Greek and Syriac render, which is more probable than Aunt. The word is used for a relation either distant or near.

29 the land of Egypt,—When he spoke to Moses, saying, “I am Jehovah, Speak thou to Pharaoh the king of Egypt all that I say to thee;

30 And Moses said to Jehovah I have not a ready utterance, and how shall Pharaoh hearken to me?”

1 JEHOVAH then said to Moses, “See I have made thee a God to Pharaoh; and Aaron thy brother shall be thy prophet. “To him” thou shalt speak all that I command thee; and Aaron thy brother shall repeat it to Pharaoh, that he may let the children of Israel go out of his land. Yet I will suffer the heart of Pharaoh to be hardened; and I will multiply my signs and my wonders in the land of Egypt.

4 For Pharaoh will not hearken to you, until I stretch mine hand upon Egypt, and bring forth mine host, my people the children of Israel, out of the land of Egypt, by great judgments. And “all” the Egyptians shall know that I am Jehovah, when I stretch forth mine hand upon Egypt, and bring out my “people” the children of Israel, from among them.” And Moses and Aaron did as Jehovah commanded them; even 7 so did they. And Moses was eighty years old, and Aaron eighty three years old, when they spoke to Pharaoh.

8 Now Jehovah had spoken to Moses and to Aaron, saying, “If Pharaoh should speak to you, saying, ‘Show ‘to us “some sign” or wonder,’ then thou shalt say to Aaron, ‘Take thy rod; and cast it before Pharaoh, “and before his servants”, and it shall become a serpent.”

And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh; 10 and they did as Jehovah had commanded; for Aaron cast down his rod before Pharaoh, and before his servants, and it became a serpent. Then Pharaoh called also the wise men and the 11 sorcerers “of Egypt”. Now the magicians of Egypt did, in like manner, by their enchantments. For they cast down every man his rod, 12 and these became serpents; but Aaron’s rod swallowed up their rods. Yet the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, so that he hearkened not to them, as Jehovah had said.

Jehovah then said to Moses, “Pharaoh’s 14 heart is hardened; he refuseth to let the people go. Go thou to Pharaoh in the morning; 15 lo, he then goeth forth to the water; and thou shalt wait, to meet him, by the brink of the river; and the rod which was turned to a serpent take thou in thine hand. And thou shalt 16 say to him, ‘Jehovah, the God of the Hebrews, hath sent me unto thee, saying, ‘Let my people go, that they may serve me in the wilderness;’ and, behold, hitherto thou hast not hearkened. Thus, therefore, saith Jehovah, ‘By 17 this thou shalt know, that I am Jehovah.’ Behold, with the rod which is in mine hand, I will strike the waters which are in the river, and they shall be turned to blood. And the fish which 18 is in the river shall stink; so that the Egyptians shall lothe to drink water out of the river.”

“And Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh and they said to him, “Jehovah the God of the Hebrews hath sent us to thee, saying, ‘Let

28—30. This refers to verse 11 and 12; and is here mentioned again to introduce what follows in the next Chapter.

CHAP. VII. 1. A God. Moses is thus called because of his divine legation, and of the miracles which God by him would work before Pharaoh. He was to act in the name of God; and Aaron was to be his interpreter.

5. And all the Egyptians, &c. Is there an allusion here to what Pharaoh said, Ch. v. 2? Not only Pharaoh, but all the people shall know that I am Jehovah; i. e. he who performs what he promises, or threatens.

9. I have followed the Sept. as giving a more apposite sense than the text. The common text is not only erroneous but defective; the Sam. and Greek version, happily correct the text and supply the deficiency—A serpent. The word denotes any land or water monster; and here perhaps the crocodile.

11. The wise men and the sorcerers. The wise men, and those supposed capable of explaining or performing wonders—called afterwards magicians.

They did so by their enchantments. In what manner the wise men of Egypt imitated Moses we are not informed. Ganganelli thinks the word here used points at the mode in which they effected this, ‘by dazzling the sight.’ The narrative is too concise, and the circumstances noticed too general, to afford sufficient data on which to found a decisive opinion. That the wise men or magicians had great power in the state, and were consulted on every emergency is clear, both from sacred and profane History;—but that they had the power to work miracles, to control the laws of nature, may be safely denied. Paul has given the names of two of the most celebrated of these Egyptian Magi. 2 Tim. iii. 8. I may also add, that their design was to convince Pharaoh, that the miracles of Moses were not true miracles, but done by art; and their cunning imitation, for a season, had this effect.

18. I have inserted the Samaritan text, which first gives the command

my people go, that they may serve me in the wilderness; and, behold, hitherto thou hast not hearkened. Thus therefore saith Jehovah, 'By this thou shalt know, that I am Jehovah.' Behold, with the rod which is in mine hand I will strike the waters which are in the river, and they shall be turned to blood. And the fish which is in the river shall die, and the river shall stink; so that the Egyptians shall lothe to drink water out of the river".

- 19 Then Jehovah spoke to Moses, "Say to Aaron 'thy brother', 'Take thy rod, and stretch out thine hand over the waters of Egypt, over their streams, and over their rivers, and over their lakes, and over all their water-cisterns, that they may become blood; and that there may be blood throughout all the land of Egypt, both in cisterns of wood, and in cisterns of 20 stone". And Moses and Aaron did so, as the Lord had commanded. For "Aaron" lifted up the rod, and struck the waters which were in the river, in the sight of Pharaoh, and in the sight of his servants; and all the waters

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. The miracles now wrought were truly wonderful; and their ultimate design was worthy of God. Idolatry prevailed in a wonderful degree in Egypt, and they worshipped and served the creature, rather than the Creator. They ascribed to their idols the divine attributes, and rendered to them divine honours. They worshipped creeping things and four footed beasts. To such a vile declension had wandered the human intellect. But these miracles tended to show, that an Idol was nothing, but an imaginary object; that they had eyes, but saw not; and ears, but heard not; and that Jehovah alone was God.

2. The strongest evidence is often insufficient to convince, when the judgment is biassed by deep-rooted prejudice; and we obstinately adhere to established opinions, though we cannot assign any solid reason for them. Pharaoh refused to hearken to the testimony of God to Moses, and then the repetition of it by Moses to Pharaoh. To save transcribing, the speech repeated has been omitted in the common Hebrew text; to the injury of perspicuity and of the historical narrative.

21. So that they could not drink it. According to Maillet, and other travellers, the water of the Nile, when pure, is uncommonly pleasant and wholesome; while that found in the wells is detestable. It is common on the rising of the river, for the Nile-water to turn red and become unwholesome; and hence Michaelis, Dathe, and others contend, that its waters were not really turned into blood, but became of a blood-red colour; and that the miracle consisted in the circumstance of the river, rising at an unusual season of the year, at the command of Moses. If the miracle consisted in this unusual overflow of the Nile, from rains descending at an unusual season in Abyssinia, when the rains ceased, the water would gra-

which were in the river were turned to blood. And the fish that were in the river died; and 21 the river so stunk, that the Egyptians could not drink the water out of the river; and there was blood throughout all the land of Egypt. And the magicians of Egypt did in 22 like manner, by their enchantments; and the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, that he did not hearken to them; as Jehovah had said: But 23 Pharaoh turned about and went into his house; nor did he even lay this to heart. And all the 24 Egyptians digged about the river for water to drink; for they could not drink of the water of the river.

of these signs; and on witnessing them, turned away with indifference. Many witnessed the miracles of Jesus with the same spirit; and when they could not deny the miracle, they said, "He casteth out demons by the prince of demons." Let us guard against our prejudices, and ever be open to conviction, that we may receive the truth in the love of it.

3. Though Pharaoh and his Courtiers continued obstinate, yet it is probable some believed and joined the Israelites. God is known by the judgments he executeth; and his design, when they are abroad in the earth, is, that men may learn righteousness. There was a respite between the plagues, to see what effect each would produce. Happy they who exercise repentance instead of resistance; and when the hand of Justice is stretched out, fly for protection to the arms of mercy.

dually become pure; and this is not improbable, as we do not read of any application from Pharaoh to remove this plague. Whether the waters were turned into real blood or not, they were corrupted, so that they could not be drunk. This plague, on the river, which the Egyptians worshipped, and into which they had cast many of the Hebrew male-children, was designed to show the folly of their worship, and to punish them for their past cruelty.

CHAP. VIII. 1. Had struck the river. Geddes founds an objection against the reality of this miracle, from the execution being more extensive than the order; the latter specifying only the waters of the river, while the former records all the waters through the land. This objection is easily obviated. The change produced in the waters of the Nile must equally affect its rivers, its canals, its lakes and smaller reservoirs, which had

2 they may serve me.' And if thou refuse to let
 'my people' go, behold, I will infest thy whole 3 country with frogs. And the river shall bring forth frogs so abundantly, that they shall come up and enter into thine houses, and into thy bed-chambers, and upon thy beds; and into the houses of thy servants, and of thy people; and into thine ovens, and into thy kneading troughs:
 4 And both on thee, and on all thy servants and on thy people, shall the frogs come up."

'Moses and Aaron then went to Pharaoh, and said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Let my people go, that they may serve me.' And if thou refuse to let 'my people go, behold I will infest thy whole country with frogs. And the river shall bring forth frogs so abundantly, that they shall come up and enter into thine houses,
 and into thy bedchambers, and upon thy beds;
 and into the houses of thy servants, and of thy people; and into thine ovens, and into thy kneading-troughs: And both on thee, and on all thy servants, and on thy people shall the frogs come up."

5 And Jehovah said to Moses, "Say to Aaron 'thy brother', 'Stretch forth thine hand with thy rod over the streams, over the rivers, and over the lakes, and cause frogs to come up upon the land of Egypt.'" And Moses said to Aaron, "Stretch forth thine hand with thy rod, that frogs may come up on the land of Egypt."

6 And Aaron stretched out his hand over the waters of Egypt; and the frogs came up, and 7 covered the land of Egypt. And the magicians 'of Egypt' did in like manner, by their enchantments; and they brought up frogs upon the land of Egypt.

Then Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron, 8 and said, "Intreat Jehovah, that he may take away the frogs from me and from my people;
 and I will let the people go, that they may sacrifice to Jehovah." And Moses said to Pha- 9
 raoh, "Appoint me a time when I shall intreat for thee, and for thy servants, and for thy people; that the frogs may be destroyed from thee and thy houses, and may remain in the river only." And he said, "To morrow." And 10 Moses said, "According to thy word it shall be; that thou mayest know that there is none like to Jehovah our God. For the frogs 11 shall depart from thee, and from thy houses,
 and from thy servants, and from thy people;
 in the river only they shall remain." And Mo- 12 ses and Aaron went out from Pharaoh; and Moses cried to Jehovah on account of the frogs which he had sent against Pharaoh. And Je- 13 hovah did according to the word of Moses; and the frogs died away from the houses, from the villages, and from the fields. And they gather- 14
 ed them together in heaps; and the land stunk with them. But when Pharaoh saw that there 15 was respite, he hardened his heart, and hearkened not to them; as Jehovah had said.

Then Jehovah said to Moses, "Say to Aaron, 16
 'Stretch out 'thine hand with' thy rod 'in it' and strike the dust of the land, that it may become gnats throughout all the land of Egypt."
 And they did so; for Aaron stretched out his 17 hand with his rod, and struck the dust of the earth, and it became gnats both on man and on beast; all the dust of the land became gnats throughout the whole land of Egypt; and the gnats were both on man and on beast". And 18

connexion with it.

2. Infest. Literally, plague; I prefer the former word as more suitable here.

6. If the plague of the river consisted in an unusual overflow, the stagnant waters would prepare the way for this; but the abundance of frogs clearly proved the hand of God.

9. I have followed the versions in rendering the first clause of this verse. The connexion shows, that this is the true reading. Pharaoh now feels the effect of his obstinacy; and solicits Moses to pray for the removal of the plague; and the answer of Moses naturally implies, that Jehovah who had sent it, would remove it on his intercession; and that this ought to convince him, that he was the true and only God.

14. Gathered them into heaps. The killing of them was a mitigation of the evil; and leaving them to rot, was a forcible admonition, to sin no more, lest some worse thing should befall them. But alas! Pharaoh still hardened his heart.

16. Gnats. I have followed the Greek translators, who lived in Egypt, and who were most likely to understand the original term. It is allowed that Egypt is now, and ever was, infested annually, with the Mosquito Gnats; and if this was the insect, this miracle must consist, in their being produced at an unusual season, at the command of Moses. Rosenmüller observes, that this miracle occurred in February, the coldest month of the year in Egypt. Calmet conjectures, that the putrid frogs might be the occasion of this plague.

in like manner the magicians tried, by their enchantments, to bring forth gnats, but they 19 could not. Then the magicians said to Pharaoh, "This is the finger of a God." Yet the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, nor did he hearken to them; as Jehovah had said.

20 And Jehovah said to Moses, "Rise up early in the morning, present thyself to Pharaoh; 'for' lo he cometh forth to the water! and say to him, 'Thus saith Jehovah, 'Let my people
21 go, that they may serve me.' But if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send a swarm of beetles upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses; and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of beetles, and also the ground whereon 22 they stand. And I will separate, in that day, the land of Goshen, in which my people dwell, that not a beetle shall be there; to the end thou mayest know, that I am Jehovah in the 23 midst of the earth; And I will make a division between my people and thy people. To morrow shall this sign be."

"And Moses and Aaron went in unto Pharaoh, and said to him, "Let my people go, that they may serve me. But if thou wilt not let my people go, behold, I will send a swarm of beetles upon thee, and upon thy servants, and upon thy people, and into thy houses; and the houses of the Egyptians shall be full of beetles, and also the ground whereon they stand. 19. The finger of a God. God, the only true God, most probably they knew not; but they were convinced, that here was the 'finger of a God,' whom the Hebrews called 'their God;' and that he was too powerful for them to contend with.

21. Swarm of Beetles. "Flies, or a mixture of noisome beasts." This is borrowed from the Rabbinical Writers, who contend, that this mixture contained all sorts of noxious animals, serpents, scorpions, &c. Bochart inclines to believe, that ערב denotes the Alchurkous of the Arabs. Geddes contends for Beetles; the blatta Egyptiaca, which Forskal found frequent in the houses of Alexandria; and which, having jaws and teeth, is a most voracious creature; that not only bites the human race, but also devours clothes, books, plants and whatever comes in its way. Hence the Psalmist, lxxviii. 45; "He sent on them beetles, ערב, which devoured

there; to the end thou mayest know, that I am Jehovah in the midst of the earth; And I will make a division between my people and thy people. To morrow shall this sign be." And 24 Jehovah did so; and there came a "very" grievous swarm of beetles into the house of Pharaoh, and into the houses of his servants, and into all the land of Egypt; so that the land was ravaged by the beetles.

Pharaoh then called for Moses and for Aaron, 25 and said, "Go sacrifice to your God in this land." But Moses said, "It is not proper to 26 do so. For the sacrifices which we offer to Jehovah our God are an abomination to the Egyptians. Behold, should we, before their eyes, offer sacrifices, which are an abomination to the Egyptians, would they not stone us? Let us go a journey of three days, into the wil- 27 derness, and sacrifice to Jehovah our God, as he shall command us." And Pharaoh said; 28 "I will let you go, that ye may sacrifice to Jehovah your God in the wilderness; only go not very far away: intreat Jehovah for me." And Moses said, "Behold, I go out from thee, 29 and I will intreat Jehovah that the swarm of beetles may, to morrow, depart from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; but let not Pharaoh any more deal deceitfully so as not to let the people go to sacrifice to Jehovah." Then Moses went out from Pha- 30 raoh, and intreated Jehovah; And Jehovah 31 did according to the word of Moses; and he removed the beetles from Pharaoh, from his servants, and from his people; there remained them." This is at least as probable as any of the renderings given; and I have adopted it.

22, 23. This circumstance strongly marked the purpose for which this plague was sent. God sent his judgments on the oppressors of his people, but kindly protected them.

26. It is not proper, &c. See Note, Gen. xxiv. 50. The Jews offered in sacrifice, their oxen, goats, sheep, &c. and these animals the Egyptians worshipped. Pharaoh wishes them to sacrifice in the land; but Moses gives the most solid reason for not doing so. He again solicits the intercession of Moses, and promises compliance with his desire; but again, on obtaining respite, refuses to let the people go.

1 AGAIN Jehovah said to Moses, "Go to Pharaoh, and say to him, 'Thus saith Jehovah the God of the Hebrews, 'Let my people go, 2 that they may serve me.' For if thou refuse to let them go, and wilt still detain them, 2 Behold, the hand of Jehovah shall be upon thy cattle which are in the field. Among the horses, and among the asses, and among the camels, and among the herds and among the 4 flocks, shall be a very grievous mortality. And Jehovah will distinguish between the cattle of 'the children' of Israel, and the cattle of the Egyptians; and there shall nothing die of all that belongeth to the children of Israel. 5 And Jehovah hath appointed the time, saying, "To-morrow will Jehovah do this in the land." "And Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh, and said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'Let my people go, that they may serve me.' For if thou refuse to let them go, and wilt still detain them, behold the hand of Jehovah shall be upon thy cattle which are in the field. And Jehovah will distinguish the cattle of 'the children' of Israel and the cattle of the Egyptians; and there shall nothing die of all that belongeth to the children of Israel. And Jehovah hath appointed the time, saying, "To-morrow will Jehovah do this thing in the land." And on the morrow Jehovah did that thing, and 6 all the cattle of Egypt died; but of the cattle of the children of Israel not one died. And Pharaoh 7 sent to inquire, and, behold, there was not one dead of the cattle of the 'children of' Israel. Yet the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, and he would not let the people go.

Jehovah, therefore, said to Moses and to 8 Aaron, "Take handfuls of the ashes of the furnace, and let Moses sprinkle them towards the heavens in the sight of Pharaoh. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. The chief object of the idolatry of the Egyptians, we here see, how God made the instrument of their plague. The Nile they gloried in; to it paid divine honours, and offered human victims. Its waters now brought forth such swarms of frogs, as must have proved equally offensive to all the senses; and by their entering into every house, must have made life intolerable. No power but the divine, could thus have multiplied the frogs upon all the land of Egypt; and this judgment ought to have convinced the Egyptians, that there was no God like Jehovah, the God of Israel.

2. The plagues of gnats and beetles prove that God can scourge the proud and haughty by the most contemptible instruments. Thus were Pharaoh and his people treated. Herod was eaten up of worms; and God hath made the plagues of many other prosecutors wonderful. How vain is human resistance to divine counsel and power. "Woe to the man that striveth with his maker!"

3. We see, that Magicians might deceive and pretend to imitate the miracles of Moses, but they could not remove the plagues. Pharaoh was sensible of this; and applies to Moses for this purpose. God's matchless power appears in producing or removing the plagues; and the divine mission of Moses was established, in as much as they were produced or removed, according to his word. When he spoke, the judgment came; and when he prayed, it was taken away. What an honour did God put on prayer! Let us ever be found in the humble conscientious discharge of this duty.

4. What a distinction did God make between the Israelites and the Egyptians! The plagues of the latter reached not them. No frogs, no gnats or beetles, in all their dwellings! He had said to them, 'Come, my people, enter into thy chamber until these calamities be past;' and they found safety amidst all the surrounding plagues. Let us make God a refuge, and he will become our salvation. He will distinguish his people on earth, and in another World make an everlasting division between them and the wicked.

1000, as the Vulg. renders: The Greek has death. I have given the sense, without specifying the disease, as it is not possible to do it.

6. All the cattle of Egypt died. Nothing can be more evident, than that universal terms are used in all languages in a limited sense. So that the sense is 'many of the &c;' but not one belonging to the Israelites.

8. Ashes of the furnace; not the oven-furnace, but the brick-kiln.

9. Ulcerous inflammation. It is; in Dent: xxviii. 27, emphatically called 'the ulcer of Egypt;' and is now generally supposed to be that nace, and stood before Pharaoh; and threw them up towards the heavens, and they became an ulcerous inflammation, both on man, and on 11 beast. And the magicians could not stand before Moses because of the inflammation; for the inflammation was on the magicians, as well as 12 on all the other Egyptians. Yet Jehovah suffered the heart of Pharaoh to be so hardened, that he hearkened not to them; as Jehovah had spoken to Moses.

13 Again Jehovah said to Moses, "Rise up early in the morning, and stand before Pharaoh, and say to him, 'Thus saith Jehovah, the God of the Hebrews, 'Let my people go, that they 14 may serve me.' For else I will, at this time, send all my plagues on thyself, and on thy servants, and on thy people; that thou mayest know that there is none like me in all the earth.
 15 Yea now I could stretch out my hand, and smite thee and thy people with pestilence; so that thou shouldst be cut off from the earth.
 16 And in very deed for this purpose have I preserved thee, that I may show to thee my power; and that my name may be declared through 17 all the earth. As still thou exaltest thyself against my people, so as not to let them go;
 18 Behold, to morrow, about this time, I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the day of its foundation 19 until now. Send now, therefore, and gather in thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field; for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, upon them shall the hail come down, and they shall die."

species of leprosy called elephantiasis."

11. Though Egypt might be subject to this disease, yet the extent of it, and its coming at the precise time Moses specified, mark the hand of God.

14. On thyself. Literally, 'On thine heart;' but the connexion proves, that this is idiomatical, and that (לִבְךָ) is used as (נַפְשְׁךָ).

15. Hobigant, Le Clerc, Dathe and others, render potentially; and the sense requires it, or otherwise we have a threatening which was not executed.

16. Have I preserved thee, &c. So the Septuagint has rendered, but the Apostle, Rom. ix. 17, as our version here. The sense seems to be,

and said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of the Hebrews, 'Let my people go, that they may serve me.' For else I will at this time send all my plagues on thyself, and on thy servants, and on thy people; that thou mayest know there is none like me in all the earth. Yea now I could stretch out my hand, and smite thee and thy people with pestilence; so that thou shouldst be cut off from the earth. And in very deed for this purpose have I preserved thee, that I may show to thee my power; and that my name may be declared through all the earth. As still thou exaltest thyself against my people, so as not to let them go; Behold, to morrow, about this time, I will cause it to rain a very grievous hail, such as hath not been in Egypt since the day of its foundation until now. Send now, therefore, and gather in thy cattle, and all that thou hast in the field; for upon every man and beast which shall be found in the field, and shall not be brought home, upon them shall the hail come down, and they shall die'."

He who feared the word of Jehovah, among 20 the servants of Pharaoh, made his servants and his cattle flee into the houses; But he that 21 regarded not the word of Jehovah left his servants and his cattle in the field.

And Jehovah said to Moses, "Stretch forth 22 thine hand towards the heavens, that there may be hail over all the land of Egypt; upon man, and upon beast, and upon every green herb of the field, throughout all the land of Egypt. And Moses stretched forth his rod towards the 23 heavens; and Jehovah sent thunder and hail, and the lightning ran along upon the ground.

22. ^vSept.

I have supported and preserved thee, during the past plagues, that as yet I may show to thee my power in the remaining plagues, and that my name as Jehovah, the only true God, may be declared, &c. James uses the Apostle's word, for 'restoring health.' "The prayer of faith shall save the sick and I will raise, preserve, or restore him."

18. Hail is an usual Phenomenon with us, but in Egypt where it seldom rains, it must indeed be very rare, and uncommon.—That such should be the state of the Atmosphere; and that hail of such a size should be formed, as, together with the thunder and lightening, should destroy the fruits of the land, was truly miraculous.

26. The transposition of the 31 and 32 verses after this, greatly im-

Thus Jehovah rained hail upon the land of 24 Egypt; And there was hail, and lightning mingled with the hail, exceedingly grievous. There had been none like it in all the land of Egypt
 25 since it became a nation. And the hail smote, throughout all the land of Egypt, all that were in the field, both man and beast; and the hail smote every green herb of the field, and every 26 tree of the field it broke to pieces. Only in the land of Goshen, where the children of 31 Israel dwelt, was there no hail. And the flax and the barley were smitten; for the barley was in the ear, and the flax was bol-
 32 ling. But the wheat and the rye were not smitten, for they were not grown up.

27 Now Pharaoh sent, and called for Moses and Aaron, and said to them, "I have once more sinned. Jehovah is righteous; but I and 28 my people are wicked. Entreat Jehovah for me, that there may be an end of this mighty thunder, and hail, and lightning"; and I will let you go, and ye shall be no longer delayed."
 29 Moses then said to him, "As soon as I am gone out of the city, I will spread out my hands to Jehovah; and the thunder shall cease, nor shall there be any more hail; that thou mayest know that the earth belongeth to Jeho-30 vah. Yet I know that neither thou, nor thy 33 servants, as yet fear the Lord Jehovah. So

Moses went out of the city from Pharaoh, and spread out his hands to Jehovah: and the thunder ceased, and the hail and the rain were no longer poured upon the earth. And when 34 Pharaoh saw that the rain, and the hail, and the thunder had ceased, he sinned yet more, and hardened his heart; both he and his servants. So the heart of Pharaoh was hardened, 35 nor would he let go the children of Israel; as Jehovah had spoken by Moses.

Again, therefore, Jehovah said to Moses, 1
 "Go in unto Pharaoh, (for I have suffered his heart, and the hearts of his servants, to be hardened, that I may show these my signs among them; And that ye may tell in the 2 hearing of your children, and children's children, in what manner I have treated the Egyptians; and the signs which I have done among them. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. We learn from this History, that the obstinacy of sinners, neither changes nor diminishes God's righteous demands. Pharaoh must still be addressed, "Let my people go that they may serve me." God requires the most exact compliance with his will; he peremptorily demands our submission and obedience. If we do not repent, he will abide faithful; and will neither appoint nor admit any other terms of acceptance, than those revealed.

2. In the Plagues of mortality among the cattle, and of the ashes of the brick-furnace turned to an ulcerous inflammation, God marks the idolatry and cruelty of the Egyptians. The cattle they worshipped; and numbers of them were cut off. They had made the Israelites serve with rigour in making bricks; and God from the ashes of the kiln most grievously afflicted them. In these punishments we see the retributive hand of God. The measure they had given to others was now measured to them again.

3. How much it is our interest and duty to regard the divine warnings. Some believed the word, and brought their cattle from the fields into their sheds, and they were preserved; others disbelieved, and their cattle perished. So now, they who believe the doctrines of revelation, and obey the divine precepts, will find refuge and safety in Christ; but unbelievers and the disobedient, will bring on themselves swift destruction. Continued impenitence will end in the fire which shall never be quenched.

proves the connexion. The circumstances specified in these two verses, limit the period of this plague to the month of February.

And they shall cover the face of the earth, so that one cannot see the earth; and they shall eat up what is left remaining to you, that which escaped the hail; and they shall eat up every green herb of the earth, and the fruit of every tree which groweth to you out of the field. And they shall fill thy houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, from the day that they were upon the earth, unto this day."

3 And Moses and Aaron went to Pharaoh, and said to him, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of the Hebrews, 'How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me? Let my people go, 4 that they may serve me.' Else, if thou refuse to let my people go, behold, to morrow I will 5 bring locusts into thy country. And they shall cover the face of the earth, so that one cannot see the earth; and they shall eat up what is left remaining to you, that which escaped the hail; and they shall eat up every green herb of the earth, and the fruit of every tree which grow- 6 eth to you out of the field". And they shall fill thy houses, and the houses of all thy servants, and the houses of all the Egyptians; which neither thy fathers, nor thy fathers' fathers have seen, from the day that they were upon the earth, unto this day." And Moses, having thus spoken, turned about and went out from Pharaoh.

7 Then the servants of Pharaoh said to him, "How long shall this be a snare unto us? Let the men go, that they may serve Jehovah their God. Knowest thou not, yet, that Egypt is destroyed?" And Moses and Aaron 8 were brought back to Pharaoh; and he said to them, "Go, serve Jehovah your God: but who and who, are to go?" And Moses said, 9 "We will go with our young and with our old. With our sons and with our daughters, with our flocks and with our herds will we go; for we must keep a feast to Jehovah our God". He then said to them, "So let Jeho- 10 vah be with you, as I let go both you and your little ones! See, how evil is your design! Not so; but go now ye men, and serve Jeho- 11 vah; this ye requested." And they were driven out from the presence of Pharaoh.

Jehovah now said to Moses, "Stretch out 12 thine hand over the land of Egypt for the locusts, that they may come upon the land of Egypt, and eat up every green herb of the earth, and the fruit of every tree which the hail hath left. And Moses stretched forth 13 his hand" over the land of Egypt, and Jehovah brought an east wind upon the land all that day, and all that night; and when it was morning, the east wind brought the locusts. And the locusts overspread all the 14 land of Egypt, and lighted on every district of Egypt, in great numbers. Such locusts had not been before them, and such after them shall not be. For they covered the face of the 15 whole earth, so that the land was darkened; and they eat up every green herb upon the earth, and every tree, the fruit of which the hail had left: and not any thing green remained on the trees, or on the herbs of the field, through all the land of Egypt.

but I am satisfied, that it relates to the conduct of Pharaoh, in obstinately refusing to let the Israelites go, although that refusal had already nearly ruined Egypt.

8. Who, and who are to go? I have here rendered literally, as the repetition marks the agitated state of Pharaoh's mind, and the reluctance he felt to permit the whole body of the Israelites to depart.

10. As I let go, &c. This implies an absolute refusal to let them all go, as appears from the next verse. It is put in the form of an imprecation, "May you have as much of Jehovah's help, as you shall have my permission."—See how evil, &c. Literally, 'See that evil is before your face,' which some think contains a threatening. The connexion supports the sense given—"your design is now manifest, you mean not to return."

12. What the Samaritan supplies is supported by the 15 verse. The Hebrew is inconsistent. In verse 5 it has trees only; in verse 12 it has green herbs only; but in verse 15 it has both: that is, it is twice defective and once full: whereas the Sam. is uniformly the same.

14. In great numbers. The Vulg. Sept. and Arab. render as I have done; and the connexion justifies the version.

15. The quantity of locusts, says Volney, that sometimes ravage Syria, are incredible to all who have not witnessed their astonishing numbers. The whole earth is covered with them for several leagues. The noise which they make in browsing on the trees and herbs, may be heard

16 Then Pharaoh, in haste, called for Moses and Aaron; and he said, "I have sinned against Jehovah your God, and against you. 17 Now therefore forgive, I pray you, my sin only this once, and entreat Jehovah your God that he may only remove from me this deadly calamity." And he went out from Pharaoh, and 18 entreated Jehovah. And Jehovah changed the wind into a very strong west one, which took away the locusts, and cast them into the Red sea; there remained not one locust in all the 19 country of Egypt. But Jehovah suffered the heart of Pharaoh to be hardened, so that he would not yet let the children of Israel go. 20 Again Jehovah said to Moses, "Stretch out thine hand towards the heavens, that there may be darkness over the land of Egypt; 21 even darkness the most gross." And Moses stretched forth his hand towards the heavens; and there was thick darkness over all the land 22 of Egypt, for three days. They could not see one another; nor did any one rise from his place, for three days; but all the children of Israel had light in their dwellings. 23 Then Pharaoh called to Moses "and to Aaron", and said, "Go, ye, serve Jehovah your God"; only let your flocks and your herds remain. Let your little ones also go with you." 24 And Moses said, "Thou must give us also sacrifices and burnt-offerings, that we may sacrifice to Jehovah our God. Our cattle must go with us; there shall not a hoof be left behind. For of them must we take to serve Jehovah our God; and we know not with what we must serve Jehovah, until we come thither."

at a great distance, and resembles that of an army foraging in secret. The Tartars themselves are not a more destructive enemy.

17. Deadly calamity. Literally, 'death,' a metonymical expression for what would occasion death. Famine and pestilence often succeed the ravages made by locusts.

21. The inhabitants of England and Holland, have frequent opportunities of contemplating darknesses by means of fogs, &c. which in the climate of Egypt would be altogether miraculous. Where the air is so clear as hardly to form clouds, those clouds can much less appear in the state of that thick vapour, which a fog in London sometimes assumes. This kind of dim half light, would astonish the inhabitants of Egypt, who would rather sit at home, than venture abroad, and endeavour at their personal risque to visit their friends, or to follow their occupations.

But Jehovah suffered the heart of Pharaoh to 27 be hardened, so that he would not yet let them go.

Now Jehovah had said to Moses, "Yet will I bring one plague more upon Pharaoh, and upon the Egyptians; afterwards he will let you go hence. When he shall let you go, he will even altogether thrust you out hence. Speak 2 now in the hearing of the people, and let every man ask of his neighbour, and every woman of her neighbour, articles of silver, and articles of gold, and raiment". And I will 3 give this people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they shall give them what they ask. And about midnight I will go through the land of Egypt; and every first-born in the land of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh who sitteth upon his throne, to the first-born of the maid-servant that sitteth behind the mill; and even unto the first-born of every beast. And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as hath not been, nor shall be any more. But among all the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue, against either man or beast; that ye may know what a difference Jehovah maketh between the Egyptians and the Israelites". Now Moses was greatly honoured in the land of Egypt, in the sight of Pharaoh's servants, and in the sight of the people. Then Moses said to 4 Pharaoh, "Thus saith Jehovah, 'About midnight I will go through the midst of the land' of Egypt. And all the first-born in the land 5 of Egypt shall die, from the first-born of Pharaoh who sitteth upon his throne, even unto

24. Pharaoh wishes to secure their return by detaining their property; but with this Moses refuses to comply.

28, 29. I have transposed with Houbigant these verses after, then will I go out, in the 8th verse of the next chapter. Owing to omissions in the text, the order of the narrative has suffered, as is allowed by the best Critics. I have united the next chapter to this, as the subject is so connected, that to divide is to confound.

CHAP. XI. 3. The textual reading וירין, and the omission of the speech as delivered from the Almighty to Moses, renders the whole obscure and incoherent; it converts a prediction into a narration. By reading with the Sam. the whole is simple and consistent.

5. It is not necessary to understand by first-born an actually first-born child. It is known, that בכור denotes the chief, the prime of any

the first-born of the maid-servant that sitteth behind the mill; and even unto all the first-born of beasts. And there shall be a great cry throughout all the land of Egypt, such as hath not been, nor shall be any more. But among all the children of Israel shall not a dog move his tongue, against either man or beast; that ye may know what a difference Jehovah maketh between the Egyptians and the Israelites. Then shall all these thy servants come down to me, and bow down themselves to me, saying, 'Go thou out of the land, with all the people whom thou leadest.' After this I will go out." And Pharaoh said to him, "Begone from me; take heed that thou see my face no more; for, on the day thou seest my face, thou shalt die." And Mosss said, "Thou hast spoken right; I shall see thy face no more." He then went out from Pharaoh with great indignation. Now Jehovah had said to Moses, "Pharaoh will not hearken to you; that my signs and my wonders may be multiplied in the land of Egypt." And Moses and Aaron did all these signs and wonders in the presence of Pharaoh; yet Jehovah suffered the heart of Pharaoh to be hardened, so that he

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X & XI. 1. "How long wilt thou refuse to humble thyself before me," says God to Pharaoh, mercifully reminding him what was his duty, and reproving him for his continued obstinacy and impenitence. To humble ourselves for our iniquities, is the duty of all; for all have sinned. The prince and the peasant are alike called to discharge this duty; and if they refuse to humble themselves by repentance, God will humble them by his judgments.

2. Pharaoh repeatedly acknowledges his sin, yet did not forsake it. He promises obedience, but fails to perform. How many are imitating his conduct! They are confessing their transgressions to the Lord, and promising new obedience; they are owning that God is thing. Isa. xiv. 30; Job xviii. 13. As the first-born of cattle is mentioned, as well as of men, it is enough to induce one to inquire into the true sense of the passage. For what is the first-born of cattle better than others? But if the prime, the best be meant, then the judgment is most awful.

7. Michaelis renders, 'But among the Israelites no dog shall be sick.' We ought to render, not 'Against any of the children, &c.' as our public version, but 'Amongst all the children, &c.' This gives force to the expression, and shows, that while the Egyptians should shriek out for distress, the Israelites should enjoy such security and peace, that not the least noise should be heard in their dwellings. See Kennicott's 1 Diss. p. 384, &c.

would not let the children of Israel go from his land.

CHAPTER XII.

B. C. 1491. The beginning of the year changed; the Pass-over and its rites appointed; the first-born of the Egyptians slain; and the Israelites depart.

JEHOVAH now spoke to Moses and Aaron in the land of Egypt, saying, "This month shall be to you the chief of months: it shall be to you the first among the months of the year."

"Speak ye to all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, 'On the tenth day of this month, let every man, the head of a household, take a lamb; a lamb for each household. And if the household be too small for a whole lamb, let him and his neighbour house-holder take one. According to the number of persons shall ye reckon for the lamb, each one according to his eating. Your lamb shall be without blemish, a male of one year. From the sheep, or from the goats ye may take it. And let it be kept up until the fourteenth day of this month; and let every assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel kill it in the evening. And they shall righteous and they wicked, and continue in their sins. Let such remember, that it is not he who confesseth only, but he who forsaketh sin that shall obtain mercy.

3. What a difference was there between the Israelites and the Egyptians! The latter covered with darkness; the former enjoying light in their dwellings. Darkness and Light are often used to represent the spiritual state of the saint and the sinner; and their final states of misery and happiness. The wicked are the children of darkness; the righteous, children of Light, and walk in God's light. Light is sown for the righteous, and gladness for the upright in heart. They shall enjoy the Light of God's glory, but the wicked shall be cast into outer darkness, where there is weeping and gnashing of teeth.

for the illustration of the whole Chapter.

CHAP. XII. 2. Chief of months. So Matthews rendered; and I cannot think the Hebrew will even bear any other sense. It is so called on account of the Passover-feast.

3. Let every one, &c. I have followed the Sept. and Vulg. and given the sense rather than the idiom. The term (אֶחָד) denotes either a lamb or kid of a certain age.

4. The meaning is, that they should associate so many persons as were sufficient to eat the whole of it.

6. In the evening. The Jews began their day at six in the morning;

take of the blood, and sprinkle it on the two door posts, and on the upper lintel of the houses, in which they shall eat it. And they shall eat the flesh, roasted by fire, on that same night; with unleavened bread, and with bitter herbs shall they eat it. Ye shall not eat of it raw, or in any way boiled in water; but roasted by fire, its head together with its legs and carcase. And ye shall not let aught of it remain until the morning; but should aught of it remain until the morning, ye shall burn it with fire. And thus shall ye eat it; with your loins girded, your sandals on your feet, and your staves in your hands; and ye shall eat it in haste: it is Jehovah's Pass-over feast. For I will this night pass through the land of Egypt, and will smite all the first-born in the land of Egypt, both of man and beast; and on all the princes of Egypt I will execute judgments: I am Jehovah. And the blood on the houses in which ye are, shall be to you for a token; and when I see the blood I will pass over you, and there shall not be any destroying plague among you, when I smite the land of Egypt. And this day shall be to you for a memorial; and ye shall keep on it a feast to Jehovah, throughout your generations; ye shall on it keep a feast, by a perpetual ordinance. Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread; and from the first day ye shall remove leaven from your houses: for whosoever eateth leavened bread from the first day until the seventh day; that person shall be cut off from Israel. On the first day ye shall have a holy convocation, and on the seventh day a holy convocation; no manner of work shall be done on them, only what every man must eat; that alone may ye do. And ye shall observe the feast of unleavened bread; because on that same day I brought your hosts out of the land of Egypt. Therefore shall ye observe that day throughout your generations, by a perpetual ordinance."

"In the first month, on the fourteenth day 18 of the month, at even, until the twenty-first day of the month, at even, ye shall eat unleavened bread. Seven days let there be no leaven found in your houses; for whosoever eateth of aught leavened, even that person shall be cut off from the congregation of Israel, whether he be a stranger, or one born in the land. Nothing leavened shall ye eat; 20 in all your habitations ye shall eat unleavened bread."

Then Moses called for all the elders of 21 Israel, and said to them, "Choose out, and take for yourselves, lambs according to your families, and kill the passover-victims. And ye 22 shall take a bunch of hyssop, and dip it in the blood that hath been received in a bason; and with the blood in the bason ye shall sprinkle the two door-posts; and let none of you go out of the door of his house until the morning. For Jehovah will pass through, to smite the 23 Egyptians; and when he seeth the blood upon the lintel, and on the two door-posts, Jehovah will pass over the door, and will not suffer the destroying plague to come into your houses, to smite you. And ye shall observe this rite, 24 as a perpetual ordinance given to you and your children. And when ye are come to the land 25 which Jehovah will give to you, according as he hath promised, then shall ye keep this service 'on this same month'. And if your children should say to you, 'What mean ye by this service?' Then ye shall say, 'It is the 27 sacrifice of Jehovah's pass-over, who passed over the houses of the children of Israel in Egypt, when he smote the Egyptians; and our

12. Princes. I follow the sense of our marginal rendering; and some deem this most apposite. This clause explains the former.

16. Holy convocation. The word signifies 'a called assembly,' called by the divine authority to engage in holy services. The feast of unleavened bread followed the pass-over, and was distinct from it.

26, 27. The establishment of the Pass-over feast was wisely intended, to keep up the remembrance of this great deliverance; and to be a type of a still greater one. 1. Cor. v. 7.

houses he delivered." And the people bowed and worshipped. And the children of Israel went away, and did as Jehavah had commanded Moses and Aaron: thus did they.

And it was about midnight when Jehovah smote all the first-born in the land of Egypt, from the first-born of Pharaoh who sat on his throne, unto the first-born of the captive that was in the dungeon; and even all the first-born of the beasts. Then Pharaoh arose in the night, he, and all his servants, and all the Egyptians; and there was a great cry throughout the land of Egypt; for there was not a house without one dead in it.

And Pharaoh called for Moses and Aaron by night, and said, "Arise, depart from among my people, both ye and the children of Israel; and go, serve Jehovah, as ye have said. Take also your flocks and your herds, as ye said, and be gone; but also yet bless me." For the Egyptians strongly urged that the people might speedily be sent out of the land; "for else," said they, "we are all dead men."

The people of Israel then took their dough, which yet remained unleavened, wrapt up in their clothes upon their shoulders. And the children of Israel had done according to the word of Moses. They had asked of the Egyptians articles of silver, and articles of gold, and raiment. And Jehovah had given the people favour in the sight of the Egyptians, so that they gave them what they asked. Thus they spoiled the Egyptians.

Now the children of Israel journeyed from Rameses to Succoth; being about six hundred thousand men on foot, besides women, and children. A mixed multitude went also with them; and flocks, and herds, and other cattle, in great abundance. And they baked unleavened cakes of the dough which they brought out of Egypt; for it had not been leavened, because the Egyptians had thrust them out, so that they could not delay; nor had they prepared any provision for themselves.

Now the time of the sojourning of the children of Israel and of their fathers, which they had dwelt in the land of Canaan and in Egypt, was four hundred and thirty years. And it came to pass at the end of four hundred and thirty years, even on the selfsame day, that all the hosts of Jehovah went out from the land of Egypt. This is a night which should be solemnly kept to Jehovah, for bringing them out of the land of Egypt; this is that night, which all the children of Israel, throughout their generations, should solemnly keep to Jehovah.

Again Jehovah said to Moses and Aaron, "This is the ordinance of the pass-over-sacrifice. Not any stranger shall eat of it; Nor shall any man's servant, though bought with his money, until ye have circumcised him; then he may eat of it. A sojourner, or a hired servant shall not eat of it. In one house shall it be eaten; ye shall not carry aught of the flesh abroad out of the house; nor a bone of it shall ye break. The whole congregation of the children of Israel shall keep it. And if a stranger sojourn among you, and will keep the pass-over to Jehovah, let all his males be circumcised, and let him come near and keep it; and he shall be as one born in the land; but let not any uncircumcised person eat of it. One law shall there be for the native, and for the stranger that sojourneth among you. Thus did all the

34. Which yet remained. The Sept. Vulg. and Targum support this version. Others render kneading troughs. Compare Exod. vii. 28; Heb. and Deut. viii. v. 17. All our old translators rendered as I have done. In the first passage referred to, it seems to be employed metonymically for what contained dough, or any other kind of provisions.

37. Women and children. Taylor has properly observed, that this term denotes both women and little ones.

40. Four hundred and thirty years. From the preceding accounts it is clear, that the present Hebrew Text is defective, and without the addition as preserved in the Sam. and Sept. inconsistent with itself. The Sam. and Sept. are supported by Josephus and the best Jewish Expositors. Compare Gal. iii. 17.

CHAP. XIII. 2. The first-ling. I prefer this to the common render-children of Israel; as Jehovah commanded Moses and Aaron, so did they.

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 1491. The first-born among the Israelites sanctified to God; the first-ling of beasts dedicated to him; they carry with them the bones of Joseph, and are guided by a pillar of cloud and fire.

51 And it came to pass the selfsame day, that Jehovah brought the children of Israel with their hosts out of the land of Egypt. That Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Sanctify to me every first-born male; for the first-ling of every womb among the children of Israel, whether of man or of beast, shall be mine."

3 Moses then said to his people, "Remember this day, in which ye came out of the land of Egypt; out of the house of bondage; for by a strong hand hath Jehovah hence brought you out. Let nothing, therefore, leavened be eaten on this day on which ye came out, in the month of Abib."

5 "And when Jehovah hath brought you into the land of the Canaanites, and the Hethites, and the Amorites, and the Girgasites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites, which he swore to your fathers, that he would give to you, a land flowing with milk and honey, then in this month ye shall observe the rites of this service. Seven days ye shall eat unleavened bread; and on the first, and on the seventh day, shall be a feast to Jehovah. Unleavened bread shall be eaten seven days; and let no leavened bread be seen among you, nor let there be leaven seen among you, throughout all your districts."

"And in that day, ye shall tell your children, saying, 'This is done because of what Jehovah did for us, when we came out of the land of Egypt.' And let this rite be as a sign upon your hands, and as a memorial between your eyes, that the law of Jehovah may be in your mouth; for with a strong hand hath Jehovah brought you out of the land of Egypt. Ye shall therefore, keep this ordinance, in its season from year to year."

"And it shall be when Jehovah 'your God' hath brought you into the land of the Canaanites, as he swore to your fathers, and hath given it to you, That ye shall set apart to Jehovah every first-born of woman; and every first-ling of the beasts, which belong to you, being males, shall be Jehovah's. But every first-ling of an ass ye shall redeem with a lamb or kid; and if ye will not redeem it, then ye shall break its neck; and every first-born

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. The ordinance of the Pass-over, ought to remind us of the method in which God saves us. A lamb must be slain and its blood be the appointed means of security. There is no safety, without the atoning blood. Christ, our Pass-over, hath been sacrificed for us. In his blood we have redemption. Through this, pardon is proclaimed and secured; and this received by faith, will secure and save us. In this way the sprinkling of the blood of Jesus purifies the conscience, by giving us assurance of pardon and acceptance, which becomes an incentive to duty.

2. Let us keep the Christian Pass-over, and teach our children to keep it. It is far more important than that of Israel, and more worthy to be handed down to the remotest periods of time.

Let us put away the leaven of malice, and keep this feast, with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

3. Contemplate the numbers of the Israelites, and observe how God fulfilled his promise. When Jacob went down to Egypt, God said, "I will make of thee a great nation, and will surely bring thee up again." In the fourth generation, he said to Abraham, thy seed shall return hither; and now they return. The time of their bondage is terminated, and God has wrought signs and wonders in the land of Ham. The whole series of miracles tended to establish the doctrine of the divine unity, and to show the sin and folly of idolatry. In them we see the just severity and the mercy of God; both alike designed to promote the highest moral interest of mankind.

ing; and the word is so rendered elsewhere by James's translators.

6. Though the textual reading be in the singular, I have rendered in the plural as more conformable to our idiom.

6. On the first day. From Ch. xii. 16, it is evident these words ought to be supplied; and probably once formed a part of the text.

9. The Targumists consider, that the words of this precept concerning the sanctification of the first-born, were to be written on scraps of Parchment, or small pieces of Linen, which they denominate, Phylacteries. The Caraites admit no such practice; and it is probable, that this like many other superstitions practices, owed its origin rather to a vain superstition than to any other cause. The sense of the place is, that these rites should perpetually admonish them concerning their duty, and remind them of the favours conferred on them.

12. Every first-born. The addition is implied in the text; but with-among your children ye shall redeem."

14 "And it shall be when your children ask you, in time to come, saying, 'What meaneth this?' that ye shall say to them, 'By a strong hand Jehovah brought us out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. For when Pharaoh would hardly let us go, Jehovah slew every male first-born in the land of Egypt, both the first-born of man, and the first-born of beasts; therefore we sacrifice to Jehovah every first-ling of beasts, being males; but every first-born of our own children we redeem.' Let this be to you as a token upon your hands, and as frontlets between your eyes; for by a strong hand Jehovah brought you out of Egypt."

17 Now, when Pharaoh had let the people go, God did not lead them by the way of the land of the Philistines, although that was the nearest; for God said, "Perhaps the people will repent when they see war, and return to Egypt." God, therefore, led the people about, by the way of the wilderness of the Red sea; and the children of Israel went, in regulated order, out of the land of Egypt. And Moses took with him the bones of Joseph; for Joseph had strictly sworn the children of Israel,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. To preserve the remembrance of what God had wrought for Israel, and especially the last deliverance, he appoints the redemption of the first-born of man and beast. Thus would they be continually admonished, respecting their obligations and duty. Scarcely a day could elapse, without some first-born renewing the recollection of God's kindness and mercy. How wise and proper this ordinance! Indeed, all his ordinances are calculated to promote our religious interests, by recalling our sins to remembrance, reminding us of his benefits, and awakening our love and gratitude.

2. We see the wisdom and goodness of God, in proportioning the trials of his people to their strength. Their spirits were broken with slavery; they were unfit to encounter difficulties, or to face any danger; this is a remarkable instance of divine compassion. Thus he deals with his people to this day. He out it, the sense is not given.

13. Of an ass. This is an instance of an unclean animal, and stands for the whole class. These Laws are given more at length afterwards.

18. In regulated order. Purver renders, 'military order.' I have given a more general idea, as I question, whether any thing more be saying, "God will surely visit you; and ye shall carry up hence with you my bones."

And they journeyed from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, which is at the extremity of the wilderness. And Jehovah went before them, by day in a pillar of cloud, to lead them on the way; and by night, in a pillar of fire, to give them light; so that they might go by day or by night. He never removed, from before the people, the pillar of cloud by day, nor the pillar of fire by night.

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 1491. Pharaoh pursueth the Israelites; they are alarmed and murmur; Moses comforteth them; they pass the Red-sea, in which the Egyptians are drowned.

JEHOVAH now spoke to Moses, saying, 1 "Speak to the children of Israel that they 2 turn and encamp before Pihahiroth, between Migdol and the sea; over against Baal-zephon shall ye encamp by the sea. For to his people Pharaoh will say of the children of Israel, 'They are entangled in the land; the wilderness hath shut them in.' And I will suffer 4 Pharaoh's heart to be hardened so that he shall pursue them; and I will be honoured upon Pharaoh, and upon all his host; that knows their frame, and has compassion on their infirmities. "God is faithful, who will not suffer you to be tempted above what you are able, but will with the temptation also make a way to escape, that you may be able to bear it."

3. God's visible presence, in the pillar of cloud by day and of fire by night, was a standing miracle. By day this cloud was their covering to mitigate the heat, as well as to direct their march. Perhaps occasional showers from this cloud refreshed both them and their cattle, as they are said to have been baptized in the cloud, 1 Cor. x. 1, 2. By night it was a light, to prevent confusion in the camp. Thus did he spread a cloud for their covering; and a flame of fire to give light by night; and thus shall his spiritual presence be with the Christian Church. "Then shall Jehovah create upon the station of mount Sion, and upon all her holy assemblies, a cloud by day, and smoke; and the brightness of a flaming fire by night: Yea, over all shall the glory be a covering."

meant, than that they proceeded, not in a confused and disorderly body, but in such order as their circumstances would admit.

CHAP. XIV. 2. Instead of going over the Isthmus of Suez, they were commanded to turn to the right, along the edge of the Red Sea, into the straits, or passage between the mountains of Hicroth. Into these straits the Egyptians may know that I am Jehovah." And they did so.

5 Now it was told the king of Egypt that the people had fled; and the heart of Pharaoh and his servants was changed in regard to the people, and they said, "What is this we have done, that we have let 'the children of' Israel go 6 from serving us? And 'Pharaoh' made ready his chariot, and took with him 'all' his people. 7 And he took six hundred chosen chariots, and all the cavalry of Egypt, and captains 8 over the whole of them. And Jehovah suffered the heart of Pharaoh king of Egypt, 'and of his servants, to be hardened, so that' he pursued the children of Israel; but the children 9 of Israel went out with an high hand. And the Egyptians, even the whole cavalry of Pharaoh, his chariots, and his horsemen, and his other forces pursued and overtook them, encamped by the sea, at Pihahiroth, over against Baal-zephon.

10 Pharaoh was now drawing near, when the children of Israel raised their eyes, and 'saw', and lo, the Egyptians were marching after them; and they were greatly afraid; and the 11 children of Israel cried out to Jehovah. And they said to Moses, "Because there were no graves in Egypt, hast thou brought us out to die in a wilderness? Wherefore hast thou done this to us, to bring us out of Egypt? 12 Is not this what we spoke to thee in Egypt, saying, 'Let us alone, 'we pray thee', that we may serve' the Egyptians? For it is better for us to serve the Egyptians, than that we should die in the wilderness."

Then Moses said to the people, "Fear ye 13 not; stand still, and see the salvation of Jehovah, which he will this day work for you. For the Egyptians whom ye see to day, ye shall not so see again for ever. Jehovah shall fight 14 for you, while ye shall remain still."

'Now Moses cried to Jehovah'; and Jeho- 15 vah said to Moses, "Wherefore criest thou to me? Speak to the children, that they go forward: And lift thou up thy rod, and stretch 16 out thine hand over the sea, and divide it; that the children of Israel may go through the midst of the sea on dry ground. And be- 17 hold, I will suffer the heart of 'Pharaoh and' the Egyptians to be hardened, so that they will follow them; and I will triumph over Pharaoh, and over all his hosts; over his chariots, and over his horsemen. And 'all' 18 the Egyptians shall know that I am Jehovah, when I have triumphed over Pharaoh; over his chariots, and over his horsemen."

And the angel of God, who went before the 19 camp of 'the children of' Israel, now removed and went behind them; and the pillar of cloud also removed from before them, and stood behind them. So it came between the camp of the 20 Egyptians and the camp of the Israelites; and it was a cloud of darkness to those, but it gave light by night to these; and during the whole night the one came not near the other. Moses then 21 stretched out his hand over the sea; and Jehovah caused the sea to flow off, by a strong east wind during the whole night; and he made the sea, dry land, and the waters were

God led them, to avoid war with the Philistines, Ch. xiii. 17, to draw Pharaoh forth upon a supposed advantage got, v. 3, and to try the faith of his people.

7. Cavalry. To mention a certain number of chariots, and then all the chariots, does not seem natural, as the latter must include the former. Besides, here is no mention of cavalry, whereas we find below, that Pharaoh's army consisted of them too. I have therefore rather translated it, 'six hundred chosen chariots, and all the cavalry of Egypt.' So the Sept. understood it here, ἑξακτὸν ἐκλεκτὰ ἵππων, (equitatum.)

10. Some think the serious part cried to God, and the unbelieving murmured against Moses.

11. Nothing shows more the degraded spirit of this people, than their conduct to their distinguished leader. The Psalmist alludes to this fact, Psalm cvi. 7.

13. This address of Moses displayed his strong confidence, and clearly proves that he spoke under a divine influence.

15. I have supplied after the Syriac, which words either have dropped from the Text, or ought to be supplied as being understood.

19. Angel of God; that is, He who dwelt in the cloud, the messenger or angel of the covenant. This angel removed the cloud also; and made it an effectual barrier between the two hosts; on the one side it was luminous, to afford light to the Israelites, on the other dark, which constrained the Egyptians to abide still.

21, 22. If the passage of the Israelites was a little to the north of Suez, the distance from shore to shore being only a few miles, the whole of the Israelites might soon pass over. The miracle appears to me to be effected, not by an unusual ebb, aided by a north-east wind, but by the divine power condensing the waters of the sea, so that they became like a

- 22 divided. And the children of Israel went through the midst of the sea upon dry ground ; and the waters were like a wall to them on their right hand, and on their left.
- 23 And the Egyptians pursued and went after them into the midst of the sea ; the whole cavalry of Pharaoh, his chariots, and his horsemen.
- 24 And it was about the morning watch, when Jehovah looked on the host of the Egyptians through the pillar of fire and cloud, and troubled 25 the host of the Egyptians ; And entangled their chariot wheels, so that they drove them with difficulty. The Egyptians, therefore, said, " Let us flee from the Israelites ; for Jehovah fighteth for them against the Egyptians."
- 26 Then Jehovah said to Moses, " Stretch out thine hand over the sea, that the waters may return upon the Egyptians ; upon their cha- 27 riots, and upon their horsemen. And Moses stretched forth his hand over the sea ; and when the morning dawned, the sea returned in its strength, and met the Egyptians as they fled. Thus Jehovah overthrew the Egyptians in the midst of the sea. For the waters returned, and 28 covered the chariots, and the horsemen ; and all the forces of Pharaoh that came into the sea after them ; there remained not so much as one of them. But the children of Israel walked 29 upon dry ground through the midst of the sea ; and the waters were like a wall to them on their right hand, and on their left. Thus Jehovah saved the Israelites on that day from the Egyptians ; and the Israelites saw the Egyptians lying dead upon the sea shore. And when 31 the Israelites saw the mighty power which Jehovah had exerted upon the Egyptians ; then the people feared Jehovah, and believed in Jehovah and in Moses his servant.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. After so many proofs of God's care over the Israelites, we shall see them trembling at the least danger, and murmuring against Moses. Many had rather have spent their days in slavery, than encounter any difficulties, to attain freedom. The promise made to their fathers, the good land to which they were marching, and the many signal tokens of divine favour which they had witnessed, were all insufficient to inspire confidence, to excite a spirit of courage, and lead them to submission. God's patience, says Bishop Hall, was no less a miracle, than their deliverance.

2. The conduct of Pharaoh and his people, equally manifests their infatuation and obstinacy. They had had proofs sufficient, that Jehovah was God, and that he fought for the Israelites ; but uninstructed by the lessons they had received and the judgments they had endured, and faithless to their promises, they pursued them to reduce them again to slavery. " What is this we have done, to let the children of Israel go from serving us ?" The loss of their service was the motive to another act of injustice ; and God so ordered events, that they perished by it. Thus true it is, that they who being often admonished harden their hearts, shall suddenly be destroyed, and that without remedy.

3. How wonderful the deliverance of God's people ! This wall on each hand. It is said, that this strait is yet sometimes fordable, and Niebuhr informs us he passed it on horseback ; it may be so, but how could Moses induce such a multitude, women and children, supposing the water three feet deep, to ford it ? He tells us they went through the sea on dry ground ; and no traveller has seen or related, so far as I know, that it is so now. All the circumstances prove the passage of the red-sea strictly miraculous ; and the attempt to account for it by natural means, is sufficient to convince any reasonable person, that it is so. The many references to this miracle in subsequent writers, prove, that it was generally was the Lord's doing ; here human agency had no part. The people were to stand still, and see the salvation which Jehovah was about to work for them. It was not less an act of grace than of power, towards a timid, unbelieving, and disobedient people. In reference to this signal deliverance, the Psalmist says, " What ailed thee, O sea, that thou fleddest ? The sea itself felt the presence and the power of the God of Jacob." " Come then and see the works of God : he is terrible in his doing towards the children of men. He turned the sea into dry land : they went through the flood on foot, there did we rejoice in him. He ruleth by his power for ever, his eyes behold the nations : let not the rebellious exalt themselves."

4. For once the people believed, and by faith they passed through the red-sea. They had no security, that the waters should not return upon them, but the promise of God ; and had they not believed this, they would not have ventured to pass over. When they saw his mighty power divide the waters, to that power they committed themselves, and were saved. O let us in like manner believe in the power and grace of God to save us, from the hand of our enemies ! The confidence we place in him he will not disappoint. If we follow him, though it be through floods of deep waters, he will be our security and salvation.

C. 1491. The Song of Moses, beautifully displaying the wonderful deliverance from Egypt; the people come to Marah, where the bitter waters are sweetened, and then to Elim.

- 1 THEN sang Moses and the children of Israel this song to Jehovah, saying,
"I will sing to Jehovah,
For he is gloriously exalted:
The horse and his rider, he hath cast into the sea."
- 2 Jehovah is my strength and my song,
And he hath become my salvation!
He is my God, and him will I extol;
My father's God, and him will I exalt.
- 3 "Mighty" in battle is Jehovah!
Jehovah is his peculiar Name.

He hath cast into the sea;
His chosen captains also,
Hath he drowned in the Red-sea.

They went down to the bottom like a stone.
- 6 Thy right hand, Jehovah, is glorious in power;
Thy right hand, Jehovah, hath crushed the foe.
- 7 And in the greatness of thine excellency,
Hast thou overthrown thine opposers!
Thou sentest forth thy fiery wrath,
Them it consumed, as the stubble.

the waters;

returning waves met and overwhelmed them.

81. Believed in Jehovah, &c. By this last miracle, they saw their enemies destroyed; and they now believed in Jehovah as the only true God, and in Moses, as sent by him, and acting under his special authority.

CHAP. XV. 1. I will sing. I follow the text here, because the first person is used in the next verse, and for this reason I adopt the various reading verse 21. Most of the versions have the verb here in the plural, Let us sing, &c. This song has been deservedly admired, for the boldness of the imagery, the sublimity of the sentiments, and the dignity of the style. Those Christians who triumph over the 'beast,' the spiritual Pharaoh, are represented as singing this song, Revel. xv. 2-4.

2. Jehovah. The name in the Hebrew is Jah, which I suspect to be an error in the few places where it occurs, as either mss. or versions read Jehovah.—Him will I extol. The common reading, 'I will prepare him an habitation' is so incongruous, that I adopt that given without hesitation. It consists in the change of one single letter for another, which is so nearly similar, that they are often exchanged in mss. In the next verse

The gulfy billows were congealed in the midst of the sea.

The enemy said, "I will pursue—will overtake; 9
I will divide the spoil, my desire shall be satisfied:

I will draw my sword— mine hand shall

I have adopted the Sam. text as conveying a more dignified idea.—My strength. The term (vy) might have been rendered praise, as 1 Chron. xvi. 27; Ps. xxix. 1, 4, 5. The readings adopted, making God the agent, are much more poetical, and conformable to the Hebrew idiom.

8. This verse confirms the remark in the preceding Chapter, that the miracle consisted in condensing the waters.

12. I have transposed, with Green, this verse, as it completes the description of the overthrow of the Egyptian host. Some think there might be an earthquake, which partly contributed to their destruction; but as nothing of this kind is mentioned, I conceive the meaning to be, they were as completely destroyed as if the earth had covered them.

13. I render in the present tense, as expressing not only what God had done, but what he was still doing and intended to do.

17. The mountain, &c. Judea was a mountainous country, and the whole country seems here intended, as being the 'inheritance of Jehovah,' or the country in which he would dwell; and called the sanctuary, the place consecrated by his presence.

- The place, O Jehovah, which thou hast made for thine abode,
The sanctuary, O Jehovah, which thine hands
have prepared :

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. The great deliverance wrought for Israel, awakened the most lively feelings, and prompted Moses to write this most excellent song of triumph. The feelings of the people were in unison with his own ; and they joined in singing this sublime song ; and all the attendant circumstances must have led them to sing it with the voice of joy. This is the oldest specimen of Poetry, adapted to Music, extant ; and it is pleasing to find this art consecrated to the service of God, and made the handmaid of piety.

2. This song was a perpetual proof of the events which it recorded. And doubtless, in every succeeding period the Jews rehearsed it ; and thus were reminded of the power and goodness

20—21. It is clear that this triumphant ode was sung by alternate choirs, but it is difficult now to make a proper distribution of the parts. Kennicott has given a division of this song in parts. To Moses he assigns ver. 1 and 2. Verse 3 is a chorus of men. Then Miriam, with a chorus of women, repeats, O sing ye to Jehovah! Moses resumes and sings verses 4—8. The women repeat, O sing ye to Jehovah! &c. Moses then sings verses 9—13. The women repeat the same chorus. Moses sings verses 14—18. And a grand chorus, by all, concludes with Jehovah shall reign for ever and ever.”

called Marah [BITTERNESS]. And the people 24 murmured against Moses, saying, “ What shall we drink ?” And ^aMoses cried to Jehovah ; 25 and Jehovah showed him a certain wood, which when he had cast into the waters, the waters were made sweet.

Here Jehovah appointed for them a statute and an ordinance, and here he proved them, And said, “ If ye will attentively hearken to 26 the voice of Jehovah your God, and will do what is right in his sight, and give ear to his commandments, and keep all his statutes ; I will inflict none of those diseases upon you, which I inflicted upon the Egyptians ; for I am Jehovah, your physician.”

And they removed and came to Elim, where 27 were twelve fountains of water, and seventy palm trees : and there they encamped by the waters.

of God towards them. The deliverance it celebrates, was the ground of all their privileges and subsequent greatness. We should never forget those providential events, which, in like manner, are the basis of our civil and religious immunities.

3. This song of triumph should remind us of the greater deliverance wrought for us by Christ. The redeemed of the Lord, shall at last see all their enemies vanquished ; and each in this lofty language shall say, “ Jehovah is my strength and my song ; and he is become my salvation !” Heaven will then ring with responsive songs to him who giveth his people victory, and whose right hand hath been so gloriously exalted. For ever will the redeemed sing the new song of the lamb.

25, 26. The statute and ordinance are what follows. They are to own Jehovah as their God by renouncing idols, receiving his word by Moses, as a divine revelation ; and to render to him constant obedience. These are general moral precepts, and it is thought Jeremiah refers to them, vii. 22, 23 verses.

27. These fountains yet exist ; and Shaw informs us, that there are now more than 2000 palm-trees, the dates of which are excellent.

CHAP. XVI. 2. The Targums have given the most probable reason for this murmuring of Israel, by informing us, that on this day the bread after their departure from the land of Egypt.

2 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and Aaron in the wilderness; And the children of Israel said to them, "O that we had died by the hand of Jehovah in the land of Egypt, when we sat by the flesh pots, and ate bread to the full; for ye have brought us into this wilderness, to kill this whole assembly by famine."

11 Now Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "I have heard the murmurings of the children of Israel: 'Speak to them, saying, 'At even ye shall eat flesh, and in the morning ye shall be filled with bread; and ye shall know that I am Jehovah your God'?"

4 "For behold," said Jehovah to Moses, "I will rain bread for you from the heavens; and the people shall go out and gather daily what is sufficient for the day, that I may prove them, whether they will walk by my laws, or not.

5 But on the sixth day they shall prepare what they bring in; and let it be twice as much as they gather daily." And Moses and Aaron said to all the children of Israel, "At even, ye shall know that Jehovah hath brought you out from

7 the land of Egypt. For in the morning, ye shall see the glorious power of Jehovah; in that he hath heard your murmurings against himself: for what are we, that ye should murmur against us?" And Moses said, "This ye shall know when Jehovah giveth to you, at even, flesh to eat, and, in the morning, bread to the full; for Jehovah heareth your murmurings which ye murmur against him: for what are we? your murmurings are not against us, but against Jehovah."

Moses then spoke to Aaron, "Say to the 9 whole congregation of the children of Israel, 'Come near before Jehovah: for he hath heard your murmurings.' And, as Aaron spoke to 10 the whole congregation of the children of Israel, it was that they looked towards the wilderness, and, behold, the glory of Jehovah appeared in the cloud.

Now in the evening a flight of quails came 13 up, and covered the camp; and in the morning there was a fall of dew round about the camp. And when the fall of dew was gone off, behold, 14 there remained upon the surface of the wilderness something small and shining, small as the hoar frost on the earth. And when the children of Israel saw it, they said one to another, "What is it?" [MAN-HU?] For they knew not what it was. And Moses said unto them, "This is the bread which Jehovah giveth you to eat. This is the thing which Jehovah hath commanded, 'Gather of it every man according to his eating, an omer for every man! According to the number of persons that are in his tent shall each of you take of it.'"

And the children of Israel did so, and gathered, some more, some less. And they measured it with an omer, that he who had gathered much might not exceed; and that he who had gathered little might not want. They gathered every man according to his eating.

which they had brought out of Egypt was consumed.

8. Flesh pots. It seems they enjoyed animal food in Egypt, and for this they now longed. After this verse I have transposed with Houbigant the 11 and 12th, as clearly being now out of their place, and confusing the narrative.

9. Ye shall know, &c. that is, ye shall have another proof, that Jehovah alone hath brought you out.

7. Glorious power. So the term (כבוד) here evidently signifies. Nothing is more contrary to the construction and sense than to refer, glory to the person of the son. He refers to the giving of the quails and the Manna.

13. Quails. Bishop Patrick contends, that it cannot mean quails, because they came with a wind—in immense quantities—and because they were exposed to the sun to dry, &c. He thinks these circumstances prove, that quails means not quails but locusts. Harmer, by a reference to those who have visited the country, answers satisfactorily these difficulties. It is usual for a hot south wind to bring them north, in large quantities—and being weary with flying, they may be taken with the hand; and it is also usual to dry them in the sun.

14. Shining. I have followed the Samaritan translator in this version. Some render soft; and others, very small.

15. What is this? The common version is absurd; one part is opposed to another. Josephus says, man, in Hebrew, is a particle of interrogation; So the Greek translators understood it; and from this question the Manna derived its name. Some would derive it from the Arabic, in which language man signifies a gift. The Manna appears to have been unknown to the Israelites; and hence we may infer, that it was something different from what is now called Manna. Compare Deut. viii. 3. 16. It was produced by divine power, and in such quantities, as cannot be accounted for from natural causes. Compare John vi. 48, and 1 Cor. x. 3.

19 And Moses said, "Let no man leave of it till 20 the morning." But some of them hearkened not to Moses, and left of it until the morning;
and it bred worms, and stunk; and Moses was 21 angry with them. So they gathered it every morning, every man according to his eating;
for when the sun became hot, it melted away.
22 And on the sixth day they gathered twice as much bread, two omers for each person; and all the chiefs of the congregation came and told 23 Moses. And he said to them, "This is what Jehovah hath said, 'To morrow is a sabbath of rest, holy to Jehovah. Bake what ye will bake to day, and boil what ye will boil; and all that remaineth lay up for yourselves, to 24 be kept until the morning.' And they laid it up till the morning, as Moses bade; and it did 25 not stink, nor was there any worm in it. And Moses said, "Eat it to day; for to day is the sabbath, holy to Jehovah: ye will not find it 26 to day in the fields. Six days shall ye gather it; but on the seventh day, which is the sabbath, on it there shall none be found." 27 Yet there went out some of the people on the seventh day to gather; but they found 28 none. And Jehovah said to Moses, "How long refuse ye to keep my commandments and my laws?" "See, because that Jehovah hath given 29

you the sabbath, therefore he giveth you on the sixth day the bread of two days. Abide ye every man in his place; let no man go out of his place, on the seventh day." So the people 30 rested on the seventh day. And the children 31 of Israel called the name of this food Manna.
And it was whitish, like coriander seed; and the taste of it was like wafers made with honey.

And Moses said, "This is the thing which 32 Jehovah commandeth: 'Fill an omer of it to be kept throughout your generations; that they may see the bread with which I fed you in the wilderness, when I brought you out of the land of Egypt'. And Moses said to Aaron, "Take 33 a "golden" urn, and put a full omer of manna therein, and lay it up before Jehovah, to be kept throughout your generations." As Jeho- 33 vah commanded Moses, so Aaron laid it up beside the testimonial Tables, to be kept. And 35
the children of Israel ate manna forty years, until they came to an inhabited land; they ate manna, until they came unto the borders of the land of Canaan. Now an omer is the tenth 36 part of an ephah.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. We here see the justness of the Psalmist's remark concerning his forefathers. They sang the praises of Jehovah, but soon forgot his works: they waited not for his counsel. New trials occurred; and as if their destruction had been the great design of God, and of his servants, Moses and Aaron, they murmured against them. Past favours and deliverances are not recollected; and they discover neither humility nor confidence. A murmuring, unthankful and dissatisfied temper, is a man's own plague, and highly provoking to God. Let us not "murmur as some of them murmured, and were destroyed in the wilderness."

2. The temper, which Moses and Aaron manifest, is peculiarly amiable. They arrogate nothing to themselves; they claim no profound homage; "What are we, that ye should murmur against us?" We are men of like passions with yourselves; we

20. It stunk, &c. God gave them this bread daily, and except on the sixth day, they were only to take what they could use. Some ventured to transgress, but found themselves much disappointed. The manna stunk and bred worms.

23. To morrow is the Sabbath, &c. Some would infer that the Sabbath was now first appointed; but the language seems to me to confirm the opinion, that it was a well known custom. When God finished the do nothing by our own authority; and consequently your murmurings are, in reality, against God. When sinners oppose ministers of the word, or murmur against divine doctrines or precepts as being mysterious and rigorous, they are opposing God, and he will avenge his injured goodness and honour.

3. Let us regard the kindness of God in our daily supplies of food. He provided miraculously, bread for the Israelites, day by day; to teach them their dependence, and lead them to live by faith. In allusion to this, and to teach us the same lessons, our Lord has directed us to pray, "Give us daily bread sufficient."
We are to be satisfied with what nature requires, and not to ask great things for ourselves. What is laid up sometimes spoils, and the good we expected from it is found to be visionary. The Israelites must daily gather the Manna; and we in like manner must daily labour for our bread. Let us not indulge anxious care, work of creation he instituted it; and now by withholding the Manna on that day, he renewed the observance of it, in a more strict manner; and at Sinai made it a special law. Of such importance was the Sabbath deemed.

26. None shall be found. This proves the miraculous nature of this bread; Compare Ps. lxxviii. 24, 25.

32-35. Moses here anticipates the order of time, that he might relate at once the circumstances which respected the Manna. The golden urn was put by the ark of the Covenant, in which were the tables of testimony.

CHAPTER XVII.

B. C. 1491. The people murmur at Rephidim; water given from the rock at Horeb; Amalek overcome, and an altar erected to Jehovah.

1 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel, removed from the wilderness of Sin, by their journeys according to the command of Jehovah, and encamped in Rephidim; and there was no water for the people to drink. Wherefore the people contended with Moses, and said, "Give us water that we may drink." And Moses said to them, "Why do ye contend with me? and why do ye tempt Jehovah?" But the people thirsted there for water; and the people murmured against Moses, and said, "Wherefore hast thou brought us up from Egypt, to kill us, and our children, and our cattle, with thirst?" And Moses cried to Jehovah, saying, "What shall I do with this people? In a little while they will stone me." And Jehovah said to Moses, "Go on before the people, and take with thee some of the elders of Israel; and thy rod, with which thou smotest the river, take in thine hand, and pass on. Behold, I will await there upon the rock in Horeb; and thou shalt smite the rock, and water shall come out of it, that the people may drink." And Moses did so in the sight of the elders of Israel. And he called the name of the place Massah [TEMPTATION]; and Meribah

[CONTENTION], because of the contention of the children of Israel, and because they tempted Jehovah, saying, "Is Jehovah among us, or not?"

Then came the Amalekites to fight with the 8 Israelites in Rephidim. And Moses said to 9 Joshua, "Choose out men, and go, fight with the Amalekites, to morrow; and I will stand on the top of the hill with the rod of God in mine hand. So Joshua did as Moses had said to 10 him; and went to fight with the Amalekites; and Moses, Aaron, and Hur, went up to the top of the hill. And it came to pass, when Moses held up his hands, that the Israelites prevailed; and when he let down his hands, the Amalekites prevailed. And the hands of Mo- 12 ses being heavy they took a stone, and put it under him, and he sat thereon; while Aaron and Hur supported his hands, the one on the one side, and the other on the other side; and his hands were kept steady until the going down of the sun. And Joshua defeated the 13 people of Amalek, and smote them with the edge of the sword. And Jehovah said to Mo- 14 ses, "Write this for a memorial in a book, and rehearse it in the hearing of Joshua, 'That I will certainly blot out the very remembrance of Amalek from under the heavens.'" And Mo- 15 ses built an altar, and called the name of it JEHOVAH-NISSI, [JEHOVAH IS MY SIGNAL]. And 16 had they not been thus supported. So would all sinners, had not Jesus come down from heaven, and given himself for the salvation of the world. He is the true manna, the bread of life, of which whosoever eateth shall live for ever.

10: Some verb has clearly been dropped out of the text before וַיִּסְמֹךְ.

The Sept. and Syr. are the only versions which retain the verb and lead us to the true lection. The Syr. reads וַיִּסְמֹךְ which is synonymous with וַיִּסְמֹךְ and with the Sept.

11. Held up his hands. This cannot be understood literally; for how could the hands of Moses have any influence on the battle? Moses held them up in prayer; and it was his intercession, which doubtless God regarded, and on account of which he gave the people victory.

13: I have followed the Samaritan, as affording the clearest sense.

16. I have followed the correction of the Text, as stated in my Hebrew Bible, to which the learned reader is referred. There is evidently a reference to the Name of the Altar; and Moses adds, that this altar shall be known as his signal of the war, which Jehovah had declared he would have with Amalek, until he was destroyed.

CHAPTER XVIII.

B. C. 1491. Jethro bringeth to Moses his wife and sons; his counsel, which Moses follows; his departure to Midian.

1 Now Jethro, the priest of Midian, the father-in-law of Moses, heard of all that God had done for Moses, and for the Israelites, his people, and that Jehovah had brought "the 2 children of" Israel out of Egypt. Then Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, took Zipporah the wife of Moses, after she had been sent back, 3 And her two sons; of whom the name of one was Gershom [A STRANGER HERE]; because his father said, "I have been a stranger in a foreign 4 reign 'land:." And the name of the other was Eliezer [GOD MY HELP]; because, his father said, "The God of my father, hath helped me, and delivered me from the 'hand of Pharaoh:." 5 And Jethro, the father-in-law of Moses, came to Moses with his sons and his wife into the wilderness, where he was encamped by the great 6 mountain. And it was said to Moses, "Behold thy father-in-law Jethro cometh to thee, and thy wife, and her two sons with her. Then 7 Moses went out to meet his father-in-law, and did obeisance, and kissed him; and they asked each other of their welfare; and then went into the tent. And Moses told his father-in-law 8 all that Jehovah had done to Pharaoh, and to the Egyptians for the sake of the Israelites, and all the trouble which they had met with on the way, and how Jehovah had delivered them. And Jethro rejoiced for all the good 9 which Jehovah had done to the Israelites, whom he had delivered from the hand of the Egyptians "and of Pharaoh". And Jethro said, 10 "Blessed be Jehovah, who hath delivered you from the hand of the Egyptians, and from the hand of Pharaoh; who hath delivered the people from under the hand of the Egyptians, 'because in every thing they dealt haughtily with them". Now I know that Jehovah is 11 greater than all the other gods!" And Jethro, 12 the father-in-law of Moses, brought a burnt offering and other sacrifices to God; and Aaron came, and all the elders of Israel, to eat bread with the father-in-law of Moses, before God.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. We have another instance of the ingratitude and unbelief of the Israelites, and another display of the power and grace of God. He orders the rock to be smitten, that he may refresh his weary, though rebellious, heritage; and the rock pours out for them copious streams. The smitten rock, the Apostle considers as an emblem of a suffering Saviour; by whose stripes we are healed. He was stricken, smitten of God and afflicted; his hands pierced with nails, his temples with thorns, and his side with the spear, and thence issued blood to atone and water to purify and refresh.

2. The Israelites are now called to fight their enemies; and

CHAP. XVIII. 2. After she had been sent back. For what reason Zipporah and her children had been sent back, we are not informed. Perhaps the dangers and difficulties which Moses foresaw, rendered this step both prudent and necessary.

6. The present Hebrew and the Samaritan printed text have וַיֵּלֶךְ I before וַיֵּלֶךְ. Hence our English, with most modern translators, render the comma thus: 'And he said unto Moses, I, thy father-in-law Jethro, am come unto thee.' But the great impropriety, says Kennicott, of Jethro speaking to Moses before he met him, and of Moses going out to meet Jethro after he had been spoken to by Jethro, will convince us that the word וַיֵּלֶךְ, I, is corrupted, from a word very similar in sound, וַיֵּלֶךְ, behold; agreeably to the Greek and Syriac versions. And though the Sam. text is printed with the same corruption here as the Hebrew, almost all the Sam.

though the usual means were adopted, the prayer of Moses had more power than their arms. He held up his hands imploring the assistance of that God, whose servant he was, and who can save by few as well as by many. The event answered his request; and he had the pleasure to see the first attack made upon his people fail; and in their victory a pledge of their final conquest. They were taught by this instance, that they would conquer by believing prayer, and divine assistance. It was God that fought for them. In this strength must the Christian fight the good fight; and the result is certain and glorious triumph. Jehovah will be his signal, his leader, and the captain of his salvation.

mss. read וַיֵּלֶךְ—The whole difficulty is therefore removed by rendering, "And it was told to Moses, Behold thy father-in-law Jethro is come."

11. I have removed with Geddes, the latter clause of this verse to the conclusion of the preceding, as giving a reason for their deliverance. No sense has hitherto been given of the words, suitable to the context, in the place which they now occupy. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

12. And brought sacrifices. Some would infer from what is here said, that this Chapter records facts, which must have occurred after the law was given. I can see no ground for such an opinion; sacrifice-feasts were usual, doubtless before the Law was given at Sinai; and they had consuetudinary laws which they must have observed in Egypt; and in litigations the people came to Moses as a Judge divinely appointed, that he might consult God, and decide for them.

13 Now on the morrow, Moses sat to judge the people; and the people stood about Moses 14 from the morning until the evening. And when Moses' father-in-law saw all that he did to the people, he said, "What is this thing that thou doest to the people? Why sittest thou thyself alone, while all the people stand about thee
 15 from the morning until the evening?" And Moses said to his father-in-law, "Because the people
 16 come to me to inquire of God. When they have any cause, they come unto me; and I judge between a man and his neighbour, and make known *to them" the statutes of God
 17 and his laws." And the father-in-law of Moses said to him, "What thou doest is not proper.
 18 Thou wilt certainly be worn down, both thou and this people that are with thee; for this thing is too heavy for thee; thou art not able 19 alone to perform it. Hearken now to my voice. I will give thee counsel, and God will be with thee. Be thou only between the people and God; and bring their causes to 20 God; And teach them his ordinances and laws; and show them the way in which they must walk, and the work which they must 21 do. Also look out, among all the people, for men of integrity, such as fear God; men of fidelity, hating lucre; and appoint these over them, rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds,
 22 rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens; And let them judge the people at all times; yet let it be so that every great matter they shall bring unto thee, and every small matter they shall judge. So will it be easier for thyself, when they shall bear the burden with thee.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. The wonders God had wrought in Egypt and at the Red-sea, were spread abroad. The fame thereof went into distant lands. The family to which Moses was allied, and in which his wife and children resided, could not hear of these events, with indifference. Jethro came, and brought to Moses his wife and children. and all this people shall go in safety to their own place."

And Moses hearkened to the voice of his 24 father-in-law, and did all that he had said. *And Moses said to the people, "I am not able alone to bear the charge of you. Jehovah your God hath so multiplied you, that, behold! ye are this day, as the stars of the heavens for multitude! (May Jehovah the God of your fathers, make you a thousand times as many more, and bless you, as he hath spoken.) How can I alone, bear the tiresome charge of you and your contentions? Choose ye wise and prudent men, and approved among your tribes, that I may appoint them for your chiefs." And they answered and said, "The thing thou hast proposed is proper to be done." So he took the 25 principal men of their tribes, men wise and approved, and made them chiefs over them, rulers of thousands, rulers of hundreds, rulers of fifties, and rulers of tens; *and other officers throughout their tribes. And he charged their judges, saying, "Hear the causes between your brethren; and judge justly between a man and his brother, or the stranger who is with him. Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; ye shall alike hear the small and great; nor shall ye be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's. The cause which is too hard for you, ye shall bring to me, and I will hear it." And he charged them respecting all things which they were to do". So 26 they judged the people at all times; and the hard causes they brought to Moses, but every small matter they judged themselves.

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 1707. The Israelites come to Sinai; God's message to them, and their answer; their preparation for receiving the law, and God's awful presence on the mount, &c. The ten commandments given; the people are afraid; Moses encourageth them Idolatry forbidden.

- 1 On the third month, from the going out of the children of Israel from the land of Egypt, on the first day they came into the wilderness
- 2 of Sinai. For when they departed from Rephidim, they came to the wilderness; there the Israelites encamped before the mountain.
- 3 And Moses went up to God, and Jehovah called to him from the mountain, saying, "Thus shalt thou say to the house of Jacob, and declare to the children of Israel: "Ye have seen what I did to the Egyptians, and how I have borne you as on eagles' wings, and brought
- 5 you hither to myself. Now therefore, if ye will indeed obey my voice, and keep my covenant, then ye shall be to me a peculiar treasure above all people. For though the whole their characters. Moses related the kindness and wonderful acts of the Lord, and the great goodness which he had shown to the house of Israel. He ascribes all to God; and Jethro impressed with such displays of divine power, acknowledges Jehovah to be above all gods. Let us learn to improve social converse in like manner, to exalt God, and to awaken gratitude. Give him the glory due to his holy name; by rehearsing the displays of his power, wisdom and mercy.

the text; and as it is supported by the text Deut. i. 11—16.

CHAP. XIX. 1. On the first day. Literally, 'that day.' It is allowed that the sense is that given. The deliverance from Egypt was one of the most important events to the Israelites as a nation, and forms a peculiar epocha in their History. From this they date, as the Mahometans from the Hegira, or flight of their prophet from Mecca.

3. Went up to God. The cloud, which had conducted the Israelites, it is probable now covered the Mountain; and to it Moses approached.

4. Borne you. This metaphor is peculiarly expressive. God had not only borne with them, but borne them above all their difficulties, as the eagle her young, affording them protection and continued support.—Brought you to myself; to be under my peculiar guidance and care.

5, 6. Submission to God and keeping his Covenant are the terms on which he engages to take them as a peculiar treasure, as most dear to him; and promises that they should be a 'kingdom of priests,' shall all have the rights and privileges of priests, be taught the will of God, participate in the sacrifices, and be near to me. Compare 1 Pet. ii. 5. 9; Rev. i. 6.—A holy nation. One people, united under the same laws, and are the words which thou shalt speak to the children of Israel.

And Moses went and called for the elders of 7 the people, and laid before them all these things which Jehovah had commanded him. And all the people answered with one accord, 8 and said, "All that Jehovah hath spoken, we will do." And Moses reported the words of the people to Jehovah.

Now Jehovah said to Moses, "Lo, I come 9 to thee in a thick cloud, that the people may hear when I speak with thee, and believe thee for ever." And Moses having told the words of Jehovah to the people; Jehovah then 10 said to Moses, "Go to the people, and sanctify them to day and to morrow, and let them wash their clothes, And be ready 11 against the third day; for on the third day, Jehovah will come down, in the sight of all the people, upon mount Sinai. And set thou a 12 boundary round about the mountain, and speak to the people, saying, "Take heed to yourselves, that ye go not up to the mountain gent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." He devoted the whole day to the service of the people; and doubtless God prompted the advice of Jethro, that the life of Moses might be prolonged for the benefit of the Church. He could not have sustained such incessant attention to business long. There are few that are willing to spend and be spent for the good of the church and the glory of God. Thanks to him that any such are found; and may he put more of the spirit of Moses on all his ministers and people.

holy, separated from all the idolatrous nations.

7. Before them. Nothing can be more improper than the common version. It seems to imply that Moses had written what God had said, and laid the words thus written before their face. The versions support my rendering.

8. And all the people, &c. They were consulted by their elders and leaders; and solemnly consented to the terms of the proposed Covenant—Moses returned, &c. He went with joy no doubt, to report to God the consent and agreement of the people.

9. In a thick cloud. Compare verse 18.—That the people may hear, &c. This was the strongest evidence of the divine mission of Moses, which the people could receive.

10. Sanctify them; that is, Moses was to command certain ablutions, and to separate the people for the solemn transaction.

12. Houbigant prefers the Sam. lection, and properly observes, that as the text now stands it implies that boundaries were fixed not round the mount only, but the whole camp of the Israelites, which is wholly opposed to the design for which the command was given.

or touch its borders. Whosoever toucheth the 13 mountain shall surely die. Let not an hand touch him, but let him surely be stoned, or shot through: Whether it be beast or man, he shall not live. When the trumpet hath ceased, they may come up to the mountain."

14 And Moses went down from the mountain to the people, and sanctified the people; and 15 they washed their clothes. And he said to the people, "Be ready against the third day. Approach not your wives."

16 And it was on the third day, in the morning, that there were thunders and lightnings, and a thick cloud upon the mount; and a sound as of a trumpet, exceedingly loud; so that all the 17 people that were in the camp, trembled. And Moses brought forth the people out of the camp to meet with God; and they stood at the 18 nether parts of the mountain. And mount Sinai was wholly on a smoke, because Jehovah had descended on it in fire; and the smoke of it ascended as the smoke of a furnace, and the whole mountain trembled exceedingly.
19 And when the sound as of a trumpet grew stronger and stronger, Moses spoke, and God answered him by a voice.

20 Thus Jehovah descended on mount Sinai, on the top of the mountain; and Jehovah called Moses to the top of the mountain; and 21 Moses went up. Jehovah then said to Moses,
"Go down, charge the people, lest they break through to gaze upon Jehovah, and many of them perish. And let the chiefs also, who come 22 near to Jehovah, sanctify themselves, lest Jehovah break forth upon them. And Moses 23 said to Jehovah, "The people cannot come up to mount Sinai; for thou didst charge us, saying,

"Set a boundary round about the mountain, and separate it." But Jehovah said to him, 24
"Away, go down; and come up again, thou;
and Aaron thy brother" with thee; but let not the chiefs of the people break through to come up to Jehovah, lest he break forth upon them." So Moses went down from the moun- 25
tain to the people, and spoke to them.

THEN God spoke all these words, saying, 1
"I am Jehovah thy God, who have brought 2 thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods 3 besides me.

"Thou shalt not make to thyself any carved 4
image, or any likeness of what is in the heavens above, or of what is on the earth beneath,
or of what is in the waters under the earth:
Thou shalt not bow thyself down to them; for 5
I, Jehovah thy God, am a jealous God; punishing the iniquity of fathers, upon the children unto the third and fourth generation, when they hate me; But showing mercy to a thou- 6

13. Hath ceased. So the Syr. and the Chald. and Sept. are agreeable to this sense. The common version is quite inconsistent with what is said in the former verse, and afterwards.

15. Approach not your wives. Kenuicott would render, 'approach not the fire;' meaning the fiery cloud, which covered the mountain. Compare Deut. v. 4, 5, 22—25. All the Versions agree with the text, and as matrimonial converse was sometimes prohibited, I see not any necessity for the alteration proposed. Moses gave notice of the descent of God, three days before the event, that the people might prepare for the solemn transaction, and that every appearance of collusion or imposture might be prevented.

19. By a voice; that is, vocally or in articulated words, which all the people heard or understood.

23. Chiefs. So I have rendered, as it is well known that the term (זקנים) denotes equally priests or princes. The 24 verse supports this sense, as we are sure that the chiefs or elders, must have been present with the people on this occasion. Aaron is allowed to go up with Moses, but the other Elders are at present forbid. These Elders might be called (זקנים) because like the Patriarchs, they were accustomed to offer sacrifices for their families, previous to the legal priesthood.

CHAP. XX. 1. Then God. It is manifest, the Law or Ten Commands, was audibly given by Jehovah from the mountain. These 'ten commands' are called the 'Decalogue,' or the 'ten words,' as Moses calls them, Deut. iv. 13, and 'His Covenant.' These laws have been divided into two Tables; the first containing our duty to God; the second, our duty to our neighbour.

3. Beside me. So the Greek translators render, and the design and connexion support this version. Jehovah had given the most decisive proofs, that he was the only true God, and therefore forbids any of the pretended Heathen gods to be associated with him.

4. Carved. There is evident reference in this command to the objects which the heathens worshipped; they had images of the stars, 'the things in heaven,' of land and water animals. This command is explained Deut. iv. 15—19; where any likeness of man or woman, beast, bird, reptile and fish are prohibited. Also no regard is to be paid to the host of heaven.

5. Punishing, &c. The crime mentioned is idolatry, and idolaters are the haters of Jehovah. Jealous of his own honour, and for the happiness of his people, he threatens idolaters with severe punishments; and for

God in vain; for Jehovah will not acquit him who taketh his name in vain.

- 8 "Remember the sabbath day, so as to keep it
9 holy. Six days thou mayest labour, and do
10 all thy work; But the seventh day is the sabbath of Jehovah thy God; ^aon it^a thou shalt not do any work; ^aneither^a thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maid-servant, ^anor thine ox, nor thine ass^a, nor any of thy cattle, nor even the stranger who is within thy gates. For in six days Jehovah made the heavens and the earth, and the sea, with all that is in them; but on the seventh day he rested: wherefore Jehovah blessed the sabbath day, and hallowed it.
- 12 "Honour thy father and thy mother; ^athat it may be well with thee, and ^athat thy days may be prolonged on the land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee.
- 13 "Thou shalt not commit murder.
- 14 "Thou shalt not commit adultery.
- 15 "Thou shalt not steal.
- 16 "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbour.
- 17 "Thou shalt not covet thy neighbour's wife, nor shalt thou covet thy neighbour's house, ^anor his field^a, nor his man-servant, nor his maid-servant, nor his ox, nor any thing that is thy neighbour's."
- 18 Now all the people^a heard the thunderings, and the sound as of a trumpet, and they saw the lightnings, and the mountain smoking. And all the people were afraid; and stood afar off. And they said to Moses, "^aLo! our God 19 hath showed us his great glory; and we have heard his voice from amidst the lightning. This day we have seen, that God may speak with man, and yet he may live. But now, why should we die? For, if we hear the voice of Jehovah, our God any longer, that awful lightning will consume us, and we shall die. For who, of all flesh, hath heard the voice of the living God, speaking from amidst the lightning, as we have done, and hath lived? Approach then, and hear all that Jehovah our God shall say; all that Jehovah our God shall say, speak thou to us; and we will hear and do it; but let not God speak with us lest we die^a." And Moses said to the people, "Fear, 20 not; for God is come to prove you, to the end that his fear may be upon you, that ye sin not." So 21 the people stood afar off; and Moses drew near to the thick darkness where God was.

^a Then Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "I have heard the voice of the words of this people which they have spoken to thee. All which they have spoken is proper. O that such an heart may be in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments continually, that it may be well with them, and with their children for ever! For I will raise up to them a Prophet, like thee, from among their

this offence what judgments fell on the Israelites.

7. In vain. Bishop Laws renders, 'Thou shalt not use the name of the Lord, thy God in a falsehood.' The sense is, 'Thou shalt not swear by it falsely, nor use it irreverently; thou shalt not trifle with it in worship nor common discourse.'

8-11. The text both here and Deuter. v. 14, is defective. The Sam. has preserved what is wanting to complete the sense. The same reason is now assigned for the observance of the sabbath, as is given Gen. ii. 2; so that it had been appointed from the beginning. Labour on the six days is as much commanded as rest on the sabbath. No work should be done on the sabbath which can be done before, or with propriety deferred till after. Works of necessity, kindness and mercy are excepted, or rather, they form a proper part of the duties of that day.

12. Honour, &c. This implies, 'affection for them, due submission to them, and a readiness to contribute, when necessary, to their support.' This is the first command to which God has annexed a promise, Eph. vi. 2; and the observance of it has been attended with the divine blessing.

13. Thou shalt not, &c. This not only prohibits actual murder, under whatever pretence, such as war, for extending territory, commerce, &c; sanguinary laws, making trifling faults, or a difference in religious opinion, capital; but all hatred and malice, which lead man to injure and kill one another.

14-17. Fidelity in married life; honesty, and a just regard to the rights and property of others, are in these precepts commanded. In the last verse I have followed the order of Deut. v. 18, as the Sept. yet retains it here. In the next verse I have adopted the reading of the Samaritan text. The Sam. contains here what we find Deut. xxvii. 2, &c, but which appears to have no connexion with the context, and for this reason I omit it. Geddes considers it as improperly inserted.

19. Lo, Jehovah, &c. This addition to the text, is absolutely necessary to justify what Moses asserts in rehearsing the law, Deut. v. 21-24; Moses there declares, that when the people had heard the voice of God speaking from the midst of fire, they said, 'Lo! we have seen Jehovah,' &c. We nowhere find in the printed text of Exodus any such speech. The Sam. only has here preserved it.

21. The same reasoning will support the Samaritan Text here. Compare Deuter. xviii. 15-22.

And if ye say in your hearts, "How shall ye know the word which Jehovah hath not spoken?" REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XIX & XX 1. We have here one of the most awful displays of the majesty of God, ever made to the world. The scene of it—an elevated mountain in the midst of a desert; the assembly—the whole congregation of Israel, surrounding the base of the mountain; the top of it covered with a thick, dense cloud, while loud and reiterated peals of thunder, and repeated flashes of vivid, blazing lightning, were heard and seen! No wonder that the mountain trembled exceedingly, and that the people were struck with consternation! No wonder, that Moses himself, familiar as he was with divine appearances, trembled at this awful sight; for who could stand undismayed, before this Holy One of Israel!

2. The solemn manner in which the Law was introduced, was designed to show, that to sinful men, it is the ministration of death; appearing rather to exclude, than to bring them nigh to God; and that they must seek access and acceptance by a better covenant. If the Law works wrath, and threatens destruction, the Gospel announces deliverance by Jesus Christ. "Ye," says the Apostle, comparing the Law and the Gospel, "are not come unto the mount that might not be touched, and that burned with fire; nor unto blackness, and darkness and tempest, and the sound of a trumpet, and the voice of words; which voice, they that heard, intreated that the word should not be spoken to them any more: (For they could not endure that which was commanded, 'and if so much as a beast touch the mountain, it shall be stoned, or thrust through with a dart.' And so terrible was the sight, that Moses said, 'I exceedingly fear and quake:') But ye are come unto mount Sion, and unto the city of the living God, the heavenly Jerusalem, and to an innumerable company of angels, to the general assembly and church of the first-born, which are written in heaven; and to God, the judge of all, and to the spirits of just men made perfect, and to Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, and to the blood of sprinkling, that speaketh better things than that of Abel."

An altar of earth shall ye make to me, and 24 shall sacrifice thereon your burnt-offerings, and your feast-offerings; 'whether' from your flocks or your herds. And in whatsoever place I record my name, 'thither' I will come to you and bless you. But if ye will make to me an 25 altar of stone, ye shall not build it of hewn stones; for if ye but lay your tool upon it, ye will pollute it. Nor shall ye go up by steps 26 to mine altar, lest on it your nakedness be discovered.

3. The Law given at Sinai, was holy, just and good; a perfect rule of moral obedience. Emanating from the fountain of goodness, justice, and truth; founded on the relation subsisting between God and men, and their mutual relation to each other, the Law cannot be abrogated; but must for ever remain obligatory; and failure in answering its demands, must always constitute the formal nature of sin. Jesus Christ did not come to destroy, or abrogate this Law, but to fulfil it, by a most exact conformity to its spirit and precepts: and the gracious design of our redemption by his blood is, that the Law may be again written on our hearts, in its leading principles of love to God and man, and that we may daily endeavour after more conformity to it. We cannot obtain life by the Law, because we have all transgressed it; but if, believing on Christ for life and salvation, we become, in this sense, dead to the Law, we are not dead to it as a perfect rule of duty. Its authority remains, and will ever remain.

25. This precept seems designed to prevent the idea, that a polished altar would render the offerings more acceptable.

2 shalt set before them. "When ye buy an Hebrew servant, six years he shall serve "you"; but in the seventh, he shall be at liberty to go out free. If he came in single, single shall he go out; if he were married, then his wife shall go out with him. But if his master have given to him a wife, and she have born to him sons or daughters; the wife and her children shall be her master's; and he shall go out single. But if the servant shall plainly say, "I love my master, and my wife, and my children; I will not go out free;" Then shall his master bring him to the judges; he shall also bring him to the door, or to the door post; and his master shall bore his ear through with an awl; and he shall serve him for ever.

7 "And if a man sell his daughter to be a maid-servant, she shall not go out as the men-servants go out. If she please not her master, so that he will not betroth her, then shall he let her be redeemed. He shall not have power to sell her to a foreign nation because he despiseth her. But if he have betrothed her to his son, he shall deal with her after the manner of daughters. If he take to himself, another beside her; her food, her raiment, and her marriage-due, shall he not diminish. And if he perform not these three to her, then shall she go out free without money.

12 "He that smiteth a man, so that he die, shall surely be put to death. But if he do it not with design, but God deliver him into his hand; then I will appoint you a place whither he shall flee. But when a man through arrogance and guilt slayeth his neighbour; even from mine altar ye shall take him, that he may be put to death.

CHAP. XXI. 2. *Sam v. v. 8. †Some who hath betrothed her.

CHAP. XXI. 6. Though Moses allowed a species of slavery, it was mild, compared with those of feudal times; it was only a longer time of service. The custom of boring the ear, Bochart has proved, prevailed in Syria and among the Arabs. It was designed to show, that such servant was attached to the house; but not in the same manner as the Villani were to the soil; for when the master died, such servant was free.

8. I have followed the Sam. and Sept. in the version given.

9, 10, &c. See Introduction Part I. Ch. 3. § 1 and 4, 8, 11, for the illustration of this law.

"He who smiteth his father, or his mother, 15 shall surely be put to death. And he that curseth his father, or his mother shall surely be put to death.

"Moreover, he who stealeth one of the children of Israel that he may sell him; and he be found with him, shall surely be put to death.

"And if men quarrel, and one strike another 18 with a stone, or with his fist, and he die not, but keep his bed; If he rise again, and walk abroad upon his staff, then shall he that struck him, be acquitted; only he shall pay for the loss of his time, and see him thoroughly healed.

"And if a man smite his man-servant, or his maid-servant with a rod, and he die under his hand; he shall surely be punished. But, if the servant continue a day or two, he shall not be punished; for he is purchased with his money.

"If men quarrel, and hurt a woman with 22 child, so that she miscarry, without other mischief; he shall surely pay such a fine, as the woman's husband shall lay upon him; and he shall pay it before the judges. And if mischief hath been done, then shall he give life for life, Eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, 24 foot for foot, Burning for burning, wound for 25 wound, bruise for bruise.

"And if a man strike the eye of his man-servant, or the eye of his maid-servant, so as to destroy it; he shall let him go free for the sake of his eye. And if he strike out his man-servant's tooth, or his maid-servant's tooth, he shall let him go free for the sake of his tooth.

"If an ox gore a man or woman, so that they 28 die; then the ox shall surely be stoned, and his flesh shall not be eaten; but the owner of the ox shall be acquitted. But if the ox were 29

22. Pay it before the Judges. The Sept. and Samaritan version render, "He shall pay with apologies or entreaties. If there be laid on him a sum of money, then he shall give for the ransom of his life, whatsoever is laid on him. Whether his ox have gored a son or a daughter, according to this ordinance shall it be done unto him. If the ox shall give a man-servant or a maid-servant, he shall give unto their master, thirty shekels of silver, and the ox shall be stoned.

33 "And if a man shall open a pit, or if a man shall dig a pit, and not cover it, so that an ox or an ass fall into it; The owner of the pit shall give a recompense in money to their owner; and the beast shall be his.

35 "And if one man's ox hurt another's, that he die; then they shall sell the living ox, and divide the price of it; and the dead ox also they shall divide. Or if it be known that the ox hath used to push in time past, and his owner hath not kept him in; he shall surely pay for ox; but the dead one shall be his own.

37 "If a man steal an ox, or a sheep, and kill it, or sell it; he shall restore five oxen for an ox, and four sheep for a sheep. If a thief be found breaking in, and one smite him, so that he die, he is not guilty of blood-shed. If the sun be risen upon him, he is then guilty of blood-shed; he shall surely make satisfaction. If he have nothing, then he shall be sold for his theft. If what he stole, be indeed found with him alive, whether it be ox, or ass, or sheep, he shall restore two for one.

CHAP. XXII. 2, 3. It is clearly the design of the law to guard the life of man. Hence if the sun were up, the thief might be seized, but not put to death by the individual who detected him, without recourse to the Judges. "If a fire break forth and catch among thorns, so that stacks, or standing corn, or a field, be consumed; he that kindled the fire shall surely make compensation.

"If a man deliver to his neighbour money, or utensils to keep, and they be stolen out of the man's house; if the thief be found, let him pay double. If the thief be not found, then the master of the house shall be brought to the judges, to see whether he have not put his hand on his neighbour's goods.

"And in every matter of trespass, whether it be concerning ox, ass, sheep, raiment, or any other lost thing, which one challengeth to be his; the cause of both parties shall come before the judges; and he, whom the judges shall condemn, shall pay double to his neighbour. If a man deliver to his neighbour to keep, an ass, or an ox, or a sheep, or any other beast, and it die, or be hurt, or driven away, no one seeing; Then shall an oath of Jehovah be given by the one to the other, that he hath not put his hand on his neighbour's goods; and the owner of it shall accept his oath, and he shall not make compensation. And if it be stolen from him, he shall make restitution unto the owner of it. If it have been torn in pieces, he shall bring a testimony of the tearing, but shall not make compensation.

"Ye shall not wrest judgment in a poor man's 6 cause. Keep yourselves far from a false matter; and slay not the innocent and the righteous, nor justify the wicked. Ye shall not 8 receive a bribe; for a bribe blindeth the eyes of the wise, and perverteth the decisions of the just. 8. Decisions of the Just. As this refers to judicial process, the term (דברים) cannot here mean simply words, but the decisions, which Just judges have made on similar causes. A bribe leads a man, by chicanery, to pervert these decisions, and to colour over injustice and oppression.

First ye shall keep the feast of unleavened bread; seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread, as I have commanded you, at the time appointed in the month Abib; (for in it you came out of Egypt); and none shall appear before me empty. And next, the feast of harvest, the first-fruits of your labours, of what you have sown in your fields. And lastly, the feast of in-gathering, at the end of the year, when you have gathered in from the fields, the fruits of your labours. Three times in the year all your males shall appear before Jehovah, your God; when I have cast out the nations from before you, and enlarged your borders".

For mine Angel shall go before you, and bring you to the land of the Canaanites and the Amorites, and the Hethites, and the Girgasites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites; whom I will cut off. rendered, 'Thou shalt not cook a kid while it is on its mother's milk;' and then the reason of the precept will be, lest the dam should be injured and her life endangered by the milk. Spencer maintains that this precept was opposed to the superstition of the Nations, who were accustomed 'to boil a kid in its mother's milk,' and then to sprinkle their fields and gardens in order to render them fruitful. Michaelis considers milk (חלב) as meaning butter; and the design of the Law was to encourage the culture of the olive. See Introduction, Part ii. Chap. 8. § 4.

20. My angel. Those who would exclude the Redeemer from any part in the deliverance of Israel, suppose Moses, or Joshua, or the pillar of cloud may be meant by angel here. On comparing Ch. xiv. 19; xxxii. 2, 14 with this, it appears that this angel was not the cloud, for he removed it; nor could it be either Moses or Joshua, as what is said cannot apply to them. Rosenmüller contends, that God thus denominates his superintending providence; but this seems as little satisfactory as the other opinions. The opinion, that by the Angel, the Messiah, the angel of the Covenant, the Messenger that should hereafter come to his temple, is intended, seems to me most probable, and best accords with what is attributed to him. God's name was in him, that is, he was invested with divine authority; 'for all power was given to him.' The Apostle explains, what is said Chap. xxxiii. 2, 14, 'My presence or face shall go with thee,' when he says, of our Lord, 'That he is the brightness of his father's glory, and the express image of his person.' Heb. i. 3. The many appearances to the Patriarchs, of an Angel, called Jehovah, establish this view of the passage.

28. Send hornets—A large kind of wasps. Were the Canaanites infested by some plague of this kind? Joshua xxiv. 12, applies this passage to the conquest of Sihon and Og, and other Amorite kings; but in the History of this conquest, Numb. xxi. 21, &c, we find no mention of it. Some therefore think, that the expression is figurative, denoting the various kinds of evils with which God would afflict them; which are called his terror just before. This seems to me the most probable sense of the place.

31. To the great river, &c. The Sept. here has preserved the full reading, and the boundaries specified, accord with other places. Gen. xv. 18; Numb. xxxiv. 3; Deut. xi. 24.

And I will set your boundaries from the Red sea, to the sea of the Philistines, and from the wilderness of Shur, to the "great" river "Euphrates"; for the inhabitants of all the land I will deliver into your hands; and ye shall drive them out from before you. Ye shall make no covenant with them, nor with their gods. They shall not dwell in your land, lest they cause you to sin against me; for if ye serve their gods, it will surely be a snare to you."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXI, XXII & XXIII. 1. The various civil Ordinances recorded in these Chapters, are founded not only in justice, but in kindness and humanity. Providence allots different circumstances to men; some are rich, others poor; some masters, others, servants and slaves. The design of several of these laws, is to guard the persons of the poor, by inculcating kindness on the part of their masters. If they are treated harshly, or unmercifully beaten, or maimed, the cruel master loses his right in them, and they become free. Thus in many instances, the law made, and combined man's duty with his temporal interests, so as to prevent, if possible, the commission of the crime; and this undoubtedly should be the design of every criminal code of Laws.

2. In the laws which regard actual injuries and trespasses, the punishments are just; and the evident tendency, good. If idleness, or extravagance, or covetousness, or malice, should lead a man to depravity and sinfulness had reached such a pitch, that it was a righteous procedure to cut them off.

CHAP. XXIV. 1. Come up again. From Ch. xix. 24. and xx. 21, Moses and Aaron were already on the mountain; and there Moses received the laws contained in Ch. xx. 22 to the end of the 23 Chapter. They were then to go down to state these laws to the people; and when the people had consented to them, and the solemn compact or covenant was ratified by the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifices, they were again to ascend with the sons of Aaron and seventy elders of Israel.

And he sent young men of the children of Israel, who offered burnt-offerings, and sacrificed feast-offerings of oxen to Jehovah. And Moses took one half of the blood, and put it in basins; and the other half of the blood, he sprinkled on the altar. And he took the book of the covenant, and read it in the hearing of the people; and they said, "All that Jehovah hath spoken, "we will hear-ken to and do." And Moses took the blood, and sprinkled it on the people, and said, "Behold the blood of the covenant, which Jehovah hath made with you concerning all these things."

injure, seize, or steal any part of another's property, the punishment of double restitution, or of personal slavery, must have operated strongly to prevent such offences. Let us be thankful for the benefit of good laws, to protect our persons and property; and let us be careful to observe them, acting on that great moral principle, of doing to others as we desire others to do to us. Favoured with statutes and ordinances so just and good, we ought to be holy to God, dedicated to his service and glory.

3. Let us learn to regard the reputation of others, and not keep up a false report. He that slandereth, and he who propagateth the slander, are alike criminal; and violate the law of that charity, which thinketh no evil, but which hopeth all things! Let us attentively observe all those public exercises of devotion, which God has appointed. When he blesses and gives us fruitful seasons, and makes our cup run over, how sinful must it be not to acknowledge his kindness! Though

4. I have followed the reading of the versions. Houbigant admits both readings, and would render, "And he made a monument of twelve stones, for the twelve tribes of Israel."

5. Moses appointed young men to slay the victims, and to offer the holocaust. This sacrifice belonged wholly to God. The Feast-offerings, were designed for the refreshment of the people, the fat parts only being

 10 And they saw a glorious appearance of the God of Israel; under whose feet there seemed to be a pavement of sapphire stone, like the body of the heavens for brightness.
 11 Yet against the nobles of Israel he stretched not forth his hand, though they saw the glorious appearance of God.
 12 When they had eaten and drunk, then Jehovah said to Moses, "Come thou up to me to the mountain, and there abide until I give to thee tables of stone with the law, and the commandments which I have written; that 13 thou mayest teach them to the people. And Moses arose, and his attendant Joshua; and Moses and Joshua" went up to the mount of 14 God. But he first said to the elders, "Tarry ye here for us until we return to you; and, behold, Aaron and Hur are with you. If any one have any matter of dispute, let him come to them. Moses now went up to the mountain, and a cloud covered the mountain. And the glory of Jehovah abode upon mount Sinai; and the cloud covered it six days, and the seventh day he called unto Moses out of the midst of the cloud. And the appearance of the glory of Jehovah was, in the eyes of the children of Israel, like devouring fire on the top of the mountain. Now Moses had entered the midst of the cloud, and gone up to the top of the mountain; and Moses was on the mountain forty days and forty nights.

the Feasts of the Jews are not obligatory on us, yet the reason of them still continues, and we are bound constantly and publicly to bless and honour God.

4. We see from what is said, that obedience is better than sacrifice; it is what God requires and the end of the commandment. When we hearken to, and obey the voice of God, then he will keep us in the way, and bring us to the place which he has prepared; will be our constant friend and guide, and become 'an enemy to our enemies.' Let us then fear God and keep his commandments. Let us be nobly singular, and 'not follow a multitude to evil.' Their sins will not excuse ours; nor will their torments lessen ours. Let us not then be influenced by their example, or moved by their reproaches, from our obedience to the divine will.

consumed on the altar.

10. Appearance of the God, &c. I have followed Onkelos and the Targums in adding the words in Italics, which are necessary to make this phrase consistent with others. Besides from Deut. iv. 15, it is certain they saw no personal similitude, or likeness of any thing in heaven or on earth; and though feet are mentioned, the term can only mean the extremity of the glorious vision, which reached to, or was the pavement of Sapphire itself. This was a bright blue colour. Compare verse 17.

12-13. Before they ascended they had killed the Feast-offerings; and from this it seems, they took some of the provisions and ate and drank, on Horeb, while the people celebrated the same feast in the camp in token of their friendship and covenant with God. Though these nobles, or distinguished Israelites, saw the glorious appearance of God, he did not slay them; according to their fears, and the opinion then entertained that no one could see the glory of God and live. Moses was now called up to the mountain; and according to one ms. of the Sept. Joshua his attendant went with him. He constituted Aaron and Hur his deputies till his return, which implies, that he was uncertain how long he might stay.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. 1. Here we see the condescension and kindness of God. Having delivered to the people the law of the Ten Commands, with an audible voice from the heavens, he gives them other laws for the government of the state and church; and offers to enter into solemn Covenant with them. The laws are proposed and the people are to give their consent. They do so, saying, "All that Jehovah hath said we will do!" This was their duty; and is equally ours, when ever we read, or hear the Holy Scriptures read.

2. In ratifying the Covenant, Moses performed the office of Mediator. He alone drew near to God and received his words; and as his servant proposed the terms of the covenant, and accepted the unbiassed consent of the people. In this transaction he was an eminent

14. Tarry ye here. This address denotes, that the people knew where the Elders were, and might apply to them, in case of any difference. As Moses continued for forty days, it appears that they soon returned to the camp, perhaps supposing him to be lost or consumed.

15. Some think Joshua, who was destined to be the successor of Moses, went with him into the cloud, and there abode, while Moses ascended to the very top of the mountain, where God conversed with him, and gave him the ordinances concerning the Tabernacle, &c, contained in the following Chapters. It is certain, that Joshua was either with him or not far from him, as he descended with him, Ch. xxxii. 17.

16, 17. Seventh day. It is not improbable that this might be the Sabbath. The appearance of God's glory, was naturally calculated to inspire reverence. To this the Apostle alludes, Heb. xii. 28, 29.

18. Forty days, &c. During this period, 'he neither ate nor drank.' Chap. xxxiv. 28; Deut. ix. 9. Elijah, the restorer of the law, and our Lord, the fulfiller of it, fasted the same period: 1 King. xix. 8; Math. iv. 2. In these cases the body must have been divinely supported.

type of Christ, who came from the bosom of the father to teach his will, and who alone has access to him, on behalf of mankind, as Moses had, on behalf of Israel.

3. If the law be viewed, unconnected with its sacrifices for the remission of sin, it is only a system of terror; but as connected with the shedding and sprinkling of blood, it is a system of grace, and forcibly represents the lamb of God, and the blessings of the Gospel. Moses took the blood of the victims, and sprinkled it on the altar and thou,' and the Sam. 'Make ye.' I have given the sense, whichever reading be adopted. The second person singular is most probably the genuine reading.

11. Shittim-wood. There is little doubt of its being a species of white thorn, or the spina Egyptica, which grows abundantly about Mount Sinai, 'the tree of all deserts from the northmost parts of Arabia to the extremity of Ethiopia.' Eben Ezra says, that it was a wood which grew about Mount Sinai. It is said to be exceedingly durable and very light, two properties which made it peculiarly fit for making the Ark, tables and boards of the Tabernacle.

17. A lid for a mercy seat. The Doway translators render after the Vulg. 'Propitiatory.' Purver an 'Atonement-covering,' and Ainsworth 'A covering-mercy-seat.' The common version follows Luther, Gnadenstuhl. In the Ark the tables of the law were to be placed; and this lid was to cover them. The blood of the expiatory sacrifices, offered on the great day of atonement, was to be sprinkled on this lid, to intimate that the transgressions of the law, over which it was put, were covered and pardoned. Hence it became a mercy-seat through the sprinkling of the blood of the sacrifices; and in reference to this our Lord is called the 'propitiatory,' Rom. iii. 25, sacrifice, being understood, denoting that by his blood a real atonement was made, and that through faith in his blood, God will

And thou shalt make staves of shittim wood, 13 and overlay them with gold. And thou shalt 14 put the staves into the staples along the sides of the ark, that by them the ark may be carried. The staves shall be in the staples of the ark; 15 they shall not be removed from it. And thou 16 shalt put into the ark the testimonies which I will give to thee. And thou shalt make a 17 lid for a mercy-seat of pure gold; two cubits and a half shall be its length, and a cubit and a half its breadth. Two cherubs shalt thou also 18 make; of solid gold shalt thou make them, at the two ends of the mercy-seat. And make 19 one cherub at the one end, and the other cherub at the other end; rising up from the mercy-seat, at its two ends, ^vshalt thou make the cherubs. So the cherubs shall stretch forth 20 their wings above, covering the mercy-seat with their wings; and their faces shall be turn-on the people, to show that by sacrifice God is propitiated and men justified and accepted. To this the Apostle refers, Heb. xii. 24; and unless our Lord had been sacrificed for us, God would not have been reconciled to us, nor we sanctified to him. Let us ever remember in how solemn a manner the better Covenant is confirmed and ratified; and let us cheerfully enter into the bonds of it, and expect the blessings of it. It is a covenant wisely ordered in all points and sure. Let it be all our desire.

forgive all our sins and transgressions.

18. Cherubs. Some would make the Cherubs emblems of the blessed trinity. From Ezekiel we learn, that they were compound figures, having four heads and one body. The animals of which they consisted, were the noblest of their kinds, the lion, the ox, the eagle, and man. Dr Priestley, supposed, that they might be intended to represent 'all nature;' God pervading it by his influence, and all orders of creatures being subject to his will and doing him homage. The most common opinion is, that they represent the angels, the attendants on God's throne and majesty. Compare Ps. xviii. 10; Isa. vi. 3, and Rev. iv. 8. From Ez. xli. 18-20 it appears those Cherubs engraved on wood, or wrought on the curtains had only two heads, that of the man and the lion. Might not these compound emblems denote, the intelligence, courage, diligence, and zeal, or activity of the holy angels? Man being the representative of the first, the lion of the second, the ox of the third, and the eagle of the fourth. Peter is not improbably supposed to allude to the position of the Cherubs, at each end of the mercy-seat, with their faces turned towards it, when he says, "into which things the angels desire to look." 1 Pet. i. 12.

22. And there I will meet, &c. After the Tabernacle was constructed it appears that Moses was privileged to enter into the Most Holy Place whenever it was necessary to consult God on any subject relating to the

ed one to another; towards the mercy seat shall 21 the faces of the cherubs be turned. And thou shalt put the mercy-seat upon the ark; and in the ark thou shalt put the testimonies which 22 I will give to thee. And there I will meet with thee; and from above the mercy-seat, from between the two cherubs, which are upon the ark of the testimony, I will speak with thee of all things which I will give thee in command to the children of Israel.

23 "Thou shalt also make a table of shittim wood, two cubits shall be its length, and a cubit its breadth, and a cubit and a half the height of 24 it. And thou shalt overlay it with pure gold, and make thereto a border of gold round about.
 25 Also a frame round about, a hand-breadth high, shalt thou make for it; and about its 26 frame thou shalt make a border of gold. And thou shalt make for it four staples of gold, and put the staples on its four feet which are at the 27 four corners of it. Beside the frame, let the staples be placed, for the staves which are to bear 28 the table. And thou shalt make the staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with gold, 29 that by them the table may be borne. And thou shalt make its plates, its incense-pots, and its large and small cups, in which drink-offerings are to be offered: of pure gold shalt 30 thou make them. And thou shalt place upon the table, presence-bread before me always.

31 "A Chandelier of pure gold thou shalt also make; of one solid mass shall the chandelier be made. Its shaft, and its branches, its cups, its knops, and its flowers, shall be of one piece.
 32 And six branches shall proceed from the sides of it; three branches of the chandelier from the one side, and three branches of the chandelier from the other side of it. Three cups, sha- 33

 ped like almonds, each with a knop and a flower, shall be on one branch; and three cups shaped like almonds on another branch, each with a knop and a flower; and so on the six branches which proceed from the chandelier.
 And on the shaft of the chandelier shall be four 34 cups shaped like almonds, with their knops and their flowers. And a knop and a flower under 35 the first pair; and a knop and a flower under the second pair; and a knop and a flower under the third pair of the six branches, that proceed from the chandelier. Their knops and their 36 branches shall be of one piece; all of it one solid work of pure gold. And thou shalt 37 make its seven lamps; and thou shalt place
 the lamps upon it, so that they may give light over against it. And its snuffers, and its snuff- 38 dishes, "shall thou make" of pure gold. Of 39 a talent of pure gold shalt thou make it, with all these utensils. And see that thou make 40 them according to the pattern, which was showed thee on the mountain.

"MOREOVER thou shalt make a tabernacle of 1
 ten curtains of twisted cotton; and cherubs of blue, and purple, and scarlet; fancy-work shalt thou make in them. The length of each curtain 2 shall be twenty-eight cubits, and the breadth of each curtain, four cubits; and each of the curtains shall be of the same measure. Five cur- 3 tains shall be joined one to another; and the other five curtains shall be joined one to another. And thou shalt make loops of blue on 4
 the edge of one curtain, on the outmost edge at the joining; and so also shalt thou make on the other outmost edge, that it may be joined to the next. Fifty loops shalt thou make on 5 people. There the divine glory dwelt, and there God manifested himself as the God of grace, and as a God in Covenant with his people.

26. Which are at the four corners. I have given the sense, without adhering to the order of the text. Jerom renders, 'Thou shalt put them into the four corners of the Table (per) through each foot.' Houbigant, 'Thou shalt put them into the four sides of its four feet.'

29. Incense pots. So the Seventy render, (θυσιας)—Its large and small cups, &c. I have followed the Greek, Vulg. Syr. &c. in this version. Rosenmuller has shown, that (קטרת וקטרת) signify as rendered. The former a large open Cup, the latter a small one, containing only what a person might drink at a draught. The Bishops Bible has, 'to pour out with all.'

30. Presence-bread. I have followed Purver and others, which is certainly preferable to show-bread.

31. Chandelier, of one solid mass. Purver, 'Of pure gold, and that solid.'

37. Over against it. Geddes renders, 'in one direction,' i. e. towards the sanctuary.

39. A talent of Gold. See Table of Coins and weights.

CHAP. XXVI. 7. Goats'-hair; that is, Stuff made of Goats' hair, the edge of one curtain, and fifty loops shalt thou make on the edge of another curtain, which is to be joined to the next; that by the 6 loops they may be joined one to another. And thou shalt make fifty clasps of gold, and join the curtains together with the clasps, so that it may be one tabernacle.

7 "Thou shalt also make curtains of goats' hair, to be a covering upon the tabernacle; eleven 8 curtains shalt thou make. The length of each curtain shall be thirty cubits, and the breadth of each curtain four cubits: and the eleven 9 curtains shall be all of the same measure. And thou shalt join five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves, and shalt double the sixth curtain in the front of the tabernacle.

10 And thou shalt make fifty loops on the edge of one curtain, on the outmost edge for joining; and fifty loops on the outmost edge of the other

11 curtain, that they may be joined. And thou shalt make fifty clasps of brass, and put the clasps into the loops, and so join the pieces to-

12 gether, that they may be one tent. And let what remaineth of the curtains of the tent, the half curtain that remaineth, hang over the back

13 side of the tabernacle. And the cubit on the one side, and the cubit on the other side, which it exceedeth in the length of the curtains of the tent, shall hang over the sides of the tabernacle;

14 on this side and on that side, to cover it. And thou shalt make a covering for the tent of rams' skins died red; and an upper covering of seal-skins.

15 "And thou shalt make boards for the taber- 16 nacle of shittim wood to stand upright. Ten cubits shall be the length of each board, and a cubit and a half shall be the breadth of 17 each board. Two tenons shall there be to each board, made similar to one another: thus shalt thou make all the boards of the tabernacle.

18 And the boards for the tabernacle thou shalt make; twenty boards for the side south- 19 ward. And under the twenty boards, thou shalt make forty silver bases; two bases under one board for its two tenons. And for the 20 other side of the tabernacle, for the north side, thou shalt make twenty boards, And 21 their forty bases of silver; two bases under one board, and two bases under another board. And for the end of the tabernacle westward thou 22 shalt make six boards. And two boards shalt 23 thou make for the angles of the tabernacle at the two ends. And they shall be joined toge- 24 ther beneath, and they shall be joined together at the top, to one staple: so shall they both of them be; they shall be for the two corners. Thus there shall be eight boards, and their 25 bases of silver, sixteen bases; two bases under one board, and two bases under another board.

"And thou shalt make bars of shittim wood; 26 five for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle, And five bars for the boards of the other side 27 of the tabernacle; and five bars for the boards of the back-end of the tabernacle, for the "side" westward. And the middle bar, at the midst 28 of the boards, shall reach from end to end. And thou shalt overlay the boards with gold, 29 and make their staples of gold, to take in the bars; and thou shalt overlay the bars with gold. Thus thou shalt rear up the tabernacle, according to the pattern which hath been shown to thee on the mount.

"And "thou shalt make" a veil of blue, and 31 purple, and scarlet, and twisted cotton; with fancy-work, with cherubs shalt thou make it. And 32 thou shalt hang it upon four pillars of shittim wood, overlaid with gold; their hooks shall be of gold, upon the four bases of silver.

"And thou shalt hang up a veil under the 33 clasps of the curtains, that thou mayest bring in thither within the veil, the ark of the testimony; and the veil shall separate for you the holy, from the most holy place. And thou shalt 34 put the mercy-seat upon the ark of the testimony in the most holy place. And thou shalt set 35 the table without the veil, and the chandelier

round about, and its horns; and thou shalt make for it a border of gold round about.
And two staples of gold shalt thou make for it, and place them under its border, at its two corners; for both its sides shalt thou make them, that they may take in the staves by 5 which it is to be carried. And thou shalt make the staves of shittim wood, and overlay them 6 with gold. And thou shalt put it before the veil which is by the ark of the testimony, before the mercy-seat which is over the testimony, 7 where I will meet with thee. And on it Aaron shall burn sweet incense. Every morning when he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense upon it.
8 And when Aaron lighteth the lamps at even,
he shall burn incense upon it; a perpetual incense before Jehovah throughout your gene-9 rations. Ye shall offer no profane incense, nor burnt-sacrifice, nor wheaten offering on it; nei-10 ther shall ye pour a drink-offering thereon. But Aaron, once in a year, shall make an atonement on its horns, with the blood of the sin-offering of atonement. Once in a year shall he make atonement upon it, throughout your generations.
Most holy shall it be to Jehovah.

door of the tent; of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and of twisted cotton, embroidered work. 37

And thou shalt make for the hanging five pillars and their hooks shall be of gold; and thou shalt cast for them five bases of brass.

five cubits long, and five cubits broad; the altar shall be a square; but its height shall be three cubits. And thou shalt make its horns 2 on its four corners; of one piece with itself shall its horns be; and thou shalt overlay it with brass. Thou shalt also make its pans to receive 3 its ashes, and its shovels, and its basons, and its forks and its censers; all its utensils shalt thou make of brass. And thou shalt make for 4 it a brazen grate of net-work; and for the network, at its four corners shalt thou make four brazen staples. And thou shalt put the grate 5 underneath the altar-band, so that the network may be at the middle of the altar. And thou 6 shalt make staves for the altar; staves of shittim wood, and overlay them with brass. And 7 the staves shall be put into the staples; and the staves shall be on the two sides of the altar, when it is carried, hollow; of boards 8 shalt thou make it. As it hath been shown to thee on the mountain, so shall thou make it.

"Thou shalt also make the court of the taber- 9 nacle. On the south or right-hand side, let there be hangings for the court of twisted cotton, a hundred cubits long for one side; And 10

CHAP. XXVII. 2. Make its horns. Michaelis imagined, that by horns here, were meant no more than the corners themselves of the altar; but this interpretation is incompatible with the context. They are evidently projections from the four corners; but whether upright, oblique, or curved, we learn not from the text. I am inclined, however, to think, with Spencer, Le Clerc, Witsius and others, that they were really horn-shaped, like those of the ara pacis of the Romans. Josephus expressly says so of the altar of his time.

5. The net work, &c. Michaelis supposes, that the altar was formed in the shape of a capital H, and that the lower half was of grate-work round about, but that the upper half was occasionally filled with earth, on which the victim was burned. I should rather think that the form of the altar was this: its four legs, or angle posts, were three cubits high, and as much more as served to make what are called its horns, which might be nothing but the heads of the posts tapered off to a point in the shape of a horn. These angle-posts were, at half-way down from the roots of the horns, surrounded with a frame or band one cubit and a half broad; at the lower rim of which was fixed the lattice-work, or grate on which the faggots of wood, and then the victims were laid.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXV, XXVI & XXVII. 1. Let the order so repeatedly given to Moses, 'to make all things according to the pattern shown him on the mount,' remind us, that in every thing which regards divine worship, we should invariably adhere to the revealed will of God. As this is the basis, so it is the authorised rule of worship; and human inventions must be alike displeasing to God, and detrimental to the real spirit of religion. God may, in such cases, say, "Who hath required these things at your hands?"

2. The Tabernacle was made of the most costly materials, to intimate the glory of him whose house it was; and to teach us, that we should consecrate some portion of the best of what he gives us to his honour and service. In doing this, we only return what is his own; yet he is pleased to accept it, and to promise to reward it. God does not command them to contribute to the erection of the Tabernacle; but what they give, is to be a free-will offering. He thus gave them an opportunity to manifest their love and gratitude. Let us never grudgingly give to the support or spread of religion, lest we lose our reward.

3. In the Tabernacle, the most Holy Place was separated by a veil, and the Holy Place by curtains from the outer Court, to intimate the darkness and imperfection of this dispensation. The Shekinah was invisible, the way to the Holiest made up to all, but to the High Priest once in the year. How superior the Christian dispensation. The veil is rent, and the most Holy Place laid open, so that 'beholding the glory of the Lord, we are changed into the same image.' We have access to God, 'by a new and living way, which Christ hath consecrated for us through the veil, that is to say his flesh.' Let us approach to the mercy-seat through faith in the blood of Jesus, and we shall find pardon and hereafter have an abundant entrance into the heavenly temple.

as Le Clerc has observed, should not be understood of place, but of dignity and rank. Moses, as the leader, and divinely commissioned lawgiver, occupied the chief dignity and honour; and Aaron and his sons, as enjoying the priesthood, are to be the second in rank.

 take gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet,

 and scarlet, and twisted cotton, with fancy-work.
 7 Its two shoulder-pieces shall be joined to it;
 8 at its two edges shall they be joined. And the fancy-work of the shoulder-pieces, which are on it, shall be of the same materials with itself, of gold, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, 9 and twisted cotton. And thou shalt take two onyx-stones, and engrave on them the names of the children of Israel, according to their 10 birth. Six of their names on one stone, and the remaining six names, on the other stone.
 11 After the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave on the two stones the names of the sons of Israel; thou shalt set them in ouches of gold.
 12 And thou shalt put the two stones upon the shoulder-pieces of the ephod. Stones of memorial shall they be for the children of Israel; for Aaron shall bear their names before Jehovah, upon his two shoulders for a memorial.
 13 "And thou shalt make clasps of pure gold";

and the two wreathen chains shalt thou fasten to the clasps.

 shalt thou make it. It shall be a square, doub- 16 led; a span its length, and a span its breadth.
 And thou shalt set in it settings of precious 17 stones, even four rows of stones: a row of a carnelion, a topaz, and an emerald shall be the first row. And the second row shall be a 18 ruby, a sapphire, and a diamond. And the 19
 third row a ligure, an agate, and an amethyst.
 And the fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and 20
 a jasper. In their settings, let them be set in gold. And the stones shall be for the names 21 of the sons of Israel; twelve according to their names. The engravings, like those of a signet, shall each have its name according to the twelve tribes.

"And thou shalt make for the breast-plate, 22
 two chains of equal length, of wreathen work of pure gold. And thou shalt make for the 23 breast-plate two clasps of gold, and two rings of gold, and the two rings thou shalt place at the two upper ends of the breast-plate. And 24 thou shalt put the two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings which are at the ends of the breast-plate. And the other two ends of the 25 two wreathen chains thou shalt put into the two clasps, and fasten them to the shoulder-pieces of the ephod opposite. Thou shalt also 26 make two rings of gold, and put them at the two lower ends of the breast-plate, on its inward borders, which are opposite the ephod.
 And two other rings of gold thou shalt make, 27

employed to express (כרמל) in the preceding verse. These shoulder-pieces Geddes conjectures were something like our epaulettes. Others render, curious girdle; but the word is never so rendered elsewhere, unless verses 27 and 28, and parallel places.

14. Of equal length. The common version, as the end, is doubtless improper. I have followed the Chald. and the Arab. as giving a sense most suitable. So Purver and Geddes render.

17-20. In the first of these verses I have followed Scheuzer. There is great uncertainty respecting the real sense of the words, by which the precious stones are denoted. The most probable are those given; and on the first Row were engraved, Reuben, Simeon, Levi; on the second, Judah, Issachar, Zebulon; on the third, Naphtali, Gad, Dan; and on the fourth, Asher, Joseph, Benjamin.

22. Geddes doubts of the genuineness of this verse; but if they are genuine he considers the Chains here mentioned as belonging to the breast-plate, met those belonging to the Ephod, (vers. 14) half-way.

26-28. It is difficult to render these verses intelligibly. I have attempted it, whether successfully or not others must judge.

30. See Introduction, Part iii. Chapter 3. Section 1.

35. That he may not die. This was to give notice to the people with-and put them at the lowest ends of the shoulder-pieces, opposite to where it joins the fancy-work of the Ephod. And they shall bind the breast-plate by its rings to the rings of the ephod, with a lace of blue, that it may be joined to the fancy-work of the ephod, and that the breast-plate may not be loosed from the ephod.

29 And Aaron shall bear the names of the sons of Israel on the breast-plate-of-judgment upon his heart, when he goeth into the holy place, for a memorial before Jehovah continually.

30 "Thou shalt also make the Urim and the Thummim", and shalt put the Urim and Thummim on the breast-plate-of-judgment; and they shall be upon Aaron's heart, when he goeth in before Jehovah. Thus shall Aaron bear the judgment of the children of Israel upon his heart, before Jehovah continually.

31 "And thou shalt make the robe of the ephod, all of blue. And there shall be a hole at the top, in the middle of it. And round about the hole of it, shall be a binding of woven work, like the hole of a coat of mail, that it be not rent.

33 And beneath, upon its hem thou shalt work pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, round about its hem; and, between them

34 bells of gold, round about: A bell of gold and a pomegranate, a bell of gold and a pomegranate, upon the hem of the robe, round about.

35 And it shall be upon Aaron, when he ministereth, that his sound may be heard when he goeth into the holy place before Jehovah, and when he cometh out; that he may not die.

36 "And thou shalt make a petal of pure gold, and engrave upon it, like the engravings of a signet, HOLY TO JEHOVAH. And thou shalt fasten it with a blue lace, that it may be upon the mitre; upon the front of the mitre it shall be. And it shall be upon Aaron's forehead, that Aaron may bear the iniquity which the children of Israel may commit, in the holy things which they shall hallow in all their holy gifts; and it shall be always upon his forehead, that they may be accepted before Jehovah.

"And thou shalt make of cotton the strait tunic, and the mitre of cotton; but the girdle thou shalt make of embroidered work.

"And for Aaron's sons thou shalt make tunics; and thou shalt make for them girdles; and turbans shalt thou make for them, for ornament and for beauty. And thou shalt put them upon Aaron thy brother, and his sons with him; and shalt anoint them, and consecrate them, and so hallow them, that they may minister to me in the priest's office. And make for them drawers of fine cotton, to cover their nakedness. From the loins even to the thighs they shall reach; And shall be on Aaron, and on his sons, when they come into the congregation-tabernacle, or when they come near to the altar to minister in the holy place; lest they commit iniquity, and die. This shall be a perpetual statute to him and his seed after him.

"Now this is the thing which thou shalt do for them to hallow them, to minister to me in the priest's office. Take one steer from the herd, and two rams, without blemish; And unleavened bread, unleavened cakes tempered with oil, and unleavened wafers anointed with oil; of wheaten flour shalt thou make them. And thou shalt put them into one basket, and bring them in the basket, with the steer and the two rams. And Aaron and his sons thou shalt bring to the door of the congregation-tabernacle; and thou shalt wash them out, when the high priest approached the most Holy Place, that they might join in prayer; and to intimate that he was not to approach rashly. He must have on the holy garments, or else Jehovah would punish him with death.

36. Petal. So the Sept. and it is certain that this plate of gold represented the form of some beautiful flower.—Holy to Jehovah. This was to remind Aaron of the duties of his office. He was to minister in holy things, before a holy God; to remove sin by making atonement, and to teach the people the way of holiness. In this he was the type of our great High Priest, who was, 'holy, harmless and undefiled.'

CHAP. XXIX. 1. From the herd. Literally, 'Son of the herd.' Some think that age is meant. This is implied in the term I have adopted, steer, meaning a young bullock.

5. I have followed the Sam. text, which is supported by Levit. viii.

7. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

6. Holy crown. Geddes renders, badge, the Daway translators,

5 with water, And then take the garments: and thou shalt clothe Aaron with the tunic and gird him with the girdle; then thou shalt clothe him with the robe, and over it thou shalt put the ephod and the breast-plate, which thou shalt fasten to the fancy-work of the ephod. And on his head thou shalt put the mitre; and put the holy crown upon the mitre. Then shalt thou take the anointing oil, and pour it upon his head, and anoint him. And thou shalt bring his sons, and clothe them with tunics; And thou shalt gird them with girdles, Aaron and his sons, and bind the turbans on them; and the priest's office shall be their's by a perpetual statute.

6 "And thus thou shalt consecrate Aaron and his sons. Thou shalt bring the steer before Jehovah, to the door of the congregation-tabernacle; and Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands on the head of the steer. And thou shalt kill the steer before Jehovah, at the door of the congregation-tabernacle. Thou shalt then take some of the blood of the steer, and put it on the horns of the altar with thy finger; and all the rest of the blood thou shalt pour out at the bottom of the altar. And thou shalt take all the fat that covereth the inward-parts, and the excrescence of the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat which is upon them, and burn them upon the altar. But the flesh of the steer, and its skin, and its dung, thou shalt burn in a fire without the camp: it is a sin-offering.

15 "Thou shalt also take one of the rams; and Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands upon the head of the ram. And thou shalt slay the ram, and thou shalt take its blood, and sprinkle round about upon the altar. And thou shalt cut the ram into pieces, and wash its inward-parts and its legs, and put them with its pieces, and its head. And thou shalt burn the whole ram upon the altar; it is a burnt-offering of a sweet savour, to Jehovah.

19 "And the other ram thou shalt take, and Aaron and his sons shall lay their hands upon the ram's head. Then shalt thou kill the ram, and take some of its blood, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of Aaron, and upon the tip of the right ear of his sons, and upon the thumb of their right hand, and upon the great toe of their right foot, and sprinkle the rest of the blood round about upon the altar. Also thou shalt take off from the ram the fat of the tail, and the fat that covereth the inward-parts, and the excrescence of the liver, and the two kidneys, and the fat which is upon them; and the right shoulder; (for this is a ram of consecration). And one loaf of bread, and one cake of oiled bread, and one wafer out of the basket of the unleavened bread which is before Jehovah: And thou shalt put all these into the hands of Aaron, and into the hands of his sons; and cause them to wave them for a wave-offering before Jehovah. Thou shalt then receive them from their hands, and burn them upon the altar together with the burnt-offering, for a sweet savour to Jehovah. And thou shalt take the breast of the ram of Aaron's consecration, and wave it for a wave-offering before Jehovah; and it shall be thy part. So thou shalt sanctify the breast, that hath been waved as a wave-offering, and the shoulder, that hath been heaved as a heave-offering, (of the ram by which Aaron, and his sons, are consecrated). And they shall be Aaron's and his sons' by a perpetual statute, from the children of Israel. For it is a heave-offering: and it shall be a

10, 13. In both these verses the Sam. has preserved the full and genuine readings. The greatest part of the learned suppose the term, which after Geddes I have rendered 'excrescence,' denotes the greater lobe of the liver, together with the gall-bladder.

20: The Jewish Doctors consider the command to put some of the blood on the 'tip of the ear,' to signify that they ought to listen to divine instructions; and the 'tips of the thumbs and great toes,' to denote, that they were to discharge every duty with readiness.

22. The fat of the tail. From the testimony of the most credible witnesses, it appears that the tail of the Syrian and Arabian sheep, sometimes weigh no less than twenty pounds. It is this which is meant, and not the rump.

26—28. The wave-breast and heave-shoulder, of all the Feast-sacrifices of the children of Israel, are made the portion of the Priests.

36. In this version I have followed Delgado, Heubigant has justly heave-offering from the children of Israel of the feast-sacrifices, even their heave-offering to Jehovah.

21 "And thou shalt take some of the anointing oil and some of the blood that is upon the altar, and sprinkle it upon Aaron, and upon his garments; and upon his sons, and upon the garments of his sons with him. Thus he shall be hallowed, and his garments; and his sons, and 29 his sons' garments with him". And the holy garments of Aaron shall be his sons after him; in them they shall be anointed, and consecrated. And seven days shall he of his sons wear them, who, being priest in his stead, shall go into the congregation-tabernacle to minister in the holy place.

31 "Thou shalt then take the ram of consecration, and boil its flesh in the holy place. And Aaron and his sons shall eat the flesh of the ram, and the bread that is in the basket. At the 33 door of the congregation-tabernacle, They shall eat them; because by them an atonement has been made, for the purpose of consecrating and sanctifying them: but no other 34 shall eat of them, because they are holy. And if aught of the flesh of the consecration, or of the bread, remain until the morning, then thou shalt burn that remainder with fire; it shall 35 not be eaten, because it is holy. And thus shalt thou do to Aaron, and to his sons, according to all that I have commanded thee;
36 seven days shalt thou consecrate them. And thou shalt offer every day a steer as a sin-offering for atonement; and thou shalt offer the sin-offering upon the altar; when thou hast made an atonement upon it, thou shalt then 37 anoint it, and make it holy. Seven days thou shalt make an atonement upon the altar, and hallow it; for it shall be an altar most holy; and whosoever toucheth the altar shall be holy.

38 "Now this is what thou shalt offer upon the altar as a perpetual offering"; two lambs of the first year day by day. The one lamb thou shalt offer in the morning; and the other lamb thou shalt offer in the evening. And with the first lamb thou shalt offer a tenth part of an Epha of flour mingled with a hin of fresh oil; and the fourth part of a hin of wine for a drink-offering. And the other lamb thou shalt offer in the evening, and with it the same wheaten-offering as in the morning, and the same drink-offering, for a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to Jehovah. This shall be a continual burnt-offering throughout your generations, at the door of the congregation-tabernacle, before Jehovah: where I will meet with thee and there speak to thee. And there I will meet with the children of Israel, and by my glory shall the place be sanctified. For I will sanctify the congregation-tabernacle, and the altar. I will sanctify also both Aaron and his sons, to minister to me in the priest's office.

"And I will dwell among the children of Israel, and will be their God. And they shall know that I am Jehovah their God, who have brought them out of the land of Egypt, that I may dwell among them: yea I am Jehovah their God.

"Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "When thou shalt take the sum of the children of Israel according to their number rolls; then they shall give, when numbered, every man of them, a ransom for his soul to Jehovah; that there may be no more plague among them, when they are numbered. This is what every one that passeth among those numbered shall give, half a shekel according to the shekel of the sanctuary; the shekel of the sanctuary being twenty gerahs; a half shekel from every one as an offering to Jehovah. Every one that passeth among those numbered, from twenty years old and upwards, shall give an offering to Jehovah. The rich shall not give more, the

and the poor shall not give less, than half a shekel, when ye give an offering to Jehovah for the ransom of your souls. And thou shalt take the ransom-money of the children of Israel, and shalt appoint it for the service of the congregation-tabernacle; that it may be a memorial for the children of Israel before Jehovah, for the ransom of your souls."

B. C. 1491. Further Instructions concerning the Tabernacle, the brass Laver, and the anointing Oil.

17 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
18 "Thou shalt also make a laver of brass, and its cover of brass, to wash in, and thou shalt put it between the congregation-tabernacle and the altar. And thou shalt put water
19 therein, That Aaron and his sons may thence 20 wash their hands and their feet. When they go into the congregation-tabernacle, or when they come near to the altar to minister, to offer the burnt-offering to Jehovah, they shall wash with water, that they die not;
21 For if they wash their hands and feet, they shall not die: and this shall be a perpetual statute for them, for Aaron and for his seed throughout their generations," Moreover Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, 22 "Take thou the following principal spices; of 23 pure myrrh five hundred parts, and of cinnamon half so much, two hundred and fifty parts, and of sweet calamus two hundred and fifty parts, And of cassia five hundred parts 24 (according to the shekel of the sanctuary,) and a hin of olive oil. And thou shalt make 25 of these a holy anointing oil, compounded according to the perfumer's art. A holy anointing oil it shall be. And with it thou 26 shalt anoint the congregation-tabernacle, and the ark of the testimony, And the ta- 27 ble and its utensils, and the chandelier and "all" its utensils, and the altar of incense, And the altar of burnt-offering with all its 28 utensils, and the laver and its cover. And thou 29 shalt hallow them, that they may be most holy; whosoever toucheth them shall be holy. And thou shalt anoint Aaron and his sons, 30 and consecrate them, that they may minister to me in the priest's office. And thou shalt 31 speak to the children of Israel, saying, 'A

CHAP. XXX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXVIII, XXIX, &c. 1. The dignity of the priesthood is taught us by the splendour of the dress in which those who discharged it were to be clothed, and especially in that of the High Priest. This was not appointed for mere pomp and show, but to intimate the glory of God before whom they ministered, and to inspire the people with the highest thoughts of him and of his service:

2. The breast-plate of the High Priest pointed out the design of his office. He bore on his heart the names of the children of Israel. For them he was to make atonement, to offer up his supplications, and uniformly to consult their interest. In this he was the representative of our great High Priest, who ever remembers his people, intercedes for them, and bestows on them the richest spiritual blessings.

3. The sacrifices of consecration proved, that men encompassed with infirmity were made High Priests under the Law.

18. Cover. I have followed De Dieu in this version, who derives this sense from the Arabic. Dathé hath adopted the same version, and observed, that the use for which this laver was formed, required that it should have a cover. For who does not perceive, that water exposed in an open vessel, under no cover, must soon be unfit for use? Whenever Moses mentions the laver, he mentions the cover (כס), but if it meant the foot, or stand, which must have been an inseparable part of it, there was no need to do this; but if it was a distinct and separate part, as the cover

They had need to offer sacrifices of atonement, first for themselves, and then for the sins of the people. Our High Priest was perfect, and by one offering accomplished all the great purposes of divine wisdom and mercy.

4. The ransom-money which every Israelite paid was to remind them, that life was forfeited by sin, that rich and poor were in the same condition, and must be redeemed by the same price. Doubtless there was in that as in other parts of this economy, a reference to the future redemption by Christ. Some think Peter alludes to this, when he asserts, of believers "ye know that ye were not redeemed with corruptible things, as silver and gold, from your vain conversation received by tradition from your fathers; But with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb without blemish and without spot: Who verily was fore-ordained before the foundation of the world, but was manifest in these last times for you."

must be, then we see the reason why it is mentioned distinctly.

21. The design and use of the brazen laver are sufficiently indicated in the narrative. Can it be doubted that this ablution represented purity? See Ps. xxvi. 6; Heb. x. 23, and John xiii. 10—12. It is manifest that the priests performed their sacred functions bare-foot. There is no mention of sandals in what is said of their dress; and from Exod. iii. 5, it appears, that to put off the sandals, was to express reverence and holy fear.

33. To a common use. I have given the sense. Literally, 'who put-holy anointing oil shall this be esteemed by 32 you" throughout your generations. Upon the flesh of no man, but the priests, shall it be poured; nor like to it shall ye make any other composition: it is holy, and holy shall it be 33 esteemed by you. Whosoever compoundeth any like it, or whosoever putteth any of it to a common use, shall even be cut off from his people.

34 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Take the following sweet spices; stacte, and bdellium
 and galbanum, pure frankincense, all sweet 35 spices; of each shall there be a like quantity. And thou shalt make it a perfume, compounded according to the art of the perfumer, tempered 36 together, pure and holy: And thou shalt beat some of it very small, and put of it before the testimony of the congregation-tabernacle, where I will meet with thee: it shall 37 be esteemed by you most holy. And as to perfume, ye shall not make any to yourselves
 according to it; for holy to Jehovah shall it 38 be esteemed by you. Whosoever shall make any like it, for smelling to, shall even be cut off from his people."

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
 2 "See I have called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah:
 3 And I have filled him with an excellent spirit for wisdom, and understanding, and knowledge, in every sort of workmanship;
 4 For devising fancy-works, and for working in 5 gold, and in silver, and in brass: And for engraving and setting of precious stones;
 and in forming timber to make every kind of 6 work. And behold I have given to him Ahoeth it upon a stranger,' that is, on any other than the High Priest, which is the same as to use it as a common thing.

CHAP. XXXI. 3. An excellent spirit. Literally, 'spirit of God,' but as natural genius is meant, I have preferred the sense to the idiom.
 God attributes to himself the gifts of nature, as well as the blessings of grace. See verse 6.

13—17. It has been observed, that after the order to make the Tabernacle, and all its furniture, God renews the command for the observation of the Sabbath, lest the Israelites should think, they might work at these on that day. They are prohibited to do this on pain of death; and of

Dan; and in the hearts of all who are wise,
 I have put wisdom, that they may make all that I have commanded thee; The congre- 7
 gation-tabernacle, and the ark of the testimony, and the mercy-seat which is upon it, and all the utensils of the tabernacle; The 8
 table and "all" its utensils, and the chandelier of pure gold with all its utensils; and the altar of incense, And the altar of burnt-of- 9
 fering with all their utensils; and the laver
 and its cover; And the cloths of service; and 10
 the holy garments for Aaron the priest; and the garments for his sons, to minister in the priest's office; And the anointing oil, and the 11 sweet incense for the holy place; according to all that I have commanded thee shall they do."

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, 12
 "Speak thou also to the children of Israel, say- 13
 ing, "Nevertheless my sabbath ye shall keep;
 for this is a token between me and you throughout your generations; that it may be known that I Jehovah am he who halloweth you. Ye there- 14 fore shall keep the sabbath; for holy shall it be esteemed by you; every one who profaneth it shall surely be put to death: for whosoever doeth any work on it, that person shall be cut off from among his people. Six 15 days work may be done; but on the seventh is the sabbath of rest, holy to Jehovah: whosoever doeth any work on the sabbath day, shall surely be put to death. Wherefore the 16 children of Israel shall keep the sabbath, by making it a day of rest throughout their generations. It is the token of a perpetual 17 covenant between me and the children of Israel. For in six days Jehovah made the heavens, and the earth, and on the seventh course, works of other kinds done by any of the Israelites would incur the like penalty.

18. Some explain this verse to mean only, that the Tables were engraved by the command of God; but compare Ch. xxiv. 12; xxxii. 15, 16, and Deut. v. 22, from which it is evident, that they were given to Moses engraved. Many have contended, that God by this taught men the art of Alphabetical Writing; but see Ch. xvii. 14, and let it be considered, that Moses must have had some method of teaching the people the song he made at the red sea, and how he could do this without writing in some way or other, it is not easy to devise. I conjecture the Art was antediluday he rested, and was refreshed."

18 And he gave to Moses, when he had made an end of conversing with him upon mount Sinai, the two tables of testimony; tables of stone; written with the finger of God.

CHAPTER XXXII.

B. C. 1491. The people request and Aaron makes the golden Calf.

1 BUT when the people saw that Moses delayed to come down from the mount, the people assembled about Aaron, and said to him, "Up, make us a god, who may go before us; for as for this Moses, the man that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, we know not what 2 is become of him." And Aaron said to them, "Take off the golden pendants, which are in the ears of your wives, of your sons, and of 3 your daughters, and bring them to me." And all the people took off the golden pendants which were in their ears, and brought them to 4 Aaron. And he received them from their hands; and he fashioned the form of it, and made a molten calf. And they said, "This is thy god, O Israel, who brought thee up out of the land of Egypt." And when Aaron saw this 5 he built an altar before it; and Aaron made proclamation, and said, "To morrow is a feast to Jehovah." And they rose up early on the 6 morrow, and offered burnt-offerings, and brought feast-offerings; and the people sat down to eat and to drink; and then rose up to play.

Jehovah now spoke to Moses, "saying", "Go, 7 get thee down; for corrupted are thy people, whom thou broughtest out of the land of Egypt. Soon have they turned aside from the way in 8 which I commanded them to walk. They have made to themselves a molten calf, and have worshipped it; and to it they have sacrificed, and said, 'This is thy god; O Israel, who brought thee up out of the land of Egypt.'"

Jehovah, moreover said to Moses, "I have 9 seen this people; and, behold! they are a stiff-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXX & XXXI. 1. Let the order to Aaron and his sons, to 'wash their feet and hands, lest they should die,' remind us, that we should not approach God in religious duties irreverently, and without due preparation. If it be deemed an insult to rush into the presence of an equal, and much more of one superior to ourselves, what must we think of the like conduct before a God of infinite majesty, glory and purity? We should reflect on the nature of the duty in which we are about to engage, and perform it with seriousness and devotion.

vian, and yet of divine origin.

CHAP. XXXII. 1. Delayed to come down. Moses had now been absent above a month, and the people without doubt thought he had perished, and that God had relinquished his design of giving them a body of laws. Thus as they hastily and rashly conceived, being deprived of their leader, they were left at liberty to form their own civil and religious system in the best manner they could. After the custom which then prevailed in Egypt, (Deut. xxix. 16, 17,) they first desire an image to be formed as the representative of the God of Israel, which might go before them. I have rendered in the singular, because it is the real sense of the text, and because it is certain, Aaron made but one Calf, and because Nehemiah so explains it—Ch. ix. 18. For these reasons I so render in the following verses.

2. Golden pendants. Such was the spirit of the people, that Aaron durst not venture openly to oppose them, but to check them proposed, that they would give up these ornaments for the purpose. As these were universally worn, and much esteemed, he perhaps thought that they would not have made the sacrifice; but they made no delay in complying, such was their zeal in this affair.

7. Sam. Sept. Vulg.

2. Let the powers of genius, and every other gift of nature, be ascribed to God and employed in his service. Some possess uncommon intellectual attainments; a strong understanding, a retentive memory, and explore almost every region of knowledge. Others have inventive minds, and find out what is useful or ornamental. What a perversion is it of such powers, when they are employed to insult the author of them, and by pride, vanity, and a sensual taste, made the hand-maids of every vice! Whatever our talents are, let it be our care to improve and devote them to God the author of all our enjoyments.

4. The form of it. I have followed the sense attributed to (חרט) by the Syr. and both Arabs; and with Rosenmüller. I consider this clause to refer to the wood of which the form was made, and the next to the fused gold which was spread over it. Compare Isa. xl. 19. Nor is it any objection to this opinion, that it is called the golden calf; for the Incense Altar, which we are sure was made of wood, (Ch. xxx. 1.) is often called the goldēn Altar, because covered with that metal: Chap. xxxix. 38; and xl. 5.

5. A feast to Jehovah. From this it appears, that the calf was to represent Jehovah, and that Aaron built the Altar and appointed the feast to honour him. It is not certain, why Aaron made this image, or idol in the form of a calf; but it was most probably, in imitation of what they had seen in Egypt; where Apis was worshipped under the form of an ox. Their sin consisted in this, that they made an image to represent Jehovah, contrary to the law he had given from mount Sinai; Ch. xx. 4. They worshipped him through an idolatrous medium. The plea for images, to aid devotion, set up by the corrupt Church of Rome, the Israelites might have made on behalf of the golden calf. They are guilty of the same species of idolatry.

10 necked people. Now therefore let me alone, that my wrath may burn against them, and of thee I will make a great nation." * For Jehovah was so wroth with Aaron, that he would have destroyed him; but Moses interceded
11 for Aaron". And Moses besought Jehovah his God, and said, "Why Jehovah doth thy wrath burn against thy people, whom thou hast brought out of the land of Egypt with great 12 power, and with a mighty hand? Why should the Egyptians speak and say, 'For mischief did he bring them out, to slay them among the mountains, and to consume them from the face of the earth'? Turn from thy fierce wrath, and repent concerning this evil
13 threatened to thy people. Remember Abraham, Isaac, and 'Jacob", thy servants, to whom thou sworest by thine own self, and saidst to them, 'I will multiply your seed as the stars of the heavens, and all this land that I have spoken of will I give to your seed, 14 and they shall inherit it for ever". And Jehovah repented concerning the evil which he thought to inflict on his people.
15 And Moses turned, and went down from the mount, and the two tables of the testimony were in his hand; the tables were written on both their sides; on the one side and on the other
16 were they written. And those tables were the work of God, and the writing engraved upon the tables, was the writing of God.

3. Let us learn to admire the foresight and wisdom of God in preparing fit instruments to accomplish all his designs. Important as the work of the Tabernacle was, Bezaleel and Aholiab and others, were ready to make all things according to the divine Patern. So will it ever be found as it respects all God's works of providence and grace.

6. Feast-offerings. For this offering, see Introduction, Part iii. Ch. 4. From ver. 17—19, it appears that the feast-offerings were attended with dancing and songs. This explains what is meant, by their sitting down to eat and drink, and their rising up to play, or to sport.

10. The clause now found in the Sam. only, is so apposite, and contains so just a representation of the demerit of Aaron, that there is reason to think it may have been dropped, perhaps designedly, out of the Hebrew text. This seems to be referred to Deut. xix. 20.

13. Jacob. I have preferred this reading because more usual, and I consider it as the true reading.

Now when Joshua heard the noise of the 17 people, as they shouted, he said to Moses, "There is a noise of war in the camp". But 18 he said, "It is not the shouting for victory; nor the howling for defeat, but mirthful songs do I hear".

But when he came nearer to the camp and 19 saw the calf, and the dancing, so hot was the anger of Moses that he threw the tables out of his hands, and broke them beneath the mountain. He then took the calf which they 20 had made, and burnt it in the fire, and ground it to powder, and strewed it upon the water, and made the children of Israel drink it. And 21 Moses said to Aaron, "What did this people to thee that thou hast brought so great a guilt upon them?" And Aaron said, "Let not the an- 22 ger of my lord be hot; thou knowest that the people are set on evil. For they said to me, 23 'Make us a god, who may go before us: for as for this Moses, the man that brought us out of the land of Egypt, we know not what is be- come of him.' And I said to them, 'Whosoe- 24 ver hath any golden pendants, take them off.' So they gave them to me; and I threw them into the fire, and there came out this calf."

And when Moses saw that the people were 25 in disorder; (for Aaron had put them in disorder, so that they might be smitten by their enemies): Then Moses stood in the gate of the 26 camp, and said, "Who is on Jehovah's side?"

of the blessed Spirit, by which we are instructed and set apart to the service of God. Without this unction, our souls will be barren. Happy the people of whom it can with truth be said, "Ye have an unction from the Holy One, and ye know all things. I have not written unto you because ye know not the truth, but because ye know it, and that no lie is of the truth." This holy anointing teacheth them all things.

20. If the view given on the 4 verse be admitted, Moses might easily burn the wood part, and the gold which covered it, might as easily be ground to powder, if first beat into thin lamina, something like gold leaf.

24. Aaron seems confused while giving this account; and only hints at the manner in which the calf was made, lest he should provoke Moses.

25. With many of the best Critics I adopt the Sam. reading, and attribute to (רצו), the sense to smite, which it has in Arabic. Aaron had put the people in disorder by making the calf, and appointing the feast to be kept in honour of it.

27. This order has been reflected on as cruel and unjust. In answer

Haste to me. And all the sons of Levi assembled about him. And he said to them, "Thus saith Jehovah, the God of Israel, 'Put every man his sword by his side; and pass and repass, from gate to gate through the camp; and slay every man his own brother, and every man his own companion, and every man his own neighbour.'" And the children of Levi did according to the word of Moses: and there fell of the people that day, about three thousand men. And Moses said, "To day ye have devoted yourselves to Jehovah, even every man against his own son, and against his own brother; that he may bestow this day a blessing upon you."

And on the morrow, Moses said to the people, "Ye have sinned a great sin: and now I will go up to Jehovah; perhaps I may make an atonement for your sin." And Moses returned to Jehovah, and said, "Oh, this people have sinned a great sin, and have made to themselves a god of gold. Yet now, if thou wilt forgive their sin, 'forgive'; and if not, blot me, I pray thee, out of the book which thou hast written." But Jehovah said to Moses, "Whosoever hath sinned against me, him will I blot out of my book. Therefore now go, lead the people to the place of which I have spoken to thee; for behold, mine Angel shall go before thee: yet on the day of my visitation I will visit on them their sin." And Jehovah sent plagues among the people, because of the calf, which they had caused Aaron to make.

B. C. 1491. Moses removes his tent from the camp; the people mourn.

JEHOVAH then said to Moses, "Depart, go I up hence, thou and the people whom thou hast brought out of the land of Egypt, into the land which I swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, saying, 'To your seed will I give it: into a land flowing with milk and honey.'" REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXII. 1. We may here see the inconstancy of men. Lately the whole people had heard the law delivered with an audible voice from Sinai, and had solemnly promised obedience. They had heard that law, "Thou shalt have no other gods beside me. Thou shalt not make for thyself any graven image, or the likeness, &c." To this law they had agreed; yet now say to Aaron, 'Make us a god!' Strange infatuation! They at once forgot the Law and the Covenant, ratified with them in a manner the most impressive. Lord what is man! Let us reflect how often we have imitated them, transgressing the most express laws and violating our covenant engagements.

2. We here learn the combined influence of timidity and example. Moses had left Aaron and Hur to occupy his place; but neither appears to have had spirit to oppose the people in their sinful design. Aaron perhaps thought that to do any thing would be vain; and by directing the people to consider the Calf as an emblem of Jehovah, he might suppose the sin was not so great.

be it observed, that the crime was capital; and it would be wrong to extend the order further than to the persons who persisted in the crime.

20. I have rendered in the preterite as the narrative requires. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

32. The Sam. and Sept. supply the Ellipsis of the text as given, which seems to me the most proper.—Blot me out of thy book. He refers to the rolls or registers in which the names of the whole people were written; and attributes to God a similar roll containing the names of all the living. To be blotted out of this book meant to die; so that Moses expresses his wish

CHAP. XXXIII. 2. *Sept. 1 ms.—ibid. *Sam. Sept.

He ought to have been zealous for the Lord of hosts; and had he displayed a suitable spirit, the result would have been different. Let us on no occasion be guilty of sinful compliances. We know not to what they may lead. Resist the tempter in whatever form he appears, and he will flee from you.

3. We here see the zeal of Moses, and the efficacy of prayer. He was ready to stand in the breach, and to turn away the displeasure of God. He pleaded God's promises to their fathers, and the honour of the divine character. 'What will the Egyptians say?' He was willing to die rather than they should perish. When he saw the Calf he broke the tables of the law, intimating that the great principle of them was now violated and the covenant broken! What shame and confusion covered Aaron; and what distresses fell on the people for this sin! Those that would not reform, fell by the sword of the Levites. Let us like Moses, feel for the dishonour done to God; plead with him on the behalf of a sinful people, and who knows but he may turn from his anger.

rather to die, than to see the destruction of Israel. In allusion to this, men of piety are said to have their names written in the book of life; that is, of spiritual life. See Phil. iv. 3; Rev. iii. 5, &c.

33—35. God declares he will act on the principle of justice. On the intercession of Moses he spared them, to show his mercy; but he so far punished, that none of that generation, except Joshua and Caleb, entered into the promised land.

CHAP. XXXIII. 1. I have transposed the words, marked from the 3d verse here, as being evidently connected with what precedes. So I will not go up among you; since ye are a stiffnecked people, lest I consume you on the way."

4 And when the people heard these evil tidings, they mourned; and no man put on him his
5 ornaments. For Jehovah had said to Moses, "Say to the children of Israel, 'Ye are a stiff-necked people; were I to go up among you, I should consume you.' Now, therefore, put off your ornaments from you, that I may know
6 what to do with you." And the children of Israel stripped themselves of their ornaments
7 by the mount Horeb. And Moses took his own tent and pitched it without the camp, afar off from the camp, and called it the Convention-tent; and so it was, that every one who sought Jehovah, went out to the convention-tent, which was without the camp.

8 Now, whenever Moses went out unto the convention-tent, all the people arose, and stood, every man at his tent door, and looked 9 after Moses, until he entered the tent. And when Moses entered the tent, the pillar of cloud descended, and stood at the door of the 10 tent, while Jehovah talked with Moses. And when all the people saw the pillar of cloud stand at the door of the tent, all the people arose and worshipped, each at the door of his 11 own tent. And Jehovah spoke to Moses face to face, as a man speaketh to his friend. And

5. By rendering in the future, our translators have given a sense contrary to the intention of Moses. That the Hebrew future frequently denotes the subjunctive mood, is too obvious to need proof; and it should be so rendered here.

6. Ornaments. This term denotes the more splendid parts of dress, and also armour. It was usual in deep mourning to put off these. Harmer has illustrated this passage, observing that the Greek Translators understood the Hebrew to refer to such a custom, and that Pitt relates, that such a custom now obtains among the pilgrims, when they come within about four days sail of Mecca. See Micah i. 8, and Harmer, vol. i. p. 172.

7, 8. Moses did not dwell for some time in the Camp; but only went there to deliver the divine commands. Michaelis thinks that this tent might be some sacred one, which the people had received from their ancestors; but as we never read of such a tent, and as the various lection directly applies it to Moses, I consider this opinion unfounded.

13. Thy designs. So the connexion requires that the term should be rendered; and so Rosenmuller and others understand the passage. 'To know one by name,' denotes to be a peculiar favourite, and admitted to he returned, at times, to the camp; but the young man, his attendant, Joshua, the son of Nun, departed not from the tent.

And Moses said to Jehovah, "See, thou 12 sayest unto me, 'Bring up this people'; but thou hast not made known to me whom thou wilt send with me. Yet thou hast said, 'I know thee by name, and thou hast also found favour in my sight'. Now therefore, I pray 13 thee, if I have found favour in thy sight, make known to me thy designs; and 'let me thereby know", that I have found favour in thy sight: for consider that this nation is thy people." And Jehovah said, "My presence shall 14 go with thee, and I will give thee rest." Then 15 said Moses to him, "If thy presence go not with us, bring us not up hence. For by what 16 now shall it be known, that I and thy people shall be distinguished, from every other people, upon the face of the earth"? And Jehovah 17 said to Moses, "This very thing of which thou hast spoken, I will do: for thou hast found favour in my sight, and I know thee by name." Moses then said, "Show me, I beseech thee, 18 thy glory". And he said, "I will make all 19 my goodness pass before thee, while I proclaim before thee the name of Jehovah; (for I favour whom I will favour, and show mercy to whom I will show mercy). But said he, "My 20 face thou canst not see; for no man can thus the most intimate intercourse. The metaphor is taken from kings, who do not know all their subjects, but only those who are about their persons, or are admitted to their confidence.

14. My presence. The Sept. 'I myself will go, &c.' and the following clause seems to support this sense. Some think that God intimates, that he would continue to make such manifestations of himself, as their necessities might require. The threatening contained in the 3d verse seems to be revoked.

18. Thy glory. Michaelis supposes that the term (כבוד) glory, here means heart, or self, as in the Arabic, and that the sense is, 'show me thyself, thy nature and essence.' So the Sept. render. Moses had seen the glory of Jehovah as manifest in the cloud, and as it appeared on Sinai; but he desires to see something more. Orton supposes there might be some peculiar glory within the cloud, which Moses wished to see.

19. All my goodness. Geddes has paraphrased the text well, 'All that is good for thee to see of me, I will make to pass before thee.'—For I favour, &c. Michaelis and Herder, render, 'Whom I favour, I greatly favour; and whom I love, I love indeed.' I agree in the opinion of Le Clerc, that the words denote rather the continuance than the degree of the divine favour.

21 see me and live." Again Jehovah said, "Behold, there is a place near to me, where thou shalt stand upon a rock; And it shall be, that while my glory passeth by, I will put thee in a clift of the rock, and will cover thee with mine hand while I pass. And I will remove mine hand, and thou shalt see my back; but my face cannot be seen."

CHAPTER XXXIV.

B. C. 1491. Moses returneth to Sinai; the Tables are renewed; God proclaims his name and gives him new instructions.

1 JEHOVAH now said to Moses, "Hew thou two tables of stone, like to the first; and I will write upon the tables the words which were on the 2 former tables, which thou brokest. And be ready in the morning, and come up in the morning to mount Sinai, and wait for me there, 3 on the top of the mountain. But let no one come up with thee, nor let any one be seen throughout all the mountain; nor let the flocks or herds feed about that mountain."
4 And "Moses" hewed two tables of stone, like to the former; and he arose up early in the morning, and went up to mount Sinai, as Jehovah had commanded him; and he took in his hand the two tables of stone. And Jehovah 5 descended in the cloud, and stood with him there; and he proclaimed the name of Jehovah. And Jehovah passed by before him, and pro- 6 claimed, "JEHOVAH, JEHOVAH, a God merciful and gracious, long-suffering, and abounding in goodness and truth; Keeping mercy to a 7 thousand generations; forgiving iniquity, transgression, and sin; and acquitting even him who is not innocent; visiting the iniquity of the fathers upon the children, and upon the children's children, to the third, or to the fourth generation only." And Moses made haste, and 8 bowed his head towards the earth, and worshipped; And he said, "If now I have found favour 9 in thy sight, O Jehovah, let my Lord, I pray, go up among us; although they be a stiffnecked people; and pardon our iniquities, and our sins, and take us for thine own inheritance." And he said, "Behold, I make a covenant, 10 that I will do such wonders before all thy people, as have not been done in all the earth, nor in any nation: and all the people among whom thou art, shall see how awful the work is,

CHAP. XXXIV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIII. 1. We see here the effects of sin. God animadverts on their transgressions, and refuses to go up among them. They are charged with obstinacy and rebellion; but happily humble themselves. They had rejoiced in their sin, and given their ornaments to make an idol; now they are stripped of their ornaments as a punishment. The pleasure of sin, either ends in the remorse of penitence, or in the inflictions of righteous judgments.

2. Let us like Moses, desire, that the divine presence may be with us. Moses doubtless referred to the visible presence of God in the cloud, which answered such important purposes to him and the people. This was their guide, their shade by day, and their light by night; their refuge in every time of trouble. Moses was so sensible of the difficulties he had to encounter, that unless this token of God's favour went up with him, he had rather still abide in the desert. God's spiritual presence is now with his people, and let them be solicitous to enjoy it. I understand by it a lively sense of religion upon the soul, promoted and maintained by the Spirit of God. To enjoy this will be the comfort and happiness of our days.

3. How highly was Moses honoured, by being admitted as a favorite to the greatest intimacy with God. Yet he still longed to see and know more of him. 'I beseech thee show me thy glory.' Whatever might be his precise meaning, he certainly desired such manifestations of God as might be necessary for himself and the people. God granted his request to a certain extent, and as far as it was suitable. We learn that his goodness is the glory of his nature. To show favour, to exercise mercy, is the most illustrious part of the divine character; and to imitate him in kindness, benevolence, and love, is the glory of his people.

20. My face, &c. See Note on verse 14. This intimates, that such is the glory of the divine nature, that no mortal could behold it.

23. My back. Rosenmuller conceives, that the term may refer to the more obscure part of the cloud; and face to the brightest. I cannot think, that the words refer to the cloud, but that their meaning is, that God would make such a discovery of himself as Moses was able to bear, and especially by making known his designs of mercy.

CHAP. XXXIV. 2. Wait for me. So the Geneva version; the others, 'stand for me, or with me.'

5. Stood with him. The cloud overshadowed him, while Jehovah made the following proclamation before him.

7. Acquitting even him, &c. For the Critical reasons of this version, the learned reader may consult the Note in my Hebrew Bible. The sense given to the latter clause depends on the pointing, and him, 'not innocent, denotes, 'one guilty.' The following clause, 'visiting the iniquities, &c' must be limited by what is said, Ch. xx. 7.

10. The promise here made was fulfilled; for in what nation did God ever work such wonders as among the Israelites?

11 which I, Jehovah, will do for their sake. Observe thou, what I, this day command thee.

“Behold, I drive out before you the Canaanites, and the Amorites, and the Hethites, and the Gergasites” and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, 12 and the Jebusites. Take heed that ye make not a covenant with the inhabitants of the land whither ye go; lest it become a snare among 13 you: But destroy ye their altars, break in pieces their statues, and cut down their groves. 14 For ye shall worship no other god; because Jehovah is a jealous God; Jealous is his Name. 15 Make then no covenant with the inhabitants of the land, lest while they go astray after their gods, and sacrifice to their gods; and they call 16 you, and ye eat of their sacrifice; Or lest ye take of their daughters for wives to your sons”, and their daughters go astray, after their gods, and cause your sons also to go astray after 17 them. MOLTEN gods ye shall not make to yourselves.

18 “The feast of unleavened bread ye shall keep. Seven days shall ye eat unleavened bread, as I commanded you, at the stated time of the month Abib: because in the month Abib, ye 19 came out from Egypt. Every male first-born child is mine; and every male-firstling among 20 your cattle, whether ox or sheep. But the firstling of an ass ye shall redeem with a lamb: or if ye redeem it not, ye shall break its neck. Every first-born male of your sons ye shall redeem; and let them not appear before me empty.

21 “Six days ye shall work, but on the seventh day shall ye rest: even in seed time and in harvest shall ye rest.

“And the feast of the seventh week, of the 22 first-fruits of wheat harvest, ye shall observe; and the feast of in-gathering, at the end of the year.

“Three times in the year shall all your male 23 children appear before Jehovah, the God of Israel. For I will cast out the nations before 24 you, and enlarge your borders; nor shall any desire your land, when ye go up to appear before Jehovah your God, three times in the year. Ye shall not offer the blood of my sacri- 25 fices with leaven; nor shall any part of the sacrifice of the feast of the pass-over be left until morning. The prime of the first-fruits of 26 your land shall ye bring to the house of Jehovah your God. Ye shall not cook a kid in the milk of its own mother.” And Jehovah 27 said to Moses, “Write thou these words; for according to the tenor of these words do I make a covenant with thee, and with Israel.” And 28 “Moses” was there with Jehovah, forty days and forty nights; he did neither eat bread nor drink water; and Jehovah wrote upon the tables the words of the covenant, the ten commandments.

Now, when Moses came down from mount 29 Sinai with the two tables of testimony in his hand, when he came down from the mountain, Moses knew not that the skin of his face shone from his having talked with God. And when Aaron 30 and all the children of Israel saw Moses, behold, the skin of his face shone; and they were afraid to approach him. But Moses called 31 to them; and Aaron and all the rulers of the congregation returned to him; and Moses talked with them. And afterward all the children 32 of Israel approached him; and he gave them

16. The reading of the Sept. is highly probable. Compare Deut. vii. 3. 22—26. See Chapter xxiii. 16—19.

24. We have here a remarkable promise, and as far as the Jewish history can be evidence, we have no instance of this promise having failed. Houbigant, instead of considering the words as implying, that no enemy should invade their land, while they were from home, gives this turn, ‘that no one should covet their land so long as they observed the command of going up to appear, &c.’

28. And he wrote. Houbigant conjectures, that the name Jehovah has been omitted, and that the words have this sense, ‘And Moses wrote the words of the Covenant, and Jehovah the ten commands.’ In this case

Jehovah gave to Moses the written Tables, and Moses wrote on the back side the laws contained from the 11—26 verses. Compare Ch. xxiii. 15.

33. The English and most modern versions render, as if Moses put on the veil upon his face while he spoke to the children of Israel; on the other hand, all the ancient versions are decidedly contrary, ‘that when he had done speaking to them, he put a veil on his face.’ From the text and the context it appears, that when Moses drew near to God, or delivered his oracles to the people, he was without the veil, but when he conversed with the people he was veiled. It has been thought that 2 Cor. iii. 13, supports the opposite opinion; but I conceive the allusion of the apostle is to the fact of Moses veiling his face, without any reference to the cir-

in command all that Jehovah had spoken with 33 him on mount Sinai; And when he had done speaking with them, he put a veil on his face.
34 But when Moses went in before Jehovah to speak with him, he took off the veil, until he had come out; and when he had come out until he had spoken to the children of Israel what-35 soever he had commanded him. And the children of Israel saw that the skin of Moses' face shone; and Moses put the veil upon his face again, until he went in to speak with Jehovah.

CHAPTER XXXV.

B. C. 1491. Moses addresseth the people; what they are to offer.

- 1 Moses now assembled the whole congregation of the children of Israel, and said to them,
"These are the things which Jehovah hath com-done, but the seventh day shall be to you a holy day, a sabbath of rest to Jehovah: whosoever doth work on it shall be put to death.

3 Ye shall not kindle a fire throughout your habitations on the sabbath day.
4 Again Moses spoke to the whole congregation of the children of Israel, saying, "This is the thing which Jehovah hath commanded, saying,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIV. 1. Let us remember and meditate on the delightful discovery God made of himself.
He is Jehovah, the only God, self-existent and omnipotent—Merciful and compassionate—Gracious, full of love and kindness—Merciful and compassionate—Gracious, full of love and kindness—Long-suffering, not soon irritated, but bearing with patience the evil conduct of men—Abounding in goodness and truth. He is essentially good and true, and like an ever-flowing fountain, dispensing favours and revealing truth to men—Pardoning, iniquity, transgression and sin; forgiving all manner of sin—Acquitting
even him not innocent, justifying the penitent, believing sinner—Visiting and punishing persevering and impenitent transgressors, and from whose justice no such offender can escape. How lovely a Being! How suitable an object for our love, trust, and confidence.

2. Let us learn to improve our communion with God. Moses, though admitted to see his glory, was not unmindful of Israel.
The discovery of God's perfections gave ardour to his prayer,
and stability to his confidence: and Jehovah accepted his prayer,
and answered his confidence. When most spiritual in our minds; and when the divine perfections possess and influence them, let us become more humble, and more fervent in prayer for ourselves and others.

3. Let us consider the comparative darkness of this dispensation, intimated by the veil of Moses. It had a glory, of which the brightness of Moses' face was an emblem; but it had no glory when compared with the superior glory of the Gospel. The splen-dour of Moses was lost, when he approached the infinitely superior splendour of God; so all the excellence of the law is lost in the transcendent excellence of the Gospel. 2 Cor. iii. 7, &c. The veil indicated the typical nature of the rites of the law, covering some spiritual meaning; which the Jews did not understand, not 'looking to the end of the commandment which was to be abolished;' and this veil also was emblematical of the darkness and unbelief of their minds. v. 14. The Gospel is a glorious dispensation of light, grace, and truth; and we all, with unveiled face,
"beholding as in a glass the glory of the Lord, are changed into the same image from glory to glory, even as by the Spirit of the Lord."

circumstance of time when he did it.

CHAP. XXXV. 3. Not kindle a fire. This precept has been regarded as a severe penance, the weather in Judea, during the winter months, being very cold. It is probable, that the precept only regards fires for the purpose of cookery, or business, when they might with propriety be avoided.

19 their cords; The cloths of service, for the service of the holy place; the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments of his sons, to minister in the priest's office."
 20 And the whole congregation of the children of Israel departed from the presence of Moses.
 21 And they came, (every one whose heart inclined him, and every one whose spirit was willing), and they brought Jehovah's offering, for the work of the congregation-tabernacle, and for all its service, and for the holy garments. And both men and women, whosoever were willing hearted, came and brought clasps, and pendants, and rings, "and collars" and lockets, all sorts of jewels of gold; for every one offered an offering of gold to Jehovah. And all who were possessed of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and cotton, and goats' hair, and rams' skins, dyed red, and seals' skins, brought them. All who would make an offering of silver and brass, brought Jehovah's offering; and all who were possessed of shittim wood for any work of the service, brought it.
 25 And every wise hearted woman spun with her hands, and brought of her spinning, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and cotton: And all those women, whose heart inclined them, spun skilfully goats' hair. And the rulers brought onyx stones, and other stones for setting in the ephod, and the breast-plate; And oil for giving light; and spices for the anointing oil, and for the sweet incense. The children of Israel brought a willing offering to Jehovah; every man and woman, whose heart inclined them to bring, for all manner of work, which Jehovah, by Moses, had commanded to be made.

CHAP. XXXV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXV. 1. What is offered for making the Tabernacle shows, that the Israelites brought much out of Egypt; and probably might obtain some part from the drowned Egyptians. They must, moreover, have followed various employments in the Camp, especially when they rested for some time. Let us always remember, to be usefully employed is the best way of spending our time, and the best preservative against temptation and vice.

. Whatever we possess should be devoted to the service of

And Moses said to the children of Israel; 30 "See, Jehovah hath called by name Bezaleel the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah; And he hath filled him with an excellent spirit of wisdom, for understanding, and knowledge, for every sort of workmanship; For devising fancy-works, for working in gold, 32 and in silver, and in brass; For engraving 33 stones for setting, and for carving of wood, for making every sort of fancy-work. And he 34 hath made him able to teach others, both him, and Aholiab, the son of Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan. Them hath he filled with wisdom of heart, to work every sort of work; whether of the mechanic or artist, or of the embroiderer, in blue, and in purple, and in scarlet, and in cotton; or of the weaver; even capable of executing and devising any sort of work.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

B. C. 1491. The people having given materials for constructing the tabernacle, Bezaleel and others make the tabernacle, and all its furniture and utensils; and the service-cloths, and holy garments.

And Bezaleel and Aholiab, and every wise 1 hearted man, in whom Jehovah put wisdom and understanding to know how to work, made every sort of work for the service of the sanctuary, according to all which Jehovah had commanded. For Moses called Bezaleel and 2 Aholiab, and every wise hearted man, in whose heart Jehovah had put wisdom, and every one whose heart inclined him, to come to do the work. And they received from Moses the whole 3 offering, which the children of Israel had brought for making the work, for the sanctuary.

22. *Sam. Sept.

God, when he requires it. The gold, and the silver, and our other possessions are originally his; and when the Lord needeth them, for the purpose of his glory, we ought cheerfully to give them up. God calls on the whole congregation, rich and poor, to do something in this work. Those that had nothing to give but their labour, gave that. Let us ever consider, that it is not only our duty, but our interest, to be employed in raising God's Tabernacle, and maintaining the worship of it.

And they brought yet unto him free offerings 4 every morning. And all the wise men, who wrought all the work of the sanctuary, came every man from his work which they made;
 5 And they spoke to Moses, saying, "The people bring much more than enough for doing the work, which Jehovah commanded to be 6 done." And Moses gave a charge, and caused it to be proclaimed throughout the camp, saying, "Let neither man nor woman do any more work for the offering of the sanctuary." So 7 the people were restrained from bringing. For the materials they had were sufficient, and more than sufficient, for the making of all the work.
 8 And all the wise hearted men, who wrought the work of the tabernacle, made ten curtains of twisted cotton; artificial work they made in them, even cherubs of blue, and purple, and 9 scarlet. The length of one curtain was twenty-eight cubits, and the breadth of one curtain four cubits; the curtains were all of the same 10 measure. And five curtains they joined, one to another: and the other five curtains they 11 joined, one to another. And they made loops of blue on the edge of one curtain, on the out-most edge at the joining; and so also they made on the outmost edge of another curtain, 12 that it might be joined to the next. Fifty loops made they on the edge of one curtain, and fifty loops made they on the edge of the other curtain, which was to be joined to the next. The 13 loops held one curtain to another. And they made fifty clasps of gold, and joined the curtains one to another with the clasps: so it became one tabernacle.
 14 And they made curtains of goats' hair for the tent over the tabernacle; eleven curtains 15 they made. The length of one curtain was thirty cubits, and the breadth of one curtain was four cubits: the eleven curtains were of the 16 same measure. And they joined five curtains by themselves, and six curtains by themselves.
 17 And they made fifty loops on the outmost edge of the curtain at the joining; and fifty loops made they on the edge of another curtain that it might be joined to the next. And 18 they made fifty clasps of brass to couple the tent together that it might be one. And they 19 made a covering for the tent of rams' skins, dyed red, and a covering of seals' skins.

And they made boards for the tabernacle 20 of shittim wood, to stand upright. The length 21 of each board was ten cubits, and the breadth of each board a cubit and a half. Each board 22
 had two tenons, made similar one to another:
 thus they made all the boards of the tabernacle. And they made the boards for the ta- 23
 bernacle; twenty boards for the south, or right hand side: And forty bases of silver they 24 made under the twenty boards; two bases under one board for its two tenons, and two bases under another board for its two tenons.
 And for the other side of the tabernacle, north- 25
 ward, they made twenty boards, And their 26
 forty bases of silver; two bases under one board, and two bases under another board.
 And for the end of the tabernacle, westward, 27
 they made six boards. And two boards made 28 they for the corners of the tabernacle at the two ends. And they were joined beneath, and 29 at the top, by one staple: they were both of them made alike, for the two corners. And 30
 there were eight boards; and their bases sixteen, bases of silver, under each board two bases.

And they made bars of shittim wood; five 31
 for the boards of the one side of the tabernacle; And five bars for the boards of the other 32 side of the tabernacle; and five bars for the boards of the tabernacle for the end or west side. And they made the middle bar to pass 33 along the boards from end to end. And they 34 overlaid the boards with gold, and made the staples of gold, to take in the bars; and they overlaid the bars with gold.

And they made a veil of twisted cotton, with 35 artificial work, with cherubs of blue, and purple, and scarlet. And they made for it four 36

the form and construction of the tabernacle, and all its utensils, that what follows to the conclusion of the 39 Chapter, contains only an account, how precisely those directions were followed, and how exactly all things were made, according to the pattern shown in the mount.

11. And they made, &c. I render in the plural here, because it appears that the parts of the Tabernacle noticed, were not made by Bezaleel pillars of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold; their hooks were also of gold; and for them they cast four bases of silver.

37 They also made a hanging for the door of the tabernacle, of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twisted cotton, embroidered; And its five pillars with their hooks; and the covering of their capitals and their fillets was gold: but their five bases were of brass.

1 AND Bezaleel made the ark of shittim wood; two cubits and a half was its length, and a cubit and a half its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height. And he overlaid it with pure gold, within and without; and made a border of gold round about it. And he cast for it four staples of gold, for its four corners; even two staples for the one side of it, and two staples for the other side of it. And he made staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold. And he put the staves into the staples, along the sides of the ark; that ^aby them the ark might be carried.

6 And he made the mercy-seat of pure gold: two cubits and a half its length, and one cubit and a half its breadth. And he made two cherubs of gold, from one solid piece made he them, at the two ends of the mercy-seat; One cherub at the one end, and another cherub at the other end: rising up from the mercy-seat made he the cherubs at its two ends. And the cherubs spreading out their wings above, covered with their wings the mercy-seat, with their faces one to another; even to the mercy-seat were the faces of the cherubs turned.

10 And he made the table of shittim wood; two cubits was its length, and a cubit its breadth, and a cubit and a half its height. And he overlaid it with pure gold, and made for it a border of gold round about. Also he made for it a frame of a hand breadth high round about; and made a border of gold for the frame round about. And he cast for it four staples of gold, and put the staples at the four corners, himself, but by others, yet perhaps under his direction. Bezaleel is expressly said to have made the ark and the other furniture of the Tabernacle, on its four feet. Near to the frame were the 14 staples, to take in the staves that were to carry the table. And he made the staves of 15 shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold, to carry the table. He also made of pure gold 16 the utensils which were for the table; its platters, its incense-cups; and its other cups in which drink-offerings were to be offered.

And he made the chandelier of pure gold: 17 of solid work made he the chandelier; its shaft and its branches, its cups, its knops, and its flowers, were of the same piece. And 18 six branches proceeded from the sides of it; three branches of the chandelier from one side of it, and three branches of the chandelier from the other side of it. Three cups, shaped like 19 almonds, were on one branch, each with a knop and a flower; and three cups, shaped like almonds on another branch, each with a knop and a flower; so on all the six branches proceeding from the chandelier. And 20 on the shaft of the chandelier, were four cups shaped like almonds, with their knops and their flowers: And ^aa knop and its flower on 21 the single branch, and a knop and its flowers under the first pair, and a knop and its flower under the second pair; and a knop and its flower under the third pair of the six branches proceeding from it. Their knops and 22 their branches were of the same piece: all of it, one work of pure gold. And he made 23 its seven lamps, and its snuffers, and its snuff-dishes, of pure gold. Of a talent of pure 24 gold made he it, and all its vessels.

He also made the incense-altar of shittim 25 wood; its length was a cubit, and its breadth a cubit; it was square; but two cubits was its height. Its horns were of the same piece with it. And he overlaid it with pure gold, its 26 roof, and its sides round about, and its horns: also he made unto it a border of gold round about. And he made for it two staples of 27 gold under its border, at its two corners on its two sides, to take in the staves by which it was 28 to be carried. And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with gold.

29 He also made the holy anointing oil, and the pure aromatic incense, according to the art of the perfumer.

1 AND he made the altar of burnt-offering of shittim wood; five cubits was its length, and five cubits its breadth; it was square; but three 2 cubits its height. And he made its horns at its four corners. Its horns were of the same piece 3 with itself; and he overlaid it with brass. And he made of brass all the utensils of the altar,
the ash-pans, and the shovels, and the basons,
and the forks, and the censers: all its vessels 4 made he of brass. And he made for the altar
a brazen grate of network, under the altar-band 5 about the middle of the altar. And he cast four staples for the four ends of the brazen grate, 6 to take in the staves. And he made the staves of shittim wood, and overlaid them with brass.
7 And he put the staves into the staples, at the sides of the altar, that by them it might be carried. Hollow, of boards, he made the altar.

8 And he made the laver of brass, and its cover of brass, under the inspection of the women who ministered at the door of the convention-tent.

9 And he made the court of the Tabernacle: on the southward or right hand side, were the hangings of the court, of twisted cotton, a 10 hundred cubits long. Their pillars were twenty, and their bases of brass twenty; but the hooks of the pillars and their fillets were of 11 silver. And for the north side, the hangings were a hundred cubits long; their pillars were twenty, and their bases of brass twenty; but the hooks of the pillars and their fillets were 12 of silver. And for the west side were hangings of fifty cubits long; their pillars ten, and their bases of brass ten; but the hooks of the pillars 13 and their fillets were of silver. And for the east or sun-rising side, were hangings fifty cubits long. The hangings of the one side of the 14 gate were fifteen cubits; their pillars three, and their bases of brass three. And for the 15 other side of the court gate, on this hand and on that hand, were hangings of fifteen cubits;

their pillars three, and their bases of brass three.
All the hangings of the court round about were 16 of twisted cotton. And the bases of the pillars 17 were of brass; but the hooks of the pillars and their fillets, of silver; and the overlayings of their capitals were of silver; and all the pillars of the court were filleted with silver. And the 18 hanging for the gate of the court, was of twisted cotton, embroidered with blue, and purple, and scarlet; and twenty cubits was the length, and the height was five cubits, answerable to the hangings of the court. And their pillars were 19 four, and their bases of brass four; but their hooks were of silver; and the overlaying of their capitals and their fillets were of silver.
And all the pins of the tabernacle, and of the 20
court round about, were of brass.

This is the sum of the parts of the tabernacle, 21 even of the tabernacle of testimony, which, by the command of Moses, was committed to the charge of the Levites, under the hand of Ithamar, son of Aaron the priest: For Bezaleel 22
the son of Uri, the son of Hur, of the tribe of Judah, made all that Jehovah commanded Moses. And with him was Aholiab, son of 23
Ahisamach, of the tribe of Dan, an engraver, and disigner, and embroiderer in blue, and in purple, and in scarlet, and cotton.

All the gold which was used for the work, 24 for the whole work of the sanctuary, even the gold of the offering, was twenty-nine talents, seven hundred and thirty shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary. And the silver 25 of those numbered of the congregation was a hundred talents, and one thousand seven hundred and seventy-five shekels, according to the women washed the feet of men, as a part of their occupation. See 1 Sam. xxy. 41; Luke vii. 44, and 1 Tim. v. 10. Some might attend for this purpose at the Convention-Tent of Moses, (Ch. xxxiii. 7—11,) where God was worshipped previously to the erection of the Tabernacle; and they might be consulted in respect to some things, as best knowing the uses for which it was made. Mathews and Luther render as I have done. To suppose the Laver made of the little brass mirrors of the women, who served at the Convention-Tent, is not probable, nor the sense of the term (במראת) which is every where else rendered sight, &c.

24—26. The sum of gold and silver raised and expended on the taber-

26 the shekel of the sanctuary. A bekah for every man, that is, half a shekel, according to the shekel of the sanctuary, for every one who was numbered, from twenty years old and upwards, being six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty men. And of the hundred talents of silver were cast the bases for the boards of the sanctuary, and the bases for the pillars of the veil; a hundred bases of the hundred talents, a talent for a base. And of the thousand seven hundred seventy and five shekels, were made hooks for the pillars, and the overlaying of their capitals, and their fillets. And the brass of the offering was seventy talents, and 29 two thousand and four hundred shekels. And with this were made the bases for the pillars of the congregation-tabernacle, and the brazen altar, with its brazen grate, and all the 31 utensils of the altar; And the bases of the pillars of the court round about; and the bases of the pillars of the court gate, and all the pins of the tabernacle, and all the pins of the court round about.

1 AND of the blue, and purple, and scarlet, they made garments of service, to minister in, in the sanctuary. They made also the holy garments for Aaron; as Jehovah had commanded 2 Moses. They made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twisted cotton. 3 And the gold they beat out, into thin plates, and cut it into wires, to work the fancy-work with the blue, and the purple, and the scarlet, 4 and the cotton. They made for it shoulder-pieces, to be joined to it; at its edges was the 5 joining. And the fancy-work of its shoulder-pieces, which were upon it, was of the same materials with itself; of gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twisted cotton; as Jehovah had commanded Moses.

6 And they set the onyx-stones in ouches of gold, on which were engraven, like the engravings of a signet, the names of the sons of Israel. And they put them on the shoulder- 7 pieces of the ephod, stones of memorial for the children of Israel; as Jehovah had commanded Moses.

And they made the breast-plate of fancy- 8 work, like the work of the ephod; of gold, and blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twisted cotton. Square, and double, they made the 9 breast-plate; its length a span, and its breadth a span. And they set in it four rows of stones. 10 The first row was of a cornelian, a topaz, and an emerald, And the second row, a 11 ruby, a sapphire, and a diamond. And the 12 third row, a figure, an agate, and an amethyst. And the fourth row, a beryl, an onyx, and a jas- 13 per. In their settings, they were set in ouches of gold. And the stones were twelve accord- 14 ing to the names of the sons of Israel; and their names were engraven, like the engravings of a signet, each with its name, according to the twelve tribes. And they made for the 15 breast-plate, two equal chains of wreathen work of pure gold. They made also two 16 clasps of gold, and two rings of gold; and they put the two rings at the two upper ends of the breast-plate. And they put the 17 two wreathen chains of gold in the two rings at the upper ends of the breast-plate. And the 18 other two ends of the two wreathen chains, they fastened to the two clasps, and put them to the shoulder-pieces of the ephod, opposite. And 19 they made two other rings of gold, and put them at the two lower ends of the breast-plate, upon its inward border, opposite the ephod. And they made two other rings of gold, and 20 put them on the two lowest ends of the shoulder-pieces, opposite to where it joins the fancy-work of the ephod. And the breast-plate they 21 bound by its rings to the rings of the ephod, with a lace of blue; that it might be joined to the fancy-work of the ephod, and that the breast-plate might not be loosed from the nacle, amounted to about 185000*l* of our money. Some after Prideaux making the Shekel worth 3*s*, make the total, above 200000. How splendid and magnificent must have been this small structure.

29. Seventy talents. This seems too small a quantity, and as some Copies of the Sept. read 170, it is probable some error has occurred.

CHAP. XL. 3. Cover the ark with the veil. This refers to the veil ephod; as Jehovah had commanded Moses.

*They also made the Urim and Thummim; as Jehovah had commanded Moses".

22 And they made the robe of the ephod, of 23 woven work, all of blue. And in the middle of the robe was a hole like the hole of a coat of mail; with a band round the hole, that 24 it might not be rent. And upon the hems of the robe, they wrought pomegranates of blue, and purple, and scarlet, and twisted cot-25 ton. And they made bells of pure gold, and put the bells between the pomegranates on the hem of the robe, round about between the 26 pomegranates; A "golden" bell and a pomegranate, round about the hem of the robe to minister in; as Jehovah had commanded Moses.

27 And for Aaron and his sons they made 28 tunics of cotton, woven work; And a mitre of cotton, and beautiful turbans of cotton and 29 certain drawers of twisted cotton; And a girdle of twisted cotton embroidered with blue, and purple, and scarlet; as Jehovah had commanded Moses.

30 They also made the petal, for the holy crown on which they wrote, like the writing engra-31 ven on a signet, HOLY TO JEHOVAH. And they tied to it a lace of blue, to fasten it on the front of the mitre; as Jehovah commanded Moses.

32 Thus was finished all the work of the tabernacle, the tent of the congregation. For the children of Israel did according to all that Jehovah had commanded Moses; so they did.

33 And they brought the tabernacle to Moses;
the tent, and all its utensils, its clasps, its boards, its bars, and its pillars, and its bases.

34 And the covering of rams' skins, dyed red,

and the covering of seals' skins; and the curtain-veil. The ark of the testimony, and its 35 staves; and the mercy-seat; The table, and 36
all its vessels; and the presence-bread; The 37 chandelier of pure gold with its lamps, with the lamps to be set in order on it, and all its utensils; and the oil for light; And the 38 golden altar; and the anointing oil; and the sweet incense; and the hanging for the door of the tabernacle; The brazen altar, and its 39
grate of brass, its staves, and all its utensils;
the laver and its cover; The hangings of the 40 court, its pillars, and its bases; and the hanging for the court gate, its cords, and its pins and all the other utensils for the service of the tabernacle, for the tent of the congregation. The cloths for the service in the 41 sanctuary; and the holy garments for Aaron the priest, and the garments for his sons, to minister in the priest's office. According to 42 all which Jehovah had commanded Moses, so the children of Israel made the whole work.
And when Moses inspected the whole work, 43 behold, they had done all as Jehovah had commanded; even so had they done it, and Moses blessed them.

CHAPTER XL.

B. C. 1491. Erection of the Tabernacle.

Jehovah then spoke to Moses, saying, 1
"On the first day of the first month shalt thou 2 set up the tabernacle, the tent of the congregation. And thou shalt place in it the 3 ark of the testimony, and cover the ark with the veil. And thou shalt bring in the table, 4 and arrange on it what is to be arranged;
and thou shalt bring in the chandelier, and put its lamps on it. And thou shalt set the 5

dently hope for his acceptance of our service.

2. Let the splendour and magnificence of the Tabernacle, remind us of the glory of him, who condescended to inhabit it. He was king in Israel; and it was proper that he should have a suitable palace, that his subjects might entertain the highest sentiment of his majesty.
It was designed to be an emblem of Heaven, his palace above; and it was proper that the emblem should bear some likeness to the reality.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XXXVI, XXXVII, XXXVIII, & XXXIX.

1. Let us learn from this minute description of the Tabernacle and its furniture, the care of Moses, that every thing should be made according to the pattern shown him. He has given us in the 25—30 Chapters, what God ordered, and in these the exact fulfilment thereof. Thus should we be careful to follow, in the most minute particulars, the revealed will of God; and especially in the mode of serving him. For all that we do, we should have his warrant; and then we may confialtar of gold for the incense before the ark of the testimony; and put up the hanging for 6 the door of the tabernacle. And thou shalt set the altar of burnt-offering before the door of the tabernacle, the tent of the congregation.

 7 And thou shalt set the laver between the tent of the congregation and the altar, and 8 shalt put water therein. And thou shalt set up the court round about; and put up the 9 hanging of the court-gate. And thou shalt take the anointing oil, and anoint the tabernacle, with all that is in it; and so thou shalt hallow it, and all its utensils, that it may 10 be holy. And thou shalt anoint the altar of burnt-offering, and all its utensils, and so shalt thou hallow the altar, that the altar may be 11 most holy. And thou shalt anoint the laver and its cover; and so thou shalt hallow it.
 12 "Thou shalt then bring Aaron and his sons to the door of the congregation-tabernacle, and 13 wash them with water. And thou shalt clothe Aaron with the holy garments, and anoint him and hallow him; that he may minister to me
 14 in the priest's office. Thou shalt also bring 15 his sons, and clothe them with tunics. And thou shalt anoint them, as thou didst anoint their father, that they may minister to me in the priest's office; for their anointing shall be a token of a perpetual priesthood, throughout 16 their generations." Thus did Moses; according to all which Jehovah commanded him, so did he.
 17 And it was in the first month, in the second year, 'from their departure from Egypt', on the first day of the month, that the tabernacle
 18 was set up. And Moses set up the tabernacle, and fastened its bases, and placed its boards, and put in its bars, and reared up its pillars.
 19 And he spread abroad the tent-curtains; over the tabernacle he spread abroad the tent-curtains; and over these he put the covering of the tent; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And he took and put the testimony-tables 20 into the ark; and placed the staves in the staples of the ark, and put the mercy-seat upon the ark. And he brought the ark in- 21 to the tabernacle; and put up the curtain-veil, and covered the ark of the testimony; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And he put the table in the tent of the 22 congregation, upon the side of the tabernacle northward, without the veil. And he set the 23 bread in order upon it before Jehovah; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And he put the chandelier in the tent of 24 the congregation, over against the table, on the side of the tabernacle southward. And 25 he lighted the lamps before Jehovah; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And he put the golden altar in the tent 26 of the congregation before the veil. And he 27 burnt sweet incense thereon; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And he put up the hanging at the door of 28 the tabernacle. And he put the altar of burnt 29 offering by the door of the tabernacle, of the tent of the congregation, that he might offer upon it the burnt-offering and the wheaten-offering; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And he set the laver between the tent of 30 the congregation and the altar, and put water therein, to wash with; That Moses and Aaron 31 and his sons might wash their hands and their feet. When they went into the tent of the 32 congregation, and when they came near to the altar, they washed; as Jehovah had commanded Moses. And he reared up the court round 33 about the tabernacle and the altar, and put up the curtain of the court-gate.

So Moses finished the work; And a cloud 34 covered the tent of the congregation, and the glory of Jehovah filled the tabernacle. And 35 which separated the most holy place, or the oracle, from the sanctuary. Hence the veil was not over the ark, but before it, and covered it from the sight of the priests officiating in the sanctuary.

15. Shall be a token, &c. I have given the sense. Literally, 'Their anointing shall be to them a perpetual priesthood.' By this ceremony they shall be separated to discharge the functions of the priesthood.

19. As Jehovah commanded him. In the text here, and in the following verses, it is, 'as Jehovah commanded Moses;' but the noun is often used for the pronoun in the Hebrew Scriptures, and in such a construction as this, the latter ought to be used.

Moses was not able to enter into the tent of the congregation, because the cloud abode on it, and the glory of Jehovah, filled the tabernacle.

36 Now when the cloud moved from over the tabernacle, the children of Israel went onward in all their journeys; But when the cloud 37 moved not, they journeyed not until the day that it moved again. For the cloud of Jehovah was upon the tabernacle by day, and became as a blaze of fire by night, in the sight of all the-house of Israel, throughout all their journeys.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XL. 1. Let us reflect on the diligence and zeal of the Israelites, in making this costly and magnificent Tabernacle. As it was completed by the end of the first year from their departure from Egypt, they could not have been more than six months in making ready all its materials. Diligence in all our occupations is truly commendable, and peculiarly so in the service of God. The Christians motto should be, 'diligent in business, fervent in spirit, serving the Lord.'

2. God honoured the Tabernacle with his presence. It was made by his direction, and for his glory; and when erected, the cloud descended and covered the whole Tent, and some peculiar manifestation filled the sanctuary, so that Moses could not enter in. This was most probably some effulgence, or light, which was insufferable to the sight. When Solomon dedicated the Temple, the same occurred. 1. Kings viii. 10, 11. This constituted the sanctity and the glory of the Tabernacle; and for this reason, the people were to offer there their sacrifices, and perform their religious services.

3. Let us by this Tabernacle, be reminded of that in which God dwelt, for the glorious purpose of saving us. "For the word became flesh and dwelt, or tabernacled among us, and we beheld his glory, as of the &c." John i. 14. In the person of our Lord, the human nature was the Tabernacle, in which deity dwelt, and from which were made the most glorious manifestations of grace and truth. "In him dwelt all the fulness of Deity, bodily or substantially." Let us also be reminded, that this was a representation of our own bodies, which, like it, will be taken down, but raised again and made perfect and glorious.

4. Let the Altar, the sacrifices, the High Priest, and the whole service, lead our thoughts to him, whom they all prefigured, and in whom their design was completed. He is the great High Priest of our profession, his human nature was the sacrifice, his divinity, the Altar, which gave infinite worth to it; and having offered himself a victim for sin, he entered into the most Holy Place above, and ever lives to make intercession for us. He is therefore a minister of the Sanctuary, and of the true Tabernacle which the Lord pitched, and not man. He is not entered into the holy places made with hands, the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. Having such a High Priest, who has offered such a sacrifice, and who is ever pleading in the heavenly sanctuary, let us come boldly to a throne of grace, not doubting but we shall obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need. Let us rejoice that the way to this most Holy Place is now open; that every believer shall be admitted to share in its felicity and glory.

LEVITICUS.

INTRODUCTION.

THE Name of the third Book of Moses is also derived from the Septuagint; and the Book is thus called, because it chiefly relates to the Levites and their services, in and concerning the Tabernacle. To one family of Levi, the priesthood was given; and the other families, called the tribe of Levi, were appointed to attend the priests, and discharge various and important offices in the Jewish Church and State. See Introduction, Part i and ii.

After the erection of the Tabernacle, God gave to Moses the laws and ordinances contained in this book. They relate to the sacrifices, and solemn festivals; the burnt-offering, sin and guilt-offerings, the feast, wheaten and drink offerings; the festivals of the Pass-over, Pentecost, and Booths; beside many particular laws and ceremonies. The reason and nature of these laws, and their typical reference, are given in the Introduction, above referred to. The transactions here recorded are few, and probably did not occupy much time.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1491. Laws concerning the burnt-offering, from the herds or flocks; the wheaten and drink-offerings.

- 1 And Jehovah called to Moses, and spoke to Moses from the congregation-tabernacle,
- 2 saying, "Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them, "If any among you will bring an offering to Jehovah from among the cattle; from the herd or from the flock ye shall bring your offerings.
- 3 If his oblation be a burnt-offering from the herd, let him offer a male without blemish; at the door of the congregation-tabernacle shall he offer it, that he may be accepted before
- 4 Jehovah. And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the victim, that it may be accepted to
- 5 make atonement for him. And one shall kill the steer before Jehovah; and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall bring the blood, and sprinkle the blood round about upon the altar which is near the door of the congregation-tabernacle. And one shall slay the victim, and cut it 6 up into parts. And the sons of Aaron, the 7 priest, shall put fire upon the altar, and arrange the wood upon the fire. And the priests, 8 Aaron's sons, shall arrange the parts, the head, and the fat, upon the wood which is on the fire upon the altar; But its intestines and its legs 9 shall be washed in water; and a priest shall burn the whole on the altar: it is a burnt-offering, of a sweet savour to Jehovah.

And if his offering "to Jehovah" be from 10 the flocks, whether of the sheep, or of the goats, let him offer a male without blemish; "at the door of the congregation-tabernacle shall he offer it". And "he shall lay his hand upon 11 its head", and one shall kill it on the side of the altar northward before Jehovah; and the priests, Aaron's sons, shall sprinkle its blood round about upon the altar. And it shall be 12

CHAPTER I. 2. From the herd or the flock. See Introduction, Part iii. Chap. 4. § 3. The Heathens offered horses to the Sun, wolves to Mars, asses to Priapus, swine to Ceres, and dogs to Hecate. God allowed no such victims to be offered to him.

3. Without blemish. Intimating that God ought to be served with the best of what we possess, and typical of him who was harmless, holy, undefiled, and separate from sinners.

4. Lay his hand, &c. Thereby devoting it to God, and transferring,

as it were, his own guilt upon the victim.

5. One shall kill, &c. It is not certain, whether the offerer, a priest or a Levite slaughtered the victim. It is however most probable, that this was most usually done by a Levite. I have thus rendered to preserve the ambiguity of the text.—And the blood, &c. By the blood, atonement was made; for the blood was the life of the beast, and it was always understood, that life went to redeem life.

cut up into parts with its head and its fat; and the priest shall arrange them on the wood which is on the fire upon the altar. But the intestines and the legs he shall wash with water; and the priest shall bring the whole of it, and burn it upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to Jehovah.

14 And if the burnt-offering oblation to Jehovah, be of the bird-kind, let him bring his offering 15 either of turtle doves, or of pigeons. And the priest shall bring it to the altar, and wring off its head, and burn it on the altar; and its blood shall he squeeze out at the bottom 16 of the altar. And he shall pluck out its crop with its contents, and cast it by the altar, on the east side, in the place where the ashes are 17 laid. And he shall cleave it with its wings, but shall not divide it asunder; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar, upon the wood which is upon the fire: it is a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to Jehovah.

1. And if any person will offer a wheaten-offering to Jehovah, his offering shall be of the finest flour; and he shall pour oil upon it, and put incense to it: 'it is a wheaten-offering'. And he shall bring it to Aaron's sons, the priests; and a priest shall take his handful of the flour, and of the oil, with all the incense; and he shall burn them, as a memorial of it upon the altar, a burnt-offering 3 of a sweet savour to Jehovah. And the remainder of the wheaten-offering Aaron and his sons shall have, as a thing most holy of the burnt-offerings of Jehovah.

4 And if thou offer a wheaten-offering baked in the oven, let it be of unleavened cakes of the finest flour mingled with oil, or unleavened wafers anointed with oil. And if thy wheat- 5 en-offering be an offering baked on a fire plate, it shall be of the finest flour unleavened, mingled with oil. Thou shalt part it in- 6 to pieces and pour oil on it: it is a wheaten-offering.

And if thy offering be a wheaten-offering 7 baked in the frying-pan, it shall be made of the finest flour with oil. And thou shalt bring 8 the wheaten-offering which is made in any of these ways to Jehovah; and it shall be presented to the priest, and he shall bring it to the altar. And the priest shall take some of 9 the wheaten-offering as a memorial, and shall burn it upon the altar: it is a burnt-offering, of a sweet savour to Jehovah. And the re- 10 mainder of the wheaten-offering Aaron and his sons shall have, as a thing most holy of the burnt-offerings of Jehovah. No wheaten-offer- 11 ing, which ye offer to Jehovah, shall be made with leaven; for ye shall neither burn leaven, nor honey, with any burnt-offering of Jehovah.

As to an offering of the first-fruits, ye may of- 12 fer them to Jehovah; but they shall not be burnt on the altar for a sweet savour. And 13 all your wheaten-offerings ye shall season with salt; nor shall ye withhold from your wheaten-offerings, the salt of the portion of your God: with all your wheaten-offerings ye shall offer salt. And if ye offer a wheaten-offering 14 of your first-fruits to Jehovah, rubbed green ears of corn, dried by the fire, shall ye offer as a wheaten-offering of your first-fruits. And ye 15

16. With its contents. So Junius renders, with Purver and others; and I deem this version the only proper one. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

CHAP. II. 1-7. Wheaten-offering. I have preferred wheaten, because meat now means flesh, and all kinds of offerings here specified were oblatively made of wheat. Calmet has observed there were five kinds of these offerings—simple flour—oven cakes—cakes of the fire-plate—cakes of the frying-pan—and green ears of corn. See Introduction, Part iv. Ch. 4. § 4. The salt, oil, and incense, were designed to render the wheaten offerings more inflammable, and the odour more grateful. What was used to give a relish to food, God would have presented to him.

2. A memorial. Of God's covenant with them and his kindness to them. Ainsworth has observed, 'that there was neither oil nor incense offered with the sin and jealousy offerings; because they were not offerings of Memorial, but such as brought iniquities to remembrance, which were not of a sweet smelling savour to Jehovah.'

11. With leaven. Leaven is considered as a species of putrefaction, because in hot countries what is leavened soon becomes unfit for use. Hence leaven is not only noticed for its rapid influence on the mass into which it is put, but as the emblem of malice and wickedness, Math. xiii. 33, and 1 Cor. v. 6-8.

13. The salt of the portion. For the critical reasons of this version, See Note, Hebrew Bible. In this place the word (כֶּחָוֶה) usually rendered 'covenant,' means 'portion, or food,' from (כָּוָה). Compare 2 Sam. xiii. 5, 7, 10, with Levit. iii. 11.—Season with salt. Salt is the opposite of leaven, and preserves from putrefaction. Every thing was seasoned with it, to intimate that purity should be preserved in the service of God, and in shall put on it oil, and add to it incense: it is 16 a wheaten-offering. And the priest shall burn, as a memorial of it, a part of the corn rubbed out, and a part of the oil, with all the incense:

it is a burnt-offering to Jehovah.

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1491. The Feast-offerings from the herds and flocks; the sin-offering for the priest, congregation, ruler, or any of the people.

- 1 AND if one's oblation be a feast-sacrifice, and if he offer from the herd; a male or female shall he offer, without blemish, before Jehovah.
- 2 And he shall lay his hand upon the head of his offering, and it shall be killed at the door of the congregation-tabernacle; and Aaron's sons, the priests, shall sprinkle the blood round
- 3 about upon the altar. And of the feast-sacrifice, he shall offer (as a burnt-offering to Jehovah) the fat that covereth the intestines, and all the fat that is on the intestines;
- 4 And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the excrescence of the liver, with the kidneys, shall be taken off. And Aaron's sons, "the priests", shall burn them upon the burnt-offering, which is on the wood that is on the fire "upon the altar": it is a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to Jehovah.

And if his offering for a feast-sacrifice to 6 Jehovah be from the flock; a male or a female without blemish he shall offer. If he 7 offer a lamb for his offering, then shall he bring it before Jehovah. And he shall lay 8 his hand upon the head of his offering, and it shall be killed before "Jehovah at the door of" the congregation-tabernacle; and Aaron's sons, "the priests", shall sprinkle the blood thereof round about upon the altar. And of 9 the feast-sacrifice, he shall offer, as a burnt-offering to Jehovah, the large fat tail entire, taken off close to the rump: and the fat that covereth the intestines, and all the fat that is on the intestines; And the two kid- 10 neys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks; and the excrescence of the liver, with the kidneys, shall be taken off; And 11 a priest shall burn them upon the altar, as the food "of a sweet-savoured burnt-offering to Jehovah.

And if his offering be a goat, he shall bring 12 it before Jehovah; And he shall lay his hand 13 upon its head, and before "Jehovah at the

CHAP. III. 5. *Sept. Syr. 1 ms.—ibid. *Sam. Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS I, II. 1. Let us admire the kindness of God in these institutions. He had respect in them to the poor as well as to the rich. If a man could not bring a sheep, a cow, or a calf, he might afford a kid, or a lamb; or if he could not afford to bring one of these, he might bring a turtle dove, or pigeon, which abounded in Judea, and which every man, however poor, might take and offer to God. The Law stoops to the meanest circumstances, teaching us, that as all have sinned, all must offer sacrifice. The rich and the poor must bring offerings suitable to their respective conditions.

2. Let the caution so often repeated, that the animal offered, must be perfect in its kind, 'without blemish,' remind us of him who is styled 'the lamb of God,' and whose sacrifice alone made a full and real atonement for our sins. "We are not redeemed with cor-

the hearts of his worshippers.

CHAP. III. 1. Feast-sacrifice. Coverdale rendered, thank-offering, and Geddes, eucharistic. I have followed Michaelis, in calling them, 'Feast-sacrifices,' because the principal parts were eaten by the offerer and his friends, and because they were attended with other demonstrations of joy and pleasure. They were generally the free-will offerings of the people. See Introduction, Part. ii, and iii. Ch. 4, 2.

8. *Syr. 1 ms.—ibid. *Sept. 1 ms. 13. *Sept.—ibid. *Sam. Sept.

ruptible things as silver and gold; but with the precious blood of Christ, as of a lamb, without blemish and without spot." Whatever we offer to God, it is for the sake of this spotless lamb, that God accepts it. The rich and the poor, through faith in him, are alike accepted; and may equally claim all the benefits of his mediation and sacrifice.

3. From the circumstance of salt being commanded to season every offering, we may learn, that purity and sincerity of heart, and a lively sense of religion, are necessary in all our acts of worship. Without these, our prayers are unmeaning words, and our praises a mere noise. Our Saviour alludes to this, when he says, "If the salt has lost its savour, with what shall it be salted?" If a man loose the power of religion, he becomes worthless and insipid, as salt which has lost its pungent taste. Let us therefore maintain a lively spirit of devotion, that our converse may minister grace to the hearers, and tend to preserve and promote purity of heart and conduct.

5. With the burnt offering. Hence it should seem, that the Feast-offering was not offered alone, but together with some other victim; probably the daily burnt offering.

9. The large fat tail. See Note on Exod. xxix. 22. Mr Street considers this precept to have had respect to the health of the Israelites. "Bilious disorders are very frequent in hot countries; the eating of fat meat is a great encouragement and excitement to them. The fat of the door of" the congregation-tabernacle, it shall be killed; and the sons of Aaron "the priests" shall sprinkle its blood round about upon the altar. And of it, he shall offer, as a burnt-offering to Jehovah, the fat that covereth the intestines, and all the fat that is on the intestines; And the two kidneys, and the fat which is on them, which is by the flanks; and the excrescence of the liver, with the kidneys, shall be taken off; And the priest shall burn them upon the altar, as the food of a burnt-offering of a sweet savour "to Jehovah". The whole fat is Jehovah's, by a perpetual statute. Throughout your generations in all your dwellings, ye shall eat neither fat nor blood."

1 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
2 "Speak to the children of Israel, "and say to them", "If any person have sinned through ignorance, and done those things which ought not to be done, against any of the commandments of Jehovah; If the anointed priest have thus sinned, so as to bring guilt on the people, then let him bring for his sin, which he hath committed, a steer without blemish for a sin-offering to Jehovah. And he shall bring the steer to the door of the congregation-tabernacle before Jehovah; and he shall lay his hand upon the head of the steer, and before Jehovah the steer shall be killed.
5 And the anointed priest, "who hath been consecrated", shall take some of the blood of the steer, and bring it to the congregation-tabernacle. And the priest shall dip his finger in the blood, and sprinkle "with his finger" of the blood, seven times before Jehovah towards the veil of the sanctuary. And the priest shall 7 put some of the blood upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense before Jehovah, which is in the congregation-tabernacle; but all the rest of the blood of the steer, he shall pour out at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering, which is at the door of the congregation-tabernacle. All the fat of the steer of the sin-offering shall be taken off, "as it is taken off from the steer of the feast-sacrifice"; the fat that covereth the intestines, and all the fat that is on the intestines. And the two kidneys, and 9 the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks; and the excrescence of the liver, with the kidneys, shall be taken off; And a priest shall 10 burn them upon the altar of burnt-offering. But the skin of the steer, and all the flesh, with 11 its head, and with its legs, and its intestines, and its dung, Even the whole steer shall be 12 carried without the camp to a clean place, where the ashes are poured out, and burned on the wood with fire; where the ashes are poured out shall it be burnt.

"And if the whole congregation "of the children" of Israel have sinned through ignorance, and the thing be hid from the eyes of the assembly, and they have done any thing which should not be done against any of the commandments of Jehovah, and are guilty; When the 14 sin, which they have committed is known, then the congregation shall offer a steer "without blemish" for a sin-offering. And they shall bring it "to the door of" the congregation-tabernacle; And the elders of the congregation shall lay their hands upon the head of large tail of the eastern sheep is reckoned a luxurious delicacy; but I have been told, by one who had eaten of it, that it is not wholesome." The conclusion of the 17th verse justifies this opinion, whatever typical reference may also be implied.

11. For the various reading of this and the other verses, see Note, Hebrew Bible.

CHAP. IV. 2. I have here followed the Syr. as most natural; for after the imperative 'speak,' the participle seems improper. Through the whole chapter, I have given the sense rather than the idiom. When a person offended, either by omitting to observe, or transgressing, any of God's laws, as soon as he knew his offence he was to offer the following sacrifice; if he neglected to do it, his guilt remained, and judgment awaited him.

VOL. I. PART II.

3. Guilt on the people. The Priest's lips were to keep knowledge; and in what respected the law, he was to instruct them. If the Priest sinned through ignorance and led the people astray, the sin was heinous, and was to be particularly expiated.

12. Without the camp. Some think this circumstance, as well as the steer for the sin-offering of the priest, marked the greatness of his offence, as well as represented the forgiveness of it. In allusion to the burning of this victim without the camp Paul observes, our Lord suffered without the gate, Hebr. xiii. 11—13.

13. The whole congregation. This must refer to the cases in which the Priests and Magistrates did not properly interpret, or enforce the law. The victim and rites are the same as those prescribed for the anointed the steer before Jehovah; and the steer shall be 16 killed before Jehovah. And the anointed priest shall bring some of the steer's blood to 17 the congregation-tabernacle; And the priest shall dip his finger in some of the blood, and sprinkle it seven times before Jehovah, towards 18 the veil "of the sanctuary". And some of the blood he shall put upon the horns of the altar

 "of incense" which is before Jehovah, in the congregation-tabernacle; and shall pour out all the rest of the blood at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering, which is at the door of 19 the congregation-tabernacle. He shall then take off its fat from it, and burn it upon the 20 altar. And he shall do with the steer as he did with the other steer of the sin-offering; so shall he do with this. Thus the priest shall make an atonement for them, and they shall be for-21 given. And the steer shall be carried without the camp, and be burned as the former steer was burned. This is the sin-offering for the congregation.

22 "When a ruler hath sinned, through ignorance, and hath done any thing which should not be done against any of the commandments 23 of Jehovah his God, and is guilty; And if his sin, which he hath committed, come to his knowledge, he shall bring for his offering, a 24 kid, a male without blemish: And he shall lay his hand upon the head of the kid, and it shall be killed in the place where they kill the burnt-offering before Jehovah: it is a sin-25 offering. And the priest shall take some of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger,
 and put it upon the altar of burnt-offering,
 and shall pour out the rest of its blood at the 26 bottom of the altar of burnt-offering. And he shall burn all its fat upon the altar, as the fat

of the feast-sacrifice is burned. Thus the priest shall make an atonement for him concerning his sin, and he shall be forgiven.

"And if any one of the common people have 27
 sinned through ignorance, by doing any thing which ought not to be done, against any of the commandments of Jehovah, and be guilty;
 And if his sin, which he hath committed, come to 28
 his knowledge; then he shall bring for his offering, a kid, a female without blemish, for his sin which he hath committed. And he shall 29 lay his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and the sin-offering shall be killed in the place "where" the burnt-offering "is killed".
 And the priest shall take some of its blood 30 with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the rest of the blood at the bottom of the altar "of burnt-offering". And he shall 31 take off all the fat, as the fat of the feast-sacrifice is taken off; and a priest shall burn it upon the altar for a sweet savour to Jehovah.
 Thus the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be forgiven. And if he 32 bring a lamb for a sin-offering, he shall bring a female without blemish. And he shall lay 33 his hand upon the head of the sin-offering, and the sin-offering shall be killed in the place where the burnt-offering is killed. And the 34 priest shall take some of the blood of the sin-offering with his finger, and put it upon the horns of the altar of burnt-offering, and shall pour out all the rest of the blood at the bottom of the altar "of burnt-offering". And 35 he shall take off all the fat, as the fat of the lamb of the feast-sacrifice is taken off; and the priest shall burn it upon the altar, with the burnt-offerings of Jehovah. Thus the priest

20. Other steers. Houbigant conceived that a word had dropped from the text, which I have supplied, as the connexion requires.

23. A kid. The common version has, 'a kid of the goats,' which is a mere Hebraism for a kid; and in the next verse it is simply so called. Ainsworth makes it 'a goat buck of the goats.' What follows shows, that it was a male. I have rendered (IN) and, because I consider the van the true lection, and an adversative particle is here improper. See Note, Hebrew Bible.

27. One of the common people. Here James's translators have described the Hebrew idiom, and have very properly given the sense. If they had rendered, 'one of the people of the land,' it would have been uncertain who was meant.

CHAP. V. 6. Sam. Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS III & IV. 1. The feast-sacrifice should remind us that all our prosperity and blessings come from God; and that in the enjoyment of them, he is to be acknowledged and honoured. When we eat and are satisfied, without paying any regard to our benefactor, we forget our duty and incur guilt. Even when we feast with our friends, let religion sanctify the feast; and then we shall have a double pleasure; the pleasure of present enjoyment and the pleasure of hope.

2. Let the offerings for sins of ignorance, teach us our imperfection and constant liability to offend. The priest, the ruler, the whole people, were alike liable to sin against the commandments of God; and had equally need of seeking forgiveness in the divinely appointed oath, the meaning of which is, says Delgado, that when evidences are wanted, the judges order a proclamation to be issued, for any one who knows any thing concerning it to come and declare it in court; and commonly a curse is joined to it in case any should neglect or refuse to be evidence. Now this man's sin was, that he had heard the proclamation, and yet did not appear to give evidence.

2-5. The cases here stated might often occur from inattention, and it was highly proper to specify them, in order to prevent rash which he hath committed; a female from the flock, either a lamb or a kid, for a sin-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for the sin which he hath committed, and he shall be forgiven." And if he be not able to bring 7 a lamb or a goat; then let him bring for his trespass which he hath committed, two turtle doves, or two pigeons, to Jehovah; the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering. And when he hath brought them to 8 the priest, he shall offer that which is for the sin-offering first, and wring off its head from its neck, but shall not divide it asunder; And 9 he shall sprinkle some of the blood of the sin-offering upon the side of the altar; and the rest of the blood shall he squeeze out at the bottom of the altar: it is a sin-offering. And he shall offer the other for a burnt-off- 10 fering, according to the manner prescribed. Thus the priest shall make an atonement for him, as to his sin which he hath committed, and he shall be forgiven.

"But if he who hath sinned be not able to 11 bring two turtle-doves, or two pigeons, then let him bring for his sin-offering the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour; but he shall not pour oil upon it, nor shall he put incense to it, because it is a sin-offering. Then 12

way. 'Are we better than they?' Nay, in no wise. Let us not then be high minded, but fear; and when we are conscious, that we have sinned against God, let us renew our repentance.

3. The sacrifices appointed, were a merciful provision for their infirmities, and a type of that great sacrifice, which should, once in the end of ages, be offered. As far as regarded the legal offences, the sacrifices prescribed took away the guilt; but as to the conscience, there was need of a better sacrifice. Perhaps John alludes to these offerings when he says, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous: and he is the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world."

promises, vows, &c. When a man became sensible of his offence, he was to confess it, and to express his humiliation for it, that he might be forgiven.

6. The addition of the Samaritan copy is found in the text, in other instances.

7, 8. See Note on Chapter i. 16.

10. He shall be forgiven. Literally, 'It shall be forgiven him.' I have preferred the equivalent rendering, because in our language it expresses the sense more clearly and fully.

shall he bring it to the priest, and the priest shall take his handful of it, for a memorial, and burn it on the altar, with the burnt-offerings of Jehovah: it is a sin-offering. And the priest shall, by any of these, make an atonement for him, as to his sin which he hath committed, and he shall be forgiven; and the remainder of the offering the priest shall have, like that of the wheaten-offering.

¹⁵ Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "If a person have committed a trespass, and sinned through ignorance, by withholding any of the holy things of Jehovah; then he shall bring to Jehovah, as a trespass-offering for his trespass, a ram, without blemish, from the flocks, of the value of two shekels of silver, according to ¹⁶ the shekel of the sanctuary. And the wrong done by withholding any thing holy, he shall compensate, and having added a fifth part more, he shall give it to the priest; and the priest shall make an atonement for him with the ram of the trespass-offering, and he shall be forgiven.

¹⁷ "And if a person have sinned, and have done any thing against the commandments of Jehovah, which ought not to be done; though he knew it not, yet is he guilty, and hath brought ¹⁸ on himself iniquity; And he shall bring a ram, without blemish, from the flock, of due value, for a trespass-offering, to the priest; and the priest shall make an atonement for him in regard to his error which he hath committed, though he knew it not, and he shall be forgiven. ¹⁹ This is the trespass-offering of him who is clearly guilty, in respect to things holy to Jehovah."

concerning it; or swear falsely concerning any one of those things which a man may do, sinning therein; When having thus sinned, ⁴ and become guilty, he shall restore what he took by violence, or what he acquired by oppression, or what was delivered to him to keep, or the lost thing which he hath found; Or ⁵ whatsoever thing it be about which he hath sworn falsely, he shall even restore the principal, and shall add to it a fifth part more, and give it to him to whom it belongeth, in the day of his trespass-offering. And he shall ⁶ bring to the priest for his trespass-offering, as a trespass-offering to Jehovah, a ram without blemish, from the flock; (of the due value); And the priest shall make an atonement for ⁷ him before Jehovah; and he shall be forgiven, in respect to any of the things which he hath done, and thereby become guilty.

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, ⁸ "Command Aaron and his sons, saying, 'This ⁹ is the law of the daily burnt-offering: On the hearth upon the altar, the burnt-offering shall remain burning all the night, unto the morning, (and the fire of the altar shall still be kept burning on it); And the priest shall put ¹⁰ on his peculiar garment; and his peculiar drawers shall he put upon his flesh, and take up the ashes of the burnt-offering which the fire hath consumed on the altar, and he shall place them beside the altar. He shall then put off ¹¹ his garments, and put on other garments, and carry forth the ashes into a clean place without the camp. And the fire upon the altar shall ¹² still be kept burning on it; it shall not be extinguished. The priest shall burn wood on it every morning, and arrange the burnt-offering upon it; and he shall burn thereon the fat of the sacrifices. The fire shall be ever kept ¹³ burning upon the altar; it shall never be extinguished.

"And this is the law of the wheaten-offering: ¹⁴ One of the sons of Aaron shall offer it to Jeho-

¹⁵. This law regards those, who from a principle of covetousness, neglected to bring what was commanded to the sanctuary, such as the first-fruits, tithes, &c.—Valued. For this rendering, see Note, Hebrew Bible. CHAP. VI. 2—7. See Introduction, Part ii. Chap. 8. § 2.

15 vah, before the altar; And he shall take up his handful of the fine flour of the wheaten-offering, and of the oil, and all the incense which is upon the wheaten-offering, and shall burn them, upon the altar, as a memorial of it, for a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to 16 Jehovah. And Aaron and his sons shall eat the remainder of it; unleavened shall it be eaten, in the holy place; in the court of the 17 congregation-tabernacle they shall eat it. It shall not be baked with leaven. I have given it as their portion of "Jehovah's burnt-offerings"; it is most holy, as the sin-offering, and as the 18 guilt-offering. All the males among the children of Aaron shall eat of it. This shall be a perpetual statute throughout your generations concerning the burnt-offerings of Jehovah; for every one that toucheth them must be holy.

19 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, 20 "This is the offering of Aaron and of his sons, which they shall offer to Jehovah, on the day when he or they shall be anointed; the tenth part of an ephah of fine flour for a perpetual wheaten-offering, half of it in the morning, and 21 half thereof in the evening. In the frying-pan it shall be made, with oil; and when it hath been baked, and cut in pieces, it shall be brought and offered as a wheaten-offering, of 22 a sweet savour to Jehovah. And he of his sons, who shall be anointed priest in his stead, shall offer it: it is a perpetual statute of Jehovah. The whole of such offerings shall be burned. For every wheaten-offering of a priest 23 shall be wholly burnt: it shall not be eaten.

Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak ²⁴ to Aaron and to his sons, saying, ' This is the law of the sin-offering: In the place where the burnt-offering is killed there shall the sin-offering be killed before Jehovah. It is most holy. The priest who offereth it shall eat it; 26 in the holy place shall it be eaten, in the court of the congregation-tabernacle. Who- 27 soever shall touch its flesh shall be holy; and when some of its blood is sprinkled upon any garment, the part sprinkled shall be washed in the holy place. And the earthen vessel 28 in which it is boiled, shall be broken; but if it be boiled in a brazen pot, the pot shall be both scoured, and rinsed in water. Any of the males 29 among the priests may eat of it. It is most holy. And no sin-offering, of which a part of 30 the blood is brought into the congregation-tabernacle for an atonement, shall be eaten, even in the holy place: it shall be burnt in the fire.

B. C. 1491. The guilt-offering; Feast-offering; of thanksgiving, for a vow, &c.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS V & VI. 1. In how many ways might a man be defiled, or trespass, under the ceremonial law? There was need of constant watchfulness and prayer; and after all a conscientious man would frequently find himself obliged to bring the appointed sacrifice. Doubtless on account of the multitude of ritual observances, the Apostle styles the law a yoke, which galled both them and their fathers. How great is our privilege under the gospel! "Let us stand fast in the liberty wherewith Christ has made us free," and improve it to his glory and our own eternal advantage.

2. Let the command respecting the 'daily offerings,' and the preservation of the 'fire on the Altar perpetually,' remind us of our duty. We ought daily to be offering the sacrifice of prayer, and pleading the efficacy of the blood that was shed to obtain for us the richest spiritual blessings. Let the holy fire of love and gratitude be ever preserved; and the duties of religion, will be alike pleasant to us, and acceptable to God.

3. Let the command to the priests, to be holy, and the provision made for them, remind ministers what they should be, and people what they should do. The former, as serving at the altar, should be blameless, the sons of God without rebuke; they should keep themselves from every wicked thing; and the latter should not withhold their offerings, and rob God in regard to the holy things. They should render to all their due, and remember the Levite.

18. Must be holy; that is, none but the priests, shall have a right to eat of it.

20. On the day, &c. Rosenmuller from the Arabic renders, 'from the day,' which seems to be countenanced by the following verses. Josephus says, 'that the priest was wont to offer, out of his own property, daily, a certain quantity of flour mixed with oil, baked a little, and divided into two parts, one of which he threw into the sacred fire in the morning, the other in the evening.'

26, 27. These verses cannot be understood in reference to the offerer, as Ainsworth adds others understood them, but in reference to the priests

2 it is most holy. In the place where they kill the burnt-offering shall [they kill the guilt-offering; and its blood shall be sprinkled round
3 about upon the altar. All its fat shall then be taken off; the large fat tail, and the fat that covereth the intestines, and the fat that
4 is on the intestines; And the two kidneys, and the fat that is on them, which is by the flanks, and the excrescence of the liver, with 5 the kidneys, shall be removed: And the priest shall burn them upon the altar as a burnt-offering to Jehovah. This is a guilt-offering.
6 Every male among the priests may eat of it; but it shall be eaten in the holy place, as it is most holy. As the sin-offering, so is 7 the guilt-offering; there is but one law for them; the priest who maketh atonement by 8 them shall have them. And the priest who offereth any man's burnt-offering, the skin of the burnt-offering which he hath offered shall 9 belong to him. And every wheaten-offering that is baked in the oven, and that is prepared in the frying-pan, and on the fire-plate, shall belong to the priest who offereth it.
10 And every wheaten-offering, mingled with oil, or dry, shall belong to all the sons of Aaron, to one as much as another.
11 "And this is the law of the sacrifice, which 12 one may offer to Jehovah. If he offer it for a thanksgiving, then he shall offer, with the sacrifice of thanksgiving, unleavened cakes, mingled with oil, and cakes of fine flour, dried, with oil mingled. With the cakes, he shall 13 bring as his oblation, leavened bread, with his 14 feast-sacrifice of thanksgiving. And one of every sort he shall offer of the whole obla-

tion, as a heave-offering to Jehovah, and it shall belong to the priest who sprinkleth the blood of the feast-sacrifice. And the flesh of 15 his feast-sacrifice for thanksgiving shall be eaten the same day that it is offered; none of it shall be left until the morning. But if the 16 sacrifice which he offereth be a vow, or a voluntary offering, on the same day that he offereth his sacrifice, it should be eaten; yet on the next day may the remainder of it be eaten; But what remaineth of the flesh of the sa- 17 crifice on the third day, shall be burnt with fire. And if any of the flesh of his feast-sacrifice be 18 eaten at all on the third day, the sacrifice shall not be accepted, nor shall it be imputed to him that offereth it; it shall be deemed polluted, and the person who eateth of it, shall bear his iniquity. And the flesh which hath touched 19 any thing unclean shall not be eaten; it shall be burnt with fire. But as for the flesh of the sacrifice, every one clean may eat of it. But 20 the person who eateth of the flesh of the feast-sacrifice, which belongeth to Jehovah, having his uncleanness upon him, that person shall even be cut off from his people. Moreover, the 21 person who hath touched any thing unclean, as the uncleanness of man, or any unclean beast, or any unclean reptile, and shall eat of the flesh of the feast-sacrifice, which belongeth to Jehovah, even that person shall be cut off from his people.

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, 22 "Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, 'Ye 23 shall not eat any of the fat, either of ox, or of sheep, or of goat. And the fat of a beast that 24 hath died of itself, or the fat of that which hath only. It was their duty to touch the flesh, to offer it, and to sprinkle the blood.

30. This refers to sacrifices appointed for the priest or the people, who had sinned through ignorance. Compare Ch. iv. 5, 16, &c.

CHAP. VII. 3, 4. I have followed the Arabic with 4 mss and the Samaritan in these verses; and the text thus corrected is conformable to other places.

8. The skin shall belong to him. Bishop Patrick supposes that the right of the priest to the skin, originated with Adam, who probably offered the first sacrifices, with the skins of which God clothed him. It was a custom among the Heathen for the priests to have the skins of the beasts sacrificed, as we learn from Virgil, Aeneid, book 8.

15—18. None of it shall be left. This precept may be thought to have been unnecessary in so warm a climate, where we may suppose by the third day it might be ready to putrify, and there could be no great occasion to forbid the Jews to eat decayed meat. But we are to remember that drying meat is often practised in those hot countries; is sometimes practised as to flesh killed with a religious intention: and on account of this management, keeping the flesh of their sacrifices to the third day might be forbidden.

23. None of the fat; that is, of the fat unmixed with the flesh; which was to be burned on the sacrifice-altar. Compare Ch. iii. 3, &c.

been torn to pieces, may be used for any other 25 purpose; but ye shall in no wise eat of it. For whoever eateth the fat of the beast, which should be offered as a burnt-offering to Jehovah, even the person who eateth of it shall be cut 26 off from his people. Neither shall ye eat any kind of blood, whether of fowl, or of beast, in any 27 of your dwellings. Whosoever eateth any kind of blood, even that person shall be cut off from
 his people”.

§ Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, “Speak to the children of Israel, saying, ‘He who of-fereth his feast-sacrifice to Jehovah, shall himself bring an oblation of his feast-sacrifice to 30 Jehovah: His own hands shall bring the fat for a burnt-offering to Jehovah; and also the breast shall he bring, that the breast may be waved before Jehovah for a wave-offering.
 31 And the priest shall burn the fat upon the altar; but the breast shall belong to Aaron, 32 and his sons. And the right shoulder of your feast-sacrifices shall ye give to the priest 33 for an heave-offering. He among the sons of Aaron, who offereth the blood and the fat of the feast-sacrifices, shall have the right shoul-34 der for his portion. For the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder, I take from the feast-sacrifices of the children of Israel, and give them to Aaron the priest and to his sons, by a perpetual statute among the children of Israel”.

35 This is the portion of Aaron, and the portion of his sons, assigned out of the burnt-offerings

of Jehovah, on the day they were presented to minister to Jehovah in the priest's office; Which 36 Jehovah commanded to be given to them by the children of Israel, on the day they were anointed; by a perpetual statute, throughout their generations. This is the law of the burnt-of- 37 fering, of the wheaten-offering, and of the sin-offering, and of the guilt-offering, and of the consecration-offering, and of the feast-sacrifice; Which Jehovah commanded Moses 38
 by mount Sinai, on the day that he commanded the children of Israel to offer their oblations to Jehovah, in the wilderness of Sinai.

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 1491. The consecration of Aaron and his sons, and the consecration-offerings.

JEHOVAH now spoke to Moses, saying, 1 “Take Aaron, and his sons with him, and 2
 the garments, and the anointing oil, and a steer for the sin-offering, and two rams, and a basket of unleavened bread; And assemble 3
 the whole congregation to the door of the congregation-tabernacle.” And Moses did as Jeho- 4 vah commanded him; and the congregation was assembled at the door of the congregation-tabernacle. And Moses said to the congrega- 5 tion, “This is the thing which Jehovah hath commanded to be done.” Moses then brought 6
 Aaron and his sons, and washed them with water.
 And he put on Aaron the tunic, and girded him 7
 with the girdle, and clothed him with the robe, thought worthy, who despise the blood of the Lord Jesus?”

2. In all kinds of sacrifices the fat and the blood, were saered to Jehovah. The first was consumed on the altar, and the other sprinkled before Jehovah, to make atonement. Even in feast-offerings, they might not eat and rejoice till atonement had been made, and the parts specified were presented to God. How instructive are these laws! They teach us the evil of sin, the displeasure of God against it and the method of acceptance and salvation. Every part of the ceremonial law testified this important truth, ‘that without the shedding of blood there was no remission;’ and that mercy was to be sought by sacrifice. We must seek it in the same way, through the sacrifice of our Lord.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. Every transgression of the law incurs guilt, or makes us liable to the penalty threatened; and if there had not been a sacrifice to remove our guilt, miserable would have been the condition of man. The penitent, sensible of the guilt he had incurred, would doubtless bring the prescribed guilt-sacrifice with pleasure that the curse might be removed, and that his soul might live. With what pleasure should we look to him, who offered himself a sacrifice to remove the guilt of our sins, and secure to us pardon and life! If we neglect this sacrifice, our guilt remaineth, and awful destruction awaiteth us. “If they who despised the law of Moses, died without mercy, of how much severer punishment shall they be 25—37, See Note, Genesis ix. 4.

30. His own hands. This was to be done to testify his own readiness to make the offering, and that it was for himself. Compare Exod. xxix. 24—27.

35. This is the portion. The usual sense of the term חֵלֶק, ‘anointing’ is here, and Numb. xviii. 8, wholly improper. The word must be taken in the Arabic and Syriac sense, denoting ‘a measure, a portion.’

CHAP. VIII. 7. The order of the words of this verse in the original and he put over it the ephod, and the breast-plate which he joined to the fancy-work of 8 the ephod, and bound it to it. Also he put on the breast-plate the Urim and the Thummim.

9 And on his head he put the mitre; and on the mitre, on his fore-head, did he put the golden petal, the holy crown; as Jehovah had com-
10 manded him. Moses then took the anointing oil, and anointed the tabernacle and all that 11 it contained, and so hallowed them. And with it he sprinkled the altar seven times, and anointed the altar and all its vessels; also the 12 laver and its cover, to hallow them. And he poured of the anointing oil upon Aaron's head;
13 and anointed him, to hallow him. And Moses brought Aaron's sons, and clothed them with tunics, and girded them with girdles, and put turbans on their heads, as Jehovah had commanded him.
14 He then brought the steer for the sin-offering; and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the steer for the sin-offering;
15 And when it was killed, Moses took the blood, and with his finger put some of it upon the horns of the altar round about, and so purified the altar; and he poured the rest of the blood at the bottom of the altar, and hallowed it, for the 16 purpose of making atonement upon it. Moses then took all the fat which was upon the intestines, and excrescence of the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and he burned them
17 upon the altar. But the steer, and its hide, its flesh, and its dung, were burnt with fire without the camp; as Jehovah had commanded him.
18 He then brought the ram for the burnt-offering; and Aaron and his sons laid their hands
19 upon the head of the ram. And when it was killed, Moses sprinkled the blood round about 20 upon the altar; And the ram was cut into pieces; and Moses burned the head, and the 21 pieces, and the fat. And the intestines and legs being washed in water, Moses burned the whole ram upon the altar, as a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to Jehovah; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And he brought the other ram, the ram of 22 consecration; and Aaron and his sons laid their hands upon the head of the ram. And 23 when it was killed, Moses took some of the blood, and put it on the tip of Aaron's right ear, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot. And the 24 sons of Aaron being brought near, Moses put some of the blood upon the tip of their right ear, and upon the thumbs of their right hands, and upon the great toes of their right feet; and the rest of the blood Moses sprinkled upon the altar round about. And he took the fat, the 25 large fat tail, and all the fat that was upon the intestines, and the excrescence of the caul above the liver, and the two kidneys, and their fat, and the right shoulder: And out of the basket 26 of unleavened bread, which was before Jehovah, he took one unleavened cake, and a cake of oiled bread, and one wafer, and put them on the fat, and upon the right shoulder: And he 27 put the whole upon Aaron's hands, and upon his sons' hands, that they might wave them as a wave-offering before Jehovah. Then Moses 28 took them from off their hands and burned them on the altar, with the burnt-offering: they were consecration burnt-offerings of a sweet savour to Jehovah. But the breast of the 29 consecration-ram, Moses took, and waved it as a wave-offering before Jehovah; this was the portion of Moses; as Jehovah had commanded him. And Moses took of the anointing oil, 30 and of the blood which was upon the altar, and sprinkled upon Aaron, and upon his garments, and upon his sons, and upon his sons' garments with him; and so hallowed Aaron, and his garments, and his sons, and his sons' garments with him.

31 And Moses said to Aaron and to his sons, "Boil the flesh at the door of the congregation-tabernacle, and there eat it 'in the sanctuary' with the bread that is in the basket of consecrations, as I was commanded by Jehovah, saying, 'Aaron and his sons shall eat it'." 32 And the remainder of the flesh and of the 33 bread shall ye burn with fire. And ye shall not go from the door of the congregation-tabernacle for seven days, until the days of your consecration be at an end; for seven days ye 34 must be consecrated. As hath been done this day, so Jehovah hath commanded to do, to 35 make an atonement for you. Therefore shall ye abide at the door of the congregation-tabernacle day and night, seven days, and keep the charge of Jehovah, that ye die not: for 36 so I am commanded." So Aaron and his sons did all things which Jehovah commanded by Moses.

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 1491. Aaron's sin and burnt-offering; the people blessed; and Aaron's sons burnt.

1 AND on the eighth day, Moses called Aaron 2 and his sons, and the elders of Israel; And he said to Aaron, "Take a young calf for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering, without blemish, and offer them before Jehovah. And to the children of Israel thou shalt

And they brought what Moses commanded 5 before the congregation-tabernacle; and the whole congregation drew near and stood before Jehovah. And Moses said, "This is the 6 thing which Jehovah hath commanded that ye shall do; that the glory of Jehovah may appear to you." Then Moses said to Aaron, "Go 7 to the altar, and offer thy sin-offering, and thy burnt-offering, and make an atonement for thyself, and for the people; and offer the offering of the people, and make an atonement for them; as Jehovah hath commanded."

Aaron then went to the altar; and the calf 8 which was for his own sin-offering, being killed, The sons of Aaron brought the blood to him; 9 and he dipped his finger in the blood, and put it upon the horns of the altar, and poured out the rest of the blood at the bottom of the altar: But the fat, and the kidneys, and the excres- 10 cence of the liver of the sin-offering, he burned upon the altar; as Jehovah commanded Moses: And the flesh and the skin he burned 11 without the camp. And the victim for the 12

CHAP. IX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. Thus we see the covenant of the priesthood, confirmed to the tribe of Levi in Aaron and his sons. They were made priests who had infirmity; and they were many, because they were not suffered to continue by reason of death. These circumstances intimated the imperfection of that dispensation, and strongly pointed out the need there was of a better sacrifice, and of another priesthood, not after the order of Aaron. Such a sacrifice as takes away the guilt of sin, and such an High Priest we have, who ever continueth.

High Priest was consecrated.

CHAP. IX. 1. On the eighth day. This was the first day after Aaron's consecration was completed; and till now he was deemed unfit to minister for the people. 'All creatures,' says Ainsworth, 'for the most part were in their uncleanness and imperfection seven days, and perfected on the eighth, as children by circumcision, Lev. xii. 2, 3; young beasts for sacrifice, Ch. xxi. 27; persons unclean by issues, &c. Ch. xiv. 8-10, &c.' So the priests were not admitted to minister till the eighth day.'

2. The consecration of Aaron by the sprinkling of blood, ought to remind us of him, who was consecrated by his own blood; first in the garden, next when crowned with thorns, then when nailed to the cross, and lastly when his side was pierced with the spear. Thus was he both the victim and the priest; and by the shedding of his blood he hath obtained eternal redemption for us. Reader, be it thy care to apply to this High Priest for pardon and life; and then thou mayest rejoice, that he ever lives to make intercession for thee.

3. Children of Israel. The Samaritan reading is not improbable, as the sacrifice here commanded to be offered, is mentioned Ch. iv. 22, 23, as for a ruler; and a steer is there appointed for the sin of the people, ver. 14. It has, however, been supposed, that the sacrifice there appointed was for some particular sin, but this for sin in general; and hence the sacrifices are different.

6. That the glory of Jehovah. On numerous occasions God gave the people the most sensible tokens of his presence and favour; and now burnt offering being killed, Aaron's sons brought to him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar. They then brought to him the victim for the burnt-offering cut up, with the head; and he burned them upon the altar. And the intestines and legs being washed, he also burned them with the burnt-offering on the altar.

He next brought the people's offering; and took the goat, which was for the people's sin-offering; and when it was killed he offered it for a sin-offering as the former. And he brought the burnt-offering, and did according to the prescribed rite. He also brought the wheaten-offering, and took up a handful, and burned it upon the altar, besides the burnt-offering of the morning. And the steer and the ram for the feast-sacrifice, which was for the people, being killed, the sons of Aaron brought to him the blood, which he sprinkled round about upon the altar. But the fat of the steer and of the ram; the large tail of the latter, and that which covereth the intestines, and the kidneys, and the fat which was on them, and the excrescence of the liver; They first put the fat upon the breasts, and then burned the fat upon the altar. And the breasts and the right shoulder Aaron waved as a wave-offering before Jehovah; as Jehovah had commanded Moses. And Aaron lifted up his hand towards the people, and blessed them; and came down from the altar, when he had offered the sin offering, and the burnt-offering, and the feast-offerings:

And Moses and Aaron went into the congregation-tabernacle; and they came out, and blessed the people; and the glory of Jehovah appeared to all the people. And there came out a fire from before Jehovah, and consumed the burnt-offering, and the fat, which were upon the altar; which when all the people saw, they shouted and fell on their faces.

Now Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took each of them his censer, and put fire on them, and placed incense on them, and offered profane fire before Jehovah, which he commanded them not. And there went out fire from Jehovah, and consumed them; and thus they died before Jehovah. Then Moses said to Aaron, This is what Jehovah spoke, saying, "Holy I will be accounted by those who approach me, and before all the people I will be glorified." And Aaron was silent. And Moses called Mishael and Elzaphan, the sons of Uzziel, the uncle of Aaron, and said to them, "Come near, and carry your brethren out of the camp from before the sanctuary". So they went near, and carried them, in their tunics, out of the camp; as Moses had said. And Moses said to Aaron, and to Eleazar, and to Ithamar, his remaining sons, "Uncover not your heads, nor rend your garments; lest ye die, and lest wrath break forth against all the people. Let your brethren, the whole house of Israel, bewail the burning which Jehovah hath kindled: But ye shall not go out from the door of the congregation-tabernacle lest ye die; for

CHAP. X: 6. *Sept. Syr. 1 ms.

Moses intimates that he would appear among them accepting their offerings. 8—11. Compare Ch. iv. 11, and viii. 17.

21. As Jehovah. This reading is supported not only by the authorities mentioned, but by the whole chapter itself.

22. Blessed the people; that is, prayed for them, and uttered the words mentioned Numb. vi. 23, &c.

23, 24. The glory of Jehovah, &c. The 'glory of God,' often means the Cloud in which he dwelt. This appeared in the most sensible manner; and a fire came out from his presence and consumed the offerings. On other occasions God testified his acceptance of a sacrifice in the same way. See Note, Gen. iv. 2, and Compare Judg. vi. 21; xiii. 19—23, and 1 Kings xviii. 38, and 2 Chron. vii. 1, &c.—They shouted. Doubtless for joy, that God should so manifest himself among them; and they prostrated themselves, thereby expressing a deep sense of his goodness, and acknowledging their own unworthiness.

CHAP. X. 1. Profane fire. The Lord had sent a supernatural fire to consume the first victims offered to him. This was to be kept perpetually alive; and from it only were the coals to be taken for the burning of incense. Nadab and Abihu, (see ver. 8.) neglected this precept, and filled their censers with common fire.

2. There went out fire, &c. That this might be lightning is highly probable; but the judgment is apparent as it is connected with the crime noticed. And it has been reasonably supposed, from the 8th verse, that they had dishonoured their office by intemperance.

3. Aaron was silent. Sensible of the crime of his sons, and yet feeling as a father for them, his silence indicated both his submission and his heart-felt grief.

4. Uncle of Aaron. He was Amram's brother. Exod. vi. 18—22.

6. Uncover not your head, &c. These were ordinary marks of mourning; which the high priest, at least, was positively forbidden to show, even for his father or mother. Compare Ch. xxi. 10.

10. May distinguish. The holy offices of religion require the ex-

the anointing oil of Jehovah is upon you". And they did according to the word of Moses.

5 Jehovah then spoke to Aaron, saying, "Neither wine nor strong drink, shalt thou, nor thy sons drink, when ye go into the congregation-tabernacle, lest ye die. This shall be a perpetual statute throughout your generations; 10 So that ye may distinguish between what is holy and unholy; and between what is unclean and clean; And that ye may teach the children of Israel all the statutes which Jehovah hath spoken to them by Moses".

12 And Moses spoke to Aaron, and to Eleazar, and to Ithamar, his remaining sons; "Take the wheaten-offering which remaineth of the burnt-offerings of Jehovah, and eat it without leaven 13 beside the altar; for it is most holy. And ye shall eat it in the holy place, because it is thine appointed portion and the appointed portion of thy sons, of Jehovah's burnt-offerings. 14 For so I am commanded. And the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder shall ye eat in a clean place; thyself, and thy sons, and thy daughters with thee: for they are thine appointed portion, and the appointed portion of thy sons, allotted from the feast-sacrifices of the children 15 of Israel. The heave-shoulder and the wave-breast with the burnt-offerings of the fat, which they bring to wave as a wave-offering before Jehovah, shall be thine, and thy sons' with thee by a perpetual statute; as Jehovah hath commanded.

Moses then diligently sought the goat of the 16 sin-offering, and, behold, it was burned. And he was angry with Eleazar and Ithamar, the remaining sons of Aaron; and he said, "Where- 17 fore have ye not eaten the sin-offering in the holy place, seeing it is most holy, and is given to you to bear the iniquity of the congregation, to make atonement for them before Jehovah? Behold, its blood was not brought into the 18 sanctuary; ye should indeed have eaten it in the holy place, as I commanded". But Aaron 19 said to Moses, "Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before Jehovah, and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to day, would it have been accepted in the sight of Jehovah"? And when Moses heard this, 20 he was satisfied.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 1491. What animals are to be accounted clean or unclean.

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses and to Aaron, saying to them, "Speak to the children 2 of Israel, saying, 'Of all the beasts which are upon the earth, these are the beasts which ye may eat. Every one among the beasts whose 3

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS IX & X. 1. Aaron and his sons being consecrated, begin the duties of their office by offering the sacrifices prescribed, first for themselves and then for the people. This intimates their own guilt, and the necessity of personal religion. They who minister at the altar should be men of God; men who fear, love, and honour him; men who know the reality, importance, and vital influence of religion, and are thus qualified to teach and instruct others.

2. The testimony God gave of his favour, by consuming the victims with fire from his own presence, honoured and confirmed the priesthood of Aaron. The people could now hope that their offerings would be accepted, when presented in the manner prescribed; and they might expect from God an answer of peace to their petitions. All the people saw the glory of Jehovah. How interesting, how affecting the sight! So believers see the glory of the Saviour, full of grace and truth; and so shall all God's spiritual Israel see and enjoy his glory for ever in the Church above.

3. We learn, from what befel the sons of Aaron, with what reverence and holy watchfulness we should draw near to God. Holy he is, and holy he must be accounted, by all who approach him; and he must be served in the manner appointed. 'It is a dangerous thing,' says Bishop Hall, 'in the worship of God, to decline from his own institutions; we have to do with a Being who is wise to prescribe his own worship, just to require what he hath prescribed, and powerful to revenge what he hath not required.' Let us keep close therefore to what the Lord hath said; and learn from this instructive story, to which the Apostle alludes, Heb. xii. 29, to 'serve God acceptably, with reverence and godly fear, for our God is a consuming fire.'

ercise of reason, judgment, and holy affections; and how inconsistent with the due exercise of these is a state of intemperance?

16. Diligently sought. The goat of the sin-offering related to those lesser sacrifices, whose blood was not brought into the sanctuary, and whose flesh might be eaten by the officiating priests. See Ch. iv. 22-26, and verse 18.

19. Would it have been accepted? This excuse was natural; for considering the calamity which had befallen him, with what propriety could Aaron eat and rejoice?

CHAP. XI. 2. Of all the beasts, &c. In this chapter we have the hoof is divided and cloven into ^atwo parts, and 4 cheweth the cud, shall ye eat; But those which only chew the cud, or have only a clo-ven hoof, ye shall not eat. The camel, although he cheweth the cud, but yet hath not 5 a cloven hoof, shall be to you unclean. And the Jerboa, although he cheweth the cud, but yet hath not a cloven hoof, shall be to you un-6 clean. And the hare, although he cheweth the cud, yet hath not a cloven hoof, shall be 7 to you unclean. And the swine, although he hath a cloven and divided hoof, yet because he cheweth not the cud, shall be to you unclean.

 8 Of their flesh shall ye not eat, and their carcases shall ye not touch; they shall be to you unclean.

9 "Of all the water-animals, these ye may eat.
 Every water-animal, in the seas or in the rivers, 10 that hath fins or scales, ye shall eat: But every water-animal, which creepeth in the waters, in the seas or in the rivers, and hath not fins or scales;—every such water-animal shall 11 to you be an abomination. They shall be an abomination to you; of their flesh ye shall not eat, but their carcasses ye shall have in abomination: Whatsoever in the waters hath not 12 fins and scales, shall be abominable to you.

"And of the fowl kind these ye shall have 13
 in abomination; they shall not be eaten: they are, the eagle, and the vulture, and the os-pray, And the falcon, and kite, with its kind; 14
 The raven with its kind; And the ostrich ¹⁵₁₆ and the night-owl, and the horn-owl, and the hawk with its kind; And the sea-gull, and 17
 the cormorant, and the ibis; And the swan, 18 and the pelican, and the king-fisher, And 19
 the stork; and heron with its kind, and the lapwing, and the bat. Every kind of fowl 20 that creepeth going upon all four, shall be to you an abomination. Yet those of every kind 21 of fowl that creep, going upon all four, which have legs above their feet, to leap with upon the earth, ye may eat. Even of them ye 22 may eat, the locust with its kind, and the bald locust with its kind, and the beetle with its kind, and the grass-hopper with its kind. But 23 all other flying creatures, which creep on four feet shall be to you an abomination. And by 24
 all such animals ye shall be unclean; whosoever toucheth their carcass shall be unclean

most early specimen of natural history on record; and though the sacred writer does not adopt the classification of modern naturalists, he has adopted one as lucid and proper for the purpose he had in view. He founds his arrangement on the useful, or noxious qualities of beasts, birds, reptiles, and fishes; and his general division is, into such as are suitable for food, and such as are not. This distinction is clearly founded in nature; and though climate and habits may make some little variation, it is clear that this distinction has always, and will always obtain. Spencer contends, that God appointed this distinction, chiefly to keep the Jews separate from other nations; and that as they were a peculiar people, so they were to live in a peculiar manner. He founds his opinion on ch. xx. 24—26. Vid. Lib. i. c. 5. To me his reasoning is not conclusive; and I am satisfied that the distinction is founded in nature, whatever moral purposes might be designed.

3. Every one, &c. "Quadrupeds. may be divided into two classes; first, those which have hoofs; secondly, those which have claws. In the first class, the extremity of the foot is wholly covered with a hard horny substance; on which, when the animal stands up, he rests his weight, either in whole or in part. The second class, or those with claws, do not rest any part of their weight on their claws; neither is the whole extremity of the foot covered by their claws, but only certain portions of it.

"Animals which have hoofs, are again divided into those of one solid hoof only, and those with divided hoofs; the latter are the subjects of our present observations. The Hebrew text is, emphatically, 'dividing the division of the hoofs;' meaning, an entire and total separation of the hoof into two parts; and meaning also, neither more parts nor less than two. Hence the camel, whose hoof is partly divided, was unclean to the Jews, though eaten by the Arahs; and the arnebeth, (hare), having more than two divisions, though described as ruminating, yet is forbidden." Calmet. It was not only necessary that beasts should cleave and divide the hoof into two parts only, but they must chew the cud.

5. Jerboa. The common version has 'coney,' or 'rabbit,' which is certainly improper. I have followed Dathe and others, who have proved that it denotes the Jerboa.

7. Swine. The well known aversion of the Jewish nation to it, and the abhorrence of other families of mankind, mark it decidedly as impure. This creature, in hot countries, is apt to be troubled with distempers, which render its flesh unwholesome: to which we may add, its perpetual wallowing in mire. These are the only quadrupeds, which are specially named as unclean; but the general rule in verse 3, includes a vast number indeed; and therefore it was not necessary to mention them. Nor was it necessary to mention any particular fish, as a general rule is laid down with respect to them in verses 9—12.

9. Water-animals. Fins are analogous to the feet of land animals; as therefore, the sacred legislator had given directions for separating animals according to their hoofs and claws, so he directs that fishes, which had no clear and distinct members adapted to locomotion, should be unclean; but those which had fins should be clean, provided they also had scales.

13—20. The learned reader, for the reasons of the version given, may consult the notes to my Hebrew Bible. There are twenty species of birds prohibited; and if we attend to the order in which they are mentioned, there seems some reason in nature for the prohibition. They are such as are not used for food, among other nations, except in cases of necessity. We have next to attend to a new order of unclean winged reptiles.

25 until the evening; And whosoever beareth
aught of their carcase shall wash his clothes, 26 and be unclean until the evening. "All beasts whose hoof is divided, but is not cloven, and chew not the cud, to you shall be unclean;
whatsoever toucheth their "carcases shall" be 27 unclean. And whatsoever goeth upon the paws, among all kinds of four-footed beasts,
those shall be to you unclean; whoso toucheth their carcase shall be unclean until the 28 evening. And he who beareth their carcase shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the evening; they shall be unclean to you.

29 "These also shall be to you unclean, among the reptiles that creep upon the earth; the mole, and the mouse, and the Egyptian lizard with its kind; And the Nile-lizard, and the green-lizard, and the red-lizard, and the snail, 31 and the chameleon. Of all "ground reptiles these shall be to you unclean"; whosoever toucheth them when dead, shall be unclean 32 until the evening. And upon whatsoever any of them, when dead, may fall, it shall be unclean; whether it be any vessel of wood, or raiment, or skin, or sack; whatsoever vessel it be in which any work is done, it must be put into water, and it shall be unclean until 33 the evening; so it shall be cleansed. But every earthen vessel, into which any of them may fall, whatsoever is in it shall be unclean; 34 and itself ye shall break. Every kind of food which may be eaten, on which such water cometh shall be unclean; and every kind of drink that may be drunk out of every such 35 vessel, shall be unclean. And every thing upon which any part of their carcase falleth shall be unclean; be it oven, or fire-stones, they shall be broken down, as being unclean; and to you unclean they shall be. Only a "water-" 36 fountain, or cistern, containing water, shall be clean; but he who toucheth their carcase shall be unclean. And if any part of their carcase 37 fall upon any kind of seed which is to be sown, it shall be clean; Unless water had 38 been put upon the seed, when any part of their carcase fell on it, then it shall be to you unclean. And if any beast, of which ye may 39 eat, die; he that toucheth its carcase shall be unclean until the evening. And he that eat- 40 eth of its carcase shall wash his garments, and be unclean until the evening; he also that beareth its carcase shall wash his garments, and be unclean until the evening. But every rep- 41

tile that creepeth upon the earth shall be regarded as an abomination; it shall not be eaten.
Whatsoever among the reptiles that creep up- 42
on the earth, goeth upon the belly, and whatsoever crawleth upon four feet, or whatsoever hath more than four feet, them ye shall not eat; for they are an abomination. Not with 43 any reptile that creepeth shall ye make yourselves abominable; nor by them become unclean, nor by them be defiled. For I am Je- 44
hovah your God, ye shall therefore hallow yourselves, and be holy, because I am holy;
nor shall ye defile yourselves with any kind of reptile that creepeth upon the earth. For 45
I, Jehovah "your God," have brought you up out of the land of Egypt, to be a God to you; ye shall therefore be holy, because I am holy. This is the law respecting beasts, and 46
fowl, and every animal that moveth in the waters,
and every reptile that creepeth upon the earth;
To make a difference between the unclean and 47
the clean; and between animals that may be eaten, and animals that may not be eaten."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. The Laws respecting animals, birds, fishes, which might or might not be eaten, show the kindness of God, and his regard to the temporal welfare of men. That many living creatures are not proper for food is certain; and were they eaten, instead of nourishing us, would occasion diseases and death. The animals mentioned as clean or fit for food, have been, and are generally used for that purpose, among all nations; and the unclean are as generally avoided.

22. Locust. Of these, four different species are mentioned, which are yet eaten by the Arabs, as they were by the Jews, Math. iii. 4.

35. Fire stones. I have followed Harmer in this rendering; and it.

means the stones placed round their pots, which were set in a hole, dug out of the earth, in the midst of the tent.

CHAP. XII. 2. There are natural reasons for the precepts here given;

CHAPTER XII.

B. C. 1491. On human Uncleannesses; such as arise from child-bearing; and from the leprosy.

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
2 "Speak to the children of Israel, saying, 'If a woman have conceived, and born a male-child; then shall she be unclean seven days;
the same number of days as when removed 3 for her infirmity shall she be unclean. And on the eighth day the foreskin of the child's 4 flesh shall be circumcised. But she shall continue in a state of purification yet three and thirty days; she shall touch no hallowed thing, nor come into the sanctuary, until the days 5 of her purification be completed. But if she bear a female child, then shall she be unclean two weeks, as in her removed state;
and she shall continue in a state of purifi-6 cation sixty-six days. And when the days of her purification for a son, or for a daughter are completed, she shall bring a lamb or a kid of the first year for a burnt-offering, and a pigeon, or a turtle-dove, for a sin-offering, to the door of the congregation-tabernacle to the priest;
7 Which when "the priest" hath offered before Jehovah, and made an atonement for her, she shall be cleansed from her child-bed impurity.
This is the law for her who beareth a male 8 or a female. And if she be not able to bring a lamb or a kid, then she shall bring two turtle-doves, or two pigeons; the one for a burnt-offering, and the other for a sin-offering;
and when the priest hath made an atonement for her, she shall be clean."

CHAP. XII.

2. There are some things in these Laws, which indicate that they are not of constant and perpetual obligation; but were designed for the country and for the people, to whom they were given. Some of the animals prohibited, are, in other countries, found to be nutritious food; and the uncertainty respecting others shows, that now these laws are abrogated. We are now allowed and propriety requires that they should be observed.

5. Is there any natural reason for a difference of time for a woman's uncleanness and purification on the birth of a daughter? The law in this case appoints fourteen days and in the former seven days. She was separated from the sanctuary, also double the period. It is clear from Hippocrates, that a like difference obtained among other nations; but it is diffi-

JEHOVAH also spoke to Moses and Aaron, 1 saying, "When a man shall have in his skin a 2 pustule, a scab, or bright spot, and it be in his skin like the plague of leprosy; then he shall be brought to Aaron the priest, or to one of his sons the priests; And the priest 3 shall inspect the wound in the skin, and if the hair in the wound be turned white, and the wound appear deeper than the skin, it is a plague of leprosy; and the priest who hath inspected him, shall pronounce him unclean.
If the bright spot be white in his skin, and 4
to appearance be not deeper than the skin, and if the hair be not turned white; then the priest shall bind up the wound seven days.
And the priest shall inspect it on the seventh 5
day; and behold, if the wound to appearance be at a stand, and the wound spread not in the skin; then the priest shall bind it up seven days more; And on the seventh day the 6 priest shall again inspect it; and behold, if the wound be darker, and have not spread in the skin; the priest shall pronounce him clean;
it is but a scab; and he shall wash his clothes and be clean. But if, after he hath been in- 7 spected by the priest for the purpose of being declared clean, the scab spread much in the skin, he shall be again inspected by the priest;
And if the priest see clearly that the scab hath 8 spread in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the leprosy.

"If a man be afflicted with the leprosy, then 9 shall he be brought to the priest; And the 10 priest shall inspect him, and lo, if the pustule

to eat whatever is sold in the shambles; and whatever is found to be suitable for food, is to be received with thankfulness. Whatever the kind of our food may be, let us remember the Apostle's admonition, 'and whether we eat or drink, do both to the glory of God through Jesus Christ our Lord.' Thus our table will not prove a trap and a snare to our souls.

cult to assign any just reason for it.

8. With this compare Luke ii. 20—24.

CHAP. XIII. 1. Skin. Literally, 'skin of his flesh,' which is a mere hebraism for skin.

4. Bind up the wound. So the Syriac translator understood the text; and Pilkington and Bishop Law so reader. In short it is highly improbable, on the skin be white, and the hair also be turned white, and there be quick raw flesh in the pustule; It is an old leprosy in the skin; and the priest shall not bind it up, but shall pronounce him unclean; for unclean he is. But if the leprosy have spread abroad in the skin; and if the leprosy have covered the whole skin of him afflicted with it; from his head, even to his foot according to the best inspection of the priest; And when the priest hath inspected him, and the leprosy have covered his whole body, he shall pronounce him afflicted, seeing he is wholly turned white, clean: for clean he is. But whenever raw flesh appeareth in the white he shall be unclean. And the priest shall inspect the raw flesh, and pronounce him unclean; for the raw flesh is a sign that it is an unclean leprosy. Or if the raw flesh be changed and turned to white, he shall come to the priest; And the priest shall inspect him, and, behold, if the wound be turned white; then the priest shall pronounce him that is afflicted, clean: for clean he is. "And if a person have had a boil on his skin, which hath been healed; But if in the place of the boil there be a white pustule, or white and red spot, then shall it be inspected by the priest; And if, when the priest hath inspected it, it should appear deeper than the skin, and if the hair on it be turned white; the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the leprosy broken out of the boil. But if the priest inspect it, and if there be no white hairs on it; and if it be not deeper than the skin, but be of a darkish colour; then the priest shall bind it up seven days; And if it have spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the leprosy. But if the spot remain as it was, and spread not, it is only the scar of the boil; and the priest shall pronounce him clean.

"Or if a person have his skin burned with fire, and if there be in the quick burnt-flesh, a white spot, or of a red and white colour; Then the priest shall inspect it; and if the hair in the spot be turned white, and to appearance it be deeper than the skin; it is a leprosy broken out of the burning: the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the leprosy. But if when the priest inspecteth it, behold, there be no white hair in the spot, and if it be not deeper than the skin, and be of a darkish colour, then the priest shall bind it up seven days. And the priest on the seventh day shall again inspect it; and if it be spread much abroad in the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is the leprosy. But if the spot remain as it was, and spread not in the skin, but be of a darkish colour; it is but the scab of the burning, and the priest shall pronounce him clean: for it is an inflammation from the burning.

"If a man or woman have a sore upon the head or beard; Then the priest shall inspect the sore, and if it be to appearance deeper than the skin, and there be in it thin yellow hair; then the priest shall pronounce him unclean: it is a leprous scall, upon the head or beard. And if, when the priest inspecteth the sore of the scall, behold it be not to appearance deeper than the skin, and there be no black hair in it; then the priest shall bind up the sore of the scall seven days. And on the seventh day the priest shall inspect the sore; and behold, if the scall spread not, and there be in it no yellow hair, and the scall be not to appearance deeper than the skin; He shall be shaved, but the scall shall not be shaved; and the priest shall bind up that a man was to be shut up seven or fourteen days, when any little spot might appear in his skin; but it is natural, when there was any suspicion that it might be leprous, to bind it up for so long. See Note, Heb. Bible.

10-17. It appears, that in certain stages only, the leprosy was contagious; or does Moses describe different kinds of it. When the leprosy spreads all over the body, the Arabs call it Barras; but a milder kind of it, they call Bohak, which appears only on particular parts, and is not infectious. I incline to think, that when the disease had spread through the body, it was not so infectious as when there was raw flesh in the spots.

18-28. From a wound or a burn, a leprous affection might take its rise, when there was leprous habit of body; and hence persons who had any cutaneous eruption were to be inspected by the priest.

45. His clothes rent, &c. The leprous person was to appear as one that mourned for the dead. His clothes rent, his head bare, his chin muffled up, while he cried out; unclean, unclean. He was considered, in some degree, as a person dead and every one was to avoid him as if dead.

34 the scall seven days more; And on the seventh day the priest shall inspect the scall, and, be hold, if the scall be not spread in the skin; and be not to appearance deeper than the skin, then the priest shall pronounce him clean; and he shall wash his clothes, and be clean.
 35 But if the scall spread much in the skin after his being declared clean; Then the priest shall inspect it and if the scall be spread in the skin, the priest shall not seek for yellow hair; he is 36
 37 unclean; But if to appearance the scall be at a stay, and there be black hair grown upon it: the scall is healed, he is clean; and the priest shall pronounce him clean.
 38 "If a man or a woman have in the skin, whit-39 ish spots; Then the priest shall inspect them; and, if the spots in the skin be of a darkish white; it is but a morpew that groweth in 40 the skin: he is clean. And if a man's hair be fallen off his head behind he is bald; yet is he 41 clean. And if his hair hath fallen off from his forehead; he his forehead-bald, yet is he clean.
 42 And if there be on the bald-head, or bald-forehead, a white reddish sore; it is a leprosy sprung upon his bald-head, or his bald-fore-
 43 head. Then the priest shall inspect it; and if the pustule of the sore be white or red on his bald-head, or on his bald-forehead, as the 44 leprosy appeareth in the skin; He is a leprous man, he is unclean; the priest shall pronounce him utterly unclean; there is a leprous sore on his head.
 45 "Now the person who is afflicted with the leprosy shall, with his clothes rent, and his head bare, and his chin covered, cry out, 'Unclean, 46 unclean.' And the time he is afflicted with the leprosy, he shall consider himself unclean; he shall dwell alone; without the camp shall his habitation be.
 47 "If a garment be infected with leprosy, whether it be a woollen garment, or a linen gar-48 ment; Whether it be in the warp, or woof;

of linen, or of woollen; whether in a skin, or in any thing made of skin; And if the infect- 49
 ed part be greenish or reddish in the garment, or in the skin, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing made of skin; it is the leprosy, and shall be showed to the priest; And when the priest hath inspected the infect- 50
 ed garment, he shall bind it up for seven days; And on the seventh day, he shall inspect the 51
 infected place; and if the infection be spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in a skin, or in any thing made of skin; the infection is a fretting leprosy; it is unclean: He shall therefore burn the gar- 52
 ment. Whether the infection be in the warp or woof, in woollen or in linen, or in any thing made of skin; it is a fretting leprosy; it shall be burned with fire. And if, when the priest 53 hath inspected it, behold, the infection be not spread in the garment, either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing made of skin; Then the priest shall command that they wash 54
 the thing in which the infection is, and he shall bind it up seven days more: And if then the 55 priest shall inspect the infected part, after it hath been washed, and if the infected part have not changed its colour, although the infection have not spread, it is unclean; it shall be burned with fire; it is a fretting leprosy, whether it be in the warp or the woof. But if, when the 56 priest hath inspected, and the infection be somewhat dark after it hath been washed; then he shall tear it out of the garment, or out of the skin, or out of the warp, or out of the woof: And if it appear still in the garment, 57 either in the warp, or in the woof, or in any thing made of skin; it is a spreading leprosy; and what is infected by it shall be burned with fire. And if the infection, which was either in 58 the warp, or woof, of a garment, or of any thing made of skin, on its being washed, have departed from it, then it shall be washed a se-

47. The account we have of the leprosy in clothes is particular, but very obscure. It is probable, that the garment worn by leprous persons, receiving infection from their wearers become thereby unclean. A story related by Niebuhr supposes such communication: "A few years ago, a leprous person, in order to obtain a woman he loved, wore during several days an inner dress of fine linen, which he contrived should be sold to her, at a very low price. When he had received information by his spies that she was infected, he acquainted the magistrates, and she was shut up in the hospital where himself, and other leprous persons were secluded." This kind of infection corrodes even the texture of garments. Moses seems 59 cond time, and shall be clean. This is the law, by which the leprosy, in a garment of woollen or linen, either in the warp, or woof, or in any thing made of skins, is to be pronounced clean, or to be pronounced unclean.

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 1491. On the rites of cleansing the leprosy.

¹ Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "This shall be the law of the leper, when he is to be pronounced clean: He shall be brought to the ³ priest; And the priest shall go out of the camp to meet him; and the priest shall inspect him; and if the leprosy be healed in the leper, ⁴ Then shall the priest command him to get for his cleansing two birds, alive and clean, and ⁵ cedar wood, and scarlet, and hyssop. The priest shall then command that one of the birds be killed in an earthen vessel over running ⁶ spring water: He shall take the living bird, and the cedar wood, and the scarlet, and the hyssop, and shall dip them, together with the living bird, in the blood of the bird which hath ⁷ been killed over the spring-water; And he shall sprinkle it on him who is to be cleansed from the leprosy, seven times; and shall pronounce him clean; and the living bird he shall ⁸ let loose into the open field. And he that is to be cleansed shall wash his clothes, and shave off all his hair, and bathe himself in water, that he may be clean; and after that he shall come into the camp, but shall tarry abroad out of his tent, seven days. But on the seventh day, ⁹ he shall again shave all the hair of his head and his beard and his eye-brows, even all his hair he shall shave; and he shall wash his clothes, and bathe his body in water, and he shall be clean. And, on the eighth day, he ¹⁰ shall take two male-lambs, without blemish, "of a year old", and one female-lamb, of a year old, without blemish, and three tenths of an Ephah of fine flour, for a wheaten-offering, mingled with oil, and one log of oil. And the ¹¹ priest who cleanseth him shall present the man who is to be cleansed, and those things, before Jehovah, at the door of the congregation-tabernacle; And the priest shall take one male- ¹² lamb, and bring it for a guilt-offering, with the log of oil, and wave them for a wave-offering before Jehovah. And the lamb shall be kill- ¹³ ed in the place where the sin-offering and the burnt-offering are killed in the holy place; for as the sin-offering, so the guilt-offering belongeth to the priest: it is most holy. And ¹⁴ the priest shall take some of the blood of the guilt-offering, and the priest shall put it upon the tip of the right ear of him who is to be

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS XII & XIII. 1. Let the detail of malignant diseases to which men are liable, teach us not to pride ourselves in beauty of person, nor to trust in our vigour and strength. However lovely the human form may be, how soon will disease destroy its beauty and render it loathsome. Let us then be more solicitous to possess those virtues of mind, those graces of the spirit, the beauty, vigour, and excellence of which, no disease will ever deform or impair.

2. Let this disease remind us of the nature, influence, and consequence of sin. This is the leprosy of the soul, derived from the apostacy of man. Unless counteracted by grace, it spreads in the mind and influences every action of the life; so that the thoughts of the heart are continually evil, and the ways of the sinner only rebellion against God. The sinner infects others by his language and his conduct; he becomes a snare and a curse to those around him. O how should we pray to be healed of this leprosy, for unless it be healed it will destroy us for ever! Let us apply to Jehovah who alone can heal us.

rather to describe a disease natural to linen or woollen garments, than one adventitious.

47-59. See Introduction, Part ii. Ch. 10. § 2.

CHAP. XIV. 3. Go out of the camp. As the leper was removed out of the camp, and could not be admitted till pronounced clean, this was necessary.

4. Two birds, cedar-wood, &c. The Vulgate renders, 'two sparrows.' The original term signifies, 'two small clean birds, of any kind. The cedar wood and hyssop were considered medicinal, in cutaneous complaints, and are here used for the purpose of sprinkling the leper.

VOL. I. PART III.

10. As the age of the female lamb is specified, it is natural to expect that of the male lambs would have been in like manner expressed; especially, as it is usually done. Hence the addition of the Sam. and Sept. ought to be deemed genuine. These were to be offered, the one for a guilt-offering the other for a burnt-offering, ver. 19, 20.—Three parts of an epha, or three omers. The sin-offering was for his impurity, the guilt-offering for his guilt; and the wheaten-offering, in gratitude for the removal of his disease.

cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot ;
 15 And the priest shall take some of the log of oil, and pour it into the palm of his own left 16 hand ; And the priest shall dip his right finger in the oil which is in his left hand, and shall sprinkle the oil with his finger, seven times,
 17 before Jehovah ; And of the rest of the oil which is in his hand, shall the priest put upon the tip of the right ear ; and upon the thumb of the right hand, and upon the great toe of the right foot, of him who is to be cleansed, "on the place where the blood of the guilt-offering 18 had been put" ; And the remainder of the oil that is in the priest's hand he shall pour upon the head of him who is to be cleansed : and thus the priest shall make an atonement for 19 him before Jehovah. And the priest shall offer the sin-offering, and make an atonement for him who is to be cleansed from his uncleanness. And afterward the burnt-offering 20 shall be killed ; And the priest shall offer the burnt-offering and the wheaten-offering upon the altar ; and the priest shall make an atonement for him, and he shall be clean.
 21 But if he be poor, and cannot afford so much ; then he shall take one lamb for a guilt-offering to be waved, to make an atonement for him, and one tenth part of an epha of fine flour, mingled with oil, for a wheaten-offering,
 22 and a log of oil ; And two turtle doves, or two pigeons, such as he is able to get ; and the one shall be a sin-offering, and the other a 23 burnt-offering. And he shall bring them, on the eighth day of his cleansing, to the priest, to the door of the congregation-tabernacle be-24 fore Jehovah. And the priest shall take the lamb of the guilt-offering, and the log of oil, and the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before Jehovah : And the lamb of the 25 guilt-offering shall then be killed, and the priest shall take some of the blood of the guilt-offering, and put it upon the tip of the right ear of him who is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot ; And the priest shall pour 26 some of the oil into the palm of his own left hand ; And the priest shall sprinkle with his 27 right finger some of the oil which is in his left hand, seven times, before Jehovah ; And the 28 priest shall put of the oil, which is in his hand, upon the tip of the right ear of him who is to be cleansed, and upon the thumb of his right hand, and upon the great toe of his right foot, on the place where the blood of the guilt-offering had been put. And the rest of the oil which is 29 in the priest's hand, he shall put upon the head of him who is to be cleansed, to make an atonement for him before Jehovah. And he shall 30 offer one of the turtle-doves, or of the pigeons, such as he can afford ; "The one for a sin-of- 31 fering, and the other for a burnt-offering, with the wheaten-offering ; and the priest shall make an atonement for him who is to be cleansed before Jehovah. This is the law for his cleansing 32 who hath been infected with the leprosy, and who is not able to afford more."

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, and Aaron 33 saying, "If when ye come into the land of 34 Canaan, which I give to you for a possession, I put the leprosy in a house of your possession ; Then he that owneth the house 35 shall come and tell the priest, saying, 'It appeareth to me that there is infection in the house : ' And the priest shall command that 36 they empty the house, before he go to inspect 17. ^aSept. Syr.

31. ^aSept. Syr. Vulg. Ar. does not repeat, such as he can afford.

31. Such as he can afford. These words conclude the 30 verse, and in the Hebrew and Sam. text are repeated in the beginning of this. I consider them to be an interpolation, clearly added from the preceding.

34. In a house, &c. This seems to have been a nitrous or vitriolic exudation, proceeding from stones of a certain quality ; which bursting through the plaister, and spreading on it, became hurtful to the health of the inhabitants. This sort of house-leprosy is called by the Germans salpeter frass, as it is supposed principally to arise from saltpetre.—In these western regions it is seldom very noxious, and for the most part only in the lower floors.

36. Empty the house, &c. Geddes contends, that the last part of this verse has been misunderstood both by ancient and modern translators. For how could the priest's going into the house make any thing in it unclean ? The meaning is, that although the walls of the house might be infected, yet its contents were not for that defiled. These were therefore ordered to be brought out previously to the priest's going in, that the bare walls might be more accurately examined, and from the appearances a proper judgment formed.

the infection; for not any thing which is in the house shall be unclean. And afterward the priest shall go in to inspect the house; 37 And if, on inspecting the infection, behold the infection be on the walls of the house with hollow streaks, of a greenish or reddish colour, which to appearance are deeper than 38 the wall; Then the priest shall go out of the house to the door of the house, and shall 39 shut up the house seven days; And the priest shall come again the seventh day, and shall inspect it; and if the infection be spread 40 in the walls of the house; Then the priest shall command that they take away the stones in which the infection is, and they shall cast them into an unclean place without the city; 41 And he shall cause the house to be scraped within round about, and they shall pour out the dust that they scrape off without the city 42 into an unclean place; And they shall take other stones, and put in the place of those stones; and they shall take other mortar, and 43 shall replaster the house. And if the infection return and break out in the house, after that the stones have been taken away, and the 44 house scraped, and replastered; Then the priest shall come and inspect; and, if the infection have spread in the house, it is a fretting leprosy in the house: it is unclean. The 45 house shall then be broken down; and the stones of it, and the timber of it, and all the mortar of the house, shall be carried out of the city into an unclean place. Moreover, he 46 that hath gone into the house, all the while that it was shut up, shall be unclean until the evening. And he that hath lain in the house 47 shall wash his clothes; and he that hath eaten in the house shall wash his clothes, "and be unclean until the evening". And when the priest 48 goeth in, and inspecteth it; and if the infection have not spread in the house, after the house was replastered; then the priest shall pronounce the house clean, because the infection is healed. And to cleanse the house shall be got two 49 birds, and cedar-wood, and scarlet thread, and hyssop; And one of the birds shall be killed 50 in an earthen vessel over spring-water; And 51 he shall take the cedar-wood, and the hyssop, and the scarlet thread, and the living bird, and dip them in the blood of the bird, that hath been killed over the spring-water, and sprinkle the house, seven times; And he shall cleanse the 52 house with the blood of the bird, and with the spring-water, and with the cedar-wood, and with the hyssop, and with the scarlet thread: But the living bird he shall let escape out of the 53 city into the open fields: thus shall he make an atonement for the house, and it shall be clean. This is the law for all kinds of leprous infec- 54 tion, and scalls; for the leprosy of a garment, 55 and of a house, And for a pustule, and for a 56 scab, and for a spot; To teach you when a thing 57 is to be pronounced unclean, and when clean: this is the law concerning the leprosy."

47. * Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. The leprosy was considered a disease incurable by any ordinary means. It was sometimes inflicted as a punishment for sin. Thus God punished the sin of Miriam, Num. xii. 10, the presumption of Uzziah, 2 Chron. xxvi. 19, 20, and the covetousness of Gehazi, 2 Kings, vi. 27. It was peculiarly distressing. It cut off those infected from social intercourse, and from participating in the rites and privileges of divine worship. They either dwelt alone, or only associated with those who were in the same unhappy and miserable condition.

2. From the directions here given, we find some were healed, and this healing the Jews ascribed to the divine power. In some instances, the cure was miraculous. Thus Miriam, on the intercession of Moses, was healed, and Naaman the Syrian, by washing in the Jordan, 2 Kings, v. 14, according to the direction of the prophet.

Were not these circumstances designed to show, that the leprosy of sin, can only be removed by divine interposition and influence? To cleanse this leprosy, the blood of the Saviour was shed, and the sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit are imparted. Our Lord healed many lepers to show his power to save.

3. It was the office of the priest to inspect the leper, and to pronounce him clean or unclean. As the disease is supposed to be contagious, it was only by the divine appointment, that the priest could escape the infection. While in the path of duty, he had a right to expect the divine favour, and to hope that God would keep him from the "pestilence that walketh in darkness, and from the destruction that wasteth at noon-day."

4. When the leper was pronounced clean, he must offer the prescribed sacrifices. This was to be done to show his obedience, and to

CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 1491. Uncleanness arising from different kinds of issues.

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses and to Aaron,
2 saying, "Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them, 'If any man have an issue
from his flesh, because of his issue from his flesh, 3 he is unclean. And such is his uncleanness from his issue, that whether his issue run, or be stopped, 'he is unclean all the time his issue runneth or is stopped'. Such is his unclean-4 ness, that, Every bed whereon he who hath the issue lieth, is unclean; and every thing 5 whereon he sitteth shall be unclean. And whosoever toucheth his bed shall wash his clothes, and bathe in water, and be unclean 6 until the evening. And he who sitteth on any thing, on which he sat who hath the issue, shall wash his clothes, and bathe in water, 7 and be unclean until the evening. And he who toucheth the flesh of him who hath the issue, shall wash his clothes, and bathe in wa-8 ter, and be unclean until the evening. And if he who hath the issue spit upon one who is clean, then he shall wash his clothes, and bathe in water, and be unclean until the even-9 ing. And every saddle on which he who hath 10 the issue rideth shall be unclean. And whosoever toucheth any thing which was under him shall be unclean until the evening; and he who beareth any of those things, shall wash
his clothes, and bathe in water, and be un-11 clean until the evening. And every one whom he who hath the issue toucheth, and hath not washed his hands in water, shall wash his clothes, and bathe in water, and be unclean
12 until the evening. And the earthen vessel, which he who hath the issue toucheth, shall be broken; and every vessel of wood which he toucheth, shall be rinsed in water. And 13 when he who hath an issue is cleansed of his issue; then he shall number to himself seven days for his cleansing, and wash his clothes, and bathe his body in spring-water, and shall be clean. And on the eighth day he shall 14 take two turtle-doves, or two pigeons, and bring them before Jehovah to the door of the congregation-tabernacle, and give them to the priest; And the priest shall offer them, the 15

one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement before Jehovah for him who had the issue."

"And if any man hath an involuntary emis- 16
sion, then he shall bathe his whole body in water, and be unclean until the evening. And 17 every garment, and every skin, on which the matter falleth, shall be washed with water, and be unclean until the evening. The woman with 18 whom 'her husband shall lie', and cohabit;
even both shall bathe in water, and be unclean
until the evening."

"And if a woman have an issue, and her 19 issue be what is usual, she shall be in a removed state seven days; and whosoever toucheth her shall be unclean until the evening.
And every thing on which she lieth in her 20
removed state shall be unclean; every thing
also on which she sitteth shall be unclean.
And whosoever toucheth her bed shall wash 21 acknowledged with thanksgiving; and more especially that distinguishing blessing, the deliverance from a state of spiritual disease and misery, and the restoration of our souls to life, health, and happiness.

CHAP. XV. 2. Issue from his flesh. Michaelis renders, seed-flux, and Geddes, gonorrhea, after the Greek version. This disease may arise from mere weakness; but in this case it is mild and not infectious. Moses seems to describe the disease in a state of virulence, arising from infection, and as being peculiarly contagious. The effects of this disease in hot climates, must be terrible; and to prevent these effects is the great design of this law. The methods directed, are founded in wisdom; and experience proves, that by attending to them, infection is prevented.

16—18. The design of this law was, as Michaelis has observed, to discountenance polygamy. I consider שבת as redundant, being implied in the term seed.

18—23. The circumstances here noticed, show that there are in the

And if her husband lie by her at all, and the token of her removed state be upon him, he shall be unclean seven days; and every bed on which he lieth shall be unclean. And if a woman have the usual issue many days, out of the time of her ordinary period, or if it run beyond the time of her ordinary period; all the days of the issue she shall be unclean as in the days of her removed state. Every bed on which she lieth all the days of her issue, shall be to her as the bed of her removed state; and whatsoever she sitteth upon shall be unclean, as the uncleanness of her removed state. And whosoever toucheth those things shall be unclean, and shall wash his clothes, and bathe in water, and be unclean until the evening. But if she be cleansed of her issue, then she shall number to herself seven days, and after that she shall be clean. And on the eighth day she shall take two turtle-doves, or two pigeons, and bring them to the priest, to the door of the congregation-tabernacle. And the priest shall offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering; and the priest shall make an atonement for her before Jehovah, for the issue which made her unclean. Thus shall ye warn the children of Israel to keep themselves from uncleanness; that they die not for their uncleanness, when they defile my tabernacle which is among them. This is the law for him that hath an issue, or who hath an involuntary emission, and is defiled thereby; And for her unwell from her issue; (for man or for woman who have such issues;) and for him that lieth by her who is unclean."

CHAPTER XVI.

B. C. 1491. How the annual atonement must be made.

AND Jehovah spoke to Moses, after the death of the two sons of Aaron, when they offered strange-fire before Jehovah, and died; And Jehovah said to Moses, "Speak to Aaron, thy brother, that he come not at all times into the sanctuary within the veil opposite the mercy-seat, which is upon the ark, that he may not die: for in the cloud over the mercy-seat I will appear. In this manner shall Aaron come to the sanctuary; he shall take a steer for a sin-offering, and a ram for a burnt-offering. He shall put on the holy, peculiar tunic, and shall have on his peculiar drawers, and shall be girded with the peculiar girdle, and with the peculiar mitre shall be attired: these are holy garments; therefore shall he bathe his body in water, and then put them on. And he shall take of the congregation of the children of Israel, two goats for a sin-offering, and one ram for a burnt-offering. And Aaron shall offer the steer

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. We see in this chapter, not only the infirmity of our nature, but the punishment of criminal indulgence. Those who give themselves up to the gratification of their lusts, generally suffer for it in this life. How needful the admonition of the Apostle, "to keep our vessels, that is, our bodies, in sanctification and honour." They who neglect it, will find the due reward of their deeds, in the loathsome diseases they contract, and in the pains and miseries they bring on themselves.

2. The great design of the other precepts, was not only to preserve and promote health, but to teach purity of heart. They who are not east some natural reasons for these precautions, which do not operate in colder regions. The tendency of every kind of matter to putrefaction, and the danger arising thence to health, made attention to cleanliness necessary.

influenced by a sense of propriety, and of what is becoming, in little things, are as void of it in greater; and it may truly be said, that such as violate the rules of decency in any case, will not much regard purity of mind. Let us ever remember, that the sentiments we form are derived from our social intercourse and confirmed by our actions. of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and make an atonement for himself, and for his 7 household. And he shall take the two goats, and present them before Jehovah at the door
8 of the congregation-tabernacle. And Aaron shall cast lots for the two goats; one lot marked for Jehovah, and the other lot for a scape-goat.
9 And Aaron shall bring the goat on which the lot "for Jehovah" fell, and offer it for a sin-
10 offering. But the goat on which the lot for the scape-goat fell, shall be presented alive before Jehovah, to make an atonement with him, and to let him go for a scape-goat into the 11 wilderness. Aaron shall then bring the steer of the sin-offering, which is for himself, and shall make an atonement for himself, and for his household; and when the steer of the sin-
12 offering for himself, hath been killed, He shall then take a censer full of burning coals of fire from off the altar before Jehovah, and his hands full of sweet incense, beat small, and 13 bring it within the veil; And he shall put the incense upon the fire before Jehovah, that the cloud of the incense may cover the mercy-seat which is upon the testimony, that he may not 14 die. And he shall take some of the blood of the steer, and sprinkle once with his finger the east side of the mercy-seat; and before the mercy-seat shall he sprinkle of the blood with his finger seven times."

15 "Then the goat of the sin-offering, which is for the people, shall be killed; and Aaron shall bring some of its blood within the veil, and do with that blood as he did with the blood of the steer, and sprinkle it against the mercy-seat,
16 and before the mercy-seat. Thus he shall make an atonement for the sanctuary, on account of the uncleanness of the children of Israel, and of all their sinful transgressions; and so shall he do for the congregation-tabernacle, which resideth among them, amidst their uncleanness.
17 And there shall be no man in the congregation-tabernacle when he goeth in to make an atonement in the sanctuary, until he come out, when he shall have made an atonement for himself, and for his household, and for the whole congregation of Israel. He shall then go out to 18 the altar which is before Jehovah, and make an atonement for it; and shall take some of the blood of the steer, and some of the blood of the goat, and put it upon the horns of the altar round about. And he shall sprinkle of the 19 blood upon it with his finger seven times, and cleanse it, and hallow it from the uncleanness of the children of Israel."

"And when he hath made an end of expia- 20
ting the sanctuary, and the congregation-tabernacle, and the altar, the live-goat shall be brought. And Aaron shall lay both his hands 21 upon the head of the live-goat, and confess over him all the iniquities of the children of Israel, and all their sinful transgressions, putting them upon the head of the goat, and shall send him away by the hand of a fit man into the wilderness. And the goat shall bear upon 22 himself all their iniquities into a land not frequented; the goat shall be let go into the wilderness. And he who let go the goat, as a 26
scape-goat, shall wash his clothes, and bathe his body in water, and afterward come into the camp". Aaron shall then go into the con- 23 gregation-tabernacle, and shall put off the peculiar garments, which he put on when he went into the sanctuary, and shall leave them there; And he shall bathe his body in water 24 in the holy place, and put on his garments, and come forth, and offer his burnt-offering, and the burnt-offering of the people, and make an atonement for himself, and for the people. And the fat of the sin-offering shall 26
he burn upon the altar; But the steer for the 27 sin-offering, and the goat for the sin-offering, whose blood was brought into the sanctuary to make atonement, shall be carried out of the month, ye shall humble yourselves, and shall

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. The day of the annual Atonement, was one of the most solemn among the Jews. While ceremonies the most significant were performed, the people were to humble themselves, by confessing their sins; and by imploring forgiveness, they were to show their reliance on the appointed method of reconciliation. The High Priest was chiefly employed in performing the holy ceremonies; and every part of them was designed to call sin to upon the altar of Jehovah at the door of the after whom they go astray. This shall be a perpetual statute to them, throughout their generations.

his sacrifice, and his entrance into heaven. Heb. ix. 7-12; and the day of atonement, and shows their reference to our Lord. The Sanctuary, the most holy place, was typical of heaven, where God dwells and manifests his glory. The High Priest only was admitted in particular noted for this sort of idolatry, which was highly obscene and lascivious.

12 life. Therefore I say to the children of Israel, no one of you shall eat blood, nor shall any of those who sojourn among you, eat blood.
13 For whosoever of the children of Israel, or of those who sojourn among them, shall hunt and catch any beast or fowl that may be eaten; he shall even pour out its blood, and 14 cover it with dust. For the life of all flesh is its blood; it is its life; therefore I say to the children of Israel, Ye shall not eat the blood of any kind of flesh; because the life of all flesh is its blood; whosoever eateth it shall be 15 cut off. And every person who eateth that which died of itself, or that which hath been torn with beasts, whether he be a native or a sojourner, he shall both wash his clothes, and bathe in water, and be unclean until the even-there, to show that the way to the Holiest was not yet open; nor even must he enter without blood, to indicate his own sin. Our Lord has offered himself a sacrifice of a sweet smelling savour, and has obtained eternal redemption for us. The atonement which the Jewish High Priest made, was only for the congregation of Israel, but that of our Lord for the sins of the world. When he entered the heavenly sanctuary, it was by his own blood, and the incense of his merit ever ascends before the throne of the Eternal Jehovah, and powerfully prevails. Let us by faith apply to him, that we may be saved from wrath, and admitted to share in the glories of the upper sanctuary.

8. Them. So the text here and verse 10, 13; the versions read you.

10. I will set my face, &c. that is, that person will provoke me, and I will cut him off. The reason follows, because God had appointed blood to make atonement.

CHAP. XVIII. 3. It is clear, that both among the Egyptians, and most of the eastern nations, incestuous connexions were formed and sanctioned by corrupt laws. The prohibitions contained in this chapter, accord with the best feelings of the human heart; and are as wise in their policy as they are just in their principles.

5. By them he shall live. He shall not fear the civil magistrate; for them not, nor bathe his body; then he shall bear his iniquity.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. The prohibitions of this chapter imply, that the Israelites were still attached to idolatry; they brought not, as commanded, the victims to the congregation-tabernacle. Hence the crime of slaughtering them in any other place is made capital. After all the divine manifestations, and the repeated precepts already given, they still persisted in following their own ways. Have not we imitated them in this? To us, God has given line upon line, and precept upon precept, and we have refused to hearken and obey. Let us guard against future violations of the divine law.

2. Let the appointment of blood, which is the life of all flesh, to the law, which he observes, secures life to him.

6. To cohabit with her. I have preferred the sense to the idiom through this chapter, as being equally perspicuous and according better with our habits. In these prohibitory laws Moses meant, cohabitation both in the married state and out of it; so that he equally forbids marriage among such relatives and all carnal intercourse.—I Jehovah forbid it. I have followed the Arabic in supplying forbid, or command, as more appropriate and expressive, than saying, I am Jehovah.

7. I have followed the sense attributed to the first clause by Vatablus, Lightfoot, and others. See Poole's Synopsis. All the precepts are to the male, as the principal agents in such unlawful violations of or the daughter of thy mother, born at home or born abroad; with her thou shalt not coha-10 bit. With thy son's daughter or thy daughter's daughter, thou shalt not cohabit; for they 11 are sprung from thee. Thou shalt not cohabit with thy father's wife's daughter, begotten by thy father; she is thy sister; "with her thou 12 shalt not cohabit". With thy father's sister thou shalt not cohabit: she is thy father's near kins-13 woman. Thou shalt not cohabit with thy mother's sister: she is thy mother's near kinswo-14 man. Thou shalt not approach thy father's brother's wife, with whom he cohabiteth: she 15 is thine aunt. With thy daughter-in-law thou shalt not cohabit: she is thy son's wife; with 16 her thou shalt not cohabit. Thou shalt not cohabit with thy brother's wife: with her thy 17 brother cohabiteth. With a woman and her daughter thou shalt not cohabit; nor shalt thou cohabit with her son's daughter, or her daughter's daughter: for they are her near kinswo-18 men: it is wickedness. Thou shalt not take thy wife's sister to vex her, by cohabiting with 19 her, while thy wife liveth. Neither shalt thou approach a woman, to cohabit with her, 20 while in a removed state. Moreover thou shalt not lie carnally with thy neighbour's wife, defil-21 ing thyself with her. And thou shalt not suffer any of thine offspring to be devoted to Molech, and so profane the name of thy God: I, Jeho-22 vah, forbid it. Thou shalt not lie with mankind,

as with womankind: it is an abomination.
Thou shalt not pollute thyself, by cohabiting 23
with a beast; nor to a beast shall a woman prostitute herself: it is the perversion of nature. Defile not yourselves by any of these 24 things; for by all these are the nations defiled, whom I am about to drive out before you.
For the land is defiled; therefore will I visit 25 its iniquity upon it; and the land itself shall vomit out its inhabitants. Keep, therefore, my 26 statutes and my judgments, and let not either a native, or any of those who sojourn among you, commit any of these abominations; That 28
the land may not vomit you out also, when ye defile it, as it vomited out the nations that were before you. "For all these abominations 27 have the men of the land done, who were before you, and the land is defiled". For whoso- 29 ever shall commit any of these abominations, even those persons that commit them shall be cut off from among their people. Ye shall, 30 therefore, keep mine ordinances; and none of these abominable customs shall ye practise, which were practised by those before you; nor shall ye thereby defile yourselves: I, Jehovah your God, so command."

make atonement, remind us of the precious blood of our Lord, by which a real and an effectual atonement was made for our sins. He gave his life a ransom for us. He laid down his life for his sheep; and if the life of the flesh be the blood, this was shed to expiate our guilt, to reconcile us to God, and to be the foundation of all our hopes. Let us thankfully remember this great atoning Lamb; and while we rejoice in our exemption from Levitical Ordinances, let us ever pay a believing regard to Jesus who was crucified for us.

have show the dreadful depravity of the nations of Canaan. They had violated the most obvious laws of nature. The closest relationship was no bar to criminal intercourse; the father married his own daughter, and the son his own mother. Crimes even more degrading were common. No wonder that the land should vomit out such a people. It seems just to extirpate a race, who had thus carried depravity to its highest pitch, and respecting whom, there was no hope of repentance and reformation.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. The moral precepts of this chapter deserve universal regard. How unbecoming our nature, are injustice, fraud, slander, and enmity? How much more unbecoming the character of a Christian are they? Our Lord has inculcated moral duties, as what alone can manifest our faith in him, and our right to be regarded as his disciples. Let us pray that every moral precept may be written on our hearts, and that we may be assisted to observe and uniformly practise it.

26. Upon the mountains. It is evident from Exek. xviii. 6, that eating on the mountains, was considered as a crime, and is by him classed with idolatry and other grievous transgressions. Is it probable, then, that there should be no mention, no prohibition, made of it in the law of Moses? But if it be not here mentioned, it is no where mentioned. I am therefore fully persuaded, that the Septuagint have alone preserved the genuine reading; על ההרים instead of על ההרים.

Therefore shall ye observe all my statutes, and 37
all my judgments, and do them: I am Jehovah."

2. The superstitions here condemned, are an indication of a mind debased by gross ignorance, and a heart depraved by the worst passions. Those who seek to astrologers, fortune tellers, &c, to obtain information concerning the future events of their lives, are highly criminal in the sight of God; they manifest a want of reliance on God's word and providence; and presumptuously endeavour to intrude into what God has kindly kept secret. Avoiding such impious conduct, let us regard the law of the Lord, and rest assured that it shall finally be well with us.

And the man that lieth with his father's wife, with whom his father cohabiteth, both of them shall surely be put to death; upon themselves shall their blood be. And if a man lie with his daughter-in-law, both of them shall surely be put to death; they have committed incest; upon themselves shall their blood be. If a man lie with a man as he lieth with a woman, both of them have committed an abomination; they shall surely be put to death; upon themselves shall their blood be. And if a man take to his bed both daughter and mother; it is the greatest crime: they shall be burnt with fire, both he and they; that there be no such crime among you. And if a man lie with a beast, he shall surely be put to death; and ye shall kill the beast. And if a woman prostitute herself to any beast, ye shall kill the woman, and the beast; they shall surely be put to death; on themselves shall their blood be. And if a man shall take his sister, his father's daughter, or his mother's daughter, and they cohabit together, it is a shameless deed; and they shall even be cut off in the sight of their people; he hath cohabited with his sister; he shall bear his iniquity. And if a man shall lie and cohabit with a woman in her removed state, and she hath consented to cohabit with him;

both of them shall be cut off from among their people. With thy mother's sister, or thy father's sister, thou shalt not cohabit; for this is to cohabit with a near kinswoman: they shall bear their iniquity. And if a man shall lie with his uncle's wife, with whom his uncle cohabiteth, they shall bear their sin; childless they shall die. And if a man shall take to his bed his brother's wife, with whom his brother cohabiteth, it is a detestable thing; childless shall they be.

"Ye shall therefore keep all my statutes, and all my judgments, and execute them; that the land, whither I bring you to dwell, may not vomit you out. And ye shall not walk by the statutes of the nations, which I am about to cast out before you; for they committed all these things, and therefore I abhor them. But to you I say, 'Ye shall inherit their land, and I will give it to you in possession, a land that floweth with milk and honey. I am Jehovah your God, who have separated you from other peoples. Ye shall therefore distinguish between clean beasts and unclean, and between unclean fowls and clean; and ye shall not make yourselves abominable by beast, or by fowl, or by any kind of animal that creepeth on the ground, which I have pointed out to you as unclean. And ye shall be holy to me: because I, Jehovah, am holy, and have distinguished you from other people, that ye should be mine. So a man or woman who is a necromancer or prognosticator shall surely be put to death; they shall be stoned with stones: upon themselves shall their blood be.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. In what a deplorable state is human nature, when left to unaided reason, and to the influence of the passions! The gross idolatry, and the shameful vices here noticed, are a sufficient proof of the state of the heathen world. Frightful as the picture is, which the Apostle has drawn in the first chapter to the Romans, it is not overcharged. Every part of the heathen world verifies it. There is no nation, without the divine Law and the blessed Gospel, where the same abominations are not committed. In the best periods of the Roman and Grecian empires, notwithstanding their literary attainments, these crimes were common.

2. Let this affecting view of human nature, excite our gratitude for the means of grace by which we are distinguished. The Bible has

9. On himself shall his blood lie; that is, his death shall not be imputed to another as a crime; he is the cause of his own death. Purver renders, 'His blood is chargeable on himself.'

10. Either the first or second clause of this verse must be deemed an interpolation. Geddes and Dathe agree in rejecting it. A transcriber might easily commit the mistake.

B. C. 1491. Laws relating to the priests;—their mourning, marriages, &c.

1 AGAIN Jehovah said to Moses, "Speak to the priests, the sons of Aaron, and say to them, None of you shall be defiled for the dead among 2 his people: Unless for his near kindred; for his father or his mother, or his son, or his 3 daughter, or his brother: And for his own sister, a virgin, who hath not been married; 4 for her he may be defiled. But if she have a husband, among his people, he shall not de-5 file himself for her by any uncleanness. They shall not make bald their head, nor shall they 6 shave the hair of their beard, nor make any cuttings in their flesh. They shall be holy to their God, and not profane the name of their God: because they offer the burnt-offerings
7 of Jehovah, the portion of their God, therefore they shall be holy. They shall not take a harlot, or one dishonoured, for a wife; nor 8 shall they take a woman divorced from her husband: for they are hallowed to their God.
Ye shall, therefore, account them holy; because they offer the portion of your God; holy shall they be to you, because I, Jehovah, who have hallowed them, am holy."

9 "If the daughter of any priest profane herself by playing the harlot, she profaneth her 10 father: she shall be burnt with fire. And he who is the high-priest among his brethren, upon whose head the anointing oil hath been poured, and who hath been consecrated, and clothed with the holy garments, shall not un-11 cover his head, nor rend his clothes: Nor to any dead body shall he approach, nor defile himself for his father, or for his mother. He 12 shall not go out of the sanctuary, lest he profane the sanctuary of his God, while the crown and the anointing oil of his God are upon him:

I, Jehovah, so command. A virgin only shall 13
he take for a wife. A widow, or one divorced, 14 or dishonoured, or a harlot, these shall he not take: but a virgin of his own people shall he take for a wife; Lest he profane his seed, 15 among his people; for I, Jehovah, have hallowed him."

And Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, 16
"Speak to Aaron, saying, 'Let none of thy 17 seed, throughout their generations, who hath any blemish, approach to offer the portion of his God. For no man who hath a blemish 18 shall approach; a blind man, or a lame or maimed, or one that hath any thing superfluous, Or a man that is broken-footed, 19 or broken-handed, Or crooked-backed, or a 20 dwarf, or that hath a blemish in his eye, or hath a dry or purulent scab, or hath a rupture;
No man that hath such a blemish, of the seed 21
of Aaron, the priest, shall approach to offer
the burnt-offerings of Jehovah: he hath a blemish;
he shall not approach to offer the portion of his God. He shall eat of the portion of his 22
God, both of the most holy, and of the holy;
But he shall not go near the veil, nor approach 23
the altar, because he hath a blemish; lest he profane my holy things: for I, Jehovah, have hallowed them." And Moses told this to Aaron, 24 and to his sons, and to all the children of Israel.

by the holy examples and lives of their teachers. In short, nothing

CHAPTER XXII.

B. C. 1491. When the priests must abstain from holy things.

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
2 "Speak to Aaron and his sons, when they are to abstain from the holy things of the children of Israel, that they profane not my holy name; for those things are hallowed to me: I am
3 Jehovah. Say to them. 'Whosoever of all your seed, throughout your generations, having his uncleanness upon him, shall approach to the holy things which the children of Israel hallow to Jehovah, that person shall be cut off from before me: I, Jehovah
4 so command. Whosoever of the seed of Aaron is a leper, or hath a running-issue, he shall not eat of the holy things, until he be clean. And whoso toucheth any thing, and becometh unclean, or a man, who hath had an
5 involuntary emission; Or whosoever toucheth any "unclean" reptile, and thereby becometh unclean; or a man who hath any kind of un-
6 cleanness, by which he may be defiled; The person who hath touched any such, shall be unclean until the evening, and shall not eat of the holy things, unless he have bathed his 7 body in water: And when the sun is down, he shall be clean, and shall afterward eat of the holy things; because they are his food.
8 That which dieth of itself, or is torn by beasts, they shall not eat to defile themselves there-
9 by: I, Jehovah, forbid it. They shall, therefore, keep mine ordinance, lest if they profane it, they bear sin for it: I, Jehovah, have hal-10 lowed them. There shall no stranger eat of what is holy; he who sojourneth with a priest or a hired servant, shall not eat of what is holy. But if a priest have bought a person 11 with his money, he may eat of it, and "those" born in his house may eat of his food. If the 12 daughter of a priest be married to a stranger, she may not eat of the offering of holy things; But if the daughter of a priest be a widow, 13 or divorced, and have no child, and be returned to her father's house, she shall eat of her father's food, as in her youth; but of it no stranger shall eat."

"And if a man eat what is holy unwittingly, 14 then he shall add a fifth part more to the holy thing, and give it to the priest. Thus they 15 shall not profane the holy things of the children of Israel, which they offer to Jehovah; Or bring on themselves the guilt of trespass, 16 by their eating of the holy things; for I, Jehovah, have hallowed them."

Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak 17 unto Aaron, and to his sons, and to all the children of Israel, and say to them, 'Whoso- 18 ever of the house of Israel, or of the strangers who sojourn with them, will bring his oblation for any vow, or for any free-will-offering, and will offer it for a burnt-offering to Jehovah; To be accepted, it shall be a male, without 19 blemish, from the herd, from the sheep, or from the goats. But whatsoever hath a ble- 20 mish, ye shall not offer; for it shall not be accepted for you. And whosoever offereth a 21 sacrifice to Jehovah to accomplish a vow, or as a free-will-offering, from the herd or from the flock, it shall be perfect, to be accepted; should be seen in a priest of God, which may expose religion to contempt.

CHAP. XXII. 2. I have followed the arrangement of Houbigant, in rendering this verse. If other persons were defiled by the things mentioned, it was proper the priests should, and that in this state, they should be debarred from offering, or eating of the sacrifices.

offered himself, as a lamb, "without spot or blemish." As the Holy Place was also a type of heaven, it was also intimated, that every one who entereth there, must be sanctified and holy; for nothing that defileth will be admitted. Let us then earnestly seek, with all our hearts, that holiness, that perfection, without which no man shall see the Lord.

18—25. These prohibitions had doubtless a moral tendency. They were designed to remind the Israelites of the sovereignty of God, and that he ought to be honoured with the best of their possessions. The prophet Malachi charges them with sinning by neglecting these prohibitions.

24. That which is bruised, &c. Michaelis has justly observed, that

22 there shall be no blemish in it. The blind or bruised, or having the rot, or the dry or purulent scab, these ye shall not offer to Jehovah. Either a steer, or a sheep or goat which hath any thing superfluous or lacking in its parts, may be offered as a free-will offering; for a vow it shall not be accepted. 24 Ye shall not offer to Jehovah that which is bruised, or crushed, or broken, or castrated. 25 In your land ye shall not do this; Nor of any of these, from the hand of a sojourner, shall ye offer the portion of your God; for being corrupted and blemished, they shall not be accepted for you".

26 Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, "When a steer, or lamb or kid, is brought forth, then it shall be seven days under the dam; and from the eighth day, and thenceforth, it shall be 28 accepted for a burnt-offering to Jehovah. But neither cow nor ewe, shall ye kill on the same 29 day with her young. And when ye offer a thanksgiving-sacrifice to Jehovah; that it may 30 be accepted, It shall be eaten on the same day ye offer it; ye shall leave none of it until 31 the morrow: I, Jehovah, forbid it. Therefore shall ye keep my commandments, and do them; 32 Nor shall ye profane my holy name; but hallowed will I be among the children of Israel; I 33 am Jehovah who have hallowed you, And have brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am Jehovah."

B. C. 1491. The various Festivals, and the manner of observing them.

1. Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. 1. Every precept that God gave had the purity and honour of his own worship in view. As he would not allow persons who had any bodily blemish to minister at the Altar, so he would not allow those who might approach him, to come when contaminated and polluted. Holiness being the perfection of his own nature, holy must they be who are admitted to his presence. He will not suffer his name, his house, and his ordinances to be profaned with impurity. He who does this must bear his iniquity.

four methods of emasculating animals are here mentioned. Geddes renders castration, or emasculation, or evulsion, or exsection. One reason of this prohibitory law may have been, to deter the Israelites from the castration

"Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them, 2 'The feasts of Jehovah, which ye shall celebrate by holy convocations, are these. Six days shall 3 work be done; but the seventh day, or the sabbath of rest, let there be a holy convocation; no work shall ye do on it: let it be a sabbath, to Jehovah, in all your dwellings.

"These are the other feasts of Jehovah, holy 4 convocations which ye shall celebrate at their appointed times. On the fourteenth day of 5 the first month at evening, Jehovah's pass-over. And on the fifteenth day of the same 6 month, is the feast of unleavened bread to Jehovah: seven days ye must eat unleavened bread. On the first day ye shall have a holy 7 convocation: on it ye shall do no servile work. But ye shall offer a burnt-offering to Jehovah 8 on each of the seven days; on the seventh day is a holy convocation; on it ye shall do no servile work."

Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak 9 to the children of Israel, and say to them, 10 'When ye shall have come into the land which I give to you, and shall have reaped its harvest, ye shall then bring a sheaf of the first-fruits of your harvest to the priest; And ye shall 11 wave the sheaf before Jehovah, that it may be accepted for you; on the morrow after the sabbath the priest shall wave it. And on the 12 day in which the sheaf is waved, ye shall offer a male lamb, without blemish, of the first year, for a burnt-offering to Jehovah. And its 13 wheaten-offering, two tenths of an ephah of fine flour mingled with oil, for a burnt-offering to Jehovah of a sweet savour: and its drink-offer-

2. God often reminds them of their wonderful deliverance from Egypt as a motive to obedience. "I am Jehovah, who have hallowed you, and brought you out of the land of Egypt to be your God," to save you from idolatry; to teach you the right way, and to lead and guide you in it. What could influence them, if such kindness and grace did not? O let the greater deliverance wrought by Christ for us, deeply affect our hearts, lead us to constant obedience, and to persevering exertions for the promotion of his honour and glory.

16 sabbaths; Even to the morrow after the seventh sabbath shall ye number fifty days; and ye shall offer another wheaten-offering to Jehovah.

17 Ye shall bring from your habitations two wave-loaves of two tenths of an ephah: they shall be of fine flour; they shall be baked with lea-

18 ven, as first-fruits to Jehovah. And ye shall offer with the bread seven lambs, without blemish, of the first year, and one steer, and two rams "without blemish"; those shall be for a burnt-offering to Jehovah; with their wheaten-offering, and their drink-offerings, they shall be a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to Jeho-

20 feast-sacrifice. And the priest shall wave them with the bread of the first-fruits, for a wave-offering before Jehovah, with the two lambs: holy shall they be to Jehovah, for the priest.

21 And ye shall celebrate on that very day, a holy convocation: on it ye shall do no servile work: a perpetual statute shall this be throughout your generations, in all your dwellings.

22 "And when ye reap the harvest of your land, ye shall not completely reap the corners of your fields, nor shall ye gather any gleanings of your harvest: ye shall leave them for the poor, and for the stranger: I, Jehovah your God, so command.

²³

rated by blowing of trumpets, and a holy convocation. Ye shall do no servile work on it: 25 but ye shall offer a burnt-offering to Jehovah.

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Also ²⁶
²⁷ the tenth day of this seventh month shall be a day of atonement; a holy convocation shall ye have; and ye shall humble yourselves, and offer a burnt-offering to Jehovah. And on 28 that same day ye shall do no work; for it is a day of atonement, to make an atonement for you before Jehovah, your God. For whoso- 29 ever he be that humbleth not himself on that same day, he shall be cut off from among his people. And whosoever he be that doeth any 30 work on that same day, that person I will destroy from among his people. Ye shall do no 30 manner of work on it: a perpetual statute shall this be throughout your generations, in all your dwellings. It shall be unto you a sabbath of 32 rest, and ye shall humble yourselves: from the evening of the ninth day of the month, to the next evening, shall ye keep your sabbath."

Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak ³³ to the children of Israel, saying, 'On the fifteenth day of this seventh month shall be the feast of booths, for seven days, to Jehovah. On the first day shall be a holy con- 35 vocation; on it ye shall do no servile work. Seven days ye shall offer a burnt-offering to 36 Jehovah: on the eighth day ye shall have a holy convocation, and shall offer a burnt-offering to Jehovah: it is a solemn assembly-day; on it ye shall do no servile work. These are 37 the feasts of Jehovah, which ye shall celebrate by holy convocations, offering burnt-offerings to Jehovah; the burnt-offerings, and wheaten-offerings; sacrifices and drink-offerings; each on its proper day: Besides the sab- 38 baths of Jehovah, and besides "all" your gifts, and all your vows, all your freewill-offerings, which ye give to Jehovah. have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast to Jehovah, seven days: on the first day shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day shall be a sabbath. And on the first day ye shall take shoots of thriving trees, branches of palm trees, and the boughs of thick trees, and willows of the brook; and having made booths, ye shall rejoice before Jehovah your God, seven days. And ye shall keep a feast to Jehovah, seven days, in every year; it shall be a perpetual statute throughout your generations: in the seventh month ye shall celebrate it. Ye shall dwell in booths seven days; all native Israelites shall dwell in booths; That your posterity may know how I made the children of Israel to dwell in booths, when I brought them out of the land of Egypt: I am Jehovah your God". And Moses declared to the children of Israel the feasts of Jehovah.

B. C. 1491. Directions respecting the lamps and presence-bread; and punishment of a blasphemer.

CHAP. XXIV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. The Pass-over and Feast of Booths, were designed perpetually to commemorate the signal displays of divine power and mercy, which God had made in Egypt and the wilderness. To these they were indebted for their existence as a nation; for their freedom and independence, and for their unspeakable blessings and privileges. They ought not then ever to be forgotten. Be it our care to remember the still greater displays of power and mercy made in our favour.

2. The Harvest-feast was designed to remind them from whom their daily bread came, and to teach them to be grateful for it. They must not taste of the corn till the first-fruits had been offered to Jehovah. How impressive was this institution. We ought not to partake of any bounty, without thanks to him

CHAP. XXIV. 3. And his sons. That these words should be admitted into the text is obvious; as the ordinance has respect to future generations.

6. Six on a row. There is some seeming ambiguity in the text itself, as it is not very clear whether the loaves were to be arranged in rows along the table, or in upright piles upon the table. But the size of the loaves,

Aaron and his sons" shall so order, that they may burn from the evening unto the morning before Jehovah continually: a perpetual statute shall this be throughout your generations. He shall thus order the lamps, on the chandelier of pure gold, before Jehovah continually.

"And thou shalt take fine flour, and bake of it twelve cakes; two tenths of an ephah shall be in one cake. And thou shalt place them in two rows, six on a row, upon the table of pure gold before Jehovah. And thou shalt put pure incense upon each row, that it may be instead of the bread for a memorial, as a burnt-offering to Jehovah. On every sabbath the priest shall arrange it before Jehovah continually, receiving it from the children of Israel by an everlasting covenant. And to Aaron and his sons shall it belong; and they shall eat it in the holy place: for it is their most holy portion of the burnt-offerings of Jehovah by a perpetual statute".

Now the son of an Israelite woman, whose father was an Egyptian, had come up among the children of Israel; and this son of the Israelite woman and a man of Israel strove together in the camp; And the son of the Israelite woman (whose name was Shelomith, the who has provided it. How heinous is the sin of those, who eat and are filled and forget God. As we are taught to ask for our daily bread, so, when it is in mercy given, we ought to present the sacrifice of praise.

3. Let the feasts appointed to the Jews remind us, that we should not murmur on account of the time we spend in God's service. When ambition, avarice, or pleasure demand our time, we spend it without regret; but how irksome is it to many, to devote an hour once a week to the form of religion! How can such men hope for a better state; a state for which they are so wholly unprepared? Let us ever remember, 'that as without holiness no man shall see the Lord,' so no man is, or can be holy, who neglects, or has no pleasure in the service of God.

and the small length of the table, appear to be decisive for the upright piles; and a better version than that of Sept cannot be given. The loaves, then, were placed in two piles, each pile containing six loaves.

7. Instead of bread. The incense was to be burnt instead of the bread, to the honour of Jehovah. The incense remained on the bread for seven days; on the sabbath the bread was eaten and the incense burnt.

 12 And they brought him to Moses: And they put him in custody, until the will of Jehovah

 14 spoke to Moses, saying, "Bring forth him that hath cursed without the camp; and let all that heard him lay their hands upon his head, and let the whole congregation stone
 15 him. And thou shalt speak to the children of Israel, saying, 'Whosoever curseth his own 16 rulers shall bear his sin; But he who blasphemeth the name of Jehovah, shall surely be put to death; the whole congregation shall certainly stone him: as well the stranger as the native, when he blasphemeth the name of Jehovah, shall be put to death.
 17 "And he who killeth any man shall surely be 18 put to death; But he who killeth a beast shall 19 make it good; beast for beast. And if a man cause a blemish in his neighbour; as he hath 20 done, so shall it be done to him; Bruise for bruise, eye for eye, tooth-for tooth; as he hath caused a blemish in a man, so let it be done to 21 him. And he who killeth a beast, shall restore it: but he who killeth a man, shall be put to 22 death. Ye shall have but one sentence for the stranger, and for the native. For I, Jehovah your God, so command."
 23 And Moses spoke to the children of Israel, that they should bring him who had cursed out of the camp, and stone him with stones. And the children of Israel did as Jehovah commanded Moses.

CHAPTER XXV.

B. C. 1491. The Sabbatical and Jubilee years are to be observed.

AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses by mount Sinai, saying, "Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them, 'When ye come into the land which I give to you, let even the land keep a sabbath to Jehovah. Six years 3 ye shall sow your fields, and six years ye shall prune your vines, and gather in their fruits; But in the seventh year, let the land have 4 a sabbath of rest, a sabbath to Jehovah; your fields ye shall not sow, and your vines ye shall not prune. Your harvest-crop which hath 5 grown of its own accord, ye shall not reap, nor gather the grapes of your undressed vine; for it is a year of rest to the land. But 6 the produce of the land during its rest, shall be food for you; for yourselves, for your men-servants and maid-servants, for the hireling and for the stranger who sojourneth among you; And for your cattle, and for the wild- 7 beasts which are in the land, shall all its produce be for food.

"Moreover ye shall number seven sabbatical 8 years, seven times seven years; and the period of the seven sabbatical years shall be for-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. 1. God's sanctuary was to be lighted with lamps during the whole night; and the presence-bread was to be placed on the table. It was the duty of the Priests to attend to these things; and it was their honour to be employed in such services daily. May not this remind Christian Teachers, of the duties of their office? The great end of the Christian ministry is, to enlighten men's minds, and feed them with the word of God. In order to this, they should shine with knowledge, and burn with zeal; they should be the light of God's sanctuary; illuminate the mind, warm the heart, and endeavour to turn men from darkness to light. They are stewards of God's house; they should provide bread for his people, and take care that they feed them with pure wheat, not with chaff.

Jehovah; the most probable opinion is, that יהוה stood originally in the text; although its elision must have been made at an early period, as it is wanting in the Sept. and Sam. version. To blaspheme, is to revile, reproach, speak evil of, and is explained by 'cursing.'

2. Let us learn, from the punishment of the blasphemer, to fear the Name of God, and to regard with reverence every thing relating to religion. In order to avoid the sin of blasphemy, let us guard against pride and passion. It is not a sufficient excuse for swearing or cursing, that it was done in a passion, or to say, 'I was provoked.' Passion leads men to forget religion and reason too; but God abhors, and will punish such transgressors. Let us never allow ourselves to jest with the word or worship of God, or any thing serious and sacred. Let us resolve to take heed unto our ways, that we sin not with our tongues; for, as the apostle expresseth it, James i. 26; "If any man among you seem to be religious, and bridleth not his tongue, that man's religion is vain.

15. His rulers. The term אֲדָמוֹ has the same sense Exod. xxii. 28. The meaning is, 'if he who reviles a magistrate may be justly punished, much more he who reviles the Name of God.' See Note, Hebrew Bible.

9 ty-nine years. Then shall ye cause the trumpet of the jubilee to be sounded; on the tenth day of the seventh month, on the day of atonement shall ye cause the trumpet to be sounded throughout all your land. And ye shall hallow the fiftieth year, and proclaim liberty throughout the whole land to all its inhabitants, it shall be a year of jubilee to you; and ye shall return every one to his possession; and ye shall return every one to his family.

11 A jubilee shall that fiftieth year be to you; ye shall not sow, nor reap what groweth of itself in it, nor in it gather the grapes of your undressed vine. For it is the jubilee; it shall be holy to you; its produce ye shall eat from the field. In the year of this jubilee ye shall return every one to his own possession: If therefore ye sell a possession to your neighbour, or buy one at your neighbour's hand; ye shall not injure one another. According to the number of years after the jubilee ye shall buy of your neighbour; and according to the number of produce-years he shall sell to you:

16 If the years be many, ye shall increase the price; and if the years be few, ye shall diminish the price: for according to the number of produce-years, it shall be sold to you. Ye shall not therefore oppress one another; but ye shall fear God: For I, Jehovah your God, so command.

18 "Wherefore ye shall observe my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them; that ye may dwell in safety in the land: For then the land shall yield her fruit, and ye shall eat to the full, and in safety dwell in it.

20 And if ye say, 'What shall we eat the seventh year, seeing we must not sow, nor gather in our increase'. I will even command my blessing upon you in the sixth year, and it shall yield produce sufficient for three years. And ye shall sow the eighth year, and yet eat of the old produce until the ninth year; until its produce come in ye shall eat of the old.

"The land shall not be sold in perpetuity: 23 for the land is mine; and ye are but strangers and sojourners with me. Through the whole land which ye possess, ye shall permit the land to be redeemed.

"If your brother have become poor, and have 25 sold some part of his possession, and if any of his kin come to redeem it, then may he redeem what his kinsman had sold. And if the man have none to redeem it, and he acquire what is sufficient to redeem it; Then let him 27 count the years from the time of its sale, and restore the overplus to the man to whom he sold it; that he may return unto his possession. But if he have not acquired what is sufficient 28 to restore to him, then that which is sold shall remain in the possession of him that bought it until the year of jubilee; for in the jubilee it shall be given up, that he may return to his possession. If a man sell a dwelling house in 29 a walled city, he shall redeem it within a whole year after it is sold; for within a full year he may redeem it. But if it be not redeemed with- 30 in the space of a full year, then the house which is in the walled city shall be established to him that bought it in perpetuity: it shall not be given up in the jubilee. But the houses of 31 villages which have no wall round about them shall be counted as the fields of the country; they may be redeemed, and they shall be given up in the jubilee. As to the cities of the 32 Levites, and the houses of the cities in their possession, the Levites may redeem them at any time. And if one of the Levites have redeemed- 33 ed, then the house that hath been sold, of the city of his possession, shall be given up in the year of jubilee: for the houses of the cities of the Levites are their possession among the children of Israel. But the field of the suburbs of 34 their cities may not be sold; for they are their perpetual possession.

"And if thy brother have become poor, and 35 be reduced to want, then shall ye relieve him as a stranger, or a sojourner; let him live with

36 you. Take of him no usury, or profit; but fear your God; that your brother may live with 37 you. Ye shall not give him your money for usury; nor shall ye give him your victuals for 38 profit. I, Jehovah your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, to give you the land of Canaan, and to be your God, so command.

39 "And if your brother have become poor, and sell himself to you; ye shall not compel him 40 to serve as a bond-servant: But as a hired servant, or as a sojourner, he shall be with you, and shall serve you to the year of jubilee:
41 When he shall depart from you, he and his children with him, and shall return to his own family; and to the possession of his fathers shall 42 he return. For they are my servants, whom I brought out of the land of Egypt: they shall 43 not be sold as bond-men; Nor shall ye rule over them with rigour: but shall fear your God.
44 Both your bond-men, and your bond-maids, ye shall have from the nations which are around you; of them shall ye buy bond-men and bond-45 maids. Moreover of the children of the strangers who sojourn among you, of them and of their descendants, who are born in your land, ye may buy; and they shall be your posses-46 sion. As a heritable possession ye shall leave them to your children after you; they shall be your bond-men for ever. But over your brethren, the children of Israel, ye shall not rule (one over another) with rigour.

47 "And if a sojourner or stranger become rich among you, and your brother by him become poor, and sell himself to the stranger or sojourner among you, or to any of the stranger's family: After that he is sold he may be re- 48 deemed again; one of his brethren may redeem him: Either his uncle or his uncle's 49 son, may redeem him, or any of his own family nigh of kin to him may redeem him;

or if he can acquire as much he may redeem himself. And he shall reckon with his buyer 50 from the year that he was sold to him, to the year of jubilee: and the price of his sale shall be according to the number of years; like the days of a hireling shall his time be reckoned. If many years remain, according 51 to them he shall return the price of his redemption, out of the money for which he had been bought. And if there remain but few 52 years to the year of the jubilee, then he shall reckon with him, and according to his years
he shall return to him the price of his redemption. As a hireling he shall be with 53 him year by year; but let him not, in your sight, rule over him with rigour. And if he 54 be not thus redeemed, he shall, in the year of jubilee, go out free; himself and his children with him. For to me the children of 55 Israel are servants; my servants are they,
whom I brought out of the land of Egypt:
I am Jehovah your God".

B. C. 1491. The blessings on obedience, and the miseries on disobedience.

Ye shall not make to yourselves carved 1

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1. The political design of the Jubilee was, to prevent the rich from oppressing the poor, and reducing them to perpetual slavery. Moses intended also to preserve, as much as possible, personal liberty, an equality of property, and the regular order of families among them; and to attach them, by the strongest ties, to their country, their lands, inheritances and homes.

2. This institution had a typical reference, Ps. lxxxix. 15;
Luke iv. 19. This joyful year began on the great day of atonement, to intimate that atonement was the foundation of all its blessings and privileges. So by the death of our Lord, those who were in debt to God's justice are freely forgiven; those who were bond-slaves of sin and Satan regain their liberty, and through faith in his blood, become the sons of God. They who had forfeited all right to the heavenly inheritance, are made, 'heirs of God, and joint-heirs with Christ.' Being redeemed from our debt, restored to liberty, and re-entitled to the blessed inheritance, let us go on our way rejoicing; and thankfully proclaim the mercy and love of our God. Being made free, let us no more become the slaves of sin; and having so much forgiven, and so much restored to us, let us love much. Let us aim to exemplify our gratitude in every way possible.

CHAP. XXVI. 1. Carved idols. I have adopted the rendering of Geddes, as it does not seem to me, that the words refer to two different idols nor shall ye set up for yourselves statues, nor shall ye place in your land sculptured stones, for the purpose of bowing down at them: for I, Jehovah your God, forbid it.

2 "Ye shall keep my sabbaths, and reverence my sanctuary: I am Jehovah.

3 "If ye walk in my statutes, and keep my commandments, and do them; Then I will give you rain in due season, and the land shall yield its increase, and the trees of the field shall yield their fruits. And your threshing-time shall reach to the vintage, and the vintage shall reach to the sowing-time; and ye shall eat your bread to the full, and dwell safely in your land. And I will give peace in the land, and ye shall lie down, and none shall make you afraid; and evil beasts I will rid out of the land, nor shall the sword go through your land. And ye shall chase your enemies, and they shall fall by the sword.

8 And five of you shall chase a hundred, and a hundred of you shall chase a thousand; and your enemies shall fall by the sword before you. For to you I will have respect, and make you fruitful, and multiply you; and will establish my covenant with you. And ye shall eat old store, and bring forth the old to make room for the new. And among you, I will set my tabernacle; and my soul shall not abhor you. And I will walk among you, and will be your God, and ye shall be my people. I am Jehovah your God, who brought you out of the land of the Egyptians, that ye might not be their bondmen; and I broke the bands of your yoke, and made you go upright.

14 "But if ye will not hearken to me, and will not keep all these commandments; And if ye despise my statutes; or if your soul abhor my judgments, so as to make void my covenant by not doing all my commandments,

16 I also will do this to you; I will afflict you with sickness; with consumptions, and fevers, which shall waste your eyes and pain your hearts. In vain shall ye sow your seed, for your enemies shall eat it. And I will set my face against you, and ye shall be slain before your enemies; they that hate you shall reign over you; and ye shall flee when none pursueth you. And if for all this ye will not yet hearken to me, then I will punish you seven times more for your sins; And I will break your stubborn pride: your sky I will make as iron, and your earth as brass; So that your strength shall be spent in vain; 20 for your land shall not yield its increase, nor shall the trees of the field yield their fruits.

"And if still ye walk contrary to me, and refuse to hearken to me, I will bring on you seven times more plagues according to your sins. I will also send wild beasts among you, which shall rob you of your children, and destroy your cattle, and make you few in number; so that your high ways shall be desolate. And by these things if ye will not be reformed, but will walk contrary to me; Then will I also walk contrary to you, and will yet punish you seven times more, according to your sins. And I will bring a sword upon you, which shall avenge the violation of my covenant; and when ye are gathered within your cities, I will send the pestilence among you; and ye shall be delivered into the hand of the enemy. When I have broken the staff of your bread, ten women shall bake your bread in one oven, and they shall return your bread by weight; and ye shall eat, and not be satisfied. And if for all this ye will not hearken to me, but walk contrary to me; Then in fury will I walk contrary to you; and I will yet chastise you seven times more according to your sins. For ye shall eat the flesh of your own sons; and the flesh of your kinds of idols, but to the manner in which they were formed—Sculptured stones. Michaelis, whom Geddes follows, renders, 'hieroglyphic stones.' The Syr. and Onkelos render, 'stones of adoration.' I have given what seems to be most natural.

11. Shall not abhor you; i. e. I will love and regard you. This figure of speech is usual.

26. Ten women, &c. One house oven was only sufficient to bake for one family; and when ten were to bake in it, it is apparent that there

30 own daughters shall ye eat. And I will destroy your high places, and cut down your sun-images, and cast your carcases upon the carcases of your idols, and my soul shall abhor you.
 31 And I will make your cities waste, and will make desolate your sanctuary and I will not 32 accept your sweet odours. And I will make the land so desolate that your enemies, who 33 dwell therein, shall be astonished at it. I will also scatter you among the nations, and with a drawn sword I will pursue you; and your land
 34 shall be desolate, and your cities waste. Then shall the land enjoy its sabbaths, as long as it lieth desolate, and ye are in the land of your enemies, even then shall the land rest,
 35 and enjoy its sabbaths. As long as it lieth desolate it shall rest; because it did not rest when ye dwelt upon it, on your sabbatical 36 years. And I will make those of you who are left in the land of their enemies so faint-hearted, that the sound of a shaking leaf shall make them flee; and they shall flee, as if fleeing from a sword; and they shall fall when 37 none pursueth. And they shall fall one upon another, as it were before a sword, when none pursueth; and ye shall have no power 38 to stand before your enemies. And ye shall perish among the nations, and the land of 39 your enemies shall eat you up. And those of you who are left in the land of your enemies shall pine away "in their" own iniquity;

and in the iniquity of their fathers shall they pine away. But if they will confess their iniquity 40 and the iniquity of their fathers, with their trespass by which they trespassed against me, and by which also they walked contrary unto me; So that I also have walked contrary to them, 41 and have brought them into the land of their enemies; if then their uncircumcised hearts be humbled, and they accept the punishment of their iniquity; Then will I remember my co- 42 venant with Jacob, and also my covenant with Isaac; and my covenant with Abraham will I also remember. And I will remember the land, The land which was left by them, and which 43 shall have enjoyed its sabbaths, while it lay desolate, without them; until they shall accept the punishment of their iniquity; because they have despised my judgments, and because their soul abhorred my statutes: For then, while 44 they are in the land of their enemies, I will not cast them away, nor will I so abhor them, as utterly to destroy them, and to make void my covenant with them: for I am Jehovah their God. But I will for their sakes remem- 45 ber the covenant of their ancestors, whom I brought out of the land of Egypt in the sight of the nations that I might be their God: I am Jehovah". These are the statutes and judgments 46 and laws, which Jehovah made between him and the children of Israel, at mount Sinai, through the mediation of Moses.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVI. I. How glorious and majestic a being is God; who can do his pleasure among the hosts of heaven, and the inhabitants of the earth! All creatures are at his disposal; and whatever concerns them, he overrules. Diseases and death, in their most frightful forms, come at his command. All nature, the air, the rain, the beasts, and the hearts of men, are under his control; and these become at his pleasure the instruments of his wrath. Every one ought therefore to fear this holy and all powerful God.

2. We here see that the more God distinguishes a people by his favours, when they abuse and forget him, the more awful and signal will be their punishment. No people were ever treated with more kindness than the Jews, and none have been so dealt with for their sins. They were honoured with his laws, his presence, and blessing; yet they ungratefully forsook him for idols, broke his covenant, and rejected his laws. No wonder that wrath hath come on them to the uttermost. Behold in them then, the goodness and the severity of God; and be not high minded but fear.

3. We may learn the wisdom of being devoted to God. "Those who honour him, he will honour." For the sake of good men, God will preserve and prosper a nation; for the 'Lord was great scarcity.

29. Flesh of your sons, &c. In a siege this has often been done. Compare 2 Kings vi. 28.

31. Your sanctuary. I read in the singular with the versions noticed, as I think it refers to the destruction of the place where Jehovah was worshipped. Compare Psalm lxxiv. 7; Ezek. ix. 6.

34. Enjoy its sabbath. The Sabbatical year, began to be neglected in the time of Saul; and from that period to the Captivity, seventy sabbatical years had been neglected, 2 Chron. xxxvi. 21; but the land remained in a state of rest, not being generally cultivated during the captivity.

CHAPTER XXVII.

B. C. 1491. Of vows, tithes and devoted things.

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
 2 "Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them, 'If a man shall make a singular vow, of persons to Jehovah, let there be a valuation.
 3 And the valuation shall be, of a male from twenty years old unto sixty years old, even the valuation shall be, fifty shekels of silver, ac-4 cording to the shekel of the sanctuary: But if it be a female, then the valuation shall be, 5 thirty shekels. And if it be from five years old even unto twenty years old, then the valuation of a male shall be, twenty shekels, and 6 of the female, ten shekels. And if from a month old even unto five years old, then the valuation of a male shall be, five shekels of silver, and of the female the valuation shall 7 be three shekels of silver. And if from sixty years old and above; then the valuation of a male shall be fifteen shekels, and of a female, 8 ten shekels. But if he be poorer than this valuation, then he shall present himself before the priest, and the priest shall value him; according to the ability of him that vowed shall 9 the priest value. And if one vow a beast, which may be offered as an offering to Jehovah, every such beast, given to Jehovah, shall be holy.
 10 He shall not alter it, nor change it; a good for a bad, or a bad for a good; and if he shall at all change beast for beast, then it and the ex-11 changed shall be holy. But if the beast be unclean, which may not be offered as an offering to Jehovah, then he shall present the beast be-12 fore the priest; And the priest shall value it, whether it be good or bad; and according to 13 the valuation of the priest, shall it be. But if he will at all redeem it, let him add a fifth part more to the valuation-price.

"And if a man will hallow his house to be ho- 14
 ly to Jehovah, then the priest shall estimate it, whether it be good or bad; and as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. And if he 15 who hallowed his house will redeem it, then he shall add the fifth part more to the valuation-price, and it shall be his. And if a man 16 shall hallow to Jehovah some part of the fields of his possession, then the valuation shall be according to the seed that may be sown on it, rating a homer of barley seed at fifty shekels of silver. If from the year of jubilee he hal- 17 low his field, according to the valuation it shall stand. But if after the jubilee he hallow his 18 field, then the priest shall reckon to him the money according to the years that remain, even to the year of the next jubilee, and this shall be abated from the valuation. And if he, who hal- 19 loweth the field, will indeed redeem it, then he shall add a fifth part to the valuation-price, and it shall be assured to him. But if 20
 he will not redeem the field, or if he have sold the field to another man, it shall not be redeemed any more. But the field, when it goeth 21 from the buyer at the jubilee, shall be holy to Jehovah, as a field devoted; the property of the priest shall it be. And if one hallow to 22 Jehovah a field which he hath bought, which is not of the fields of his possession; Then the 23 priest shall reckon with him the sum of the valuation, to the year of jubilee: and he shall give the sum of the valuation in that day, as a thing holy to Jehovah: And in the year of ju- 24
 bilee the field shall return to him of whom it was bought, to him to whom the possession of the land belongeth. And all your valuations 25 shall be according to the shekel of the sanctuary; twenty gerahs to a shekel.

The firstling of the cattle, which as first- 26
 lings belong to Jehovah, shall no man hallow;

loveth righteousness, and righteousness exalteth a nation.' For their sakes he gives the blessing of fruitfulness; so that the earth yields her increase, and the cattle gender and fail not. According to his promise, he will withhold no good thing from them that walk uprightly. Godliness hath the promise of the life that now is, as well as of that which is to come.

 Chap. 7. § 1.

14-24. See Introduction, Part ii. Chap. 7. § 1.

28. No devoted thing. It has been warmly contested, whether or not this term applies to men, and whether human beings could lawfully be thus devoted, or sacrificed to God. It is said that נדר signifies, utter destrucand what may not.

whether they be from the herd or the flock : they 27 are Jehovah's. But the firstling of an unclean beast, he may redeem by adding a fifth part to the valuation-price. If it be not redeemed, then it shall be sold according to the valuation.

28 "But no devoted thing which a man may devote to Jehovah of all that he hath, whether it be a man or beast, or the field of his possession, shall be sold or redeemed : every devoted thing
shall be most holy to Jehovah.

29 Not any thing devoted, which may be devoted by men, shall be redeemed ; but shall surely 30 be put to death. And all the tithe of the land, of the corn of the land, and of the fruit of the trees is Jehovah's : to Jehovah it is hallowed.

And if a man will at all redeem any of his 31
tithes, he shall add the fifth part of their value.
And concerning the tithe of the herd, or of the 32 flock, even of whatsoever passeth under the rod, the tenth shall be holy to Jehovah. He 33 shall not search whether it be good or bad, neither shall he change it ; and if he change it at all, then both it and the changed shall be holy ; it shall not be redeemed". These are 34
the commandments, which Jehovah commanded Moses, for the children of Israel, at mount Sinai.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVII. 1. We learn hence the solemn nature of vows, and that we are not to trifle with God. Vows are solemn engagements to be the Lord's, or to do something for his cause. It is proper to lay ourselves under solemn engagements of this kind. This should often be done ; and having sworn, let us perform them. If we have hitherto neglected it, let us renew our resolutions with greater seriousness and care. "When thou vowest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it : for he hath no pleasure in fools : pay that which thou hast vowed. Better is it that thou shouldest not vow, than that thou shouldest vow and not pay."

2. We are taught from this chapter, and the whole book, to be thankful that we are not under the law, but under grace ; that we are not come to mount Sinai, but are under an easier, milder, and more spiritual dispensation ; that the yoke of ceremonies is removed, which neither we nor our fathers could bear. We may now, and we ought, to consecrate ourselves, our families, our fields, and all we have, to God. Ourselves, by presenting body and soul, a living sacrifice to God. Our families, by a solemn dedication of our children, and engaging our house to serve the Lord. Our fields and possessions, by honouring the Lord with our substance, cheerfully contributing to the support of his house, his ministers, and members. Every man should give as God hath prospered him. 'To do good and to commune-cate, let us not forget, for with such sacrifices God is better pleased, than with ceremonial observances.'

tion, as is clear from its general application ; and that it is evident from this and the following verse, that one man might devote another ; and he so devoted was to suffer death. By what law had one this power over another ?
Had the father this power over his children ? Or had the master this power over his slaves ? Is not the first case clearly forbid, Deut. xii. 31 ?
And is not the latter wholly opposite to the spirit of the divine law, which every where guards the life of man, and inculcates humanity and kindness to the lowest orders of the state ?

The inference from this is, either that חֵרֵם must be taken in the sense of being inalienably appropriated to God, that is, to his service, when men are meant ; or to the sanctuary when land ; or for sacrifice, when beasts ; or that this law must be allowed contradictory and irreconcilable with the other laws of Moses. It is however strongly asserted that the 29th cannot admit of any other interpretation, than that the person devoted, was to suffer death ; and the instance of Jephtha sacrificing his daughter, is brought to support it. It is confessed that this is the most natural sense of the text as it now stands. We must then either suppose the last words חֵרֵם יָמָא mean, 'he shall surely die in the state to which he has been devoted, or adopt the opinion of Houbigant and Rosenmuller, that this applies only to persons taken in war. For it is clear, that the Jewish law does not give this power to a man over any of his dependants ; and the instance of Jephtha is at least doubtful. Dr Sykes contends חֵרֵם יָמָא does not always signify a violent death, as in Gen. ii. 17 ; Numb. xxvi. 65 ;

but may only imply that the person devoted shall die in that devoted state. See Sykes's Principles, &c. Chap. 13. On the whole, I am satisfied that the sense of the law is, 'that if a man devoted by oath any thing to the Lord, what was so devoted could not be redeemed. If a man so devoted his child or servant, such child or servant ministered to the Levites during his whole life ; if some portion of his land, it became the property of the Priests and Levites ; or if he devoted some of his cattle they were sacrificed, and as most holy, they were the portion of the Priests.' This view of the law is consistent with other statutes.

N U M B E R S.

INTRODUCTION.

THIS Book is called Numbers, because it begins and nearly closes with an account of the numbering of the people. It was so called by the Greek Translators, whom others have followed. The first Numbering was at the beginning of the second year from the departure of the Israelites out of Egypt, when the Tabernacle was erected and Aaron and his sons consecrated to the priesthood; the second, in the plains of Moab, towards the conclusion of their journey in the wilderness.

This Book comprehends a period of near thirty eight years, during which the Israelites continued to wander in the wilderness. It contains an account of the consecration of the Tabernacle, the offering of the princes, the separation of the Levites—the order of the tribes when encamped, and when they marched—their various journeys, murmurings, and the judgments inflicted on them—the rebellion of Korah and his associates—the ambition of Aaron and Miriam; the victories and trials; the prophecies of Balaam, &c. It is not possible to assign distinct dates to many of the transactions recorded; and it appears from a list of their journeys, that a considerable part of the time included in this History must have passed without any remarkable incidents.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1491. The people numbered, and the order of the tribes in the camp.

- 1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the congregation-tabernacle, on the first day of the second month, in the second year after their coming out of the 2 land of Egypt, saying, "Take ye the sum of the whole congregation of the children of Israel, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, one
3 by one; every male From twenty years old and upward; all that are able to go forth to war in Israel, shalt thou and Aaron number 4 according to their hosts. And with you there shall be a man of every tribe; each one the chief of the house of his fathers.
5 "And these are the names of the men who shall assist you: Of the tribe of Reuben;
6 Elizur the son of Shedeur. Of Simeon; Shelumiel the son of Zurishaddai. Of Judah;
7 Nahshon the son Amminadab. Of Isaachar;
8 Nethaneel the son of Zuar. Of Zebulon;
9 Eliab the son of Helon. Of the children of Joseph: of Ephraim; Elishama the son of Ammihud. Of Manasseh; Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur. Of Benjamin; Abidan the son 11 of Gideoni. Of Dan; Ahiezer the son of 12 Ammishaddai. Of Asher; Pagiel the son of 13 Ocran. Of Gad; Eliasaph the son of Deuel. 14 Of Naphtali; Ahira the son of Enan." These ¹⁵₁₆ were wont to be called to the assembly, princes of the tribes of their fathers, heads of the thousands of Israel.

So Moses and Aaron took these men who were 17 expressly appointed: And on the first day 18 of the second month, they assembled the whole congregation together; and they declared their pedigrees by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, one by one, from twenty years old and upward. As Jehovah commanded Moses, so he 19 numbered them in the wilderness of Sinai. And the children of Reuben, the first-born 20 of Israel, according to their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the names one by one, every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were

CHAPTER. I. 2. Take the sum. It has been a question, whether this is to be considered a second numbering of the people, or only the completion of that which was begun the first year: Exod. xxx. 11, 12, and xxxviii. 25, 26. Michaelis contends for the latter opinion, as the number of males fit for war is the same in both, which in a number so great could scarcely happen, if two different accounts had been taken.

3. From twenty years. It is singular that Plato, in his Republic, makes his males in like manner fit for war at the age of twenty. In this Census, no women, or children, or old men were taken; nor the tribe of Levi. How numerous had the children of Abraham become!

16. Those wont to be called, &c. See Introduction, Part ii. Ch. 1 § 1.

23 Those that were numbered of the tribe of Simeon, were fifty-nine thousand and three hundred.

24 Of the children of Gad, according to their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names "one by one", from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war;

25 Those that were numbered of the tribe of Gad, were forty-five thousand, six hundred and fifty.

26 Of the children of Judah, according to their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, one by one, from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth

27 to war; Those that were numbered of the tribe of Judah, were seventy-four thousand and six hundred.

28 Of the children of Issachar, according to their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one", every male from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth

29 to war; Those that were numbered of the tribe of Issachar, were fifty-four thousand and four hundred.

30 Of the children of Zebulun, according to their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one, every male" from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; Those that were numbered of 31 the tribe of Zebulun, were fifty-seven thousand and four hundred.

Of the sons of Joseph; of the children of 32 Ephraim, according to their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one, every male" from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; Those 33 that were numbered of the tribe of Ephraim, were forty thousand and five hundred.

Of the children of Manasseh, according to 34 their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one, every male" from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; Those that were numbered of 35 the tribe of Manasseh, were thirty-two thousand and two hundred.

Of the children of Benjamin, according to 36 their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one, every male" from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; Those that were numbered of the 37 tribe of Benjamin, were thirty-five thousand and four hundred.

Of the children of Dan, according to their ge- 38 nealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one, every male" from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go forth to war; Those that were numbered of the tribe of Dan, 39 were sixty-two thousand and seven hundred.

Of the children of Asher, according to 40 their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one, every male" from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go same form of expression occurs; and the words added in the 24th and following verses, are supported by the text, verse 20.

21-43. It is singular that in this Census we have no odd numbers; they all end with hundreds, except two. Rosenmuller considers, that as all fit for war are mentioned, they were divided into thousands, hundreds, and tens; and that as any one died, another was added, or the odd number was rejected when they were mustered under their proper officer.

46. Geddes contends, that the total number of males above twenty years old, exclusive of the tribe of Levi, of the women and children under that age, is a thing hardly credible. Scheuchzer and others have proved by accurate calculations, that the number is not improbable; especially, if we consider the promise made to the Patriarchs, and the particular providence under which their descendants were. We have one proof of their vast numbers in the fear and policy of the Egyptians towards them.

41 forth to war; Those that were numbered of the tribe of Asher, were forty one thousand and five hundred.

42 Of the children of Naphtali, according to their genealogies, by their families, by the house of their fathers, with the number of the names, "one by one, every male" from twenty years old and upward, all that were able to go
43 forth to war; Those that were numbered of the tribe of Naphtali, were fifty-three thousand and four hundred.

44 This is the account of those numbered, whom Moses and Aaron numbered with the twelve princes of Israel; "for each tribe" one, according to the house of their fathers. Now all those who were numbered of the children of Israel, by the house of their fathers, from twenty years old and upward, all who 45 were able to go forth to war in Israel; Even all that were numbered were six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty.

47 But among those, the Levites according to the tribe of their fathers, were not numbered.
48 For Jehovah had spoken to Moses, saying,
49 "Thou shalt not number the tribe of Levi, nor take the sum of them among the children of 50 Israel. But thou shalt appoint the Levites over the testimony-tabernacle, and over all its utensils, and all things belonging to it. They shall bear the tabernacle, and all the utensils; and they shall minister at it; and they shall encamp round about the tabernacle.

51 And when the tabernacle is to be removed, the Levites shall take it down; and when the tabernacle is to be pitched, the Levites shall set it up; for the stranger that cometh nigh to it
52 shall be put to death. And the children of Israel shall encamp, every man by his own camp, and every man by his own standard, 53 throughout their hosts. But the Levites shall encamp round about the testimony-tabernacle, lest there be wrath upon the congregation of the children of Israel; and the Levites shall keep the charge of the testimony-tabernacle." And 54 the children of Israel did according to all that Jehovah commanded Moses; so did they.

AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses and to Aaron, 1 saying, "Every man of the children of Israel 2 shall encamp by his own standard, with the ensign of his father's house. Over against and round the congregation-tabernacle shall they encamp. And on the east side, towards the 3 rising sun, shall they of the standard of the camp of Judah pitch according to their hosts; and the captain of the children of Judah shall be Nashon, the son of Amminadab. And his 4 host, those that were numbered, were seventy four thousand and six hundred. And they 5 who encamp next to him, on one side, shall be the tribe of Issachar: and the captain of the children of Issachar shall be Nathaneel the son of Zuar. And his host, those that were num- 6 bered, were fifty-four thousand and four hundred. Then on the other side, the tribe of Zebu- 7 lun: and, the captain of the children of Zebulun shall be Eliab the son of Helon. And his 8 host, those that were numbered, were fifty-seven thousand and four hundred. All that were 9 numbered in the camp of Judah were a hundred and eighty-six thousand and four hundred, according to their hosts. These shall march the foremost.

"On the south side shall be the standard of 10 the camp of Reuben, according to their hosts; and the captain of the children of Reuben shall be Elizur the son of Shedeur. And his host, 11 those that were numbered, were forty-six thousand and five hundred. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS I & II. 1. From these chapters we may learn, that order and regularity are in all things beautiful, and in many necessary. A house without order, is not the abode of peace, but of confusion. He who observes not some order in spending his time, will lose much of it. In every department of civil, social, and religious life, order is attended with the greatest benefits.
 'Let all things then be done decently and in order.' This will greatly tend to secure our own comfort and happiness.

tians did not all agree in correcting it. In i. 14, it is Eliasaph the son of Deuel. In vii. 42, and x. 20, it is also Eliasaph the son of Deuel. It is likewise Deuel here (ii. 14,) in the Sam Text, with the Ar. and Vulg. versions; to which the authority of 80 Hebrew mss. may be added.

35. From the orders here given, and the execution of them, it appears that the camp of the Israelites was formed of four great divisions. The Tabernacle, around which the Levites encamped, was the Centre; on the East, encamped Judah, under whom were Issachar and Zebulon; on the

 on the north side, according to their hosts; and the captain of the children of Dan shall be Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai. And his 26 host, those that were numbered, were sixty-two thousand, and seven hundred. And those 27 that encamp next to him on one side, shall be the tribe of Asher; and the captain of the children of Asher, shall be Pagiel the son of Oc-ran. And his host, those that were numbered, 28 were forty-one thousand and five hundred.
 Then on the other side, the tribe of Naphtali; 29
 and the captain of the children of Naphtali, shall be Ahira the son of Enan. And his host, 30 those that were numbered, were fifty-three thousand and four hundred. All that were 31 numbered in the camp of Dan, were a hundred and fifty-seven thousand and six hundred.
 They shall march hindmost, according to their standards.

These are they of the children of Israel who 32
 were numbered by the house of their fathers;
 the whole of the camps according to their hosts,
 were six hundred and three thousand, five hundred and fifty. But the Levites were not num- 33
 bered among the children of Israel; as Jehovah had commanded Moses. And the children of 34 Israel did according to all that Jehovah commanded Moses: so they encamped by their standards, and so they marched, every one with his own family, according to the house of his fathers.

2. The Tabernacle was the centre of the Camp, to teach us that God should be the Centre, to which all our affections and actions tend.
 We should not live forgetful of him, who is most glorious, the source of all that is great and good. His command, to love him with all our hearts, is not only founded in his own unrivalled excellence, but in the displays of his own unbounded kindness and love to us. Be it our duty and delight, whenever we pitch our tents, or wherever we go, to maintain a regard to God and his Tabernacle.

west, Ephraim, under whom, were Manasseh and Benjamin; on the South, Reuben, with Simeon and Gad; and on the North, Dan, with Asher and Naphtali. When Judah, and the two tribes [under him] marched first; then the South division of Reuben and the Tabernacle followed, and the West and North divisions, succeeded in the rear.

CHAP. III. 1. Moses and Aaron. Houbigant contends, that Moses is an interpolation, though it is now found in all the versions; for there is not one word respecting the progeny of Moses in this whole chapter. And

CHAPTER III.

B. C. 1491. Priests and Levites numbered, and their Charge.

1 Now, at the time Jehovah spoke to Moses, at Mount Sinai, these were the progeny of 2 Aaron. And these are the names of the sons of Aaron; Nadab the first born, and Abihu, 3 Eleazar, and Ithamar. These are the names of the sons of Aaron, the priests who were anointed, whom he consecrated to minister in 4 the priest's office. But Nadab and Abihu died before Jehovah, while they offered profane fire before Jehovah, in the wilderness of Sinai, and they had no children: so Eleazar and Ithamar ministered in the priest's office, in the sight of Aaron their father.

5 And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying:
6 "Bring the tribe of Levi near, and present them to Aaron the priest, that they may mi-7 nister to him. And they shall keep his charge and the charge of the whole congregation, before the congregation-tabernacle, to do the 8 service of the tabernacle. And they shall keep all the utensils of the congregation-tabernacle, and the charge of the children of Israel, by doing the service of the taberna-9 cle. And thou shalt give the Levites to Aaron and to his sons; they are wholly given
"to me", from among the children of Israel.
10 But thou shalt appoint Aaron and his sons, to attend on their priest's office, and the stranger that approacheth shall be put to death".

11 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Behold, now I have taken the Levites from among the children of Israel instead of all the first-born-males who are to be redeemed", among the children of Israel: therefore the Levites 13 shall be mine; Because all the firstborn are mine; for on the day, that I smote all the first-born-males in the land of Egypt I hallowed to me all the firstborn-males of the Israelites, whether man or beast: mine shall they be:

I am Jehovah".

Jehovah also spoke to Moses, in the wil- 14
derness of Sinai, saying, "Number the chil- 15
dren of Levi by their families, and by the house of their fathers: every male of them from a month old and upward shalt thou number". And Moses numbered them at the word 16 of Jehovah, as he was commanded. And these 17 were the sons of Levi by their names; Gershon, and Kobath, and Merari. And these 18 are the names of the sons of Gershon by their families; Libni, and Shimei. And the sons 19 of Kohath by their families; Amram, and Izehar, Hebron and Uzziel. And the sons of Me- 20
rari by their families; Mahli and Mushi.

These are the families of the Levites according to the house of their fathers. Of Ger- 21 shon was the family of the Libnites, and the family of the Shimites: these are the families of the Gershonites. Those of them that were 22 numbered, all the males, from a month old and upward, those of them that were numbered, were seven thousand and five hundred. 23
The families of the Gershonites shall encamp behind the tabernacle westward. And the 24 paternal chief of the families of the Gershonites, shall be Eliasaph the son of Lael. And 25
the charge of the sons of Gershon in the congregation-tabernacle shall be the tabernacle itself, the tent, its covering, and the hanging for the door of the congregation-tabernacle;
And the hangings of the court, and the gate- 26
curtain of the court, which surroundeth the tabernacle, and the altar, and the cords of it for all the service.

And of Koath was the family of the Amra- 27

what induces suspicion is, that in other places, Moses is always mentioned before Aaron, and not after, as here. Geddes seems to think, that the progeny of Aaron is considered as that of Moses also, his own sons being born of a stranger. The Arabic translator Saad. had some such idea as he renders, "This is the progeny of the family of Moses and Aaron."

9. The Sam. is is adopted by Houbigant and Geddes; and the parallel place Ch. viii. 16. supports this reading, as do the following verses.

For God takes the Levites instead of the first-born of the other tribes of Israel. Hence they were called Nethinim, because given to assist the priests.

mités, and the family of the Izeharites, and the family of the Hebronites, and the family of the Uzzielites: these are the families the Kohathites. And ^athose of them that were numbered, the males, from a month old and upward, were eight thousand, and six hundred, keeping the charge of the sanctuary. The families of the sons of Kohath shall encamp on the side of the tabernacle southward. And the paternal chief of the families of the Kohathites, shall be Elizaphan the son of Uzziel. And their charge shall be the ark, and the table, and the chandelier, and the altars, and the utensils of the sanctuary with which they minister, and the veil, ^athe laver with its cover, and every thing belonging to ^vtheir service. And Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, shall be chief over the chief of the Levites, and have the oversight of them that keep the charge of the sanctuary.

Of Merari was the family of the Mahlites, and the family of the Mushites: these are the families of Merari. And those of them that were numbered, of all the males, from a month old and upward, were six thousand, and two hundred. And the paternal chief of the families of Merari, shall be Zuriel the son of Abihail: these shall encamp on the side of the tabernacle northward. And under the custody and charge of the sons of Merari, shall be the boards of the tabernacle, and its bars, and its pillars, and its bases, and all its utensils, and all that belongeth to its service; And the pillars of the court round about, and their bases, and their pins, and their cords.

But those that encamp before the tabernacle towards the east, before the congregation-tabernacle eastward, shall be Moses and Aaron and his sons, keeping the charge of the sanctuary for the children of Israel; and the stranger who approacheth, shall be put to death. All that were numbered of the Levites, whom Moses ^onumbered at the commandment of Jehovah, according to their families, all the males from a month old and upwards, were twenty-two thousand.

Jehovah also said to Moses, "Number all the first-born males of the children of Israel, from a month old and upward, and take the number of their names. And thou shalt take the Levites for me, (I am Jehovah), instead of all the first-born males, among the children of Israel; and the cattle of the Levites, instead of all the firstlings among the cattle of the children of Israel." And Moses numbered, as Jehovah commanded him, all the first-born males among the children of Israel. And all the first-born males according to the register of the names from a month old and upward, of those that were numbered of them, were twenty-two thousand, two hundred and seventy-three.

And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Take the Levites instead of all the first-born males among the children of Israel, and the cattle of the Levites instead of their cattle; and the Levites shall be mine; I am Jehovah. And for those that are to be redeemed the two hundred and seventy-three of the first-born males of the children of Israel, which are more than the Levites; Thou shalt take for every one five shekels, after the shekel of the sanctuary shalt thou take them; the shekel being twenty gerahs: And the money, by which the surplus number of them is to be redeemed, thou shalt give to Aaron and to his sons." And Moses took the redemption-money of them that were over and above them that were redeemed by the Levites; Of the first-born-

39. And Aaron. Hallet has long ago observed, that this is interpolated; and on the authority of Sam. rejects it. The pointed text intimates it as the word is dotted on the top of each letter, yet it abides in the text. Its omission makes this verse consistent with verse 5, where Moses only is ordered to number the Levites.—Twenty two thousand. There is clearly an error either in this sum total, or in some of the preceding numbers

For verse 22 the Gershonites are 7500; verse 28 the Kohathites 8600, and verse 34 the Mezarites 6200, which make 22,300. Kennicott conjectures that the error is in the sum of the Gershonites; where a 7,200, has been mistaken for a final 7500. Geddes rejects this, as it is not certain, that the final 7 was as early in use as this error. The conjecture of Houbigant seems most probable, who supposes that the error is in the number of the males of the children took he the money; a thousand three hundred and sixty-five shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary.

 51 And Moses gave the money of those who were redeemed, to Aaron and to his sons, according to the word of Jehovah; as Jehovah had commanded him.

1. AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses and to Aaron, saying, "Take the sum of the sons of Kohath from among the sons of Levi, by their families, and by the house of their fathers,
 3 From "twenty-five" years old and upward even until fifty years old, all who are fit for service, to do the work in the congregation-
 4 tabernacle. The service of the sons of Kohath in the congregation-tabernacle, shall be about
 5 the most holy things. For when the camp is to move, Aaron and his sons shall come, and shall take down the covering veil, and cover
 6 with it the ark of the testimony: And they shall spread over it a cloth wholly blue; and "above that" they shall put a covering of seals'
 7 skins, and shall put to its staves. And upon the table of the presence-bread they shall spread a cloth of blue, on which they shall put the platters, and incense-pots, and its other cups, in which drink-offerings are to be offered: and the continual presence-bread shall
 8 be thereon: And they shall spread upon "them" a covering-cloth of scarlet, and then cover that with a covering of seals' skins, and shall 9 put to its staves. And they shall take a cloth of blue, and cover the chandelier, and its lamps, and its snuffers, and its snuffdishes, and all its oil vessels which they use in its service.
 10 And they shall put it and all its vessels in a covering of seals' skins, and put it on a bearer.
 11 er. And upon the golden altar they shall spread a cloth of blue, and cover it with a covering of seals' skins, and shall put to its staves. And they shall take all the other utensils 12 of service, which they use in the sanctuary, and put them in a cloth of blue, and cover them with a covering of seals' skins, and shall put them on a bearer. And they shall take away 13 the ashes from the brazen-altar, and spread a purple cloth thereon; And they shall put on 14 it all its utensils, which they use about it, the censers, the forks, and the shovels, and the sprinkling basons; all the utensils of the altar; and they shall spread upon it a covering of seals' skins, and put to its staves. "And they shall take a cloth of purple, and cover the laver; and they shall put over them a cover of seals' skins, and shall put them on a bearer". And when Aaron and his sons have made an 15 end of covering the sanctuary, and all the utensils of the sanctuary, when the camp is to move; then the sons of Kohath shall come to carry it, but they shall not touch any holy thing, lest they die. These are the burdens of the sons of Kohath with respect to the congregation-tabernacle.

"And to the office of Eleazer, the son of 16 Aaron the priest, pertaineth the oil for the light, and the sweet-incense, and the daily wheaten-offering, and the anointing oil, the charge of the whole tabernacle, and of every thing in it, in respect to the sanctuary, and its utensils."

And Jehovah spoke to Moses and to Aaron, 17 saying, "Cause not the families of the 18 Kohathites to be cut off from among the Levites; But thus do to them, that they may 19 live, and not die, when they approach to the most holy things: Let Aaron and his sons go in, and appoint them every one to his service and to his burden: But let not them go in to 20

CHAP. IV. 3. Twenty-five years. The various lection of the Sept. is probably genuine, as it is the same as the text ch. vii. 24. Some critics defend the text here, by a distinction which seems rather invented to remove the difficulty, than to have any foundation in the sacred text—the distinction is, that the Kohathites are appointed to carry the holy things; and in ch. viii. 24, it refers only to their service in general. The Sept. reads in like manner, verse 23, and 30, 35, 39, 43, and 47.—All fit for service. I have given the sense rather than the idiom. Coverdale renders, 'All that are meet for the war.'

14. Houbigant, Geddes, and other critics adopt the addition of the Sam. and Sept. Indeed, unless we adopt this, we have no mention of a very important part of the furniture of the tabernacle, the laver; while-see when the holy things are covered, lest they die".

- 21 Jehovah again spoke to Moses, saying, 22 "Take also the sum of the sons of Gershon, by 23 their families; and by the house of their fathers;
 From "twenty-five" years old and upward, until fifty years old shalt thou number them; all who are fit to do the service, and the work in 24 the congregation-tabernacle. This is the service of the families of the Gershonites, and these 25 the burdens: And they shall bear the curtains of the tent, or congregation-tabernacle;

 seals' skins, which is above that, and the door

 the hangings of the court, and the door hangings of the gate of the court, which surroundeth the tabernacle and the altar; and their cords, and all the utensils of their service, and whatsoever is to be done concerning them:
 27 thus shall they serve. At the appointment of Aaron and his sons, shall be the whole service of the sons of the Gershonites, with respect to all their burdens, and to all their service: and ye shall appoint to them in charge all their 28 burdens. This is the service of the families of the sons of Gershon, about the congregation-tabernacle: and their charge shall be under the direction of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest.
 29 "As for the sons of Merari, thou shalt number them by their families, by the house of 30 their fathers; From "twenty-five" years old and upward, even unto fifty years old shalt thou number them; all who are fit to do the service, and the work of the congregation-taberden, according to all their service about the congregation-tabernacle; the boards of the tabernacle, and its bars, and its pillars, and its

This 33 is the service of the families of the sons of Merari, according to all their service, about the congregation-tabernacle, under the direc- tion of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest".

And Moses and Aaron, and the chiefs of the 34 congregation, numbered the sons of the Kohath- ites by their families, and by the house of their fathers, From "twenty-five" years old and up- 35 ward, even to fifty years old, all who were fit for the service, for the work in the congrega- tion-tabernacle: And those of them that were 36 numbered by their families were two thousand, seven hundred and fifty. These were they 37 that were numbered of the families of the Ko- hathites, all who were fit for the service in the congregation-tabernacle, whom Moses and Aa- ron numbered, according to the command of Jehovah by Moses. And those that were num- 38 bered of the sons of Gershon, by their families, and by the house of their fathers, From "twen- 39 ty-five" years old and upward, even to fifty years old, all who were fit for the service, for the work in the congregation-tabernacle: And those of them that were numbered, by 40 their families, and by the house of their fathers, were two thousand, six hundred and thirty. These are they that were numbered of the fa- 41 milies of the sons of Gershon, all who were fit for the service in the congregation-taberna- cle, whom Moses and Aaron did number ac- cording to the command of Jehovah.

And those that were numbered of the fa- 42 milies of the sons of Merari, by their fami- lies, and by the house of their fathers, From 43 "twenty-five" years old and upward, even unto fifty years old, all who were fit for the service, for the work of the congregation-tabernacle:

CHAP. V.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS III & IV. 1. From the age at which the Levites were admitted to the service of the Tabernacle, and at which they were exempted, ministers should learn that they ought to be qualified before they enter on the sacred office. In some cases, youth possesses the knowledge and experience of riper years; but in general, the mind like the body, acquires vigour by exercise and time. A steward of the gospel should not be a novice, lest he dishonour the gospel, and lead the people astray by errors in doctrine and in morals. Let ministers also learn to labour, while health and strength permit. Old age will come when they will be no longer fit for active service.

2. Let the Churches learn their duty to aged ministers. The Levites when old, were supported by the offerings of the people; and what can be more unreasonable than to leave a man to want who were to carry them; or perhaps every board, &c. had its peculiar mark, by which it could readily be replaced in its own situation."

shall ye put out; without the camp shall ye put them; that they defile not their camps, in the midst of which I dwell." And the 4 children of Israel did so, and put them without the camp: as Jehovah spoke to Moses, so did the children of Israel.

Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, 5 "Speak to the children of Israel; 'If a man 6 or woman shall commit any sin which men may commit, by trespassing against Jehovah, and that person be guilty; Then 'he' shall 7 confess his sin which he hath committed; and shall recompense his trespass by restoring the principal, and shall add to it a fifth part, and give it to him whom he hath injured. But if a man hath no kinsman to claim the 8 recompense of the injury, let the recompense be made to Jehovah, for the priest; beside the ram of the atonement, by which an atonement shall be made for him. And every 9 heave-offering of all the holy things of the children of Israel, which they bring to the priest, shall be his. And every man's hal- 10 lowed things shall be his: whatsoever any man giveth to a priest, his it shall be."

Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, 11 "Speak to the children of Israel, and say unto 12 them, 'If any man's wife go astray, and commit a trespass against him, And a man lie 13 who has devoted his life to promote our highest interests? Gratitude for past services, at least, should be exercised; and if there be occasion, suitable provision should be made; nor should any Christian Society consider such provision as a gratuity, but as a just debt.

3. Let us learn that as the tabernacle was taken down, so must the tabernacle of our body. Ainsworth has observed, 'that as the most holy things were first covered and taken away; so the soul, with all its powers, is first removed by death. As the curtains were next taken off and folded up; so the skin and flesh of our bodies are pulled off and consumed. As the boards, pillars, and bases were at last separated; so will our bones and sinews!' Paul alludes to this, 2 Cor. v. 1, 4, and 2 Pet. i. 14. As the tabernacle was again set up; so shall our bodies be at the resurrection. Such is the glorious hope of Christians.

with her carnally, and she be defiled, and it be hid and concealed from the eyes of her husband, and there be no witness against her, 14 nor herself taken in the fact; And if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be defiled; or if the spirit of jealousy come upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, and she be 15 not defiled; Then shall the man bring his wife to the priest, and he shall bring her offering for her, the tenth part of an ephah of barley-meal; he shall pour no oil upon it, nor incense shall he add to it; for it is an offering of jealousy, an offering of memorial, 16 bringing iniquity to remembrance. And the priest shall present it, and place it before 17 Jehovah: And he shall then take some hallowed water in an earthen vessel; and of the dust which is on the floor of the tabernacle the priest shall take, and put it into the wa- 18 ter; And the priest shall set the woman before Jehovah, and uncover the woman's head, and put the offering of memorial in her hands, the offering of jealousy; and the priest shall have in his hand the proof-execration water. 19 And the priest shall charge her by an oath, and say to the woman, 'If thou hast not gone astray from thine husband, and been defiled by lying with another man, be thou 20 free from this proof-execration water; But if thou hast gone astray from thy husband and been defiled by lying with another man, 21 besides thine husband.'—Then the priest shall charge the woman with an oath of execra- tion, and the priest shall say to the woman,

'Jehovah make thee a curse and an execra- tion among thy people, by making thy thigh to waste, and thy belly to swell; And may 22 this execration-water go into thy bowels, to make thy belly to swell, and thy thigh to waste.' And the woman shall say, 'Amen, amen.' And the priest shall write these curses 23 in a book, and shall blot them out with the proof-water; And he shall cause the woman 24 to drink the proof-execration water; and the execration-water shall enter into her, as a proof of her guilt or innocence. But the priest 25 shall, first, take the offering of jealousy out of the woman's hand, and shall wave the of- fering before Jehovah, and offer it upon the altar; And the priest shall take a handful 26 of the offering, as a memorial of it, and burn it upon the altar, and afterward shall cause the woman to drink the water. And when 27 he hath made her drink the water, then it shall be, if she be defiled, and have commit- ted a trespass against her husband, that the execration-water shall enter into her, and be- come a proof of it; for her belly shall swell, and her thigh shall waste, and the woman shall be an execration among her people. But if the woman be not defiled, but clean, 28 then she shall be free, and shall conceive seed. This is the law of jealousies, when a 29 wife goeth astray from her husband, and is defiled; Or when the spirit of jealousy com- 30 eth upon him, and he be jealous of his wife, then shall he present the woman before Je- hovah, and the priest shall execute upon her this whole law. And the man shall be guilt- 31

17. I remember no instance of this water of jealousy either producing the effect of the curse, or the effect mentioned verse 28, or indeed of its being ever used. The rabbins say it was left off; in the latter days of the second temple, by reason of the multiplication of adulteries; that is, on the man's part; for they understand verse 31 to say, that if the man was guiltless, the water would have its bad effect on the woman; else not: and it may be so understood. This trial was not to be used, but when the truth could not be otherwise known. Had it been appointed without divine authority, it would never have hurt any, unless consciousness produced the effect, or unless something more than is here appointed, was mixed with the water.

18. The Vulg. and most modern versions derive מֵרֵחַ from the verb מָרַר, and render, 'bitter water.' What made it bitter? No satisfactory answer has or can be given to this question. The rendering of the Sept., 'proof-water,' is certainly a most proper epithet for this water, and perfectly agreeable to the context. Geddes follows the Sam. מֵרֵחַ, and renders 'corrosive water;' but the same objections may be made to this as to the Vulgate.

22. Thy thigh to waste, &c. Some think that the thigh means the womb, and the disease is a prolapsus uteri; but see Introduction. Perhaps St Paul alludes to this, 1 Cor. xi. 29, 'He who eateth and drinketh unworthily, &c.' See Ps. cix. 18, and Dan. ix. 11.

23. I presume, this custom contained the essence of an oath, varied for the purpose of peculiar solemnity; so that a woman would naturally hesitate to take such an oath, understood to be an appeal to heaven of the most solemn kind; understood also, to be accompanied, in case of perjury, by the most painful and fatal effects.

less of iniquity; and this woman shall bear her own iniquity.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 1491. Laws respecting the Nazarites, and the forms of blessing the people.

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
2 Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them, "If any man or woman will distinguish himself by making the vow of a Nazarite, for the purpose of devoting himself to
3 Jehovah: He shall abstain from wine and strong drink: and shall not drink vinegar of wine, or vinegar of strong drink; nor shall he drink any liquor of grapes, nor eat either moist
4 or dried grapes. All the days of his Nazariteship, he shall eat nothing that is made from the produce of the vine, from the grape
5 stones to the rind. All the days of his Nazarite-vow, no razor shall come upon his head; until the days be fulfilled, during which he hath devoted himself to Jehovah, he shall be holy, and shall let the locks of the hair of his 6 head grow. All the days that he is devoted to Jehovah, he shall approach no dead
7 body. For his father, or for his mother, for his brother, or for his sister, when they die he shall not make himself unclean; because the Nazarite token of his God is upon
8 his head. All the days of his Nazarite state
9 he is holy to Jehovah. And if a man die by him suddenly, his Nazariteship is then defiled; and he shall shave his head on the day of his purification, on the seventh day shall he shave it. And on the eighth day he shall 10 bring two turtle-doves, or two pigeons, to the priest, to the door of the congregation-tabernacle: And the priest shall offer the one for 11 a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, and make an atonement for him, in regard to the sin occasioned by the dead, and shall hallow his head that same day. And when 12 he hath brought a lamb of the first year for a guilt-offering, he shall again devote to Jehovah the days of his Nazariteship; and the former days shall not be reckoned, because his Nazariteship was defiled.

"And this is the law of the Nazarite, when 13 the days of his Nazariteship are completed; he shall present himself at the door of the congregation-tabernacle: And he shall bring his 14 offering to Jehovah, one he-lamb of the first year, without blemish, for a burnt-offering, and one she-lamb of the first year, without blemish, for a sin-offering, and one ram, without blemish, for a feast-sacrifice. And a basket 15 of unleavened bread, namely cakes of fine flour mingled with oil, and wafers of unleavened bread anointed with oil, as their wheaten-offering; also their drink-offerings of wine. And the priest shall bring them before Jeho- 16 vah, and shall offer his sin-offering, and his burnt-offering; And he shall offer the ram 17 for a feast-sacrifice to Jehovah; with the basket of unleavened bread, the priest shall offer its wheaten-offering, and its drink-offering of wine. Then the Nazarite shall shave his de- 18 dicated head at the door of the congregation-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. The removal of unclean and diseased persons from the camp, was not only good policy, but had a moral tendency. God dwelt among them; and he being the holy one, nothing unclean must be permitted to remain in the camp. Let this teach us to regard purity of heart, as essentially necessary to communion with God. "Blessed are the pure in heart; for they shall see God." There can be no union, no fellowship, unless there be corresponding qualities. What fellowship hath light with darkness?

2. The trial of jealousy may remind us, that it is our duty to be jealous of ourselves, and that we should examine and judge ourselves, that we may not be condemned. Where guilt has been contracted, it will be detected, either by our penitential sorrow, or by some more terrible method. Be assured, my reader, your sin will find you out. Let those who are united by the closest ties ever remember, that fidelity is the first duty they owe to each other; and that if this be neglected, it will be attended with a train of the most awful consequences. "Let the husband love his wife, and the wife see that she love and be faithful to her husband."

Levit. ii. 4-8, it is evident, that the basket of unleavened bread, constituted the Wheaten-offering, which accompanied the three sacrifices mentioned verse 14.

tabernacle, and shall take the hair of his dedicated head, and put it on the fire which is 19 under the feast-sacrifice. And the priest shall take the boiled shoulder of the ram, and one unleavened cake out of the basket, and one unleavened wafer, and shall put them upon the hands of the Nazarite, after his dedicated head
 20 hath been shaved; And the priest shall wave them for a wave-offering before Jehovah: this is holy for the priest, with the wave-breast and the heave-shoulder. And after 21 that the Nazarite may drink wine. This is the law of the Nazarite who hath vowed, and of his offering to Jehovah on account of his Nazariteship; besides what he is able to give according to his vow. As he hath vowed, so must he do; above what the law of his Nazariteship enjoineeth.”

22 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
 23 Speak to Aaron and to his sons, saying, “In this manner shall ye bless the children of Israel, saying to them; ‘Jehovah bless thee, and 24 keep thee: Jehovah make his countenance
 25 shine upon thee, and be gracious to thee; Jehovah lift up his countenance upon thee, and 27 give thee peace.’ Thus they shall put my name upon the children of Israel; and I will bless them.”

B. C. 1491. The offerings of the Chiefs of Israel, on the dedication of the altar.

1 Now on the day that Moses had fully set up the tabernacle, and had anointed it, and

CHAP. VII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. Let what we have read of the Nazarite remind us, that we should be separated from sin and devoted to God. If we abide in a sinful state and neglect our duty to God, we shall incur his displeasure, and bring on ourselves destruction. As christians, the vows of God are upon us; and let us pay what we have vowed. We must, if we would enter into life, deny ourselves and take up our cross. Indulgence destroys more than want or penury. Be it then our care to sow to the spirit, that we and the priests might use any or all of them, as they thought proper. There is an allusion to this, Psal. iv. 6, and lxvii. 1, 2. Some think the doctrine of the Trinity here intimated.

CHAP. VII. 3. Wagons. Covered carts, such as were used by the hallowed it, and all its utensils; the altar and all its utensils, and had anointed them, and hallowed them; The chiefs of Israel, 2 heads of the house of their fathers, the chiefs of the tribes, who were over them that were numbered, offered. And they brought their 3 offering before Jehovah, six covered wagons, and twelve oxen; a wagon for every two of the chiefs, and an ox for each of them; and they brought them before the tabernacle. And Jehovah spoke to Moses, say- 4 ing, “Take them, that they may be used in 5 the service of the congregation-tabernacle; and thou shalt give them to the Levites, to every man according to his service. And Mo- 6 ses took the wagons and the oxen, and gave them to the Levites. Two wagons and four 7 oxen he gave to the sons of Gershon, according to their service: And four wagons and 8 eight oxen he gave unto the sons of Merari, according to their service, under the direction of Ithamar, the son of Aaron the priest. But 9 to the sons of Kohath he gave none; because to them belonged the service of the sanctuary, which they were to carry upon their shoulders.

And the chiefs offered for the dedicating of 10 the altar, on the day that it was anointed, even the chiefs offered their oblation before the altar. And Jehovah said to Moses, “Let 11 them offer their offering, each chief on his day, for the dedicating of the altar.”

And he who offered his offering on the first 12 day, was Nahshon the son of Amminadab, may reap life and peace; for what a man sows, that he shall reap.

2. The great end of religion is, that we may enjoy God's blessing. This we should seek; for without it, we shall be miserable. He only can bless by giving us all things needful for life and godliness; and by appointing this form of blessing, it is evident he is ready to bless. Let every reader adopt this language for himself and others: ‘Jehovah bless thee, and keep thee. Jehovah lift up the light of his countenance upon thee, and give thee peace.’

On the fourth day, Elizur, the son of She- 30 deur, chief of the tribe of Reuben, offered: His offering was one silver platter of the weight 31 of a hundred and thirty shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seventy shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot, of ten 32 shekels, full of incense: One steer, one ram, 33 one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: One goat for a sin-offering: And for 34 a feast-sacrifice, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. On the fifth day, Shelumiel, the son of Zu- 36 rishaddai, chief of the tribe of Simeon, offered: His offering was one silver platter, of the 37 weight of a hundred and thirty shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seventy shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot, of 38 ten shekels, full of incense: One steer, one 39 ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: One goat for a sin-offering: And 40 for a feast-sacrifice, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Eliasaph, the son of Deuel.

48 On the seventh day, Elishama, the son of Ammihud, chief of the tribe of Ephraim, 49 offered: His offering was one silver platter, of the weight of a hundred and thirty shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seventy shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for
50 a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot,

54 On the eighth day, offered Gamaliel, the son of Pedahzur, chief of the tribe of Manasseh:
55 His offering was one silver platter, of the weight of a hundred and thirty shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seventy shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour, mingled with oil, for
56 a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot
57 of ten shekels, full of incense; One steer, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a 58 burnt-offering: One goat for a sin-offering:
59 And for a feast-sacrifice, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Gamaliel, the son of Pedahzur.

60 On the ninth day, Abidan, the son of Gideon,
61 chief of the tribe of Benjamin, offered: His offering was one silver platter, of the weight of a hundred and thirty shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seven shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot of ten shekels, full of incense: One steer, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering:
62 One goat for a sin-offering: And for a feast-sacrifice, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Abidan, the son of Gideon.

66 On the tenth day, Ahiezer, the son of Am-mishaddai, chief of the tribe of Dan, offered: His offering was one silver platter, of a hundred and thirty shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seventy shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot, of ten shekels, full of incense: One steer, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: One goat for a sin-offering: And for a feast-sacrifice, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Ahiezer, the son of Ammishaddai.

On the eleventh day, Pagiel, the son of Ochran, chief of the tribe of Asher, offered: His offering was one silver platter, of the weight of a hundred shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seventy shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot, of ten shekels, full of incense: One steer, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: One goat for a sin-offering: And for a feast sacrifice, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Pagiel, the son of Ochran.

On the twelfth day, Ahira, the son of Enan, chief of the tribe of Naphtali, offered: His offering was one silver platter, of the weight of a hundred and thirty shekels; one silver sprinkling-bason, of seventy shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary; both of them full of fine flour mingled with oil, for a wheaten-offering: One golden incense-pot of ten shekels, full of incense: One steer, one ram, one lamb of the first year, for a burnt-offering: One goat for a sin-offering: And for a feast-sacrifice, two oxen, five rams, five he-goats, five lambs of the first year. This was the offering of Ahira, the son of Enan. These were the dedication-offerings of the altar on the day when it was anointed by the chiefs of Israel: twelve silver platters, twelve silver sprinkling-basons, twelve golden incense-pots: Each silver platter weighing a hundred and thirty shekels, each sprinkling-bason seventy. All the silver vessels weighed two thousand and four hundred shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary. The twelve golden incense-pots, full of incense: each weighing ten shekels, according to the shekel of the sanctuary: the whole weight of the golden incense-pots was a hundred and twenty shekels. For the burnt-offerings the number of steers was twelve, of the rams twelve, of the lambs of the first year twelve, with their wheaten-offerings: and of the goats for sin-offerings twelve. And all the steers for the feast-sacrifices were twenty and four steers, the rams sixty, the he-goats sixty, the lambs of the first year sixty. These were the dedication offerings of the altar, after it was anointed.

Now whenever Moses went into the congregation-tabernacle to speak with Jehovah, then he heard the voice of one speaking to him from off the mercy-seat which was upon the ark of testimony, from between the two cherubs; for there he spoke with him.

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 1491. How the lamps are to be lighted; the consecration of the Levites; of the age and time of their service.

AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak to Aaron, and say unto him, 'When thou lightest the lamps, let the seven lamps shine forward from the chandelier.'" And Aaron did so; on the front of the chandelier, REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. From the offerings of the chiefs, we learn that the Israelites possessed much wealth, and many cattle. On this occasion both are consecrated to God. The chiefs gave as became their rank; and as feast-sacrifices were to be eaten by the offerers and their friends, no doubt the people in general partook of them. Thus let the rich distribute of their abundance to such as need, and by so doing they will not only show their gratitude to the giver of their wealth; but the blessing of those ready to perish will come upon them. To do this is to convert the unrighteous mammon into a friend, and to lay up treasures in heaven. It is to make that, which to some proves a trap and a snare, the hand-maid of piety.

CHAP. VIII. 2-4. Compare Exod. xxv. 37; xl. 25.

7. Purification-water. The manner in which this was made is given Chap. xix. 3-6.—Let them shave all their flesh. It is singular that this custom obtained among the Egyptian Priests. Spencer and his followers of course contend that Moses adopted it from them; while others may with equal reason maintain, that the Egyptians derived it from the Israelites.

he placed the lamps, as Jehovah commanded Moses. And this chandelier was made of solid gold; from its shaft to its flowers, it was one solid piece: according to the pattern which Jehovah had shown Moses, so was the chandelier made.

Also Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Take the Levites from among the children of Israel, and purify them. And thus shalt thou do to them to purify them: 'Sprinkle purification-water upon them, and let them shave all their flesh, and let them wash their clothes and so make themselves clean. Then let them take a steer for a burnt-offering, with its wheaten-offering, fine flour mingled with oil; and another steer shall be taken for a sin-offering. And thou shalt bring the Levites before the congregation-tabernacle; and thou shalt collect the whole assembly of the children of Israel together; And thou shalt bring the Levites before Jehovah; and the children of Israel shall put their hands upon the Levites: And Aaron shall offer the Levites before Jehovah, as an offering from the children of Israel, that they may perform the service of Jehovah. And the Levites shall lay their hands upon the heads of the steers; and thou shalt offer the one for a sin-offering, and the other for a burnt-offering, to Jehovah, to make an atonement for the Levites; And thou shalt set the Levites before Aaron, 13

2. From the concluding verse we learn, that God gave answers to Moses with an audible voice from off the mercy-seat. Moses saw no shape or similitude, when God spoke to him. This mercy-seat is called the Oracle, because from it Jehovah delivered his will. Both the mercy-seat, and the manner in which the divine will was communicated; represented our Lord. Through him God is reconciled, and vouchsafes the blessings of salvation. In allusion to the Oracle the Apostle says, "God, who at sundry times and in divers manners spoke in time past unto the fathers by the prophets, hath in these last days spoken unto us by his Son, whom he hath appointed heir of all things, by whom also he made the worlds."

8. For a burnt offering. Houbigant, Le Clerc, and others properly observe, that לעיל has been dropped out of the text after בקר, and which answers to למזבח which follows. So they are opposed to each other in ver. 12, and this is the constant order of such like commands.

9. Whole assembly. In this and all such places, by the whole assembly (לכל) we are generally to understand the delegates or

and before his sons, and offer them as an offering to Jehovah. Thus shalt thou separate the Levites from among the children of Israel; and the Levites shall be mine. And after thou hast thus purified them and offered them as an offering, the Levites shall go in to do the service of the congregation-tabernacle. For they are wholly given unto me from among the children of Israel; instead of the first-born males of all the children of Israel, I have taken them to myself. For all the male first-born of the children of Israel are mine, whether man or beast: on the day that I smote every male first-born in the land of Egypt I hallowed them to myself. So I take the Levites for all the male first-born of the children of Israel. And I give the Levites as a gift to Aaron and to his sons, from among the children of Israel, to do the service of the children of Israel in the congregation-tabernacle, and to make an atonement for the children of Israel; that there may be no plague among the children of Israel, when the children of Israel approach the sanctuary." And Moses, and Aaron, and all the congregation of the children of Israel, did to the Levites according to all which Jehovah commanded Moses concerning the Levites; so did the children of Israel to them. For the Levites were purified, and they washed their clothes; and Aaron offered them as an offering to Jehovah; and Aaron made an atonement for them to purify them. And after that went the Levites in to do their service in the congregation-tabernacle before Aaron, and before his sons: as Jehovah had commanded Moses concerning the Levites, so did they to them.

"Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, This is what respects the Levites: From twenty-five years old and upward, they shall go in to attend on the service of the congregation-tabernacle: And from the age of fifty years they shall cease to attend on the service, and shall serve no more: But with their brethren they shall share in keeping the charge of the congregation-tabernacle, but shall do no service. Thus shalt thou do unto the Levites touching their charge".

CHAPTER IX.

B. C. 1491. The Pass-over enjoined again; a second allowed for certain persons.

AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses in the wilderness of Sinai, in the first month of the second year, after they were come out of the land of Egypt, saying, "Let the children of Israel also keep the passover at its appointed time. The fourteenth day of this month on its appointed time, ye shall keep it in the evening; according to all its rites, and according to all its ceremonies, shall ye keep it." And Moses spoke to the children of Israel, that they should keep the passover. And they kept the passover on the fourteenth day of the first month in the evening, in the wilderness of Sinai; according to all that Jeho-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. In what a solemn manner were the Levites devoted to the service of God! And we may and ought from this to infer, that no one should intrude into the service of the Church without due preparation, and suitable qualifications. How unbecoming is it, when one gains admission, who is void of all sense of the duties of his office; and who, instead of cultivating spiritual purity, is the servant of sin. Both knowledge and a spirit of lively devotion are necessary to those who serve in God's tabernacle.

representatives of the people; their patriarchal chiefs.

10. Put their hands upon the Levites, for the purpose of presenting them to God, and the service of the tabernacle.

18. So I take, &c. As Jehovah refers to what was now to be done, I have rendered after many moderns, in the present tense.

21. To purify them. After all their ablutions, atoning-blood was necessary to render them fit for their sacred service.

2. We may learn from this Chapter, that in sacred things we should follow the divine direction. Moses invariably acted on this principle; and a greater than Moses has said, "In vain do they worship me, teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." Without the divine warrant, our worship can only be deemed, will-worship. Let us then in every thing apply to the law and to the testimony for direction; and whatever we find God commands, that let us invariably observe.

26. And shall serve no more. They shall perform no laborious service, but shall still abide at the tabernacle, and serve in more easy things.

CHAP. IX. 1. In the first month. This is an historical regression to a prior period: a thing not uncommon in the writer of the Pentateuch. What is here related must have happened before the muster mentioned in chapter i.

6-8. Defiled by a dead, &c. They had assisted at the funeral obse-vah had commanded Moses, so did the children of Israel.

6 Now there were certain men, who were defiled by a human dead body, and they could not on that day keep the pass-over. And on that day these men presented themselves to 7 Moses and to Aaron, and said to them, "We are defiled by a human dead body, but why should we be restrained from offering an oblation to Jehovah at the appointed time, among 8 the children of Israel?" And Moses said to them, "Wait, until I hear what Jehovah will command concerning you."

9 And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak 10 to the children of Israel, saying, 'If any man of you or of your posterity be defiled by the dead, or be on a journey afar off, yet shall they 11 keep the pass-over to Jehovah. The fourteenth day of the second month in the evening, they shall keep it. With unleavened bread and bitter 12 herbs they shall eat it: They shall leave none of it until the morning, and a bone of it they shall not break: according to all the ordinances of the pass-over they shall keep it. If a 13 man who is clean, and is not on a journey, fail to keep the pass-over, even that person shall be cut off from among his people; because he brought not the offering of Jehovah at the appointed 14 time, that man shall bear his sin. And if a stranger sojourn among you, and will keep the pass-over of Jehovah; according to the ordinance of the pass-over, and according to its rites he must do: one ordinance ye shall have, both for the stranger, and for the native of the land.

CHAP. IX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. As the command given Exod. xii. 25, referred the observance of the pass-over to the land of Canaan, there is a particular precept to observe it in the wilderness. Without such a precept the Israelites would not have acted with sufficient prudence, as they knew not when they might be commanded to march. It was their happiness to receive the law from God, and still more to keep it. When any thing appears to be our duty, we should immediately endeavour to discharge it.

2. From the difficulties which are here stated, we may learn, quies, and according to the precept Ch. v 2, were excluded the camp.

VOL. I. PART III.

AND on the day on which the tabernacle was 15 erected the cloud covered the tabernacle, the tent of the testimony; and at even there was upon the tabernacle, as it were, the appearance of fire, until the morning. So it was always; 16 the cloud covered it *by day, and by night had the appearance of fire. And when the 17 cloud was taken up from the tabernacle, then immediately the children of Israel marched; and in the place where the cloud abode, there the children of Israel encamped. At the com- 18 mand of Jehovah the children of Israel marched, and at the command of Jehovah they encamped. As long as the cloud abode upon the tabernacle they remained encamped. If the 19 cloud rested for a length of many days over the tabernacle, then the children of Israel kept the charge of Jehovah, and marched not: And 20 so it was, if the cloud was but a few days upon the tabernacle; according to the command of Jehovah they remained encamped, and according to the command of Jehovah they marched. And so it was, if the cloud abode but from 21 evening until the morning, and the cloud was taken up in the morning, then they marched; whether it were by day or by night that the cloud was taken up, they marched: But 22 when the cloud rested and remained over the tabernacle, were it for two days, or for a month, or a year, the children of Israel remained encamped and marched not; but when it was taken up, they marched. that we ought, in like circumstances, to seek divine counsel and direction. We should not, unless for the most weighty reasons, neglect any ordinance of religion; but we have the highest authority for preferring moral to positive institutions, when they interfere with each other. 'I will have mercy and not sacrifice,' is the declaration of Jehovah. The case of those defiled may remind us, that we ought not to participate in sacred things without due seriousness. We should renew our repentance, and put away the evil of our doings; and we should do so especially, before we keep the feast of the Christian pass-over.

mand of Jehovah they encamped; and at the command of Jehovah they marched: they kept the charge of Jehovah, according to the command of Jehovah by Moses.

- 1 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
- 2 "Cause to be made two trumpets; of one solid piece of silver thou shalt cause them to be made; which shall be used for the calling of the assembly, and for the marching of the camps.
- 3 And when they shall blow with both of them, the whole assembly shall assemble to thee at the
- 4 door of the congregation-tabernacle. And if they blow but with one, then the chiefs, who are heads of the thousands of Israel, shall as-
- 5 semble themselves to thee. When ye blow an alarm, then the camps which lie on the east
- 6 side shall march. When ye blow a second alarm, then the camps which lie on the south side shall march. "When ye blow the third alarm, the camps which lie on the west side shall march: and when ye blow a fourth alarm, the camps which lie on the north side shall march". They shall blow an alarm for their
- 7 marchings; But when the congregation is to be assembled, ye shall blow, but ye shall not
- 8 sound an alarm. And the sons of Aaron, the priests, shall blow with the trumpets; and they shall be to you for a perpetual ordinance
- 9 throughout your generations. And if ye go to war in your land against the enemy that oppresseth you, then ye shall blow an alarm with the trumpets; and ye shall be remembered before Jehovah your God, and ye shall be saved
- 10 from your enemies. Also on the day of your rejoicing, your solemn feast-days, and at the beginnings of your months, ye shall blow with the trumpets when ye offer your burnt-offerings, and your feast-sacrifices; and they shall

of the people. See Note, Ch. i. 16, &c.

4. Chiefs. The twelve patriarchal chiefs are meant, mentioned as the heads of each tribe.

2. An alarm. This is thought to denote, broken, sharp tones, terminating in a lengthened sound by both trumpets.

be to you for a memorial before your God: I am Jehovah your God."

"Jehovah then spoke to Moses, saying, "By this mountain ye have dwelt a long time. Turn and march on to the mount of the Amorites, and to all the adjacent places, whether in the plain, or hill, or dale; to the south and to the northern sea: to the land of the Canaanites and of Lebanon, to the great river Euphrates. Behold! I place before you the land; go in and possess the land, which to your fathers, Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, I swore that I would give to their seed after them".

Now on the twentieth day of the second 11 month, in the second year, the cloud was taken up from off the testimony-tabernacle; And 12 the children of Israel marched out of the wilderness of Sinai; and the cloud rested in the wilderness of Paran. Thus, for the first time, 13 they marched according to the command of Jehovah by Moses.

In the first place went the standard of the 14 camp of the children of Judah according to their hosts: and over his host was Nahshon the son of Amminadab. And over the host of the 15 tribe of the children of Issachar, was Nathaneel the son of Zuar. And over the host of 16 the tribe of the children of Zebulun, was Eliab the son of Helon. And the tabernacle was 17 taken down; and the sons of Gershon and the sons of Merari marched, bearing the tabernacle.

And the standard of the camp of "the chil- 18 dren of" Reuben went according to their hosts: and over his host was Elizur the son of Shedeur. And over the host of the tribe of the children 19 of Simeon, was Shelumiel the son of Zurishadai. And over the host of the tribe of the chil- 20

10. Geddes adopts the Sam. as genuine; and Houbigant admits that it may be so, though he does not insert it in his version. The passage connects with the context here as well as in Deuteronomy.

18. Children of Reuben. As בְּנֵי in this narrative precedes the name of the chief of each tribe, it ought to be admitted here. Hence it should be retained in the 22 verse though some of the versions want it.

29. Brother-in-law. He is supposed to be the same with Jethro: for what reason I see not. Jethro had long before this, gone to his own country.

dren of Gad, was Eliasaph the son of Deuel. Then marched the Kohathites, bearing the parts of the sanctuary; and the other Levites when they encamped, set up the tabernacle against they came.

22 Next went the standard of the camp of the children of Ephraim, according to their hosts: and over his host was Elishama the son of Ammihud. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Manasseh, was Gamaliel the son of Pedahzur. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Benjamin, was Abidan the son of Gideoni.

25 And in the rear of all the camps, went the standard of the camp of the children of Dan according to their hosts; and over his host, 26 was Ahiezer the son of Ammishaddai. And over the host of the tribe of the children of Asher, was Pagiel the son of Ocran. And over the host of the tribe of the children of 28 Naphtali, was Ahira the son of Enan. In this order proceeded the children of Israel, according to their hosts, when they marched.

29 Moses now said to Hobab, the son of Reuel the Midianite, Moses' brother-in law, "We are marching to the place of which Jehovah said, 'I will give it you': come thou with us, and we will do good to thee: for Jehovah hath promised good things to Israel." But he 30 said to him, "I will not go; but I will depart to mine own land, and to my own kindred." Then said Moses, "Leave us not, I 31 pray thee; thou knowest how we should encamp in the wilderness, and thou mayest be to us instead of eyes. And it shall be, if 32 thou go with us, yea, it shall be, that what good things Jehovah shall give to us, the same will we give to thee."

And they departed from the mount of Je- 33 hovah a three days' journey; and the ark of the covenant of Jehovah went before them on the three days' journey, to search out a resting place for them. And the cloud of 34 Jehovah was upon them by day, when they went out of the camp. And whenever the 35 ark set forward, Moses said, "Arise O Jehovah, and let thine enemies be scattered; and let those who hate thee fall before thee." And 36 when it rested, he said, "Give repose, O Jehovah, to the many thousands of Israel."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER X. 1. How much were they honoured who blew the silver trumpets; who called the solemn assembly, and led on the armies of the Lord! But still greater honour is done to christian ministers, than to the sons of Aaron. It is indeed an honourable office, to be employed as the mouth of God, to call mankind to duty. Let them magnify their office; and let those esteem themselves blessed, who hear the joyful sound, who diligently attend to God's call, and obey his orders and summons; that at the last great day they may, without terror and anguish, hear the joyful sound of the archangel's trumpet, which shall gather the whole world together to hear their final, unalterable doom!

2. How desirous should we be of wise and pious friends, who may be to us instead of eyes! Let us not be wise in our own conceit; but encourage our friends to give us advice, and receive it thankfully. The Scriptures give us general rules; but providence often directs in particulars, by the advice of friends, who can see more and better than we can, and are not blinded, as we may be, by affection, or interest, or partiality to ourselves. Let young persons especially, be desirous of the advice and counsel of wise, experienced people; to despise such, shows that they neither have wisdom, nor are likely to get it.

4. Let us be thankful that God hath spoken so graciously concerning Israel, and endeavour to impart to others the favours God hath bestowed upon us. We are marching through a wilderness, but, blessed be God! we have many comforts, and are in the way to Canaan. Let us encourage others to come and join us in the way to heaven. Let us encourage them to 'taste and see that the Lord is gracious.' Our treasure will not be lessened by their sharing in it. Our happiness will be increased by theirs, especially if we are the instruments of making them happy. May a more generous, public spirit possess our breasts, and engage us to persuade all, especially our near relations, (as Moses did Hobab, in the instance before us) to go with us to the land of everlasting rest.

(Exod. xviii. 27;) nor is it said that he ever returned. I suspect Hobab rather to have been Jethro's son, and grandson to Reuel; who had hitherto remained with his sister and his brother-in-law; and who is now, prevailed upon to accompany the Israelites unto the land of Canaan.

31. Instead of eyes. Geddes and others avail themselves of this passage to discredit the account of the cloud conducting the camp of Israel. Harmer has answered this objection. Should any affirm the attendance of men like Hobab was of no use to Israel, in their removing from station to station, he would doubtless take more upon himself, than he ought to do:

for it is possible, the guidance of the cloud might not be so minute as absolutely to render their offices of no value.

Nor was their assistance wanted in respect to water only, when any party of them was sent out upon some expedition; but the whole congregation must have had frequent need of them for directions, where to find fuel. Fuel was wanted to warm them during some part of the year, at all times to bake and boil the manna, according to Exod. xvi. 23, and was never obtained but in a natural way, that we know of: for this then they wanted the assistance of such Arabs, as were perfectly acquainted with that desert.

CHAPTER XI.

B. C. 1491. The murmurings of the people.

- 1 But the people complained, and displeased Jehovah: for he heard, and his anger was kindled; and the fire of Jehovah burnt among 2 them, and consumed a part of the camp. And the people cried to Moses; and when Moses prayed to Jehovah, the fire was quenched.
3 And he called the name of the place, Taberah, [THE BURNING]: because the fire of Jehovah had burnt among them.
4 Yet soon after, the mixed multitude of strangers, who were among them, most vehemently longed for flesh: and the children of Israel also wept again, and said, "O that we had flesh to 5 eat? We remember the fish, which we freely ate in Egypt; the cucumbers, and the melons, and the leeks, and the onions, and the gar-
6 lick; But now we are pining away: not having any thing, but this manna, before our 7 eyes." Now the manna was in size, like coriander seed, and its colour like the colour of a 8 pearl. The people went about, and gathered it, and ground it in mills, or beat it in a mortar, and they baked it in pans, or made hearth-cakes of it; and the taste of it was like the 9 taste of fresh oil. And when the dew fell upon the camp in the night, the manna fell with it.

CHAP. XI.

4. It is our duty and as well as our interest, to follow God as our guide; and particularly to begin and end all our journies, and all our concerns with prayer. Moses prayed, and Israel joined in the request; Rise up, Lord, &c. The blessing of God is the best security both to

36. Give repose. The word שָׁבָה has, after Jerom, been generally rendered return to; the preposition אֶל, to, being understood before רַבְּבִיתָ. But it is justly remarked by Houbigant, that this is an awkward version. I consider שָׁבָה here as an active verb, in its third signification, corresponding with the Latin quiesco, in its active signification, and render give repose to, fac-quiescere.

CHAP. XI. 1. In our common version these words are rendered, 'and consumed them that were in the outermost parts of the camp:' on which Secker has the following just remark: 'Sept. consumed part of a camp; rightly, for אֶל is elsewhere followed by a ב; and קָצָה doth not always signify an extremity, but any part, or every part.—Fire of Jehovah, may denote either lightening, or the burning wind called Samiel.

4. O that we had flesh to eat! How could they want flesh to eat, when they are said in Exod. xii. 38, to have had 'flocks and herds in great abun-

When Moses heard that the people were 10 weeping, throughout their families, each at the door of his own tent; and that the anger of Jehovah was greatly inflamed; Moses also was displeased. And Moses said to Jehovah, 11 "Why hast thou afflicted thy servant? and why have I not found favour in thy sight, that thou hast laid the burden of all this people upon me? Have I conceived all this people? have 12 I begotten them, that thou shouldest say unto me, 'Carry them in thy bosom, as a nursing father carrieth the sucking child, unto the land which thou swore unto their fathers?' Whence should I have flesh to give to all 13 this people? for they weep about me, saying, 'Give us flesh, that we may eat.' I am not 14 able to bear the burden of all this people alone; it is truly too heavy for me. And if thou 15 wilt deal thus with me, kill me, I pray thee, at once, if I have found favour in thy sight, that I may not see my 'own' misery."

Jehovah then said to Moses, "Gather to 16 me seventy men of the elders of Israel, whom thou knowest, that they may be elders and scribes of the people, and bring them unto the congregation-tabernacle, that they may stand there with thee. And I will come down 17 and talk with thee there; and I will take of the same spirit which is upon thee, and will put it upon them; and they shall bear the dance. I am inclined to think, that the word בָּשָׂר, here rendered flesh, denotes only the flesh of fish, as it certainly does in Levit. xi. 11. And indeed the next verse seems to support this explication: 'We remember how freely we ate fish.' It was then, particularly, the flesh of fish, for which they longed, which was much more relishing than either the beef or mutton of those regions; which, unless when young, is dry and unpalatable. Of the great abundance and deliciousness of the fish of Egypt, all authors, ancient and modern, are agreed.

5. Cucumbers, melons, &c. These are of very different qualities in the East, from those which grow in our northern climate. They are now, and ever have been, esteemed great delicacies.

7—9. See Notes on Exodus xvi.

10. Moses also was displeased, with the murmurings of the people.

11 The burden of this people. Moses had intreated God to send some burden of the people with thee, that thou may 18 est not bear it alone. And say thou to the people, "Prepare yourselves against to morrow, that ye may eat flesh; for ye have wept in the hearing of Jehovah, saying, 'O that we had flesh to eat? for it was well with us in Egypt;' therefore Jehovah will give you flesh, 19 that ye may eat. Not one day, nor two days,

 nor five days, nor ten days, nor twenty days; 20 But even a whole month shall ye eat, until the stomach reject it, so loathsome shall it become to you; because ye have despised Jehovah who is among you, and have wept before him, say-21 ing, "Why came we out of Egypt?" And Moses said, "The people, among whom I am,
 are six hundred thousand men; and thou hast said, 'I will give them flesh, that they may eat 22 a whole month.' Should the flocks and the herds be slain for them, would they suffice them? or should all the fish of the sea be gathered together for them, would they suffice 23 them?" And Jehovah said to Moses, "Is the hand of Jehovah shortened? Thou shalt now see whether my word to thee shall come to pass or not."
 24 And Moses went out, and told the people the words of Jehovah. He then assembled seventy men of the elders of the people, and 25 set them around the tabernacle. And Jehovah came down in the cloud, and spoke to him, and took of the same spirit that was upon him, and gave it to the seventy elders;
 and as soon as the spirit rested upon them, they prophesied. But there remained two of the 26 men in the camp, the name of the one was El-dad, and the name of the other Medad; and the spirit rested upon them; (for although they were enrolled, yet had they not gone to the tabernacle); and they prophesied in the camp.

 And a young man ran and told Moses, and 27
 said, "Eldad and Medad prophesy in the camp."
 And Joshua the son of Nun, the attendant of 28 Moses, one of his young men, answered and said, "My lord Moses, forbid them." And Mo- 29
 ses said to him, "Art thou jealous for my sake?
 O that all the people of Jehovah were prophets, and that Jehovah would put his spirit upon them!" And Moses departed into the 30
 camp, he and the elders of Israel.

And Jehovah sent forth a wind, and brought 31
 quails from the sea, and dispersed them around the camp to the distance of a days' journey on this side, and of a days' journey on the other side, round about the camp; and at about two cubits above the face of the earth.
 And the people continued all that day, and 32
 all that night, and all the next day, and gathered the quails: he that gathered least gathered ten homers; and they spread them all abroad to dry around the camp. And while 33
 the flesh was yet between their teeth, ere it was chewed, the wrath of Jehovah was kindled against the people, and he smote the people with a very great mortality. Hence, 34
 the name of the place was called Kibroth-hattaavah [THE GRAVES OF LONGING]; because other to lead the Israelites, Exod. iii. 11; and to this he seems to allude here.

15. My misery. He who sees good, enjoys it; and to see evil or misery, is to suffer it. Hence the meaning is, 'that I may not suffer such evils from a rebellious people.' Death would be his gain; but to abide was needful to the people.

24-30. The elders here chosen, seem to have been appointed to assist Moses in the government of the people; and as we read nothing more of the Council, it most probably died away. After the Captivity, the Jews formed a supreme Court at Jerusalem, of the same number of persons, which they called the Sanhedrim. Elders and Scribes are probably the same as mentioned Exod. xxiv. 1. The Mosaic scribes were a sort of judges, like the present Qadis of the Mahometans.

25, 26. These words are commonly rendered, 'and did not cease,' [to prophesy,] as in our public version, or 'and did not add,' as they are rendered by Ainsworth and Purver; neither of which renderings is to me intelligible. By adopting the Sam. reading, with Houbigant, Dathe, and Rosenmüller, and placing אָמַר at the head of ver. 26, the text will be rectified, and the sense clear.

31. And at about two cubits, &c. Our common version is, 'as it were two cubits high upon the face of the ground.' This conveys no determinate sense. What is meant by, 'as it were?' The text gives no countenance to this idea. Jerom renders, volabantque in aere, duobus cubitis altitudine super terram. 'They flew so nigh the ground, that they were easily caught;
 which is still the case, when quails, after a long aerial voyage, are exhausted with fatigue.' Josephus understood the text in like manner. Hence the objections of Patrick are at once answered. He contends, that such a quantity of quails is incredible indeed. But the rendering proposed makes the history credible; and is supported by known facts.

32. Spread them abroad. The spreading of the quails to dry is one of the reasons. Patrick assigns for his opinion, that locusts must be meant.
 Harmer has satisfactorily proved, that this mode of preserving flesh is even now customary. See vol. iv. p. 367.

33. It is probable, that the mortality was occasioned by their immoderate use of food, to which they had not been accustomed. In this manner they were punished for their murmuring.

there they buried the people who longed for flesh.

CHAPTER XII.

B. C. 1491. Miriam, and Aaron murmur against Moses.

35 AND the people journeyed from Kibroth-1 hattaavah unto Hazeroth. And while they were at Hazeroth, Miriam and Aaron spoke against Moses, because of the Cushite woman whom he had married: (for he had married 2 a Cushite woman.) And they said, "Hath Jehovah indeed spoken by Moses only? Hath he not spoken also by us?" And Jehovah heard 3 it. [Now the man Moses was very meek, above all the men who were upon the face 4 of the earth.] And Jehovah instantly spoke to Moses, and to Aaron, and to Miriam, "Come ye three unto the congregation-tabernacle." 5 And they three went. And Jehovah came down in the pillar of cloud, and stood at the door of the tabernacle, and called Aaron and 6 Miriam; and they both came. And he said,
"Hear now my words; If either of you prophesy, I Jehovah am wont to make myself

known to you in a vision, and speak to you in a dream. Not so with my servant Mo- 7 ses, who is faithful in all mine house. With 8 him I am wont to speak mouth to mouth;
even apparently, and not in dark speeches,
so that he may clearly perceive the will of Jehovah. Why then were ye not afraid to speak against my servant Moses?" And the 9 anger of Jehovah was kindled against them;
and he departed. And the cloud removed 10 from above the tabernacle; and, behold, Miriam became leprous, white as snow; and Aaron looked upon Miriam, and behold, she was leprous. And Aaron said to Moses; "Alas 11 my lord, I beseech thee, lay not upon us the sin which we have so foolishly committed, and by which we have offended. Let her not be 12
as a dead abortive, whose flesh, when he cometh from the womb of his mother, is half consumed." And Moses cried to Jehovah say- 13
ing, "Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee."
But Jehovah said to Moses, "If her father 14 had but spit in her presence, should she not be ashamed seven days? Let her be shut out

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XI. 1. Let us learn to be content with our lot, and not 'murmur as some of the Israelites murmured, and were destroyed of the destroyer.' 1 Cor. x. 10. How unbecoming and miserable is a dissatisfied temper! It leads us to forget our present mercies and enjoyments, and to magnify those which we once had, or those which others now have. Did we properly reflect, we should see the sinfulness of our conduct; and be led to repent of it in dust and ashes. 'Be content with such things as ye have,' and ever remember, that they are better than we deserve.

2. We here see, how often our desires and prayers, if granted, would be ruinous to our best interests! God knows what is best for us, and it will be our wisdom constantly to submit to his will. They asked for flesh; God gave to them what they asked and thousands perished! Let us then always present our petitions under a full conviction, that God knows our wants, and what will be best for us;

CHAP. XII. 1. Cushite woman. Jealousy of the power and influence of Moses, was the true cause of Aaron and Miriam's opposition; though some difference with his wife might occasion the present quarrel. I do not think it probable, as Michaelis did, that Moses having lost Zipporah, now married a second wife, an Arabian Cushite; but that what is said refers to Zipporah, who is called a Cushite by way of contempt, or because this name was given to the Midianites, as well as to some of the Arabians.

3. With Eichhorn I think this verse evidently a gloss inserted early into the text, as the connexion, without it, is complete; and as the form of expression, the man Moses, never occurs elsewhere. Kennicott renders, "Now the man Moses was highly favoured with answers, above all the

and like our blessed Lord, say, 'Not our will, but thine be done.'

3. In the spirit bestowed on the elders, and in the conduct of Moses, we see much to admire and imitate. When God calls persons to discharge any office, how easily can he endue them with suitable qualifications? By his spirit he can impart the richest gifts and graces. Let us always implore the assistance of this spirit, conscious that of ourselves, we are unable to do any thing aright; and let us be encouraged to apply for this gift, by the declaration, 'that God will give his spirit to them that ask.' Be it our care to imitate Moses in conquering all envy at the gifts of others, or rather in rejoicing when they are bestowed. This is the temper of the Christian; and a happy one it is. "Where envy and strife are, there is confusion and every evil work. But the wisdom that is from above is first pure, then peaceable, gentle, and easy to be entreated, full of mercy and good fruits, without partiality, and without hypocrisy."

men, &c. Others, 'The man Moses was more afflicted than any other man upon, &c. All the versions render as our common version does.

6. If either of you prophesy. Literally, 'if either of you be a prophet. I have preferred the sense to the idiom.

7, 8. These verses are in sense opposite to the preceding; so that it is intimated how much superior Moses was to Aaron and Miriam. God sometimes spoke to them in a vision, or dream, but to Moses audibly, as if face to face; to them in dark speeches, to Moses he made known his will clearly. As Rosenmuller observes רוח ה' does not mean the divine essence, but will, which God manifested in the fullest manner.

14. Spit in his presence. The manners of the oriental nations explain from the camp seven days, and after that she 15 shall recover." And Miriam was shut out from the camp seven days; and the people march-16 ed not until Miriam was recovered. And afterward the people removed from Hazeroth, and encamped in the wilderness of Paran.

CHAPTER XIII.

B. C. 1491. Spies sent to explore the land of Canaan, and their report.

"And Moses said to the children of Israel,
"Ye are now come to the mount of the Amorites, which Jehovah our God hath given to us. Lo! Jehovah hath placed the land before you; go up and possess it as Jehovah, the God of your fathers, hath spoken to you; fear not, nor be dismayed." Then they drew near to Moses and said, "Let us send men before us, that they may bring us word by what way we may go up, and into what cities we may come." And this thing was pleasing to Mo-1 ses." And Jehovah also spoke to him, say-2 ing, "Send men, that they may search the land of Canaan, which I give to the children of Israel; from every tribe of their fathers,

' shalt thou send a man, every one a ruler among them. And Moses, by the com- 3 mandment of Jehovah, sent them from the wilderness of Paran; all those men were chiefs of the children of Israel. And these were 4 their names: Of the tribe of Reuben, Shammua the son of Zaccur; Of the tribe of Si- 5
meon, Shaphat the son of Hori; Of the tribe 6 of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh; Of 7
the tribe of Issachar, Igal the son of Joseph;
Of the tribe of Ephraim, Oshea the son of 8
Nun; Of the tribe of Benjamin, Palti the 9 son of Raphu; Of the tribe of Zebulun, Gad- 10
diel the son of Sodi; Of the tribe of Joseph, 11 namely, of the tribe of Manasseh, Gaddi the son of Susi; Of the tribe of Dan, Ammiel 12
the son of Gemalli; Of the tribe of Asher, 13
Sethur the son of Michael; Of the tribe of 14
Naphtali, Nahbi the son of Vophsi; Of the 15 tribe of Gad, Geuel the son of Machi. These 16 are the names of the men whom Moses sent to spy out the land. Moses now called Oshea, the son of Nun, Joshua.

And Moses sent them to spy the land of 17

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. How true is the saying of our Lord, 'that a man's foes shall be those of his own house.'
God had honoured Moses as the leader of a numerous, but a stubborn race, and had distinguished Aaron by giving him the priesthood. Moses had married the daughter of Jethro, a Midianite, near forty years before this time, when the Israelites were slaves in Egypt; and yet Aaron and Miriam now reproach him with having married a stranger! 'Envy is the rottenness of the bones;'
let us carefully guard against it. How contemptible do both Aaron and Miriam appear, in their conduct to a most affectionate brother!

2. Let us learn in every difficulty to commit our cause to God. Moses did so, and God, indicates his character. He bears testimony to his constancy and fidelity. To Aaron and Miriam he had sometimes revealed his will, but not as to Moses. He had been 'faithful in all his house;' and with him God had conversed

*Sam. Deut. i. 20, &c.

most familiarly. Those whom God honours, we should honour; and to speak against them, is in fact to speak against God; and he will most assuredly vindicate them, and 'bring forth their righteousness as the light, and their judgment as the noon-day brightness.'

3. Let us learn from Moses, to exercise a forgiving temper.
Miriam seems to have been the leader in the opposition to Moses,
and God shows his displeasure by smiting her with the leprosy.
Aaron acknowledges his own sin and that of his sister. Moses discovers no bitterness, no spirit of revenge. He did not say,
'this is what she deserves;' but he earnestly prays for her;
'Heal her now, O God, I beseech thee.' Our Lord displayed the same temper to his enemies, 'Father forgive them; for they know not what they do;' and thus exemplified his own precept,
'that we should forgive our enemies, and pray for them who despitefully use us.'

this comma. They seldom or never spit as a natural discharge; but when they do spit on the ground in the presence of another person, it marks extreme detestation. Hence it is plain, that a father spitting before, or in the presence of his daughter, was thought so to dishonour her, that she secluded herself for seven days.—She shall recover. I cannot see, that the verb, shu, ever signifies 'to return;' whereas it certainly signifies, to recover from an illness; and particularly from a leprosy. See 2 Kings v. 3, 6, 7. The radical meaning of the word is, to gather; and in a metaphorical sense, to recover.

CHAP. XIII. 1. I have often wondered at the obstinacy, with which the integrity of the Masoretic Hebrew Text, and its superiority to the Sam.
Exemplar, have been defended. The words which are here wanting in the former, but expressed in the latter, are said in Deut. i. 20. to have been actually spoken by Moses to the Israelites on this occasion: and their omission in the Hebrew text is a manifest deficiency. The omission, however, must have been an early one, and prior to the Septuagint version; if the Septuagint version has not been here remodelled according to the Hebrew, which I greatly suspect.

They traverse the country.

Canaan, and said to them, "Go up southward, 18 and go up to the mountain: And see what the land is, and the people that dwell in it, whether they be strong or weak, few or many; 19 And whether the land in which they dwell, be good or bad; and whether they dwell in 20 open, or in fenced cities; And whether the soil be fat or lean; whether there be wood, or not. And be ye of good courage, and bring of the fruit of the land." Now the time was the time of the first ripe grapes.

21 So they went up, and searched the land from the wilderness of Zin, unto Rehob, in 22 the way to Hamath. And they ascended by the south, and came back unto Hebron, (which Hebron was built seven years before Zoan in Egypt,) and they found there Ahiman, She- 23 shai, and Talmi, of the race of Anak. And they came to the vale of Eshcol, and cut down and brought thence a branch with one cluster of grapes, and they bore it between two upon a staff; they brought also of the pome- 24 granates, and of the figs. The place was called the vale Eshcol [CLUSTER-VALE], because of the cluster of grapes which the children of Israel cut down there.

25 And after forty days they returned from search- 26 ing the land. And they came back to Moses, and to Aaron, and to all the congregation of the children of Israel, to the wilderness of Paran, near to Kadesh; and brought word unto them, and unto all the congregation, and show- 27 ed them the fruit of the land. And they told Moses, and said, "We came to the land whither thou sentest us, and surely it floweth with milk 28 and honey; and this is the fruit of it. But

16. Jos'ua: 'He will save,' is its meaning. His former name Hoshea, expressed what had been done, 'He hath saved; and this the confidence of Moses respecting what was yet to come. Some think this name was given to him by the Spirit of prophecy.

19. In open or fenced cities. I have adopted the Sam. reading as most consistent with the context. Because the question is not here of camps, or tents: but of what sort were the towns; whether weak or strong, open or walled,

20. For the time, &c. This was usually in the beginning or middle of September.

21. The wilderness of Zin. This was a part of that of Paran. Compare Ch. xxxiii. 36.—Rehob. This city was not far from Sidon, and in strong are the people who dwell in the land, and the cities are walled, and very great: and moreover we saw there the race of Anak. The Amalekites dwell in the land to the 29 south; and the Hethites, "and the Hivites", and the Jebusites, and the Amorites, dwell in the mountains; and the Canaanites dwell by the sea, and by the coast of the Jordan." On 30 hearing this the people murmured, but Caleb tried to still the people before Moses, and said, "Let us go up at once, and possess it; for we are well able to overcome it." But the men 31 that went up with him said, "We are not able to go up against the people; for they are stronger than we." Moreover they spread 32 abroad an evil report of the land which they had searched among the children of Israel, saying, "The land through which we have gone to search it, is a land that eateth up its inhabitants; and all the people that we saw in it, are men of a great stature. And there 33 we saw the giants, sprung from the gigantic race of Anak: and we were in our own sight as grasshoppers, and so were we in their sight." "Hence the children of Israel murmured in their tents and said, "Because Jehovah hateth us, he hath brought us out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us up into the hands of the Amorites, to destroy us. How should we go up? when our brethren discourage us, saying, 'The people are greater and more powerful than we; the cities are great and walled up to the heavens; and moreover we saw there, men of the race of Anak!' But Moses said to the children of Israel, "Jehovah your God, who leadeth you, will himself fight for you, accord-

the division of the land, it fell to the tribe of Asher. Josh. xix. 28. The spies seem to have gone along near the Jordan, and to have returned through the midst of the land, by the borders of the Sidonians and Philistines to Hebron, once honoured by the residence of Abraham, and now famous as the abode of the children of Anak. Who was this Anak? We have no account of such a man, which lead Michaelis to render appellatively. The word py signifies, 'to go into a hole or cave;' and the Anakites were such as lived in caves, Troglodites.

32, 33. Men of great stature. Doubtless fear magnified the stature of the inhabitants of Canaan; and though they might be taller than the Israelites, the disparity would not be such as their language implies. The addition of the Sam is so natural and is supported by Deut. i. 27-33, ing to all that he did for you in Egypt, before your own eyes; and in this wilderness, where you have seen, how Jehovah, your God, hath carried you, as a man carrieth his son, through all the way ye have gone, until ye came to this place. And in this matter, are ye distrustful of Jehovah, your God, who goeth before you in the way, in a fire by night, and in a cloud by day, to search out a place for your encampments; and to show you by what way ye should go?"

CHAPTER XIV.

B. C. 1491. Murmuring of the people; Caleb and Joshua's attempt to pacify them.

- 1 The whole congregation now raised their voice, and cried aloud; and the people wept
- 2 that night. And all the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron; and the whole congregation said to them, "O that we had died in the land of Egypt! or
- 3 O that we might die in this wilderness! And why should Jehovah bring us into that land, to fall by the sword; that our wives and our children should become a prey? Were it not better
- 4 for us to return into Egypt?" And they said one to another, "Let us appoint a leader, and
- 5 let us return into Egypt." Then Moses and Aaron fell on their faces before all the assembly of the congregation of the children of Israel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. The fruits of the land of Canaan justified the account which had been given of it. It was a good land, abounding with the most desirable productions. How much more justly may this be said of the heavenly Canaan! Our Lord, who came thence, has assured us, that it is a happy, delightful place. Pious persons on earth have often experienced some foretastes of that good land, in their holy joys and spiritual consolations. God fulfils his promise, and gives them such tokens of his favour, as are an earnest of their everlasting inheritance. Encouraged by such experience, let us "press forward towards the mark, for the prize of our high calling."

2. We cannot reflect on the unbelieving and cowardly spies, that I have admitted it.

CHAP. XIV. 1-8. Cried aloud. Nothing can show more clearly the base spirit of this race than their conduct. They consider their present state as insupportable; and forgetting the miseries of Egypt, they resolve

VOL. I. PART III.

And Joshua the son of Nun, and Caleb the 6 son of Jephunneh, two of those who had searched the land, rent their clothes: And they spoke 7 to all the congregation of the children of Israel, saying, "The land which we passed through, to search it, is an exceedingly good land. If Jehovah delight in us, he will bring us in- 8 to this land, and give it to us; a land which floweth with milk and honey. Only rebel not 9 against Jehovah, nor be ye afraid of the people of the land; for they shall be bread for us: their defence is departed from them, but Jehovah is with us: fear them not." But all 10 the congregation proposed to stone them with stones; when the glory of Jehovah appeared "in the cloud over" the congregation-tabernacle before all the children of Israel.

And Jehovah said to Moses, "How long 11 will this people provoke me? and how long will they not believe me, on account of the signs which I have showed among them? I 12 will smite them with the pestilence, and disinherit them, and will make of thee "and thy father's house" a nation greater and mightier than they."

And Moses said to Jehovah, "Then the E- 13 gyptians will hear it from amongst whom thou broughtest up this people in thy might; And 14 all the inhabitants of this land will say:— (for they have heard that thou Jehovah art among this people, that thou art seen face without abhorrence. After all that God had done for the people, and the proofs he had given of his fidelity, yet to doubt and to tremble, was most unreasonable. Were the Canaanites more powerful than the Egyptians? Could not the same God who had delivered, still deliver them? How frequently may the same questions be put to Christians! Their unbelief produces fear, and dispirits them. Their foes are considered as mighty, and almost invincible. Thus when they should arise, and go into the good land, they remain still in their place; but let us, like Caleb and Joshua regard the power and grace of God, as sufficient to save us with an everlasting salvation. Confiding in him no enemies will be too powerful for us; for he will fight for us.

4. Appoint a leader. From Nehem. ix. 17, it appears, that they actually went so far as to choose one to conduct them back to Egypt. Thus they rebelled against Moses and against God, whose servant he was.

to face, and that thy cloud standeth over them, and that thou goest before them, by day in a pillar of cloud, and by night in a pillar of fire:) Now if thou kill all this people as one man, then the nations who heard the fame of thee will speak, saying, 'Because Jehovah was not able to bring this people into the land which he had sworn to give them, he therefore hath slain them in the wilderness.' And now, I beseech thee, let the power of Jehovah be great, according as thou hast spoken of thyself, saying, 'Jehovah is long suffering, and abounding in mercy "and truth", forgiving iniquity, transgression, "and sin", acquitting him who is not innocent; visiting the father's iniquity upon the children to the third or fourth generation only.' Pardon, I beseech thee, the iniquity of this people according to the greatness of thy mercy, and as thou hast forgiven this people, from Egypt even until now." And Jehovah said, "I have pardoned according to thy word; But as sure as I live, and as the whole earth shall be filled with the glory of Jehovah, Verily all these men who have seen my glory, and my miracles, which I have done in Egypt, and in the wilderness, and have tempted me now these ten times, and have not hearkened to my voice; They shall not see the land which I swore to their fathers that I would give them; not any of those who have despised me shall see it. But my servant Caleb, because he had another spirit in him, and hath followed me fully, him will I bring into the land into which he went; and his seed shall possess it. As then the Amalekites and the Canaanites occupy the valley, to morrow turn and march into the wilderness, by the way of the Red-sea."

15. As one man; that is, altogether, wholly. Compare Judg. xvi. 16.

17—18. Moses avails himself of the declaration which Jehovah had made to him, Exodus xxxiv. 6; that he might obtain pardon for the sin of the people.

21. I have followed Vatable and others, who consider the latter clause of this verse to be a part of the oath; but I regard it as containing a prediction, that the perfections of God, called his glory, should assuredly be manifested throughout the earth.

Jehovah also spoke to Moses and to Aaron, 26 saying, "How long shall I bear with this evil 27 congregation, who murmur against me? The murmurings of the children of Israel, which they murmur against me, I have heard. Say 28 to them, 'As I live, saith Jehovah, as ye have spoken in mine hearing, so will I do to you. In this wilderness your carcases shall lie; and 29 all that were numbered of you, your whole number, from twenty years old and upward, who have murmured against me, Shall not 30 come into the land, in which I swore that ye should dwell; except Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun. But your 31 little ones, who, ye said, should be a prey, them will I bring in, and they shall inherit the land which ye have despised. But as for 32 you, your carcases, shall lie in this wilderness. And your children shall wander in the wilderness 33 forty years; and shall suffer for your rebellions, until your carcases be wasted in the wilderness. After the number of the days in 34 which ye searched the land, forty days, each day for a year, shall ye bear your iniquities forty years, and ye shall know my indignation. I Jehovah have spoken, and I will surely do 35 this, to all this evil congregation, who have assembled against me: in this wilderness they shall be consumed, and therein they shall die."

Now the men, whom Moses had sent to 36 search the land; and who had returned, and made all the congregation to murmur against him, by bringing an evil report of the land; Even those men who had brought an evil report of the land, died by the plague, before Jehovah. But Joshua the son of Nun, and 38 Caleb the son of Jephunneh, two of the men

39 who went to search the land, still lived. And Moses told these things to the children of Israel; and the people mourned greatly.

40 And they rose up early in the morning, and would go up to the top of the mountain, saying, "Lo, we are here, and will go up to the place which Jehovah hath promised: for we have sinned." But Jehovah said to Moses, "Go not up, nor fight with them, for I am not among you, lest ye be smitten by your 41 enemies." And Moses said, "Why now do ye transgress the command of Jehovah? This 42 attempt shall not prosper. Go not up, for Jehovah is not among you; lest ye be smit-43 ten before your enemies. For the Amalekites and the Canaanites are there before you, and ye shall fall by the sword; because ye have revolted from Jehovah, therefore Jehovah will not be 44 with you." But they presumed to go up to the top of the mountain: yet the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, and Moses, departed not out
45 of the camp. Then the Amalekites, and the Canaanites who had occupied that mountain, came down to meet them, and smote them, and discomfited them, even unto Hormah; and they returned to the camp".

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. How ungrateful and even foolish was the conduct of the Israelites. They forgot all that God had done for them, and passionately wished for death; as if death was to be the end of their sorrows. They reflected on God himself, as if all that he had done, was for their destruction, not for their salvation. Thus they charged God foolishly, and brought on themselves his indignation. What can be more unbecoming a dependent creature than such conduct; and what more unsuitable to a sinful creature? Instead of humility, they manifested pride; instead of gratitude, dissatisfaction; and instead of submission and penitence, rebellion and obstinacy. "Let us not

And the fourth part 5 of a hin of wine for a drink-offering shall he prepare for the burnt-offering or other sacrifice for one lamb: But for a ram, he shall 6 prepare for a wheaten-offering two tenth parts of an ephah of flour mingled with the third part of a hin of oil. And for a drink-offering 7 he shall offer the third part of a hin of wine, for a sweet savour to Jehovah. And 8 when one prepareth a steer for a burnt-offering or for other sacrifice, whether for a vow, or for a feast-sacrifice to Jehovah: Then 9 shall he bring with the steer a wheaten-offering of three tenth parts of an ephah of flour mingled with half a hin of oil. And he shall bring 10 for a drink-offering half a hin of wine, for a burnt-offering, of a sweet savour to Jehovah. Thus shall it be done for one steer, or for one 11 ram, or for a lamb, or a kid. According to 12 the number that ye shall prepare, so shall ye do to every one according to their number. All the natives shall do after this manner, 13 murmur as they murmured, lest we also be destroyed by the destroyer."

2. Let us follow the noble example of Caleb and Joshua. They had another spirit; a totally different spirit from the other spies, and from the great body of the people. They followed the Lord fully. Thus let us follow him, uprightly, without dissembling; cheerfully, without disputing; and constantly, without declining. We have need of great resolution; we must 'gird up the loins of our mind,' break through difficulties, and 'not follow a multitude to do evil.' Those that are zealous for God in a crooked and perverse generation, shall be owned by him with a peculiar two tenth parts, and with a steer three tenth parts; and the drink-offerings in a similar proportion.

13—16. The laws regarding strangers have two designs—first to pre-

when they offer a burnt-offering, of a sweet 14 savour to Jehovah. And if a stranger sojourn with you, or whosoever be among you throughout your generations, and will offer a burnt-offering, of a sweet savour to Jehovah; as ye 15 do, so shall he do. One ordinance shall be both for you of the congregation, and also for the stranger who sojourneth with you, a perpetual ordinance throughout your generations:
 as ye are, so shall the stranger be, before Jeho-16 vah. There shall be but one law and one rite for you, and for the stranger who sojourneth with you."

17 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
 18 "Speak to the children of Israel, and say unto them, 'When ye come into the land whither I 19 bring you, Then it shall be, that, when ye eat of the bread of the land, ye shall offer up 20 a heave-offering to Jehovah. Ye shall offer up a cake of the first of your dough for a heave-offering; as ye do the heave-offering of 21 the threshing-floor, so shall ye heave it. Of the first of your dough ye shall give to Jehovah a heave-offering throughout your generations.

22 "And if ye have erred, and not observed all these commandments, which Jehovah hath 23 spoken to Moses; All that Jehovah hath commanded you by Moses, from the day that he commanded Moses, and henceforward 24 throughout your generations; Then it shall be,
 if aught be committed by ignorance without the knowledge of the congregation, that the whole congregation, shall offer one steer for a burnt-offering, of a sweet savour to Jehovah, with its wheaten-offering, and its drink-offering, according to the prescribed rite; and one goat

for a sin-offering. And the priest shall make 25 an atonement for the whole congregation of the children of Israel, and they shall be forgiven; since it was a sin of ignorance, and they have brought a burnt-offering to Jehovah, for their sin of ignorance, with their sin-offering before Jehovah. And the whole congregation 26 of the children of Israel, and the stranger that sojourneth among them shall be forgiven: seeing all the people offended through ignorance.

"And if any one person sin through ignorance, 27
 then he shall bring a she-goat of the first year
 for a sin-offering. And the priest shall make 28
 an atonement for the person who hath sinned ignorantly, for the sin of ignorance, before Jehovah; and he shall be forgiven. For the 29 native Israelites, and for the stranger who sojourneth among them, ye shall have but one law, for the sin of ignorance.

"But the person who doeth aught presump- 30
 tuously, whether he be a native, or a stranger, he reproacheth Jehovah; and that person shall be cut off from among his people. Because 31 he hath despised the word of Jehovah, and hath broken his commandment, that person shall utterly be cut off; his iniquity shall be upon him."

And while the children of Israel were in 32
 the wilderness they found a man that gathered sticks on the sabbath day. And they that 33 found him gathering sticks brought him to Moses and to Aaron, and to all the congregation. And they put him in custody, be- 34 cause it was not declared what should be done to him. And Jehovah said to Moses, "The 35 man shall surely be put to death: all the congregation shall stone him with stones with-honour another day; they shall be distinguished, as those two good men were, from the rest; "they shall be mine, saith the Lord, in that day when I make up my jewels."

3. Let the judgment which the Israelites brought on themselves, teach us to avoid their sin. When God commanded them to go and possess the land, they refused to go; and when he declared that they should not enter in, then they resolved to go. They went up and were cut down by their enemies. We see at one time, cowardice; at another rashness; lately they refused to go, having God for their leader, and now they will go without his presence or his blessing. Thus sinful men are by turns presump- tuously and desponding. In all cases let us remember, that he only walks securely who walks uprightly; and he only walks uprightly, who obeys God.

36 out the camp." And all the congregation brought him without the camp, and stoned him with stones until he died; as Jehovah had commanded Moses.

37 Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak to the children of Israel, and bid them make fringes on the borders of their garments throughout their generations; and on the fringe of the borders put a ribband of blue: And ye shall have the fringe that ye may look upon it, and remember all the commandments of Jehovah, and do them; and not wander after your own heart and your own eyes, by which ye are wont to be led astray: That ye may remember, and do all my commandments, and be holy to your God. I am Jehovah your God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt, to be your God: I am Jehovah your God."

2. C. 1491. The rebellion of Korah and his associates, and their punishment.

1 Now Korah, the son of Izhar, the son of Kohath, the son of Levi, and Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, and On, the son of Peleth, sons of Reuben, conspired, And rose up against Moses, with certain of the children of Israel, two hundred and fifty chiefs of the assembly, members of the council, men of renown. And they assembled against Moses and against Aaron, and said to them, "Ye take too much upon you, since all, and every one, of the congregation are holy, and Jehovah is among them; why then raise ye yourselves above the congregation of Jehovah?" And when Moses heard this, he fell upon his face. Then he spoke to Korah and to all his company, saying, "To morrow Jehovah will show who is his, and who is holy, and who ought to approach him; for himself will choose who shall approach him. This do ye; 6 take ye censers, Korah, and all his company; And put fire and incense on them to morrow 7 before Jehovah, and that man whom Jehovah shall choose, shall be deemed holy: ye take too much upon you, ye sons of Levi." Moses 8 also said to Korah, "Hear I pray you, ye sons of Levi: Seemeth it a small thing to you, 9 that the God of Israel hath separated you from the congregation of Israel, to bring you near to himself to do the service of the tabernacle of Jehovah, and to stand before the congregation to minister unto them? And he 10 hath brought thee and all thy brethren, the sons of Levi, near to himself; and yet ye seek the priesthood; For which cause thou and 11 all thy company are assembled against Jehovah; for what is Aaron that ye murmur against him?"

And Moses sent to call Dathan and Abiram, 12 the sons of Eliab; but they said, "We will not come. Is it a small thing that thou hast 13 brought us up out of a land that floweth with REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. From the laws of this Chapter we may learn how we ought to study the revealed will of God, lest we should offend 'through ignorance.' God has given us sufficient means of religious knowledge, and faculties, capable of the greatest improvement; but if we neglect these means, and never apply our minds to them, we shall remain grossly ignorant. How displeasing must this be to God! Let us lay up, then, his words in our hearts, that we may not sin against him, through ignorance; and good shall thereby come unto us. Like the righteous man, let us make, "the law of God our delight, and meditate on it, by day and by night." Psa. i. 2.

2. With what holy solicitude should we guard against 'presumptuous' sins! Such as openly and wilfully violating the Sabbath; profane swearing and other crimes of the like nature. Though the laws under which we live do not make such crimes capital, they are aggravated in the sight of God, and without repentance, they will be found destructive indeed. Fervently did the holy Psalmist pray, 'to be kept from them.' "Keep back thy servant from presumptuous sins; Let them not have dominion over me." Such let our prayer be; and while we thus stand in holy awe we shall be preserved. Then shall we be upright, and innocent from the great transgression.

For such offences there was no atonement appointed, but the person must be cut off.

37-44. See Introduction, Part ii. Chap. 10. § 7.

CHAP. XVI. 1. Conspired. I have given the sense, whether we read spoke, or with Bishop Newcome spoke. The context requires this version.

3. Ye take too much upon you. Ye assume the chief offices of the Sanctuary, as if ye were more holy than others; whereas we are all holy, and the people of God. Such appears to be the sense of this passage.

5. Who is holy. Moses retorts their own language.

15. I have followed Houbigant in the construction of the latter part milk and honey, to kill us in the wilderness, that thou wouldst also make thyself an absolute prince over us? Moreover thou hast not brought us into a land that floweth with milk and honey, or given to us an inheritance of fields and vineyards; and wilt thou put out the eyes of these men? we will not come.”

15 And Moses was very wroth, and said to Jehovah, “Respect not thou their offering. Not one ass have I taken from them; nor one of them have I injured.” And Moses said to Korah, “Be thou and all thy company, before Jehovah; thou, and they, and Aaron, to morrow; And let every man take his censer, and put incense on it; and bring ye, before Jehovah, two hundred and fifty censers, every man his own censer; thou also and Aaron, each man his censer.” And they took every man his censer, and put fire in them, and laid incense thereon. And Moses and Aaron stood at the door of the congregation-tabernacle. And Korah assembled the whole congregation against them to the door of the congregation-tabernacle, and the glory of Jehovah appeared to the whole congregation. And Jehovah spoke to Moses and to Aaron, saying, “Separate yourselves from among this congregation, that I may consume them in a moment.” But they fell upon their faces, and said, “O God, the God of the spirits of all flesh, shall one man sin, and wilt thou be wroth with the whole congregation?”

23 Jehovah then spoke to Moses, saying, 24 “Speak to the congregation, saying, ‘Go away from about the tabernacles of Korah, Dathan, 25 and Abiram.’” And Moses arose and went to Dathan and Abiram; and the elders of Israel 26 followed him. And he spoke to the congregation, saying, “Depart, I pray you, from the tents of these wicked men, and touch nothing of their’s, lest ye be consumed in the punishment of all their sins.” So they went on every 27 side from about the tents of Korah, Dathan, and Abiram. And Dathan and Abiram came out, and stood at the door of their tents, with their wives, and their sons, and their little ones. And Moses said, “By this ye shall know that Jehovah hath sent me to do all these works; and that I have not done them of mine own mind. If these men die the common death of all men, 28 or if they be visited after the visitation of all men; then, Jehovah hath not sent me. But 30 if Jehovah do a new thing, if the earth open her mouth, and swallow them up, with all that belongeth to them; and they go down alive into the pit; then ye shall know that these men have despised Jehovah.”

And as soon as he had made an end of speaking all these words, the ground under them burst asunder; And the earth opened her 32 mouth, and swallowed them up, and their households; even all the men who had joined Korah, and all their substance. They, and all 33 that belonged to them, went down alive into the pit; and the earth closed upon them, and they perished from among the congregation. And all the Israelites, who were round about 34 them, fled at their cry; for they said, “Lest the earth swallow us up also.” And a fire from 35 Jehovah, issued forth and consumed the two hundred and fifty men who had offered incense.

Now Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, 36 “Speak to Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, 37 that he take up the censers from amidst the burning, and scatter about the fire; for they are hallowed. Of the censers of those sinners 38 against their own lives, let them make broad plates for a covering of the altar; for as they offered them before Jehovah, they are therefore hallowed, that they may be for a sign to the children of Israel.” So Eleazar the son of 39 Aaron the priest took the brazen censers, of this verse. The Sept and Syr. want the vau before Moses.

19. The whole congregation. We are not to imagine, that all the Israelites joined in conspiracy; but most probably those are meant over whom the 250 chiefs presided, and whom they might influence to support them in their claims.

31. Infidelity has nothing to object to this minute detail of facts, and this striking proof of the divine mission of Moses, but to call in question the truth of the history. By the same mode, the whole of the old Testa-

with which they that were burned had offered fire; and they were made into broad plates for 40 a covering to the altar; For a memorial to the children of Israel, that no one, who is not of the seed of Aaron, should approach to offer incense before Jehovah; lest it should be done to him as to Korah, and his company: as Jehovah said to him by Moses.

41 But on the morrow the whole congregation of the children of Israel murmured against Moses and against Aaron, saying, "Ye have 42 killed Jehovah's people." And, when the congregation were assembling against Moses and against Aaron, they looked towards the congregation-tabernacle, and, behold, the cloud covered it, and the glory of Jehovah appeared.
43 And Moses and Aaron having come before the 44 congregation-tabernacle, Jehovah spoke to 45 them, saying, "Go from among this congregation; and in a moment I will consume them."
46 But they fell upon their faces: And Moses said to Aaron, "Take a censer, and put fire from the altar on it, and put on incense, and go quickly to the congregation, and make an atonement for them: for wrath is gone forth from Jehovah; the plague is begun." And 47 Aaron took a censer as Moses commanded, and ran into the midst of the congregation; and, behold, the plague was begun among the people; and he put incense on the censer, and made an atonement for the people. And he 48 stood between the dead and the living; and the plague was stopped. Now they that died, 49 by the plague, were fourteen thousand and seven hundred; besides those who died for the rebellion of Korah. And when the plague was 50 stopped, Aaron returned to Moses to the door of the congregation-tabernacle.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. Let the awful events recorded in this Chapter admonish us, to beware of rebellion against God's authority. Korah and his associates, prompted by ambition and envy, aspired to the priesthood, which God had so particularly conferred on Aaron and his sons. They pretended to maintain the rights of the people. 'All the people are holy,' and ye Moses and Aaron, 'take too much upon you,' is their language. Had they not had the most striking proofs, that Moses was sent of God, and that the Law which he had given them, was of divine origin? Had Moses ruled over them with rigour, or taken aught from them? Had he not passed by his own family in respect to the priesthood? Never man acted with more justice, meekness, and fidelity than he did, seeking invariably the welfare of Israel and the glory of God. Let us not think it strange, if our good be 'evil spoken of;' and let us learn, when envied, reviled and persecuted, to commit our cause to him who judgeth righteously.

2. How awful is the vengeance which God sometimes takes on presumptuous sinners. He will vindicate his servants and maintain his own honour. When necessary 'he will do a new thing in the earth,' and display his righteous displeasure against sin. "It is a fearful thing to fall into the hands of a sin-punishing ment, or any other writings may be set aside.

41. The people murmured. They might suppose that Moses and Aaron by their prayers might have prevented the awful calamity which had befallen Korah and his associates; and for their omission of this, charge them with being the authors of their destruction.

Syr. Ar.

God." All nature is under his control, and the earth on which we dwell, and by whose produce we are supported, he can make the instrument of our destruction. 'They went alive into the pit.' What must have been the horror, when the earth began to reel, when it burst asunder! Well might these rebels shriek out, and well might the children of Israel fly, on witnessing such a scene! Ah, could we hear the groans and shrieks of those who have descended to the bottomless pit, we should fly as for our lives, lest we should fall into the same pit.

3. What honour God put on Aaron, and the priesthood! The people had countenanced Korah and his company, and were partakers in their sin; but Moses commands, and Aaron takes his censer and incense, and stands between the dead and the living, and the plague was stopped. Thus God showed them, whom he would accept, and who should approach unto him. Let us here contemplate Him, who in a nobler sense interposed between the dead and the living—between men dead in trespasses and sins, and the living God; and who not only exposed his own life to danger as Aaron did, but who laid down his life for us. By his Sacrifice, atonement is made; and by his ever prevailing intercession, the offending children of men are spared. He has turned away wrath, and made peace by his cross.

48—49. How soon did the people experience the divine displeasure. Not warned by the ruin of others, they rebelled and perished.

CHAP. XVII. 2. Twelve rods. These were the rods of office and authority; and the twelve chiefs, were the heads of the tribes.

4. I am wont to meet with thee. I consider the verb here, as used in twelve rods, one for each paternal house, one from every chief of their paternal houses, whose name thou shalt write upon his own rod. And thou shalt write Aaron's name upon the rod of Levi; for one rod shall be for the head of each paternal house. And thou shalt lay them up in the congregation-tabernacle before the testimony, where I am wont to meet with thee. And it shall be, that the man's rod, whom I will choose, shall blossom; that I may make to cease from me the murmurings of the children of Israel, whereby they murmur against you."

6 And Moses spoke to the children of Israel, and every one of their chiefs gave him a rod, for each chief one, according to their paternal houses, twelve rods; and among their rods was the rod of Aaron. And Moses laid up the rods before Jehovah, in the testimony-tabernacle. And on the morrow it was, when Moses went into the testimony-tabernacle, that, behold, the rod of Aaron, for the house of Levi, had brought forth buds, and produced blossoms, and ripe almonds. And Moses brought out all the rods from before Jehovah to all the children of Israel; and they saw, and each man took his own rod.

10 And Jehovah said to Moses, "Bring Aaron's rod before the testimony, to be kept for a token to these rebellious men; that their murmurings may cease from me that they die not."

CHAP. XVII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. We here see a striking miracle; and the design of it was to put an end to the murmurings of the people. God had punished them for their rebellion, and now gives a perpetual token to inspire submission to his will, and to lead them to repentance. Thus both the severity and goodness of God are manifestly designed to promote the best interests of men. The righteous Lord loveth righteousness, and hateth iniquity; and to inspire us with the love of the one and the hatred of the other, is the end of his dispensations.

2. We here see the weakness and folly of this people again a frequentative sense, and not as simply foretelling or promising.

8. And ripe almonds. Literally, and 'ripened almonds. I have preferred the sense to the idiom, as it is more perspicuous.

10. Rebellious men. Literally, 'sons of rebellion.' The rod was to be laid up as a token or sign to them, that God had chosen Aaron and his sons to the office of the priesthood.

And Moses did so; as Jehovah had commanded him, so did he. Then the children of Israel spoke to Moses, saying, "Behold we die, we perish, we all perish! Whosoever approacheth the tabernacle of Jehovah dieth: shall we wholly expire?"

CHAPTER XVIII.

B. C. 1491. The charge of the Priests and Levites, and their portion of the offerings.

JEHOVAH now said to Aaron, "Thou, and thy sons, and thy father's house shall bear the iniquity of the sanctuary; and thou, and thy sons with thee shall bear the iniquity of your priesthood. And thy brethren also of the tribe of Levi, the tribe of thy father, take to thyself, that they may be joined to thee, and minister to thee; but thou and thy sons with thee shall minister before the testimony-tabernacle. And they shall keep thy charge, and the charge of the whole tabernacle; only they shall not approach the hallowed utensils of the sanctuary and the altar, lest both ye and they die. And they shall be joined to thee, and keep the charge of the congregation-tabernacle, for every service of the tabernacle; and no stranger shall approach to you. And ye shall keep the charge of the sanctuary, and the charge of the altar; that there may be no more wrath against the children of Israel.

4. v Sam. Sept. Vulg. Ar.

displayed. They lately maintained that all the Lord's people were holy, and ought to have a right to approach the sanctuary, even the most Holy Place! Now, no one, can come near to the tabernacle, without being consumed. They are terrified, and expect to perish, if they but draw near. Thus are men at one time guilty of rashness and presumption; and at another of fear and trembling. Let us learn to make God our fear, so as not to offend him; but to avoid that dread which implies a want of confidence in his mercy and kindness. Alas! what unbelief, ingratitude, murmuring and disobedience are we guilty of.

CHAP. XVIII. 1. Shall bear the iniquity of the Sanctuary. Some explain this to mean, 'Ye shall suffer punishment, if ye neglect any of the rites prescribed.' Others suppose the sense to be, 'Ye shall keep the sanctuary, so that no one, but those of your own family, shall be permitted to minister in it.'

2. May be joined to thee. There is here an evident allusion to the

- 6 For behold, I have taken your brethren the Levites from among the children of Israel; to you they are given as a gift to Jehovah, to do the service of the congregation-tabernacle. Therefore thou, and thy sons with thee shall keep your priest's office and do every service about the altar, and within the veil; your priesthood I have given wholly to you; and the stranger who approacheth shall be put to death."
- 8 Jehovah also spoke to Aaron, "Behold, I also give to thee the charge of mine heave-offerings out of all the hallowed things of the children of Israel; to thee I give them as thy portion, and to thy sons, by a perpetual ordinance. This shall be thine out of the most holy burnt-offerings: of their every oblation, of their every wheaten-offering, and of their every sin-offering, and of their every guilt-offering, which they shall bring to me, this shall be most holy to thee and to thy sons.
- 10 In the most holy place shalt thou eat it; every male shall eat it: it shall be holy to thee.
- 11 And these also are thine; their heave-offering gift, with every wave-offering of the children of Israel, I give to thee, and to thy sons and to thy daughters with thee, by a perpetual statute: every one that is clean in thy
- 12 house may eat of it. Of all the best of the oil, and of all the best of the wine, and of the wheat, the first-fruits of which they shall offer
- 13 to Jehovah, them I give to thee. And whatsoever is first ripe in the land, which they shall bring to Jehovah, shall be thine; every one that is clean in thine house may eat of it.
- 14 Every thing devoted in Israel shall be thine.
- 15 Every first-born male of all flesh, which they bring to Jehovah, whether it be of man or beast, shall be thine; yet the first-born of man thou shalt allow to be redeemed, and the firstling of unclean beasts shall be redeemed. And 16 those that are to be redeemed from a month old shalt thou allow to be redeemed, for the value of five shekels of silver, according to the shekel of the sanctuary, which is twenty gerahs. But the firstling of a cow, or the firstling of a sheep, or the firstling of a goat, thou shalt not allow to be redeemed; they are holy: thou shalt sprinkle their blood upon the altar, and shalt burn their fat as a burnt-offering of a sweet savour to Jehovah. But their flesh 18 shall be thine, as the wave-breast and as the right-shoulder of the feast-sacrifice are thine. All the heave-offerings of the holy things, 19 which the children of Israel offer to Jehovah, I give to thee, and to thy sons and thy daughters with thee, by a perpetual statute: a covenanted portion is this for ever before Jehovah to thee, and to thy seed with thee."

Again Jehovah spoke to Aaron, "Thou shalt 20 have no inheritance in the land, among the children of Israel, nor shalt thou have any part among them; I am thy part and thine inheritance. And, behold, I give to the children 21 of Levi all the tenth in Israel instead of an inheritance, for the service which they do; the service of the congregation-tabernacle. And 22 the children of Israel must not henceforth approach the congregation-tabernacle, lest they bear sin, and die. For the Levites shall do 23 the service of the congregation-tabernacle; and by a perpetual statute throughout your generations, they shall bear their iniquity; but among the children of Israel they shall have name of Levi. Comp. Gen. xxix. 34.—Testimony-Tabernacle. This denotes the Holy of Holies, where none but the high priest was allowed to enter.

8. Thy portion. See Note on Levit. vii. 35.

9—11. The first of these verses refers to him, who had sinned by withholding his holy things. Compare Levit. v. 15, 16. In the next two verses, are mentioned two kinds of offerings; the one called 'most holy,' which comprehended sacrifices of every sort; of which it was lawful for the priests only to eat; the other called 'holy,' which included the first-fruits, things devoted to God, and what was offered for the redemption of the first-born, of which any of the family of Aaron might eat.

14. Compare Levit. xxvii. 21, 28.

16—17. Shalt thou allow to be redeemed. Michaelis very properly observes, that as this address is to Aaron, the verb תפדה must be read in the hiphil voice, and rendered as I have done. The common version implies that the priest was to redeem, which conveys a sense opposite to that intended.

18. Compare Leviticus vii. 29—32.

19. A covenanted portion. Literally, 'a covenant of salt.' From the quality of salt, in preserving what is seasoned therewith; a covenant, that was to be durable, appears to have been called, a covenant of salt; and in those terms such a covenant is mentioned, Numb. xviii. 19; 1 Chr. xiii. 5; where it evidently refers to what, in other places, is called a perpetual, or an everlasting covenant. I have given what is obviously the sense. Compare Levit. ii. 13.

24 no inheritance. But the tithes of the children of Israel, which they offer as a heave-offering to Jehovah, I give to the Levites for an inheritance: therefore I say to them, 'Among the children of Israel they shall have no inheritance.'
 25 Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
 26 "Thus speak to the Levites and say to them, 'When ye take of the children of Israel, the tithes which I give you from them for your inheritance, then ye shall offer up of it, as a heave-offering to Jehovah, a tenth part of 27 the tithe. And your heave-offering shall be reckoned to you, as though it were the corn of the threshing-floor, and as the fulness of 28 the wine-press. Thus ye also shall offer a heave-offering to Jehovah, of all the tithes which ye receive from the children of Israel; and ye shall give of them Jehovah's 29 heave-offering, to Aaron the priest. Out of all your gifts, ye shall offer a heave-offering to Jehovah; of all the best and most 30 hallowed part. Therefore thou shalt say to them, "When ye have offered the best, then it shall be counted to the Levites as the increase of the threshing-floor, and as the in-31 crease of the wine-press. And ye shall eat the rest in every place, ye and your households; for it is a recompense to you for your service about the congregation-tabernacle.
 32 And when ye have offered of the best of it, ye shall not bear sin on account of it; for the holy things of the children of Israel ye shall not profane, lest ye die."

B: C. 1471. The purification-water made of the ashes of a red heifer, and the use of it.

AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, and to Aaron, saying, "This is the ordinance of the 2 law which Jehovah hath commanded, saying, 'Speak to the children of Israel, that they bring to thee a red heifer without spot, or blemish, upon which a yoke never came; And ye shall give her to Eleazar the priest, 3 that he may bring her forth without the camp and cause her to be slain in his presence. And Eleazar the priest shall take some of 4 her blood, with his finger, and sprinkle of her blood directly before the congregation-tabernacle, seven times; And the heifer shall 5 be burned in his presence; her skin, and her flesh, and her blood, and her dung, shall be burned together. And the priest shall take 6 cedar wood, and hyssop, and scarlet thread, and cast them into the fire which burneth the heifer. Then the priest shall wash his 7 clothes, and shall bathe his body in water, and afterward he shall come into the camp; and the priest shall be unclean until the evening. And he also who burneth her shall wash 8 his clothes, and bathe his body in water, and shall be unclean until the evening. And some 9

CHAP. XIX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. It was but equitable that those who served at the altar, should be supported. They were to be employed for the benefit of the other tribes, and in the division of the land they had no part; so that unless provision had been made, they would have been treated with great injustice. 'Remember the Levite,' was a maxim of Moses; and it is as just, that those who instruct us in the duties of religion, should be entitled to a suitable maintenance, as it is, that we should pay the fees of a lawyer, or physician. If they minister to us spiritual things, we should minister to them carnal things.

23. They shall bear, &c. that is, if they do any thing improperly about the tabernacle.

CHAP. XIX. 2. A red heifer. It is well known, that the Egyptians worshipped Isis under this form; and that it was usual with the Greeks and Romans to select those animals for victims, which had not borne the yoke. God might design by this ordinance, to show them the folly of the

2. The ministers of the sanctuary are cautioned to be strict and conscientious in the discharge of their duties, lest they bear their iniquity and die. God is holy, and will be esteemed holy, by those who approach unto him. How dreadful is the responsibility of those who profane God's service and sanctuary! O ye ministers of his, be watchful and circumspect, maintain the spirit of your calling, and adorn the doctrine of God your Saviour. And ye Israelites, who come to the sanctuary, be also circumspect, and follow on to know the Lord. Offer to him the sacrifices of prayer and praise continually; worship in the beauty of holiness.

Egyptian superstition.

4. Before the congregation-tabernacle. In other sacrifices, the blood of the victim was brought into the sanctuary, (See Levit. iii. 5, 6, 16, 17;) but in this sacrifice, because the priest was polluted by the slaughter, the blood was sprinkled only towards the tabernacle.

9. Purifying water. Literally, 'water of impurity;' because it

one who is clean shall gather up the ashes of the heifer, and lay them up without the camp, in a clean place; and they shall be kept for making the purifying water, to purify from sin, for the congregation of the children of Israel. And he that gathereth the ashes of the heifer shall wash his clothes, and be unclean until the evening; and this shall be to the children of Israel, and to the stranger who sojourneth among them, a perpetual statute.

11 "He who toucheth the dead body of any
12 man, shall be unclean seven days. He shall purify himself with it on the third, and on the seventh day, and shall be clean; but if he purify not himself on the third day, and on the seventh day, he shall not be clean.
13 Whosoever toucheth the dead body of any man who hath died, and purifieth not himself, defileth the tabernacle of Jehovah; and that person shall be cut off from Israel: because the purifying water was not sprinkled upon him, he is unclean; his uncleanness is 14 yet upon him. This is the law, when a man dieth in a tent: all that come into the tent, and all that are in the tent, shall be 15 unclean seven days. And every open vessel which hath no covering bound upon it shall 16 be unclean. And whosoever toucheth one that is slain with a sword in the open fields, or a dead body, or a bone of a man, or a grave, 17 shall be unclean seven days. For one thus unclean, they shall take some of the ashes of the burnt heifer of purification for sin, and running water shall be put thereto in a vessel; And a clean person shall take hyssop, and 18 dip it in the water, and sprinkle it upon the tent, and upon all vessels, and upon all the persons that were there, and upon him who hath touched a bone, or one slain, or one dead, or a grave: And the clean person shall 19 sprinkle upon the unclean on the third day, and on the seventh day; and on the seventh day he shall purify himself, and wash his clothes, and bathe himself in water, and in the evening he shall be clean. But the man 20 that shall be unclean, and will not purify himself, that person shall be cut off from among the congregation, because he hath defiled the sanctuary of Jehovah: the water of purifying hath not been sprinkled upon him; he is still unclean. And it shall be a 21 perpetual statute to you, that he who sprinklet the purifying water shall wash his clothes; and he who toucheth the purifying water shall be unclean until the evening. And whatso- 22 ever the unclean person toucheth shall be unclean; and the person that toucheth it shall be unclean until the evening."

unclean, sanctifieth to the purifying of the flesh: how much more shall the blood of Christ, who, through the eternal spirit, offered himself without spot to God, purge your conscience from dead works to serve the living God?" If this rite effected a legal purification, how much more shall the perfect sacrifice, when applied by faith, purify the conscience? To this source of moral purification let us ever look, and doubtless we shall experience, "that the blood of Christ cleanseth from all sin." It will secure to us both the blessing of forgiveness and that of sanctification.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. The rite here appointed had doubtless a civil as well as religious design. It was to prevent contagious diseases, by interring whatever had died as early as possible. By many prudential laws, God took care for the life that now is, to teach us its value and importance, and to lead us to make a wise improvement of it. Let us then take care of our health, and by every prudent method, avoid what is noxious and injurious.

2. The Apostle has referred to this rite: "For if," says he, "the blood of bulls and of goats, and the ashes of an heifer sprinkling the cleansed those who were impure and unclean, it was considered as contracting impurity. I have given the sense, without adhering to the idiom.

12. I have followed the Septuagint in the version given, as it is most consonant to the connexion and design, and depends on the omission of the vaw. See Introduction, Part II. Chap. 10, Chap. 4. for the illustration of what follows.

CHAP. XX. 1. Expositors have observed that there is no account of the Israelites, during the greatest part of the forty years they sojourned and Miriam died there, and there she was 2 buried. And there was no water for the congregation; and they assembled against Moses

 3 and against Aaron. And the people contended with Moses, and spoke, saying, "O that we had died when our brethren died before
 4 Jehovah! And why have ye brought up the congregation of Jehovah into this wilderness,
 5 that we and our cattle should there die? And why made ye us to come up out of Egypt, to bring us in unto this evil place? a place without seed, or figs, or vines, or pomegranates; and where there is no water to drink?"
 6 And Moses and Aaron went from the presence of the assembly to the door of the congregation-tabernacle, and they fell upon their faces; and the glory of Jehovah appeared to them.
 7 And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Take the rod, and assemble the congregation; thou and Aaron thy brother, and speak ye to the rock before their eyes; and it shall give forth its water; for out of that rock thou shalt bring forth water to them, and shalt give drink both to the congregation, and their
 9 beasts." And Moses took the rod from before 10 Jehovah, as he had commanded him. And Moses and Aaron assembled the congregation before the rock, and he said to them, "Hear now, ye rebels; out of this rock can we bring 11 water for you?" And Moses raised his hand, and with his rod smote the rock twice; and water came forth abundantly, and the congregation drank, and their beasts also.
 12 Jehovah then spoke to Moses, and Aaron, "Because ye believed me not, so as to hallow me in the eyes of the children of Israel; therefore ye shall not bring this congregation into the land which I give to them." These also were the waters of Meribah, [CON- 13 TENTION]; for the children of Israel contended with Jehovah, and he was sanctified among them.

"Again Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Ye have long compassed this mountain, turn northward. And command thou the people, saying, 'Ye have to pass through the border of your brethren, the children of Esau, who dwell in mount Seir, and who will be afraid of you. Take heed therefore and meddle not with them; for of their land I will not give you so much as a foot-breadth: because to Esau I gave mount Seir for his possession. The food which ye eat shall ye buy of them with silver, and with silver ye shall buy of them the water which ye drink.'"

And Moses sent messengers from Kadesh to 14 the king of Edom, Thus say thy brethren the Israelites, "Thou knowest all the calamity that hath befallen us; How our fathers went down 15 into Egypt, and in Egypt we have dwelt a long time; and the Egyptians afflicted us and our fathers: And when we cried to Jehovah, 16 he heard our voice, and sent an angel, and hath brought us forth out of Egypt; and, behold, we are in Kadesh, a city in the uttermost part of thy country. Let us pass, we pray 17 thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, nor will we drink water out of the wells; we will march in the king's high-way; we will not turn to the right hand or to the left, in the wilderness. It is clear, that what is recorded in this Chapter must have occurred in the fortieth year from their departure from Egypt. Compare Ch. xxxiii. 36-38. Moses writes as a legislator, and gives us the history of the laws and ordinances given to the Israelites, and not as an historian recording all the little transactions which occurred.

10, 11. Hear now, ye rebels, &c. On this occasion Moses offended and spoke unadvisedly with his lips. In what did his offence consist? It has been observed, he was commanded only 'to speak' to the rock, and he smote it. He did this twice, which indicated an irritated state of mind. He spoke harshly to the people, calling them rebels, but chiefly he doubted the divine power, or arrogated too much to himself and Aaron. 'Can we bring water for you, out of this rock?' Compare 1 Chron. xxvii. 14 and Ps. cvi. 33.

13. He was sanctified among them. By manifesting his power and faithfulness, and giving them another proof of his continued care of them. To sanctify, here signifies to manifest his own glory, as he did by the miracle wrought. Rosenmuller and others admit the Sam. has here retained what is necessary to introduce what follows.

14. Thy brethren the Israelites. I have rendered in the plural, which I consider as the sense; and because the pronoun plural follows.

17. Kings high-way. This must refer to a way which he had made; so that it appears something had been then done to facilitate the passage of 18 until we have passed thy borders." But the Edomites said to them, "Ye shall not pass through our country, lest we come out with 19 swords against you." Then the children of Israel said to them, "We will go by the high-way; and if we or our cattle drink of your water, then we will pay for it: only let us pass 20 through as travellers." But they said, "Ye shall not pass through." And the king of Edom came out against them with much people, 21 and in great force. Thus the Edomites refused to grant the Israelites a passage through their country; so the Israelites turned another way from Edom.

22 And the children of Israel, the whole congregation, marched from Kadesh, and came 23 to mount Hor. And Jehovah spoke to Moses and Aaron at mount Hor, on the border of the land of Edom, saying, "Aaron shall be gathered to his people; for he shall not enter into the land which I give to the children of Israel, because ye rebelled against 25 my word at the water of Meribah. Take Aaron and Eleazar his son, and bring them up 26 to mount Hor; And strip Aaron of his holy garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron shall die there and be gathered to 27 his people." And Moses did as Jehovah commanded; for they went up to mount Hor in the sight of all the congregation. And Mo- 28 ses stripped Aaron of his holy garments, and put them upon Eleazar his son; and Aaron died there on the top of the mountain: and Moses and Eleazar came down from the mountain. And when all the congregation perceived 29 that Aaron was dead, the whole house of Israel mourned for Aaron thirty days.

CHAPTER XXI.

B. C. 1453. Contest with the Canaanites; plague of serpents, and journey from mount Hor to the river Arnon.

Now the king of Arad, a Canaanite, who 1 dwelt in the south, heard that Israel came by the way of Atharim; and he fought against Israel, and took some of them captive. And Israel 2 vowed a vow to Jehovah, and said, "If thou wilt indeed deliver this people into our hand, we will utterly destroy their cities." And Je- 3 hovah hearkened to the voice of Israel, and delivered up the Canaanites; and they utterly destroyed them and their cities. Hence they called the name of the place Hormah, [THE DEVOTED PLACE.]

And they marched from mount Hor by 4 the way of the Red sea, to go round the land of Edom; and the mind of the peo-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. We have here an instance of that impartiality, which distinguished the leader of Israel. He has recorded his own fault, and that of his brother Aaron, without any attempt to palliate; his own distrust and anger, for which he was excluded the earthly Canaan. This proves that he had repented of the sin, and was not ashamed to record, for the admonition of succeeding ages, the passionate and unbelieving words he had used. Who would have imagined that Moses, who had conversed with God, and seen so much of his power, would have been guilty of any unbelieving thoughts; or that he who had borne with the provocations of Israel so long, and who was so patient and meek, would at last become impatient and angry! How needful is it for the best informed, and the most devout and holy, to watch and pray lest they enter into temptation. "Let him that thinketh he standeth, take heed lest he fall."

2. We may learn from what we here read, that God sometimes disappoints the hopes of his people in this world! Doubtless Moses thought that he should at least lead Israel into Canaan. Neither he nor Aaron had partook in the sin of the people, when God declared, that only Joshua and Caleb, of that generation, should enter the promised land; they might therefore naturally conclude, that they were not included in the threatening. The event proved that they were mistaken. God, for wise reasons, saw fit that they should die in the wilderness. Thus are the purposes of men broken off; and the schemes and designs they have formed for the glory of God, are left for others to accomplish.

merchandise and travelling. The conduct of the Edomites was not friendly, considering the proposals made.

26. Strip Aaron of his, &c. The holy garments were a sign of his office, and to be stripped of these was to put an end to his service. Eleazar his son was clothed with them, to denote his investiture into the priesthood. In the Catholic and Episcopal church of England, the same custom in some degree obtains.

29. Perceived. They did not see Aaron with them; and perhaps

Moses had rent his garments and put dust on his head, as tokens of mourning. Aaron was a public person, and hence they mourned for him thirty days. Deuter. xxxiv. 8.

CHAP. XXI. 1. Atharim. This in the common version, is rendered, spies, a sense which the word does not convey. Michaelis attributes the sense of place to the word, which it has in the Chald. Syr. and Sam. and renders, 'were on the way to those places.' The Sept. Arab. and Dathe, retain the word, whom I have followed.

ple was greatly distressed on account of the 5 way. And the people spoke against God, and against Moses, "Why have ye brought us up out of Egypt to die in the wilderness?
For we have neither bread nor water; and 6 our appetite loatheth this light bread." Jehovah now sent fiery serpents among the people, and they bit the people; and many of the people of Israel died.

7 Therefore the people came to Moses, and said, "We have sinned, for we have spoken against Jehovah, and against thee; pray to Jehovah, that he may take away from us these serpents." And Moses prayed for the peo-8 ple. And Jehovah said to Moses, "Make the figure of a fiery serpent, and set it upon a pole;
and it shall be that every one who is bitten, 9 when he looketh upon it, shall live." And Moses made a serpent of brass, and put it upon a pole; and so it was, that if a serpent had bitten any man, when he looked to the serpent of brass, he lived.

10 And the children of Israel marched from 11 Punon, and encamped in Oboth. And they marched from Oboth, and encamped at Ije-abarim, in the wilderness which is before Moab, towards the sunrising. ^a And Jehovah spoke to Moses, "Trouble not the Moabites, nor meddle with them: no part of their land will I give for an inheritance: for to the children of Lot
I have given Ar for an inheritance."

CHAP. XXI. 11. ^aSam. Sept. 12. ^aSam. Sept.

3. Let us not imagine, that these good men, though excluded the earthly Canaan, died under the divine displeasure. No; they were not disappointed in these their best hopes. They were prepared for a better inheritance; and were admitted into that better country, the heavenly Canaan. They obtained brighter discoveries of God,

3. Destroyed them and their cities. Those which they then took; for Joshua afterwards took the king of Arad. Josh. xii. 14, and Judg. i. 16, 17.

6. Fiery serpents. Some think these serpents were called השרפים, seraphim, or fiery, from the inflammation occasioned by their bite; others from their fiery and splendid appearance. Michaelis takes שרף to be the cerastes, or regulus. I believe it to be the dipsas, otherwise called prester;
and so the word is here rendered by Greek Ven.

9. He lived. The divine appointment alone gave efficacy to this mode of cure. The brazen serpent was preserved as a standing evidence of this miracle, till the reign of Hezekiah, who ordered it to be destroyed in consequence of the superstitious regard the Israelites paid to it. 2 Kings xviii.
4; John iii. 14.

Thence they removed, and encamped in the 12 valley of Zared. ^a And Jehovah spoke to Moses, "Ye are this day to pass by Ar the border city of Moab, and to approach the children of Ammon: trouble not these, nor meddle with them: no part of their land will I give you for an inheritance: for to the children of Lot I have given it for an inheritance." Thence, 13 also, they removed, and encamped on the other side of the Arnon, which floweth in the wilderness, along the border of the Amorites: for the Arnon is the boundary between Moab and the Amorites.

Hence it is said in a book of the wars: 14

"Jehovah came with him to Suph
And marched to the streams of the Arnon;
To the overflowing of the streams 15
Which extendeth to Shebeth-Ar,
And reclineth on the border of Moab:
For there they found a well;—that well, 16
Of which Jehovah said to Moses,

"Assemble the people ^a to me
And I will give them water."

Then sang Israel this song: 17

A well ^v hath sprung up! sing ye of it!
A well, which the princes discovered; 18

Which the nobles of the people digged,
Directed by the Law-giver, with their staves:

From the wilderness to Mattanah, they dug:
And from Mattanah to Nahaliel; 19

And from Nahaliel to Bamoth;

than ever they had here; and entered into their everlasting rest. We are partakers of the same promises, and heirs, through Christ, of the same inheritance. Let us then 'give all diligence to make our calling and election sure,' that so an abundant entrance may be administered to us, into the everlasting kingdom.

13. Marched from Punon. Compare Chap. xxxiii. 43.

14 In rendering this verse I have adopted the emendation of Kennicott, as most natural, and consisting in a different arrangement of the letters of the text.—The book of the wars. This seems to be some Poetic compositions of Moses, celebrating particular events which had occurred, from which he here inserted what was proper to the occasion. I suspect that this was increased by other Writers afterwards. Compare Josh. xiii. 10, and 2 Sam. i. 18.

17. A well hath sprung up. I have followed the Sam. reading, which the construction and sense seem to require. For what propriety is there in addressing the well! Some may object, that באר would require עלמה; but may not the noun be in the singular of the common gender, as are 20 And from Bamoth to the valley,

Which is in the country of Moab,
Where appeareth the top of Pisgah,
Which is opposite to Jeshimon."

*Jehovah now said to Moses, "Arise, march, and pass the river Arnon: Behold, I deliver into your hand Sihon, the Amorite king of Heshbon, and his land. Begin to take possession, and contend with him in battle. This day *I will begin to put the dread and the fear of you on all nations under the whole heavens, who shall hear the report of you; and they shall tremble and be in anguish on account of you."

21 Yet Israel sent messengers *with words of peace" to Sihon king of the Amorites, saying,

22 "Let us pass through thy land: *in the king's high-way we will march; we will not turn either to the right hand, or to the left"; nor will we turn aside either into fields or vineyards. *What we eat thou shalt sell to us for silver, and what we drink thou shalt give to us for silver; *in the king's high-way we will march until we pass thy borders: only let us pass through as travellers; as we requested the Edomites who dwelt in mount Seir, to do; and

23 the Moabites who dwelt in Ar". But Sihon would not suffer Israel to pass through his country. Sihon then gathered all his people together, and went out against Israel into the wilderness; and he came to Jahaz; and fought 24 with Israel. And Israel smote him, *and his sons, and all his people," with the edge of the sword, and possessed his land from the Arnon to the Jabbok, even to the borders of the children of Ammon: for *Jaazer was the border of the children of Ammon. Thus Israel took all 25 those cities; and Israel dwelt in all the cities of the Amorites; in Heshbon, and in all its villages. For Heshbon was the city of Sihon 26 king of the Amorites, who had fought against a former king of Moab, and had taken from him all his land unto the Arnon.

Hence we have these sententious lines: 27

"Come, let Heshbon be rebuilt;
Let the City of Sihon be repaired:
For from Heshbon a fire went forth; 28
A flame from the City of Sihon;
Which consumed Ar of Moab.

[Which devoured" the high places of Arnon.

Woe to thee, O Moab! 29

Thou art undone, people of Chemosh!

His sons he suffered to be fugitives;

His daughters, to go into captivity,

To Sihon, the king of the Amorites.

Their fair fields Heshbon destroyed unto 30

Dibon:

*They were laid waste unto Nophah,

Which is situate near to Medeba."

Israel now dwelt in the land of the Amo- 31 rites. And Moses sent to spy out Jaazer, and 32
they took "it and its" villages, and drove out the Amorites who were there.

And they turned and took the way to Ba- 33
shan; and Og, king of Bashan, went out against them; he, and all his people, to battle at Edrei.

And Jehovah said to Moses, "Fear him not; for 34 into thine hand, I will deliver both him, and all his people, and his land; and thou shalt do to him as thou didst to Sihon king of the others? I would even admit here an anomaly of the genders, rather than give a sense which is opposed by the context.

18—20. After passing through a most dreary wilderness, in which there was no water; no wonder that they sang and shouted for joy, on the first appearance of such copious sources of it. The Arnon, swelled by a tempest, had diffused its streams to a great extent: and these subsiding in the adjacent soil afforded wells so near the surface of the earth, that the people could dig them with their staves: and this all the way from the wilderness to the vale mentioned ver. 20.

27. Hence we have, &c. Literally, 'hence the poets, or parabolists have said.' I have given the sense. I conceive that these lines were the production of some Israelite, who invites his people to repair and strengthen a city, whence, while in the possession of the Amorites, so successful a war had been carried on against Moab.

29. Chemosh. The god of the Moabites; who is here elegantly reproached, for not better protecting his people against a petty Amorite king.

30. Their fair fields. I have followed all the versions in considering נָרָם a noun with the pronominal suffix; and the sense of it according to Schindler and Castel, is, ager cultus, cultivated land. I consider Heshbon as the nominative of מָבַר, which I regard as an active verb. In the next line I follow the Syr. translator who reads the verb in the third person plural, and not in the first as we now have it. With these corrections the passage is clear and connected.

CHAP. XXII. 5. The description now given of Balaam's residence,

CHAPTER XXII.

B. C. 1452. Balak's message to Balaam; his journey, and what befel him.

- 1 THE children of Israel now marched, and encamped in the plains of Moab, beyond the Jordan, over against Jericho.
- 2 When Balak the son of Zippor saw all that
- 3 Israel had done to the Amorites, He and the Moabites were much afraid on account of so numerous a people; yea the Moabites were distressed because of the children of Israel.
- 4 And they said to the elders of Midian, "This company will now lick up all around us, as the ox licketh up the grass of the field." So Balak the son of Zippor king of the Moab-
- 5 ites at that time, Sent messengers unto Balaam, the son of Beor, to Pethor, (which is on the river of the land of the children of Ammon,) to call him, saying, "Behold, there is a people come out of Egypt, behold, they cover the face of the earth, and they abide over against me: Come now therefore, I pray thee, curse for me this people; for they are too mighty for me: perhaps I may prevail, so that I may smite them, and drive them out of the land: for I know that blessed is he whom thou shalt bless, and cursed is he whom thou shalt curse." The elders of Moab, 7 and the elders of Midian then departed, with the rewards of divination in their hand; and they came to Balaam, and spoke to him the words of Balak. And he said to them, "Lodge 8 here to night, and I will bring you word, as Jehovah shall speak unto me." And the princes of Moab abode with Balaam. And 9 God came to Balaam, and said, "What want these men with thee?" And Balaam said to 10 God, "Balak, the son of Zippor, king of Moab, hath sent to me, saying, 'Behold, there 11 is a people come out of Egypt, who cover the face of the earth; come now, curse them for me; perhaps I may be able to overcome them, and drive them out.'" And God said to Balaam, 12 "Thou shalt not go with them; thou shalt not curse the people; for blessed are they." And Balaam arose in the morning, 13

CHAP. XXII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. How affecting it is to find the people still murmuring and unbelieving, after so many proofs of God's mercy and kindness to them. They had often smarted for their sins, and yet continued to repeat them. When they felt the effects of them, they then professed repentance, and prayed for deliverance. Is not this a too striking picture of our conduct? Have not we repeatedly transgressed, after having promised to do so no more? When afflicted, have we not acknowledged our sin, and cried for deliverance, and when again spared, repeated our folly?

2. The manner in which the Israelites were saved from the effects of the poison of the serpents, shows that it was of God; and the reflection of our Lord makes it interesting to us. "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." This does not imply, that the brazen serpent was a type of our Lord; but it illustrates the way in which we are saved. For as the serpent was lifted on the pole; so Jesus was lifted up on the cross; and as the people were to look at the brazen serpent; so sinners must look to Christ for salvation. God provided no other way for their deliverance than looking; so he hath provided no other way of obtaining salvation, than by faith in his son as crucified; and as he who looked at the brazen serpent was healed and did live; so he who believes on Jesus, shall not perish, but have eternal life. Such as through pride and unbelief would not look at the serpent, must have died; so all who in like manner will not believe on the Saviour must perish. O let us then, look to him, and trust in him, for he is able and willing to save to the uttermost.

5. v Sam. Syr. Vulg. 12 mss.

instead of being particular, agrees with any place in any country, where there is a river—for he lived at Pethor, which is 'by the river of the land of the children of his people!' But was Pethor then near the Nile, in Egypt? Or in Canaan, near Jordan? Or in Mesopotamia, on the Euphrates, and belonging to the Ammonites? This last was in fact the case: and therefore it is well, that 12 Heb. mss. confirm the Sam. text here, in reading (instead of אמר his people) אמר Ammon; with the Syr. and Vulg. versions.

6. Blessed is he, &c. This language indicates the high opinion entertained of Balaam; and it is well known that the heathens believed that certain persons had the power of obtaining blessings on a people from the gods, or of bringing on them the most awful calamities. Bishop Newton has observed, 'that wonderful as the gift of prophecy was, it was not always confined to the chosen seed, nor yet always imparted to the best of men. God might sometimes, to convince the world of his superintendence and government of the world disclose the purposes of his providence to heathen nations. He revealed himself to Abimelech, Gen. xx. to Pharaoh, Gen. lxi. and to Nebuchadnezzar, Dan. ii. Unworthy persons may sometimes be possessed of spiritual gifts as well as of natural. Our Saviour himself hath assured us of it. Matt. vii. 22, 23.

7. With the rewards of divination. It was, and is still the custom of the East, never to approach a man of rank or consequence, without some and said to the princes of Balak, "Go back to your own land; for Jehovah refuseth to 14 give me leave to go with you." And the princes of Moab arose, and went to Balak, and said, "Balaam refuseth to come with us."

15 And Balak, yet again sent princes, more numerous and more honourable than those.
16 And they came to Balaam, and said to him,
"Thus saith Balak the son of Zippor, 'Let nothing, I pray thee, hinder thee from com-17 ing unto me: For I will promote thee to very great honour, and I will do whatsoever
thou sayest to me: come therefore, I pray thee, 18 curse for me this people.'" And Balaam answered and said to the "servants" of Balak,
"If Balak would give me his house full of silver and gold, I cannot go beyond the word 19 of Jehovah my God, to do less or more. Now therefore, I pray you, abide here also to night, that I may know what more Jehovah will 20 say to me." And God came to Balaam at night, and said unto him, "If the men come to call thee, arise, and go with them; but do thou only the thing which I shall say to thee." 21 And Balaam arose in the morning, and saddled his ass, and went with the princes of Moab.
22 And God's anger was kindled because he went "with a covetous intention": and the angel of Jehovah stood in the way to oppose him. Now he was riding upon his ass, and his two servants were with him. And the 23 ass saw the angel of Jehovah standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand; and the ass turned aside out of the way, and went into the field; and Balaam smote the ass, to turn her into the way again. But the an- 24 gel of Jehovah stood in a path between two vineyards; a wall being on this side, and a wall on that side. And when the ass saw the 25 angel of Jehovah, she thrust herself to the wall, and crushed Balaam's foot against the wall; and he smote her again. And the an- 26 gel of Jehovah went further, and stood in a narrow place, where there was no way to turn either to the right hand or to the left. And 27 when the ass saw the angel of Jehovah, she fell down under Balaam; and Balaam's anger was kindled, and he smote the ass with a staff. And Jehovah opened the mouth of 28

the ass, and she said to Balaam, "What have I done to thee, that thou hast smitten me these three times?" And Balaam said to the ass, 29
"Because thou hast insulted me; I would
there were a sword in mine hand, for now would I kill thee." And the ass said to Ba- 30 laam, "Am not I thine ass, upon which thou hast ridden ever since I was thine unto this day? was I ever wont to do so to thee?" And he said, "No." Then Jehovah opened the eyes 31 suitable present; but it should seem that the Elders of Moab and Ammon, not only took an usual present, but money to provide materials for the incantation, and for Balaam, should it be found necessary, to induce him to come and curse Israel.

8-9. As Jehovah shall speak. From this it should seem, that God revealed his will to Balaam in some vision of the night. Compare verse 20, and Gen. xx. 3. Was Balaam acquainted with Jehovah? Or has this term been inserted instead of אֱלֹהִים? He might indeed have become acquainted with the name of the God of Israel. The wonders he wrought in Egypt and the desert must have been spread abroad; and Balaam might judge it proper to invoke God by this name, as being more powerful than any other. Was he a true prophet? Most critics think him an artful wicked man like Simon Magus, who by enchantments, had imposed on the multitude, but in this instance God by a special influence directed him to bless Israel, and he was constrained so to do.

22. And God's anger was kindled, &c. In the 20 verse Balaam is ordered to go with the men; why then was God angry with him for doing so? It is answered, that Balaam was not to go unless the princes of Balak came and called for him; but that Balaam did not wait for their coming, but arose in the morning and went. This circumstance united with the additional reading of the Arab. نفسه, 'he went with a covetous disposition,' which is strongly confirmed by 2 Pet. ii. 15, is a solid reason for the anger of the Lord against him.

28. And Jehovah opened the mouth of the ass. "The speaking ass from that time to this, hath been the standing jest of every infidel brother. Maimonides and others have conceived, that the matter was transacted in a vision. But it appears rather more probable from the whole tenor of the narration, that this was no visionary, but a real transaction. The words of St Peter show, that it is to be understood, as he himself understood it, literally: 2 Pet. ii. 14, 15, 16. The ass was enabled to utter such and such sounds, probably, as parrots do, without understanding them: and say what you will of the construction of the ass's mouth, of the formation of the tongue and jaws being unfit for speaking, yet an adequate cause is assigned for this wonderful effect, for it is said expressly, 'that the Lord opened the mouth of the ass;' and no one who believes a God, can doubt of his having power to do this and much more. The miracle was by no means needless or superfluous; it was very proper to convince Balaam, that the mouth and tongue were under God's direction, and that the same divine power which caused the dumb ass to speak contrary to its nature, could make him in

of Balaam, and he saw the angel of Jehovah standing in the way, and his sword drawn in his hand; and he bowed down his head, and 32 fell flat on his face. And the angel of Jehovah said to him, "Wherefore hast thou smitten thine ass these three times? behold I went out to oppose thee, because thy way
33 is perverse before me: And the ass saw me, and turned these three times from me; unless she had turned from me, surely now I had slain
34 thee, and saved her alive." And Balaam said to the angel of Jehovah, "I have sinned; for I knew not that thou stoodest in the way against me; now therefore, if it displease thee, I will 35 go back again." And the angel of Jehovah said to Balaam, "Go with the men; but 'take heed' to speak only what I speak to thee." So Balaam went with the princes of Balak.
36 And when Balak heard that Balaam was come, he went out to meet him to a city of Moab, which was on the frontier of the country, 37 on the border of the Arnon. And Balak said to Balaam, "Did I not earnestly send to thee to call thee? wherefore camest thou not to me? am I not able indeed to promote thee to honour?" And Balaam said to Balak, "Lo, 38 I am now come unto thee; but can I, of myself, say any thing at all? The word that God putteth in my mouth, I will 'take heed' to speak." And Balaam went with Balak, and 39 they came to Kirjath-huzoth. And Balak killed 40 oxen and sheep, and sent portions to Balaam, and to the princes who were with him.

CHAPTER XXIII.

B. C. 1452. Balak's offerings, and Balaam's prophecies.

Now on the morrow, Balak took Balaam, 41 and brought him up to the high places of Baal, that thence he might see the utmost part of the people. And Balaam said to Balak, 1 "Build for me here seven altars, and prepare for me here seven steers and seven rams." And 2 Balak did as Balaam had spoken; and Balak and Balaam offered on each altar a steer and a ram. And Balaam said to Balak, "Stand 3 by thy burnt-offering, and I will go to see if Jehovah will come to meet me; and whatsoever he sheweth me I will tell thee." And he

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXII. 1. We may learn from what we have read, that the profession of piety is sometimes only a cover for hypocrisy and wickedness. Balaam professed a high regard for God, a great veneration for his authority, and yet loved the wages of unrighteousness. How many say, "Lord, Lord," and yet do not the things which he commands. They are clothed in sheep's clothing, but are in reality wolves; they speak the language of God's people, but are in fact the children of the wicked one. Let such remember, that God will not be mocked; and that what they sow, they shall also reap.

2. Let the governing motive of Balaam's conduct, teach us to guard against the inordinate love of money. This has been said, 'to be the root of all evil;' and whoever reflects on the subject, must admit, that it is justly called idolatry, as it robs God of the heart, and is the object to which the mind pays homage. It leads to the practical violation of the two great commandments, 'the love of God, and our neighbour.' To gratify his love of money, the covetous man breaks through all the barriers of piety and justice; not only neglecting God, and deceiving his fellow men, but often injuring his own health. Let us not parley with temptation as Balaam did, but say, 'get thee behind me Satan.' Let us never count gain as godliness, nor bless the covetous, whom the Lord abhorreth.

3. We see how God can manifest his power in his creatures, and make them the instruments of carrying on his purposes. How surprising was God's operation on the organs of the brute creature here mentioned! He changed its braying, into plain, wise, and pertinent words. This was from the Lord, who made man's mouth, and taught him to speak. We see too, how he ruled the heart of this wicked prophet; he prevented, by constraint, Balaam's compliance with Balak's wicked intentions. God has the hearts and tongues of men and beasts in his hand, and 'can turn them which way he pleaseth,' so as to make them subservient to his own glory.

like manner utter blessings contrary to his inclination." Bp. Newton.

41. In the division of the Chapters, I have followed our oldest English Bibles of Coverdale and Matthews.—High places of Baal. The places where the Moabites offered sacrifices to Baal.

CHAP. XXIII. 1. Seven days. The veneration for the number seven began very early. We see that even at this time, the Heathens paid great respect to it in their religious ceremonies, which they could not derive from the Mosaic ritual, with which it cannot be supposed that they were yet acquainted; but must arise from tradition delivered down from the earliest ages. It might take its origin from the seventh day being set apart by God, as more holy than the rest. There are several instances of particular regard to this number before the Mosaic law, as 'the clean

- 4 went to an open place. And God met Balaam, who said to him, "I have prepared seven altars, and I have offered upon each 5 altar a steer and a ram." And Jehovah put a word in Balaam's mouth, and said, "Return to Balak, and thus shalt thou speak."
- 6 And he returned to him, and, lo, he stood by his burnt-offering; he, and all the princes of Moab.
- 7 And he prophesied, and said,
"From Aram, Balak hath brought me,
The king of Moab, from the mountains of Kedem.
'Come, saith he, curse, for me, Jacob,
'Come, and execrate, for me, Israel.'
- 8 How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed?
How shall I execrate, whom Jehovah hath not execrated?
- 9 When, from the top of the rocks, I see them;
And from the lofty hills, I behold them;
Lo! they are a people that shall dwell alone,
And shall not be reckoned among the nations.
- 10 Who shall count the dust-like seed of Jacob?
Who shall number the multitude of Israel?
May I die the death of the righteous,
And may my last end be like theirs!—"
- 11 Balak now said to Balaam, "What hast thou done unto me? I brought thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast altogether 12 blessed them." And he answered and said,
"Must I not take heed to speak that which Jehovah hath put in my mouth?" And Balak said to him, "Come, I pray thee, with me to another place, whence thou mayest see them; thou shalt see but the outmost part of them, and shalt not see them all: and thence curse them for me."

And he brought him into the field of Zoph- 14 im, at the top of Pisgah, and built seven altars, and offered a steer and a ram on each altar. And he said to Balak; "Stand here by 15 thy burnt-offering, while I go yonder to meet Jehovah." And Jehovah met Balaam, and put 16 a word in his mouth, and said, "Go back to Balak, and thus speak." And when he came 17 to him, behold, he stood by his burnt-offering and the princes of Moab with him. And Balak said to him, "What hath Jehovah spoken?"

And he prophesied, and said,

"Rise up Balak, and hearken;

Listen to me, thou son of Zippor:

God is not a man, that he should lie; 19

Nor a son of Adam, that he should repent:

Hath he said, and shall he not do it?

Or hath he spoken, and shall he not fulfill it?

Behold, I have received a command to bless; 20

For God hath blessed; and I cannot revoke it.

"I behold" no trouble in Jacob, 21

Nor do I see distress in Israel.

Jehovah their God is with them,

And to him they shout as their king.

God who brought them out of Egypt, 22

Is to them as the strength of a rhinoceros.

beasts by sevens, Gen. vii. 2. 'Jacob's service,' chap. xxix, 'Pharaoh's dreams,' chap. xli.

3. To an open place. Where he might have a full prospect. Geddes, after some of the Jewish interpreters, renders, 'He went in anxious silence.' Onkelos and Erpen, 'he went alone;' and if פו would admit this sense, I would adopt it, as at least conveying a very apposite one. I have followed the Sept. Alex. with Michaelis, Rosenmüller, and others; and פו in Syr. and Arab. denotes a place levelled and cleared of wood, an open place.

5 Put a word, &c. Informed him what he should speak to Balak.

7. And he prophesied, &c. I have preferred the sense to the idiom, as it is more clear, and as from the 5th verse God put the words into his mouth. Compare Ch. xxiv. 2. The reading of the Sept. seems a gloss to explain the text.

9. Be reckoned among the nations. They were to be separated from other nations both by their civil and religious institutions.

10. The multitude of Israel. I have adopted with Houbigant and others, the Arabic sense of רב, as here most suitable. It is parallel with עפר dust-like seed in the former line.—May I die, &c. Some think Balaam alludes to the Israelites, calling them שרים, 'righteous.' Michaelis maintains, that he refers to the hope of a future happy state, which God had made known to the Israelites. The latter clause the Greek translators render, 'And may my posterity be like theirs.' I prefer the common version, and consider this line as parallel in sense with the former; and with Michaelis and others, as obscurely referring to the hope of another life.

21. I behold, &c. This reading preserves the order of the narrative; and the two latter lines contain the reason of their happy circumstances. The common version is at variance with the whole narrative of Moses. How frequently are we told of their iniquities and perverseness. Dr. A. Clark considers פו, as meaning trouble and עמל labour, and explains, 'that God will not suffer the people either to be exterminated by the sword, or

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. Had Balaam been a good man he would have endeavoured to dissuade Balak from his sinful attempt. How criminal is it to wish ill to others, and more especially to those who have done us no injury? Balaam, by his practice, encouraged Balak to go on in his folly; and by building altars and offering burnt-offerings, they both aimed to make God a party in their cause. What weakness does this discover? Let us never imagine, that God will entertain our prejudices, and act under the influence of passions like ours. "God is not a man, that he should lie, nor a son of Adam that he should repent."

2. God, in the instance before us, shows his own power in converting the intended curse upon his people into a blessing. Balaam owns that Balak had sent for him to curse Israel, verse 7, and he confesses that this design was defeated, verse 8. 'How shall I curse, whom God hath not cursed?' No magical skill can brought under the yoke of slavery.' This seems to me wholly unsupported by the text. If we adhere to the common reading, either a present or past sense, and not a future, must be attributed.

22. Rhinoceros. Rendered Unicorn, in our translation here, and Ch. xxiv. 8; Deut. xxxiii. 17; Job xxxix. 9; Ps. xxii. 21; xxix. 6; xcii. 10; Is. xxxiv. 7, &c, where the strength, horn, and violence of that creature are spoken of, in such terms, as are not applicable to any creature, but the Rhinoceros; and indeed, had our translators properly attended to the ancient versions, they would have so rendered the words רִמָּוִם and רִמָּוִם. The Rhinoceros may indeed not improperly be called an Unicorn, as having only one horn; but the idea generally conveyed by this word, is that of a creature formed by painters only.

23. Delgado renders this verse: "Surely there are no omens in Jacob, thence curse them for me. And Balak brought 28 Balaam to the top of Peor, that looketh towards Jeshimon. And Balaam said to Balak, 29

"Build for me here seven altars, and prepare for me here seven steers and seven rams."
And Balak did as Balaam had said, and of- 30 fered a steer and a ram on each altar. And 1 when Balaam saw that it pleased Jehovah to bless Israel, he went not, as at other times, to seek for omens, but he set his face towards the wilderness. And Balaam raised his eyes, and 2 he saw Israel encamped according to their tribes; and the spirit of God came upon him.

And he prophesied, and said, 3
"Balaam the son of Beor saith;
The man whose eyes are open saith;
He saith who hath heard the words of God; 4
Who hath seen the vision of the Almighty;

How beautiful are thy tents, O Jacob, 5
And thy tabernacles, O Israel!

do this. This is an acknowledgment of his own weakness, and of the power and sovereignty of God; and it ought to have convinced Balak of his own sin and folly, in seeking to curse Israel; but such is the darkness of a mind under the influence of superstition, that no light can penetrate it.

3. Let us contemplate the happiness of Israel! They are blessed of Jehovah their God, and no power on earth can revoke the blessing. As the God of his people he is with them, and to him they shout as to their king. Their happiness is secured by the truth, faithfulness, and unchangeableness of God. "He is not a man that he should lie;" nothing but truth proceeds from his lips. In his purposes he is unalterable. "Hath he said it and shall he not fulfil it?" His Israel have no need to use auguries and to seek for omens; for he informs them by his prophets what he is about to do. Thus are all his children taught by him.

no divinations in Israel: at all times it shall be told unto Jacob and unto Israel what God is about to do." The meaning is, that the Israelites have no need of omens, or divination: their God tells them occasionally, and at proper times, what is to befall them. Our old versions, and the Greek; and other ancient ones, support that which I have given.

CHAP. XXIV. 1. To seek for omens. As he had done before, Ch. xxiii. 3, 15. In what manner he sought omens, we are not informed; but it is evident from this, that Balaam was in fact a soothsayer, and called a prophet only, because that God made use of him to pronounce the blessing on his people, and to predict their future greatness, just as the High Priest is said to prophesy, when he said, 'it is necessary that one should die for the people.' John xi. 49-52.

2. The spirit of God came, &c. He had before been influenced by the

 And in their blood bathe their arrows.
9. They couch, they lie down as a lion,
 Or as a lioness ; who shall rouse them ?
 And accursed be he that curseth them."
10. Balak's anger was now kindled against Balaam, so that he smote his hands together ; and Balak said to Balaam, " I called thee to curse mine enemies, and, behold, thou hast
- 11 these three times wholly blessed them. Therefore now flee thou to thy place : I thought to promote thee unto great honour ; but, lo, Jehovah hath kept thee back from honour."

 And he looked on the Kenites, and prophesied, and said, 21

same spirit, but now, without having recourse to omens, the spirit came upon him, to teach him that augury was vain, and that it was not by his art, that any could be either blessed or cursed.

4. Intranced. I have followed the sense of the common version, as in my opinion most probable. The Greek translators paraphrase, ' Who saw the vision of the Almighty, in sleep.' Some refer what is here said to what happened to him on his journey, Ch. xxii. 33.

6. As vales, &c. I have preferred the version given as more suitable to the context than the common one. This verse illustrates the former: " How goodly are thy tents O Jacob ! They are like vales planted with groves, Like gardens, &c."

7. Urn of Jacob. Instead of the pronoun I have inserted the noun, as more perspicuous. Balaam having mentioned water-streams, was naturally led to notice the sources from which they spring. This is what is meant by לֵב, which after Geddes I have rendered ' urn.' The Greek translation is, ' They shall rule over many peoples.' They took לֵב for a verb, and most probably read לֵב for לֵב. Hence Geddes renders, ' his seed shall be a numerous people.' This is unquestionably the sense ; but as the comparison of a numerous people to waters elsewhere occurs, I have retained the common version. See Ps. cxliv. 7 ; Jerem. xlvii. 2.

—Agag. This was probably the common name of the Amalekite kings, as Pharaoh was of those of Egypt. This comparison shows, that the kingdom of the Amalekites had then become powerful.

14. Inform thee, or predict to thee; for the verb יָדַע has not only the sense of admonishing, or giving counsel, but also of foretelling.

17. I see it, &c. By rendering the suffix him, the beauty and sense of this verse are obscured. The connexion requires the turn I have given, as the first two lines refer to the star, and the sceptre following.—Every son of sedition. With some distinguished Critics I have rendered נֶזֶק as an appellative, as we no where read of such a people as the ' children of Sheth ; ' but we know that the Moabites were the most inveterate enemies of Israel, and might justly be called, sons of sedition. See Dathe's note.

19. One from Jacob, &c. This explains the two preceding verses. Many pious divines have referred what is here related to the Messiah ; but surely this has been done without any regard to the context. If we consider what Balaam says in the 14-verse, this application will appear improbable. Others refer what is here said to David, who actually subdued the Moabites and other contiguous nations. See Bp. Newton on the Prophecies, and 2 Sam. viii. 2, 14.

20. The first of the nations, i. e. in antiquity, as well as in courage.

- 23 And he prophesied, and said,
 "Alas! who shall live, when God doeth this?"
 24 Who shall escape from the hand of the 25 Balaam then set out, to return to his place;

 and Balak also went his way.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. 1. We see in the introduction to his predictions, the vanity of Balaam. Before he began, "From Aram, Balak hath brought me; The king of Moab from the mountains of Kedem;" now it is, "Balaam, the son of Beor saith; The man whose eyes are open saith, &c." Among the pious prophets, we find nothing of this nature. They never boast of their gifts; but without any exalting thoughts they declare their message, only asserting their authority, "Thus saith the Lord." Let us not consider gifts as graces; nor infer that we are religious from our being engaged in what relates to religion;
 for "many will say in the last day, "Lord, Lord, have we not prophesied in thy name, and in thy name done many wonderful works;" and yet to them the Judge will say, "Depart from me ye workers of iniquity."

2. From what Balaam asserts we learn how lovely God's people appear in their order, their temper, and practice. "How Compare 1 Sam. xxvii. 8, and Gen. xiv. 8. They were the first who fought with Israel, Exod. xvii. 14. I have followed the Syr. in rendering אחריתי, 'his posterity.' The Greek translators agree in the same sense, and the context requires it.

22. Yet shall the nest, &c. The Kenites were a tribe of Midianites.
 Moses married one of this race, Exod. iii. 1; and some of them followed the Israelites, and dwelt in Judea, Judg. i. 16; but the chief part remained among the Midianites, 1 Sam. xv. 6. The word Kenite signifies a nest.
 The reading of the Sept. is not improbable.

23. Alas! who shall live, &c. This refers to what follows, and not to the preceding prophecy.

24. Who shall escape, &c. The Chittites denote both the Greeks and the Romans. For the Jews called by this name all the places with which heads of the people, and let them slay those men who have worn the badges of Baal-pe-or" and hang them up before Jehovah until sun-setting, that the fierce anger of Jehovah may be turned away from Israel. And 5 Moses said to the judges of Israel, "Slay ye, every one in his own division, the men who have worn the badges of Baal-peor."

And, behold, one of the children of Israel 6 came and brought to his brethren a Midianitish woman in the sight of Moses, and in the sight of all the congregation of the children of Israel, who were weeping before the door of the congregation-tabernacle. And when Phinehas, the 7 son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, saw it, he rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand; And 8
 he went after the man of Israel into the bedroom, and thrust both of them through, the beautiful are thy tents, O Jacob, And thy tabernacles, O Israel!

 As vales planted with groves; Like gardens, by the side of a river;
 Like lign aloes planted by Jehovah; Like cedars, by water-streams!" God's church is his garden; his people are the plants of his right-hand's planting; plants of righteousness, which through his influence bring forth fruit abundantly, and grow like the cedar of Lebanon. Let it be our care to walk worthy our vocation, and to adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.

3. Let us admire the knowledge and kindness of God displayed in these prophecies. He sees the end from the beginning. His counsels are of old, full of faithfulness and truth. He knows the enemies of his people, and has fixed the time for their destruction.
 They are permitted to prosper for a season, but at length they shall be destroyed for ever. His cause shall triumph; the kingdom of his son shall be highly exalted, and every Agag shall they were acquainted in the Mediteranean sea. I have followed the Sam.

 reading, as preferable to the text. The last clause shows the success of the Greeks and Romans, who for a long period were to humble and afflict Ashur and Heber, but who, in their turn, were to perish. The prediction has been wonderfully verified. For the text, see Note Heb. Bible.

CHAP. XXV. 1. Began to defile, &c. The Greek translators render, 'the people profaned themselves with whoring with, &c.'

3. Some of the children. That we should supply ממי with the Sam.
 is clear from the following verse. For all the Israelites had not devoted themselves to the worship of Baal-peor.—Wore the badges of Baal-peor, by binding their heads with fillets to his honour, and thus openly avowing their idolatry. Michaelis proves that this is the sense of נמנו.

4. All the chiefs of the people. That the text has suffered in this verse

9 children of Israel. And those that died of the plague were twenty-four thousand.

10 And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Phinehas, the son of Eleazar, the son of Aaron the priest, hath turned away my wrath from the children of Israel, by the zeal which he hath shown among them, for my sake, that I might not consume the children of Israel, in my jealousy. Wherefore say, 'Behold, I give to him my covenant of peace: And he shall have it and his seed after him; the covenant of an everlasting priesthood; because he was zealous for his God, and made an atonement for the children of Israel.'" Now the name of the Israelite who was slain, who was slain with the Midianitish woman, was Zimri, the son of Salu, a chief of a paternal house among the Simeonites: 15 And the name of the Midianitish woman who was slain was Cozbi, the daughter of Zur; he was head over a people, and of a paternal house in Midian.

16 And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Distress the Midianites, and smite them; For they have distressed you by the wiles they have used to beguile you in the matter of Peor, and in the matter of Cozbi, their sister, the daughter of a prince of Midian, who was slain in the time of the plague on account of Peor."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1 See what reason we have to guard against fleshly lusts, and what danger attends the indulgence of them. "Neither let us commit fornication, as some of them committed, and fell in one day three and twenty thousand." 1 Cor. x. 8. Sensual indulgences lead men to all manner of irreligion; they take away the heart, and make men stupid and thoughtless. The God of purity and holiness is highly displeased with such irregular indulgences, as they debase our rational nature, and dishonour our christian profession. "Fornicacannot be doubted. If the דָּמָם דָּמָם are the same as the שָׁפַח דָּמָם in the following verse, it is clear that the order to hang them up, is irreconcilable with their being appointed to slay those who had devoted themselves to the Moabites. By adding the Sam. to the text, the sense is clear and connected. 5. In his own division; that is, those men who were under them as magistrates. 8. In her bed room. The term אֹרְחָה, whence the word Alcove is derived, means an 'interior apartment, or bed-room;' and I conceive it is called her bed-room, because appropriated to cohabitation with her. The versions render, 'through her belly,' or to the same purpose. 9. Twenty-four thousand. Paul refers to this history, 1 Cor. x. 8, where we read, that 'twenty-three thousand died by the plague.' Some suppose a thousand was slain by the judges; while others think both num-

CHAPTER XXVI.

B. C. 1452. The people are again numbered; and it was found that all those who had murmured were dead.

AND it came to pass after the plague, that 1 Jehovah spoke to Moses and to Eleazar the son of Aaron the priest, saying, "Take the 2 sum of all the congregation of the children of Israel, from twenty years old and upward, throughout their fathers' house, all that are able to go to war in Israel. So Moses and Ele- 3 azar the priest numbered them in the plains of Moab, by Jordan opposite Jericho, From twenty 4 years old and upward; as Jehovah had commanded Moses: Now the children of Israel, who had come out of the land of Egypt were:

Reuben, the first-born of Israel: the children of Reuben; from Hanoah, came the family of the Hanoahites: from Pallu, the family of the Palluites: From Hezron, the family 6 of the Hezronites: from Carmi, the family of the Carmites. These are the families of 7 the Reubenites: and they that were numbered of them were forty-three thousand, seven hundred and thirty. And the son of Pallu, 8 was Eliab. And the sons of Eliab were, Nemuel, Dathan, and Abiram. This was the Dathan, and this the Abiram, who being of tors and adulterers God will judge; they shall not enter into the kingdom of heaven." Let us, therefore, "as pilgrims and strangers, abstain from fleshly lusts, which war against the soul."

2. Zeal for the honour of God, and the suppression of vice, is highly commendable, especially in times of great degeneracy. Phinehas was zealous for God, and he conferred peculiar honours upon him. The people behaved well in weeping and lamenting their wickedness, and deprecating the judgments of the Lord; but Phinehas acted a more worthy and excellent part. Christian

bers existed in different copies. 12. Covenant of peace. I promise to him felicity and happiness; for so peace often signifies. 13. Covenant of a perpetual priesthood. The covenant here denotes the promise of the priesthood to his posterity. It must be understood conditionally, for Eli was not of this family. In the time of David, however, it was restored, and in this family probably continued till the advent of our Lord.—Because he was zealous. God knew that he acted out of love to him, and zeal for his honour; though the action itself was rash and unwarrantable, unless he had a divine commission, which does not seem unlikely, from the approbation with which God speaks of him and his conduct. CHAP. XXVI. 3. So Moses and Eleazar numbered: With Geddes-I

- the Council of the congregation, contended with Moses and Aaron in the company of Korah; when they so provoked Jehovah, That the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up; and when this company died, a fire devoured Korah and the two hundred and fifty men. Thus they became an example.
- 11 Nevertheless the children of Korah died not.
- 12 The sons of Simeon, by their families: from Nemuel came the family of the Nemuelites: from Jamin, the family of the Jaminites: from
- 13 Jachin, the family of the Jachinites: From Zerah, the family of the Zerahites: from Shaul,
- 14 the family of the Shaulites. These are the families of the Simeonites, twenty-two thousand and two hundred.
- 15 The children of Gad by their families: from Zephon, came the family of the Zephonites: from Haggai, the family of the Haggites: from
- 16 Shuni, the family of the Shunites: From Ozni, the family of the Oznites; from 'Edi' the
- 17 family of the Edites; From Arod, the family of the Arodites: from Areli, the family of the
- 18 Arelites. These are the families of the children of Gad according to those that were numbered of them, forty thousand and five hundred.

And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Unto 52 these the land shall be divided for an inheritance according to the number of names. 38. From Ahiram. I overlooked in Gen. xlii. 21, the correction which should have been made. Instead of 'Belah and Bechar,' read 'Belah his first-born,' and instead of 'Ehi and Rosh,' read 'Ahiram,' and instead of 'Muphim and Huphim,' read 'Shupham and Hupham.'

40. That לארד should be admitted after נפץ is clear from the order observed throughout the chapter. For we have first the name of the person and then of the descendants. I am inclined to consider the first clause of this verse an early interpolation. It is wanting in the Sam. but found in all the versions. Compare Gen. xlii. 21.

59. Who was born, &c. From Exod. ii. 1, compared with Ch. vi. 20, it appears that Amram married his aunt Jochebed, she being the sister of his father Kohath, and the daughter of his grandfather Levi. I have fol-

59 Kohath begot Amram. And the name of Amram's wife was Jochebed, the daughter of Levi, who "was born" to Levi in Egypt: and she bare to Amram, Aaron and Moses, and 60 Miriam their sister. And to Aaron was born Nadab, and Abihu, Eleazar, and Ithamar.
 61 And Nadab and Abihu died, when they offered profane fire before Jehovah: And those that were numbered of them were twenty three thousand, all males from a month old and upward: for they were not numbered among the children of Israel, because there was no inheritance given them among the children of Israel.
 63 These are they that were numbered by Moses and Eleazar the priest, who numbered the children of Israel in the plains of Moab, 64 by Jordan near Jericho. And among these there was not a man whom Moses, and Aaron the priest, numbered, when they numbered the children of Israel in the wilderness of 65 Sinai. For Jehovah had said of them, "They shall surely die in the wilderness." And there was not left a man of them, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nun.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVI. 1. We find that notwithstanding the judgments and losses by war, the people had not greatly diminished. They had decreased one thousand three hundred and twenty; but the Levites had increased one thousand; so that they were only eight hundred and twenty fewer on the banks of the Jordan than when numbered at Sinai. How wonderful that providence, which had watched over, supported them, and kept them so numerous. God in this remembered his promise; and let us remember that amid the changes made in the Church, God has yet raised up others to occupy the places of those who are removed.

lowed the versions noticed in rendering the clause, as the common reading is embarrassed, if not unmeaning.

CHAP. XXVII. 3. But died for his own sin. It has been doubted whether these words refer to Zelophehad, or to Korah. Rosenmuller refers them to Korah. If the Sam. lection be admitted it overturns this opinion, as it limits the terms to Zelophehad, their father. On the whole the sense chir, the son of Joseph: (and these are the names of his daughters; Mahlah, Nanah, and Hegliah, and Milcah, and Tirzah,) came, And 2 they stood before Moses, and before Eleazar the priest, and before the chiefs and the whole congregation, at the congregation-tabernacle, and said, "Our father died in the wilderness; 3 yet he was not in the company of those who, with the company of Korah, assembled together against Jehovah; but died for his own sin, and had no sons. Why should the name 4 of our father be done away from among his family, because he hath no son? Give to us therefore a possession among the brethren of our father." And Moses brought their cause 5 before Jehovah.

And Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "The 6 daughters of Zelophehad speak right: thou shalt surely give them a possession of an inheritance among their father's brethren; and thou shalt transfer the inheritance of their father to them. And thou shalt speak to the children 8 of Israel, saying, 'If a man die, and have no son, then ye shall transfer his inheritance to his daughter. And if he have no daughter, 9 then ye shall give his inheritance to his brethren. And if he have no brethren, then 10 ye shall give his inheritance to his father's brethren. And if his father have no brethren, 11 then ye shall give his inheritance to his next kinsman of his family, and he shall pos-

2. The circumstance noticed, that on this muster, all those were dead, who were numbered at Sinai, except Caleb and Joshua, shows the faithfulness of God to his threatnings. This fact also affords a strong argument in favour of the divine legation of Moses. Had he not been directed by unerring wisdom, how could he have been certain, that among so vast a multitude there would not be some who would survive the forty years, besides Caleb and Joshua? Let us from this learn to fear him, who is as ready to avenge his injured honour, as he is to manifest his mercy to a penitent people. They who believe not his promise shall not enter into his rest.

sess it: and it shall be to the children of Israel a statute of judgment, as Jehovah hath commanded Moses."

12 Jehovah then said to Moses, "Go up to this mount Abarim, and see the land which I am about to give to the children of Israel. 13 And when thou hast seen it, thou shalt be gathered to thy people, as Aaron thy brother 14 was gathered. For in the wilderness of Zin, in the strife of the congregation, ye rebelled, instead of sanctifying me before their eyes at the waters. These were the waters of Meribah, in Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin. * Moses then said, "O Lord God, thou hast begun to show thy servant thy greatness, and thy mighty power; for what God is there in the heavens, or on the earth that can do such mighty deeds as thou hast done? Let me I pray thee go over, and see that good land which is beyond the Jordan, that excellent mountainous country, and Lebanon." But Jehovah said to Moses, 'Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter. Go up to the top of Pisgah, and raise thine eyes and look westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold it with thine eyes: for over this Jordan shalt thou not go. But charge Joshua, and encourage him, and strengthen him; for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt only see."

15 Moses now spoke to Jehovah, saying, "May

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVII. 1. The prudence and piety of the daughters of Zelophehad is highly commendable. They honoured the memory of their father, and showed their faith in the divine promise. They were unwilling to lose their share in the earthly Canaan; and surely we ought to be afraid of losing our part in the heavenly country? They who pray for that inheritance, who long to secure it, and who live in the faith of it, not only speak, but act right. Let the example of these women, stimulate us "to seek first the king-

12. Go up to this mount Abarim. This was a range of mountains, of considerable extent, near the rivers Jordan and Arnon. Nebo was one particular mountain, and Pisgah the highest top of it.

Jehovah, the God of the spirits of all flesh, set a man over the congregation, Who may 17 go out before them, and who may come in before them, and who may lead them forth, and who may bring them back; that the congregation of Jehovah be not like a flock which has no shepherd."

And Jehovah said to Moses. "Take Joshua 18 the son of Nun, a man in whom is the spirit, and lay thine hand upon him; And set 19 him before Eleazar the priest, and before the whole congregation; and give to him a charge in their sight. And thou shalt give to him 20 of thine honour, that to him the whole congregation of the children of Israel may be obedient. And he shall stand before Eleazar 21 the priest, who shall inquire for him before Jehovah, by means of the Urim; at whose command they shall go out, and at whose command they shall come in; both he, and all the children of Israel with him, even the whole congregation." And Moses did as Je- 22 hovah had commanded him: for he took Joshua and set him before Eleazar the priest, and before the whole congregation; And he laid 23 his hands upon him, and gave him a charge, as Jehovah commanded him: "and said to him, "Thine eyes have seen what Jehovah hath done to these two kings! so will he do to all the kingdoms through which thou hast to pass: be not afraid of them: for Jehovah your God, himself will fight for you"."

2. From the submission and affection of Moses towards Israel, let us learn to forget injuries, and to be concerned for the welfare of the Church. Moses had been often provoked; his meekness and patience had often been tried, and his authority as often rejected; yet after all he was concerned not to leave them, 'as sheep without a shepherd.' Such a state is distressing. When Jesus beheld the multitudes of men, apart to lead the people into the good land. This custom has been transferred to the new Testament Church; and we find christian ministers were recommended to the grace of God, by laying on of the hands of the apostles and elders of the church. It is desirable that such a custom should be maintained in the church; and it should be our hearty wish and prayer, that it may be as seriously observed, and be as useful, as it is proper and decent. In the morning how suitable is it to give thanks to him who has guarded us during the hours of repose! Who again permits us to awake, and by rest gives us new strength to pursue our callings! "O let us sing to the honour of his name; and show forth his praise." How suitable is it also to repeat our thank-offerings every night? 2 Let the extra offerings on the sabbath, and other days appointed for the worship of God, teach us, how we should spend the Lord's day. We should not consider it as a day of idleness, nor of sinful pleasure. Nor should we make it a day of business. Our spiritual sacrifices should be more numerous, on that day than others; prayer should be offered with more fervour, and praise with more gratitude. On these days holy convocations are held; the saints assemble in the temples of God, the law is read and the gospel is preached. Never, reader let thy pew be empty. God has promised to meet thee there and bless thee; and in reliance on this promise, go to his house and worship in his holy temple.

CHAPTER XXX.

B. C. 1452. On vows and obligations.

1 AGAIN Moses spoke to the heads of the tribes of the children of Israel, saying, "This is the thing which Jehovah hath commanded. 2 If a man make a vow to Jehovah, or swear an oath to bind himself under an obligation; he shall not break his word; he shall do according to all that proceedeth out of his mouth. 3 If a woman also make a vow to Jehovah, and bind herself under an obligation, being in her 4 father's house, in her youth; And her father hear of her vow, and of her obligation by which she hath bound herself, and her father by silence shall consent; then all her vows shall stand, and every obligation by which 5 she hath bound herself shall stand; But if her father "expressly" disallow her on the day that he heareth of it; not any of her vows, or of her obligations by which she hath bound herself, shall stand; and Jehovah shall forgive her, because her father disalloweth her. 6 If, when she was married, she was under a vow, or had uttered aught with her 7 lips, by which she hath bound herself; And if her husband when he heard of it, by silence consented; then her vows shall stand, and her obligations by which she bound herself shall 8 stand: But if her husband "expressly" disallow her on the day that he heareth of it;

CHAP. XXX.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIX. 1. Let us learn from this Chapter, that atonement for sin, was and is necessary for all men. All have sinned, and all do sin; and unless sin be expiated, punishment will be inflicted. The continued repetition of the sacrifices under the law, proved their insufficiency to take away sin; but our Lord, by one offering, of himself, has put away our sins, and obtained eternal redemption for us. Let us ever entertain the highest thoughts of the value and efficacy of his sacrifice; and by faith in it seek remission of our sins.

2. All the days of their dwelling in booths they were to offer sacrifices. While we are here in a tabernacle state, it is our interest, as well as our duty, constantly to keep up our communion with God:

CHAP. XXX. 3. The vows noticed in this Chapter are of two kinds;

1. Vows by which something was devoted to God, as a victim, or land.
2. Vows of abstinence, by which a person bound himself not to eat or drink

then he shall make her vow which she vowed, and that which she uttered with her lips, by which she bound herself, of none effect; and Jehovah shall forgive her. But every 9 vow of a widow, and of one divorced, by which they have bound themselves, shall stand good against them. And if a woman while 10 in her husband's house make a vow, or bind herself by an oath to any obligation; And 11 if her husband hear of it, and by silence consent, and disallow her not; then all her vows shall stand, and every obligation by which she bound herself shall stand; But if 12 her husband expressly made them void on the day he heard of them; then whatsoever proceeded out of her lips with respect to her vows, or her obligations, shall not stand: her husband hath made them void; and Jehovah shall forgive her. Every vow, and every 13 binding oath to humble herself, her husband may establish, or her husband may make void. But if her husband continue silent 14 from day to day; he then establisheth all her vows, and all her obligations, which are upon her: he confirmeth them, because by silence he consented on the day that he heard of them. But if he shall any ways 15 make them void after that he hath heard of them; then he shall bear her iniquity." These are the statutes, which Jehovah com- 16 manded Moses, between a man and his wife.

Nor will the unsettledness of our outward condition, excuse our neglect of the duties of God's worship. The number of the steers decreased every day; so that on the last day, though it was the great day of the feast, and celebrated with a holy convocation, yet they were to offer but one steer. God hereby intimated to them, that the legal dispensation should wax old, and at last vanish away; and the multitude of their sacrifices should end in one great Sacrifice, infinitely more worthy than them all. It was on the last day of this feast, after all these sacrifices had been offered, that our Lord Jesus stood and cried to those who still thirsted after righteousness, (being sensible of the insufficiency of these sacrifices to justify them,) to come unto him and drink, John vii. 37.

of certain things. For the illustration, see Introduction, Part ii. Chapter 7, § 1.

between the father and his daughter, being yet in her youth in her father's house.

CHAPTER XXXI.

B. C. 1452. The Midianites conquered; Balaam slain, and how the spoil obtained, is to be divided.

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying,
2 "Avenge the children of Israel on the Midianites; afterward shalt thou be gathered to thy 3 people." And Moses spoke to the people, saying, "Arm some of yourselves for the war, and let them go against the Midianites, and 4 avenge Jehovah on the Midianites. Out of every tribe, of all the tribes of Israel, ye shall 5 send a thousand to the war. So there were selected from the thousands of Israel, a thousand from each tribe, twelve thousand armed for 6 war. And Moses sent them to the war, a thousand from each tribe, with Phinehas the son of Eleazar the priest; who had with him the holy instruments, even the trumpets to sound
7 with. And they warred against the Midianites, as Jehovah had commanded Moses; and 8 they slew every male. And among the slain they slew these kings of Midian; Evi, and Bekem, and Zur, and Hur, and Reba, five kings of Midian: Balaam also the son of Be-or they slew with the sword. And the children of Israel took all the women of Midian captives, and their little ones; and they made a spoil of all their cattle, and all their flocks, and all their goods. And all their cities, and their strong-holds in which they had dwelt, they burned with fire. But all the spoil, and all the prey, both of men and of beasts they took away. And they brought the captives, and the prey, and the spoil, to Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and to the whole congregation of the children of Israel, to the camp on the plains of Moab, by the Jordan, over against Jericho.

And Moses, and Eleazar the priest, and all the chiefs of the congregation, went forth to meet them without the camp. And Moses was wroth with the officers of the host; with the captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, who had come from the war. And Moses said to them, "Why have ye saved all the women alive? Behold, they caused the children of Israel, by the counsel of Balaam, to commit a trespass against Jehovah in the matter of Peor; and there was a plague among the congregation of Jehovah. Now therefore kill every male among the little

CHAP. XXXI.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXX. 1. Let us never make vows, without due consideration; for the matter of a vow should be lawful, and many circumstances should concur to make it so. Hence how proper is the advice of the wise man; "Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few. For a dream cometh through the multitude of business, and a fool's voice is known by multitude of words. When thou makest a vow unto God, defer not to pay it: for he hath no pleasure in fools; pay that which thou hast vowed. Better is it that thou shouldst not vow, than that thou shouldst vow, and not pay. Suffer not thy the neglect of performing the vow; as in effect the crime is his.

CHAP. XXXI. 5. Twelve thousand. This was but a small army; but it appears that it was not the design of Moses to attack all the Midianites. Those only who were contiguous to the camp of Israel, were now vanquished.

6. The holy instruments. Critics are not agreed what these holy vessels or instruments were, which Eleazar carried with him to the war. Spencer contends that the Urim and Thummim are meant; while Geddes conjectures that the ark and its appurtenances, may be thus called. Le mouth to cause thy flesh to sin, neither say thou before the angel, that it was an error: wherefore should God be angry at thy voice, and destroy the work of thine hands."

2. If we have come under any particular obligation, let us be careful to answer it. In certain cases it may be useful to bind ourselves from some things as an exercise of self-denial. We should aim to possess self-government at all times; and not be brought too much under the power of any thing. Every Christian has come under obligation to mortify the flesh with its affections and desires. The vows of God are upon him; and let him not live as do others, in indulgence and wantonness; but let him ever be sober, adorning the doctrine of God his Saviour.

Clerc thinks the trumpets only are meant; and that we should render the following even. "The holy instruments, even the trumpets to blow, in his hand." I deem this the most probable opinion.

7. Slew all the males. In ancient times it seems to have been the usual custom in war to slay the men, and take the women and children captives. According to Euripides, the Greeks thus treated the Trojans. Indeed war among the oriental nations has been carried on in the most sanguinary manner in all ages.

16—18. Infidelity has reflected on the order of Moses as equally un-

ones, and kill every woman that hath carnally 18 known man. But all the women children, who have not carnally known man, keep alive 19 for yourselves. And do ye abide without the camp seven days: whosoever hath killed any person, and whosoever hath touched any slain, he shall purify himself on the third day, and 20 on the seventh day. Yourselves and your captives, and every kind of raiment; every thing made of skin, of goats' hair and of wood, ye shall purify. Now Moses had said to Eleazar the priest, "Say to those men who have returned from the war, that this is the ordinance of the law which Jehovah commandeth.
 Only gold, and silver, brass, iron, tin, and lead; Whatsoever can bear the fire, ye shall make to pass through the fire, and it shall be clean; yet it shall be purified with the purification-water; and whatsoever cannot bear the fire, ye shall only pass through the water.
 And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day, and be clean, and afterward ye may come into the camp."

21 And Eleazar the priest said to the men who had come from the war, "This is the ordinance of the law which Jehovah hath commanded 22 Moses; Only gold, and silver, brass, iron, tin, 23 and lead; Whatsoever can bear the fire, ye shall make to pass through the fire, and it shall be clean; yet it shall be purified with the purification-water; and whatsoever cannot bear the fire ye shall make to pass through the water.
 24 And ye shall wash your clothes on the seventh day, and ye shall be clean, and afterward ye may come into the camp."

25 Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, "Take unt and cruel.—It may be answered, that his conduct towards the women, may be vindicated from reasons of policy; but I freely confess it is difficult to justify the order to slay all the unoffending male children. The same principle ought to have been adopted towards the male as the female children. It is not said that the Lord gave Moses this order; and is it improper to believe, that in this affair Moses acted solely from his sense of policy.

 A Cleric supposes that the male children were slain on this occasion, lest the Israelites should have had too many slaves.

20. The order of Moses to Eleazar as now contained in the Sam. I deem genuine. Eleazar seems to act from his own authority, unless we admit that he received from Moses the order noticed. The conclusion of the sum of the prey which hath been taken;

 both of man and of beast; thou, and Eleazar the priest, and the paternal chiefs of the congregation, And divide the prey into two parts; 27 between those who engaged in the war and went out to battle, and the whole congregation: Then, from their half, who went forth 28 to the war, levy as a tribute for Jehovah, one out of every five hundred, both of the persons, and of the beeves, and of the asses, and of the sheep; And give it unto Eleazar the priest, 29 for a heave-offering to Jehovah. And of the 30 half of the children of Israel, thou shalt take one portion of fifty, of the persons, of the beeves, of the asses, and of the flocks, of all kinds of beasts, and give them to the Levites, who keep the charge of the tabernacle of Jehovah." And Moses and Eleazar the priest did 31 as Jehovah commanded Moses. Now the 32 booty, and what was left of the prey which the men of war had seized, was six hundred and seventy-five thousand sheep, And seventy 33 thousand beeves, And sixty-one thousand asses. 34
 And thirty-two thousand persons in all; of 35
 women who had not carnally known man.
 And the half, which was the portion of those 36 who went out to the war, was in number three hundred and thirty seven thousand and five hundred sheep: And Jehovah's tribute of the 37
 sheep was six hundred and seventy-five. And 38
 the beeves were thirty-six thousand; of which Jehovah's tribute was seventy-two. And the 39 asses were thirty thousand and five hundred;
 of which Jehovah's tribute was sixty-one. And 40
 the persons were sixteen thousand; of whom Jehovah's tribute was thirty-two persons. And 41

the 21st verse asserts that Moses had received such a command from the Lord; and it is natural to infer, that the command which he had received, he also delivered to Eleazar.

24. Wash your clothes. An ablution of this kind was usual among both the Greeks and Romans. See Æneid. ii. 718, and the Scholiast on Sophocles.

28. And levy a tribute. The congregation were to have a share, because the warriors went out in their name, and to make some reparation for what they had suffered by the Midianites. This was done by particular directions, and so all contests were prevented.

49. Not one of us. The reason which they gave was very remarkable,

Moses gave the tribute, which was Jehovah's heave-offering, to Eleazar the priest, as Jehovah had commanded him. And out of the half of the children of Israel, which Moses took from the men who had gone to the war, Which half belonging to the congregation was three hundred and thirty-seven thousand and five hundred sheep, And thirty-six thousand beeves; Also thirty thousand and five hundred asses, With sixteen thousand persons; Even of the children of Israel's half, Moses took one portion of fifty, both of men and of the cattle and gave them to the Levites, who kept the charge of the tabernacle of Jehovah; as Jehovah had commanded him.

And the officers who were over thousands of the host, the captains of thousands, and captains of hundreds, came near to Moses; And they said to Moses, "Thy servants have taken the sum of the men of war who are under our charge, and there wanteth not one man of us. We have therefore brought as an oblation for Jehovah, whatsoever any hath found, utensils of gold, chains, and bracelets, rings, earrings, and tablets, to make an atonement for our lives before Jehovah." And Moses and Eleazar the priest took of them the gold, even all the wrought utensils. And the whole gold of the offering which the captains of thousands and the captains of hundreds offered to Jehovah, was sixteen thousand seven hundred and fifty shekels; Which the men of war had taken as spoil, every one for himself. And Moses and Eleazar the priest took the gold of the captains of thousands and of hundreds, and brought it into the tabernacle of the congregation, for a memorial for the children of Israel before Jehovah.

CHAPTER XXXII.

B. C. 1452. The Reubenites and Gadites sue for, and have their portion of land assigned them beyond the Jordan.

Now the children of Reuben and the children of Gad and the half tribe of Manasseh had a very great multitude of cattle; and when they saw that the land of Jazer, and the land of Gilead, were places fit for cattle, The children of Gad, and the children of Reuben and the half tribe of Manasseh, came and spoke to Moses, and to Eleazar the priest, and to the chiefs of the congregation, saying, "Ataroth, and Dibon, and Jazer, and Nimrah, and Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Shebam, and Nebo, and Beon, The country which Jehovah hath smitten before the congregation of Israel, is a land fit for cattle; and thy servants have cattle: Wherefore, said they, if we have found favour in thy sight, let this land be given to thy servants for a possession, and let us not pass over the Jordan."

[CHAP. XXXII.]

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXI. 1. We may learn from what we have read, that it is our duty to avoid all occasion of sin, and temptations to it. This is absolutely necessary, if we desire to maintain our integrity, and keep ourselves pure. These abandoned women were dangerous guests, and the ordinances which appointed their execution were necessary and wise. May we keep at the remotest distance from sin, and abstain from every appearance of evil. We have need to pray, 'Lord, lead us not into temptation;' and if we sincerely desire this, we must keep a constant watch over ourselves, and resolutely avoid those places and that company, which may tend to stir up the corruptions of the heart.

2. It is fit, when God gives us success, that we should pay

'they had not lost one man.' This would be a great encouragement to them in their wars against the Canaanites.

CHAP. XXXII. 1. Half tribe of Manasseh. From a comparison of Deut. iii, and Joshua xiii, it is certain, that the half tribe of Manasseh our thankful acknowledgments to him; not only 'praise him with our lips,' which is very proper, 'and speak well of his name, but honour him with our substance.' It is a maxim of the New Testament, and it would be well if it was regarded, that 'every man should lay by in store, as God hath prospered him,' a fund for charitable uses; not to be alienated to any other purposes, but kept as a memorial of God's mercy, and in gratitude for his goodness. It is peculiarly proper, and pleasing to God, and to his ministers, and people, when these sacrifices are offered freely and generously, and without constraint, for God loveth the cheerful giver; for when we are "ready to distribute and willing to communicate, with such sacrifices he is well pleased." They prove the reality of our piety, and that our gratitude is unfeigned.

had an inheritance beyond the Jordan. This circumstance justifies the Sam. lection. The words לחצו שבת מנשה must have been early omitted, as there is no vestige of it in any of the versions. The request they made was natural, and the whole region between Gilead and the Euphrates was Moses grants their request.

6 And Moses said to the children of Gad and to the children of Reuben, *and to the half tribe of Manasseh, "Shall your brethren
7 go to war, and shall ye abide here? And why would ye discourage the children of Israel from going over into the land which Jehovah hath given to them? Thus did your fathers, when I sent them from Kadesh-barnea
8 to see the land. For when they had gone up to the valley of Eshcol, and seen the land, they so discouraged the children of Israel, that they would not go into the land which 9 Jehovah had given to them. And at that time the anger of Jehovah was kindled, so
10 that he swore saying, 'Not one of those men who came up out of Egypt, from twenty years old and upward, shall see the land which I swore to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob that 11 I would give it to them; because they refused to follow me; Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh the Kenazite, and Joshua the son of Nun; because they have wholly followed Jehovah.
12 And Jehovah's anger was kindled against Israel, and he made them wander in the wilderness forty years, until that whole generation, which had done evil in the sight of Jehovah was consumed. And, behold, ye are 13 risen up in the room of your fathers, a progeny of sinful men, to augment yet the fierce anger of Jehovah towards Israel. For if ye turn away from him, he will yet again leave Israel in the wilderness; and ye will destroy all this people."
14 And they came near to him, and said, "We will build sheepfolds here for our cattle, and 15 cities for our little ones: But we ourselves will go ready armed before the children of Israel, until we have brought them to their place; and our little ones shall dwell in the fenced cities because of the inhabitants of the land. We will not return to our houses, until the children of Israel do each one possess his inheritance. For among them we will not inherit on the other side of the Jordan; if our inheritance fall to us on this east side of the Jordan."

And Moses said unto them, "If ye will do this thing, if ye will keep yourselves armed before Jehovah for war; And if every one of you will pass over the Jordan, armed before Jehovah, until he hath driven out his enemies from before him, And the land be subdued before Jehovah: then afterward ye shall return, and be guiltless before Jehovah, and before Israel; and this land shall be your possession in the presence of Jehovah. But if ye do not thus, behold, ye sin against Jehovah; and be sure your sin will find you out. Build cities for your little ones, and folds for your flocks; and what hath proceeded from your mouths do." And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, *and the half tribe of Manasseh" spoke to Moses, saying, "Thy servants will do as my lord commandeth. Our little ones, our wives, our flocks, and all our cattle, shall be there in the cities of Gilead: But thy servants will pass over, every man armed for war, before Jehovah to battle, as my lord saith." So concerning them Moses commanded Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun, and the paternal chiefs of the tribes of the children of Israel: And Moses said to them, "If the children of Gad and the children of Reuben, *and the half tribe of Manasseh", will pass with you over the Jordan, every man armed for battle, before you; then ye shall give them the land of Gilead for a possession; But if they will not pass over with you armed, they shall have possessions among you in the land of Canaan."

31 And the children of Gad, and the children of Reuben, "and the half tribe of Manasseh" answered, saying, "As Jehovah hath said to 32 thy servants, so will we do. We will pass over armed before Jehovah into the land of Canaan; but let us have the possession of our 33 inheritance on this side the Jordan." And Moses gave to them, to the children of Gad, and to the children of Reuben, and to the half tribe of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, the kingdom of Sihon king of the Amorites, and the kingdom of Og, king of Bashan; the land, with the cities within its boundaries; the cities of the country round about.
34 And the children of Gad rebuilt Dibon, and 35 Ataroth, and Aroer, And Atroth, Shophan, 36 and Jaazar, and Jogbehah, And Bethnimrah, and Beth-haran, fenced cities; and folds for their

38 Heshbon, and Elealeh, and Kirjathaim, And Nebo, and Baal-meon, (its name being changed) and Shibmah: and they called by their former 39 names the cities which they rebuilt. And the children of Machir, the son of Manasseh, went to Gilead, and took it, and dispossessed 40 the Amorites who were in it. And Moses gave Gilead to the children of Machir, the son of Manasseh; and they dwelt therein.
41 And Jair, the son of Manasseh went, and took some villages, and called them Havoth-jair and took Kenath, and its villages, and called it Nobah after his own name.

CHAPTER XXXIII.

B. C. 1452 The forty-two Journeys of the Israelites; and the order to destroy the Canaanites.

THESE are the journeys of the children of Israel, who according to their hosts came out of Egypt under the conduct of Moses and Aaron. And Moses wrote their departures and their journeys which were made at the command of Jehovah: and these are their departures and their journeys. And they departed from Rameses in the first month, on the fifteenth day of the first month; on the morrow after the pass-over the children of Israel went out with a high hand in the sight of all the Egyptians. For the Egyptians were burying all their first-born, whom Jehovah had smitten among them: and upon their gods also Jehovah had executed judgments. And the children of Israel marched from Rameses, and encamped in Succoth. And they marched from Succoth, and encamped in Etham, which is at the extremity of the wilderness. And they marched from Etham, and turned again to Pi-hahiroth, which is over against Baal-zephon: and they encamped before Migdol. And they marched from before Pi-hahiroth, and passed through the midst of the sea into the wilderness, and went three days' journey into the wilderness of Etham,

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXII. 1. The conduct of the two tribes and a half in choosing their inheritance beyond the Jordan, allured by present appearances, is but too common respecting better things. When men have got some good things here, they are ready to sit down and forget the world for which they were intended. They do not care to suffer the mortifications and difficulties of a religious life. They are so well satisfied with this world, as not to desire a better; and take up their abode here, as if all their happiness consisted in worldly enjoyments. This is the ruin of thousands. 'Love not the world,' then, for the gosyour sin, when evils befall you."

38. They called by their former, &c. The sense of this clause has been disputed; but with Rosenmuller I consider it in opposition to what is said before, and supply former as understood.

CHAP. XXXIII. 1. We are not to imagine, that all the stations and encampments of the Israelites, during forty years, are here particularly enumerated. Those places only seem to be mentioned where they resided some considerable time; whence, as from a centre, they made occa-

pel says, "If any man love the world, the love of the Father is not in him; if any man will come to me, let him deny himself;" and the language of God's providence is, "Arise and depart, for this is not your rest."

2. The judgments of God upon transgressors should be a warning to us, that we do not fall into the same iniquity. Moses warns the people of what their fathers suffered for rebelling against God, and the same providence now warns us, for "these things were written for our instruction." God is the same holy God, equally jealous of his honour, has the same power to inflict sional excursions, for the sake of feeding their flocks, and other domestic animals. Compare the 13th, 14th, 15th, and 16th chapters of Exodus.

2. And Moses wrote, &c. It appears clear from this passage, that records were kept of the journeys of the Israelites, and it is presumable, of all the occurrences worthy of notice. It has been disputed, whether Moses was the author of the Pentateuch, or whether it was compiled from the public records of this Lawgiver at a later period. This dispute is of little importance, if the facts recorded be true; if the laws enacted were of di-punishments, and his fierce anger will be augmented if we do not take warning. Let us look to ourselves that we provoke not God, for it will be to our destruction.

3. If men sin against the Lord, they may be sure that their sin, sooner or later, will find them out: however secret the commission may have been, or whatever plausible excuses or pretences they may make for it, God remembers it. He will set their sins in order before them; and they will feel the horror of them in their consciences, and the wrath of God abiding on them. Providence may bring them to light, to their shame and confusion here; but certainly they will find them out at the great day. May we labour to find out our own sins, and sincerely repent of them, that they may not rise against us another day. They who thus act will find it their interest both in this and a future state.

vine origin, it does not concern us whether Moses left them in the precise order we now have them, or whether some of the prophets reduced them to this order. The most probable opinion is, that Moses left them as we now find them, excepting those few places where something has been added, in order to explain, what through time had become obscure.

5-9. Dr. Shaw, who visited the desert, thus describes it: "Over against Jibbel At-tackah, at ten miles distance, is the desert, as it is called, of Sdur, the same with Shur, Ex. xv. 22, where the Israelites landed, after they had passed through the interjacent gulph of the Red sea. In travelling from Sdur towards Mount Sinai, we come into the Desert, as it is still called of Marah, where the Israelites met with those bitter waters, or waters of Marah, Ex. xv. 23. And as this circumstance did not happen, till after they had wandered three days in the wilderness, we may probably fix it at Corondel, where there is a small rill of water, which, unless it be diluted by the dews and rains, still continues to be brackish. Near this place, the sea forms itself into a large bay, called Berk el Corondel, which is remarkable for a strong current, that sets into it, from the northward. The Arabs preserve a tradition, that a numerous host was formerly drowned at this place, occasioned, no doubt, by what we are informed of Ex. xiv. 38, that 'the Israelites saw the Egyptians dead upon the sea shore.' There is nothing further remarkable, till we see the Israelites encamped at Elim,

Ex. xv. 27; Numb. xxxiii. 9, upon the northern skirts of the desert of Sin, two leagues from Tor, and near thirty from Corondel. I saw no more than nine of the twelve wells that are mentioned by Moses, the other three being filled up by those drifts of sand, which are common in Arabia. Yet this loss is amply made up by the great increase of the palm trees, the seventy having propagated themselves into more than two thousand. Under the shade of these trees is the (Hammam Mousa) Bath of Moses, which the inhabitants of Tor have in extraordinary esteem and veneration; acquainting us, that it was here, that Moses himself and his particular household were encamped. We have a distinct view of Mount Sinai from Elim; the Wilderness, as it is still called, of Sin, lying betwixt us."

14. Rephidim. "After we had descended, with no small difficulty, down the western side of this mountain, we came into the other plain that is formed by it, which is Rephidim, Ex. xvii. 1. Here we still see that extraordinary antiquity, the rock of Meribah, Ex. xvii. 6, which hath continued down to this day, without the least injury from time or accidents. It is a block of granite marble, about six yards square, lying tottering as it were and loose in the middle of the valley, and seems to have formerly belonged to Mount Sinai, which hangs, in a variety of precipices, all over this plain." Dr. Shaw.

16. Kibroth-hattaavah. This station was in the valley of Paran, from 38 Hor, on the border of the land of Edom. And Aaron the priest went up into mount Hor, at the command of Jehovah, and died there, in the fortieth year after the children of Israel had come out of the land of Egypt, on the first 39 day of the fifth month. And Aaron was a hundred and twenty-three years-old when he 40 died in mount Hor. Then also king Arad, the Canaanite, who dwelt in the south, in the land of Canaan, heard of the coming of the 41 children of Israel. And they marched from mount Hor, and encamped in Zalmonah. And they marched from Zalmonah, and encamped 42 in Punon. And they marched from Punon, and encamped in Oboth. And they marched from Oboth, and encamped in Ije-abarim, on the 43 border of Moab. And they marched from Ije-abarim, and encamped in Dibon-gad. And they marched from Dibon-gad, and encamped 44 in Almon-diblathaim. And they marched from Almon-diblathaim, and encamped at the mount-45 tains of Abarim, before Nebo. And they marched from the mountains of Abarim, and encamped in the plains of Moab, by the Jordan, 46 over against Jericho. And they encamped along the Jordan, from Beth-jesimoth unto Abel-shittim, in the plains of Moab.

 47 And Jehovah spoke to Moses in the plains of Moab by the Jordan, opposite Jericho, saying,
 48 "Speak to the children of Israel, and say unto them, 'When ye have passed over the Jordan into the land of Canaan; Then ye shall 49 drive out all the inhabitants of the land from before you, and destroy all their sculptured stones, and all their molten images shall ye destroy, and all their high places shall ye demolish. And ye shall take possession of the 50 land, and dwell in it: for to you I have given the land for a possession. And ye shall divide the land by lot for an inheritance among 51 your families; and to the more ye shall give a greater inheritance, and to the fewer ye shall give a less inheritance: every man's inheritance shall be in the place where his lot falleth; according to the tribes of your fathers ye shall inherit. But if ye will not drive out the in-52 habitants of the land from before you; then it will be, that those who remain will be pricks in your eyes, and thorns in your sides, and will distress you in the land in which ye dwell. Moreover it shall be, that I will do to you, as I thought to do to them.'

CHAPTER XXXIV.

B. C. 1452. The boundaries of the promised land; the Names of those who are to divide it.

AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, I "Command the children of Israel, and say to 2 them, 'Ye are now about to enter the land of Canaan, that land which falleth to you

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIII. 1. In this account of the journeys of the Israelites, Moses particularly adverts to their departure out of Egypt. This country had been to them as an iron furnace; they had suffered every kind of insult and oppression. How glorious was their deliverance. They went forth with their hosts, and with a high hand. God's hand was lifted up on their behalf, and with invincible power he saved them from their enemies. Let every christian look back to the state of sin, from which God hath delivered him; and let him thankfully acknowledge the power and grace displayed in his conversion.

2. Let this history of their journeys remind us, that our life is but a journey towards another country. Here we have no continuing city. Happy will it be if we are travelling to the heavenly Canaan; for though all our journey be in a wilderness, yet beyond that wilderness the good land lieth, and into it we shall enter. Let us then imitate those, who through faith and patience inherit the promises; and ever keep heaven in our eye.

3. Some places mentioned were intended to remind the people of their sins, and of the mercy of God to them. Thus at Rephidim they murmured for want of water, and there God was gracious in forgiving them and supplying their want: Exod. xvii.

whence Moses sent the spies. Niebuhr thus describes it: "The famous valley of Faran has retained its name unchanged since the days of Moses, being still called Wadi Faran, the valley of Faran. Its length is equal to a journey of a day and half, extending from the foot of Mount Sinai to the Arabic Gulph. In the rainy season it is filled with water; and the inhabitants are then obliged to retire up the hills: it was dry, however, when we passed through it. That part of it which we saw, was far from being fertile but served as a pasture to goats, camels, and asses. The other part is said to be very fertile, so that the Arabs of the valley bring every year to Cairo an astonishing quantity of dates, raisins, pears, apples, and other fruits, all of excellent quality.

55. Pricks in your eyes, &c. This is a proverbial kind of speaking, which implies that they would suffer severely by associating with the Canaanites.

CHAP. XXXIV. 3. South corner. Our version is, 'south quarters.' This does not give the sense. The word רָחֵק evidently means the

for an inheritance; the land of Canaan with 3 its boundaries. Your south corner shall be at the wilderness of Zin adjoining to Edom;
 and your south border shall be the outmost
 4 point of the salt sea eastward; And your south border shall wind to the ascent of Akrabbim, and pass on to Zin; and thence extending to the south of Kadesh-barnea, it shall go on to Hazar-addar, and pass on to Azmon:
 5 And from Azmon the boundary shall wind
 about to the river of Egypt, and its termi-6 nation shall be at the sea. For your western boundary, ye shall have the great sea. This 7 shall be your western boundary. And this 8 shall be your north boundary: From the great sea ye shall draw a line to the top of Leba- non: from the top of Lebanon ye shall draw a line to the entrance of Hamath; and the 9 boundary shall pass on to Zedad: And the boundary shall go on to Ziphron, and its termination shall be at Hazar-enan: this shall 10 be your northern boundary. For your eastern boundary ye shall draw a line from Ha-11 zar-enan to Shepham: And from Shepham to Riblah, the boundary shall go on the east side of the source of the Jordan; and the boundary shall descend until it reach to the 12 east-side of the sea of Chinnereth. And the boundary shall go along the Jordan, and its termination shall be at the salt sea: This shall be your land with its surrounding boundaries.” 13 And Moses commanded the children of Israel, saying, “This is the land which ye shall inherit by lot, which Jehovah hath commanded to be given to the nine tribes, and to the half tribe; For the tribe of the children 14

 of Reuben, according to their paternal houses and the tribe of the children of Gad according to their paternal houses and the half tribe of Manasseh, have received their inheritance; The two tribes and the half 15 tribe have received their inheritance on this eastern side of the Jordan, opposite Jericho.” Jehovah also spoke to Moses, saying, “These ¹⁶₁₇ are the names of the men who shall divide the land among you: Eleazar the priest, and Joshua the son of Nun; And one chief of 18
 every tribe shall ye take to portion out the land. And the names of the men were 19 these: Of the tribe of Judah, Caleb the son of Jephunneh. And of the tribe of the chil- 20
 dren of Simeon, Shemuel the son of Ammihud. Of the tribe of Benjamin, Elidad the 21 son of Chislon. And the chief of the tribe of 22
 the children of Dan, Bukki the son of Jogli.
 The chief of the children of Joseph, for the 23 tribe of the children of Manasseh, Hanniel the son of Ephod. And the chief of the tribe 24 of the children of Ephraim, Kemuel the son of Shiphtan. And the chief of the tribe of the 25 children of Zebulun, Elizaphan the son of Par-nach. And the chief of the tribe of the chil- 26
 dren of Issachar, Paltiel the son of Azzan.
 And the chief of the tribe of the children of 27
 Asher, Ahihud the son of Shelomi. And the 28
 chief of the tribe of the children Naphtali,

l, &c. Kibroth-hattaavah is also noticed, where those who longed for flesh died. Shittim, the place where the people sinned in the matter of Peor, chap. xxv. 1. is here called Abel-Shittim.
 Abel signifies mourning, and probably this place was so called from the mourning of the good people of Israel for that sin, and God's wrath against them for it. It was so great a mourning that it gave a name to the place. Let us recollect the places where we have sinned against God, and renew our repentance.

corner or point whence the line of the boundary commences, specified here generally, and in the next clause precisely.

4. Akrabbim. The meaning is scorpion-hills, and probably so called from the number of scorpions found on them.

7. Mount Lebanon. The ancients vary. The Vulg. ad montem altis- simum. The Syr. and Ar. consider הר לבנון as a proper name, and render, Mount Hor. But mount Hor where Aaron died, was on the east of Edom; and quite out of the line now intended. Lebanon seems clearly to be meant;
 together with part of the ridge of mountains called Hermon. I conceive the Vulg. gives the sense.

8. Hamath. This is generally supposed to be Epiphania, situated on the Orontes. The length of Canaan is often described, ‘from the entrance of Hamath to the river of Egypt.’ Hamath was a great city; Am. vi. 2.

11. Source of the Jordan. Some consider ןן as a proper name of a place. So the Syr. Bochart contends that it denotes the source of the Jordan. It is a small round lake, and hence called Phiala. The Hebrew word may, without straining, admit of this sense.

12. To the Jordan. Though the eastern boundary passes along the Jordan, we are to remember that the two tribes and a half, had obtained their inheritance east of that river, and their boundary extended to the mountains of Gilead.

14. Have received. I have omitted the repetition as inelegant in our language; and as the sense is more clear without it.

CHAP. XXXV. 5. Two thousand cubits. There is an apparent dif-

29 Pedahel the son of Ammihud. These are they whom Jehovah commanded to divide the inheritance to the children of Israel in the land of Canaan.

CHAPTER XXXV.

B. C. 1451. The Levitical cities and their suburbs; six of them cities of refuge; laws respecting murder.

1 AGAIN Jehovah spoke to Moses in the plains of Moab by the Jordan opposite Jericho, saying,
2 "Command the children of Israel that they give to the Levites out of the inheritance of their possession, cities to dwell in; and suburb-land surrounding their cities shall ye give to
3 the Levites. And the cities shall they have to dwell in; and the suburb-land shall be for their cattle, and for their substance, even all
4 their other animals. And the suburb-land of the cities, which ye shall give to the Levites, shall extend from the wall of the city and outward a thousand cubits round about.
5 And ye shall measure from without the city on the east side two thousand cubits, and on the south side two thousand cubits, and on the west side two thousand cubits, and on the north side two thousand cubits; and the city shall be in the midst: this shall they have 6 as the suburb-land of the cities. And among the cities which ye shall give to the Levites there shall be six cities for refuge; which ye shall appoint for the man-slayer, that he may flee thither; and to them ye shall add forty and two cities. So all the cities which ye shall give to the Levites shall be forty and eight cities; them ye shall give with their suburb-lands. And the cities which ye shall give shall be out of the possession of the children of Israel; from them that have many ye shall give many; but from them that have few ye shall give few: every one shall give of his cities to the Levites according to his inheritance which he inheriteth."

Jehovah spoke to Moses, saying, "Speak to the children of Israel, and say to them, 'When ye have passed over the Jordan into the land of Canaan, Ye shall select for yourselves cities to be cities of refuge; that the man-slayer may flee thither, who killeth any person at unawares. And they shall be to you cities for refuge from the avenger; that the man-slayer die not, until he stand before the congregation in judgment. And of the cities which ye give to the Levites, six cities shall ye have for refuge. Three cities ye shall give on this side the Jordan, and three cities shall ye give in the land of Canaan, which

CHAP. XXXV.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXIV. I. Canaan itself was but a small Country, yet was so rich and fertile, that it could support a vast population. It was surrounded with wildernesses and seas; and like the people to whom it was given, separated by these boundaries from other lands. Though small it was the Lord's inheritance; a land of light and a valley of vision. Here God was known, and his name was great. Thus the Church of God is little compared with the world. His people are few in number; but like the land of Canaan, they are a people for whom he careth, with whom he dwells and in whom is his delight. Happy are they whose God is the Lord.

2. In the division of the land no partiality must be shown. It must be divided by lot. Some observe, that the order of the difficulty attending this passage, when compared with the preceding verse. Hence some interpreters have imagined, that the word rendered wall in ver 4. means the centre of the city; from which a line of 1000 cubits, drawn in four directions, would give the limits of the suburbs a square of 2000 cubits. But this is certainly a forced explanation. The common rendering of both verses is quite consistent; as will appear, if the city be supposed to be 1000 cubits square, and the measurement from each corner

4. * Two thousand, Sept. Alex.

tribes here very much differs from that in which they had hitherto upon all occasions been named, and agrees with the neighbourhood of their lots in the division of the land. Judah, and Simeon, and Benjamin, the three first here named, lay close together; the inheritance of Dan lay next them on one side, and that of Ephraim and Manasseh on another side; Zebulun and Issachar lay a-breast more northerly: And lastly Asher and Naphtali most northward of all; as is easy to observe in looking over a map of Canaan: This (saith Bishop Patrick) is an evidence that Moses was guided by a divine Spirit in his writings. Known unto God are all his works beforehand; and what is new and surprising to us he perfectly foresaw, without any confusion or uncertainty. He allots our inheritance to us.

1000 cubits, the whole contents of the city and suburbs will be a square of 3000 cubits. Rosenmuller is not satisfied with this solution of Serarius, but prefers the reading of Sept. Alex. in the former, as it is supported both by Philo and Josephus.

11. Cities of refuge. Moses appointed three cities of refuge beyond Jordan; and Joshua appointed three cities for the same purpose in Canaan; and these were opposite to each other. Hebron in Judea, was opposite to 15 shall be cities of refuge. These six shall be cities of refuge, both for the children of Israel, and for the stranger, and the sojourner among them; that every one that killeth any person unawares may flee thither. But if he smite one with an instrument of iron, so that he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death. And if he smite one by throwing a stone, by which one may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death. Or if he smite one by a hand weapon of wood, by which one may die, and he die, he is a murderer: the murderer shall surely be put to death. The avenger of blood himself shall slay the murderer: when he meeteth him, he shall slay him. And if he push one out of hatred, or hurl any thing at him in deceit, so that he die; Or in enmity so smite him with his hand, that he die; he that smote him shall surely be put to death; for he is a murderer: the avenger of blood shall slay the murderer when he meeteth him. But if he push suddenly without enmity; or have hurled any thing at him without deceit; Or cast any stone, by which a man may die, without seeing him; so that he die; then as he was not his enemy, neither sought his harm, The congregation shall judge between the man-slayer and the avenger of blood according to these judgments: And the congregation shall deliver the man-slayer out of the hand of the avenger of blood, and the congregation shall restore him to the city of his refuge, whither he had fled; and he shall abide in it unto the death of the high priest, who was anointed with the holy oil. But if the man-slayer shall at any time come without the boundary of the city of his refuge, whither he had fled; And the avenger of blood find him without the boundary of the city of his refuge, and the avenger of blood kill the man-slayer, he shall not be guilty of blood: Because he should have remained in the city of his refuge until the death of the high priest: but after the death of the high priest the man-slayer may return into the land of his possession. So these things shall be for a statute of judgment to you, throughout your generations, in all your dwellings. Whoso killeth any person, the murderer shall be put to death by the mouth of witnesses; but one witness shall not be deemed sufficient to put one to death. Moreover ye shall take no satisfaction for the life of a murderer, who is guilty of death; but he shall surely be put to death. And ye shall take no satisfaction for him who hath fled to the city of his refuge, that he should come again to dwell in the land, until the death of the priest. Ye shall not pollute the land in which ye dwell: for blood defileth the land; nor can the land be purified from the blood that is shed, but by the blood of him that shed it. Defile not, therefore, the land which ye shall inhabit, wherein I also will dwell; for I Jehovah will dwell among the children of Israel.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXV. 1. We see, that what was delivered as a curse, turned into a blessing; "I will divide them in Jacob and scatter them in Israel," Gen. xlix. 7. The dispersion of the priests and Levites among the several tribes, was a very wise and gracious appointment. They had their provision by tythes, that they might have time to study the law, and teach the people; and by such an appointment the people had access to them, and might ask the law at their mouths. We have reason to be thankful for the appointment of christian ministers, that they are spread through the country; and as the Lord has appointed that 'they who preach the gospel should live by the gospel,' so he who is taught in the word, should cheerfully communicate to him that teacheth in all good things.

2. We may observe, how very tender God is of the lives of his people. This appointment was designed to make men highly value each other's lives, to prevent any artful attempts to murder persons by pretended accidents; and by that means to have the land polluted with Bezer in the wilderness; Shechem in mount Ephraim, to Ramoth in Gilead; and Kadesh in mount Naphtali, to Golan in Bashan. See Introduction, Part ii. Chapter 5.

31-34. No satisfaction, or atonement. Atonement here is equivalent to ransom; and the Hebrew Legislator very justly reprobates, and forbids, so unworthy a traffic: which, most probably, was not uncommon before his days. The law of Mohammed, with respect to avenging blood, is this: "If any one be unjustly smitten, we give to his heir the right of demanding satisfaction; but he must not put the murderer to death in a cruel manner; nor avenge the blood of his relation upon any other person

CHAPTER XXXVI.

B. C. 1452. Laws with respect to heiresses.

- 1 AND the paternal chiefs of the children of Gilead, the son of Machir, the son of Manasseh, (of the children of Joseph,) came near, and spoke before Moses, and before the paternal chiefs of the children of Israel: And they said, "Jehovah commanded my lord to give the land for an inheritance by lot to the children of Israel: and my lord was commanded by Jehovah to give the inheritance of Zelophehad our brother to his daughters. Now if they be married to any of the sons of the other tribes of the children of Israel, then shall their inheritance be taken from the inheritance of our fathers, and shall be put to the inheritance of the tribe into which they are married; so shall it be taken from the lot of our inheritance. And when the jubilee of the children of Israel shall be, then will their inheritance remain joined to the inheritance of the tribe into which they are married: so shall their inheritance be taken away from the inheritance of the tribe of our fathers. And Moses commanded the children of Israel according to the word of Jehovah, saying, "The tribe of the children of Joseph hath said well. This is the thing which Jehovah blood, as well as the consciences of those men, who should wickedly do it, defiled: and such are, without repentance, debarred from eternal life. Upon the same principle we should be tender of the health, reputation, and comfort of each other, and cherish a brotherly love to all; for the gospel declares, that "he that hateth his brother is a murderer, and that no murderer hath eternal life abiding in him."

3. Let us be thankful for the provision that is made in the gospel for our security and happiness, notwithstanding our many sins. We are exposed to the condemning sentence of God's law; but there is a refuge provided, even the Lord Jesus Christ, and the everlasting covenant, which he hath published and sealed. "There is no condemnation to them that are in Christ Jesus." Let us, therefore, abide in him, and not wander from him; for those, and only those, will have strong consolation, and infallible security, who, as the apostle expresses it, in allusion to this appointment, "fly for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them."

than the murderer."

CHAP. XXXVI. 1. There is no need of explanatory Notes, except to observe, that this law, extended only to heiresses, for many of their great men and priests married wives of other tribes and countries; and other women, who had brethren to inherit, were free to marry into any commandeth concerning the daughters of Zelophehad, saying, "Let them marry to whom they think best; only to the family of the tribe of their father shall they marry. So shall not the inheritance of the children of Israel remove from tribe to tribe; for every one of the children of Israel shall keep the inheritance of the tribe of his fathers. And every daughter that possesseth an inheritance in any tribe of the children of Israel, shall be wife to one of the family of the tribe of her father, that the children of Israel may enjoy every man the inheritance of his fathers. Neither shall the inheritance remove from one tribe to another tribe; but every one of the tribes of the children of Israel shall keep their own inheritance." Even as Jehovah commanded Moses, so did the daughters of Zelophehad; For Mahlah, Tirzah, and Hoglah, and Milcah, and Naneh, the daughters of Zelophehad, were married to the sons of their father's brother: And they were married into the families of the sons of Manasseh, the son of Joseph, and their inheritance remained in the tribe of the family of their father. These are the commandments and the judgments, which Jehovah commanded by Moses to the children of Israel, in the plains of Moab, by the Jordan, opposite Jericho.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXVI. From this Chapter we may learn, that though inheritances and alliances are not determined by the express appointment of God now, yet wisdom is profitable to direct; and it becomes us to have a due regard to the leadings of providence in such important affairs as these. In v. 6. Jehovah expressly commanded the daughters of Zelophehad to marry whom they thought best, only confining them to their father's tribe. This naturally suggests, how unreasonable it is for parents to put a force upon the inclinations of their children in such cases; on which the comfort and happiness of their lives depend. And though it is of the greatest importance that children should pay a due regard to the judgment and opinion of their parents, yet they are not obliged to comply when they are contrary to their own judgment and affection; for parents to use any methods of compulsion, is the highest degree of cruelty imaginable. This chapter suggests to us, that "our eyes should ever be towards the Lord," for his direction and blessing in our settlements and resolutions.

other tribe, though it seems they generally confined themselves to their own. If their brethren died after they were married into another tribe, they could not inherit, but the estate went to the male heir. The design of this law was, to keep the tribes distinct, and hereby to fulfil the prophecies, particularly those respecting the Messiah.

DEUTERONOMY.

INTRODUCTION.

The name of this Book is derived from two Greek words, signifying a repetition of the laws and precepts, which had been before delivered. It contains a compendium of the Mosaic Institutions, though on some occasions they are enlarged and illustrated, accompanied with earnest exhortations to obedience, and prophetic denunciations of divine judgments, in cases of transgression or neglect. It was written towards the close of Moses' life, and addressed to a new generation, whose fathers had all died in the wilderness, except Caleb and Joshua. The whole book, therefore, may be considered as the last address of an aged parent to an undutiful race of children; and the earnestness and affection which prevail, render it peculiarly interesting.

It has been remarked that the prophecies of Moses become more numerous and distinct towards the close of life. He predicts the future state of the Israelites; their sufferings and dispersions; the victories of their enemies, and the extreme miseries they were to endure when besieged; their last dispersion for their rejection of Messiah;—all these things prove the truth and authenticity of this book. It abounds with the finest models of oratory and poetry; which show that the mind of Moses like his body retained its full vigour.

CHAPTER I.

B. C. 1452. Moses rehearseth God's promise to Israel; his anger on account of their unbelief and disobedience.

1 THESE are the words which Moses spoke to all Israel, on this side the Jordan, in the wilderness, in the plain over against Suph, between Paran, and Tophel, and Laban, and Hazeroth, and Dizahab. And in the fortieth year, on the eleventh month, on the first day of the month, Moses spoke to the children of Israel, according to all that Jehovah had given him in command to them; After he had slain Sihon the king of the Amorites, who dwelt in Heshbon, and Og the king of Bashan, who dwelt at Astaroth in Edrei: On this side the Jordan, in the land of Moab, began Moses to explain this law, saying, "Jehovah our God spoke to us in Horeb, saying, 'Ye have long dwelt by this mountain: Turn, and take your journey, and go to the mountain of the Amorites, and to all the adjacent places, in the plain, in the hills, and in the vale; and to the south, and to the sea side; to the land of the Canaanites, and to Lebanon, to the great river, the river Euphrates. Behold, I have set the land before you; go in and possess the land which Jehovah swore to your fathers, Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that he would give it unto them and to their seed after them."

"And I spoke to you at that time, saying, 9 'I am not able to bear you myself alone: Jehovah your God hath multiplied you, and, behold, ye are this day as the stars of heaven for multitude. (May Jehovah the God of your fathers make you a thousand times as many more as ye are, and bless you, as he hath promised you!) How can I alone bear the burdensome charge of you, and of your contentions? Choose ye men wise, and prudent, and known among your tribes, and I will make them rulers over you.' And ye answered me, and said, 'The thing which thou hast spoken is proper for us to do.' So I took the heads of your tribes, men wise, 'prudent', and known, and made them chiefs over you; captains over thousands, and captains over hundreds, and captains over fifties, and captains over tens, and other officers among your 16 tribes. And I charged your judges at that time, saying, 'Hear the causes between your brethren, and judge righteously between one man and another, and the stranger that is 17 with him. Ye shall not respect persons in judgment; but ye shall alike hear the small and the great; ye shall not be afraid of the face of man; for the judgment is God's; and the cause that is too hard for you, bring it 18 to me, and I will hear it.' And I commanded you at that time all the things which ye should do.

19 "And when we marched from Horeb, we went through all that great and terrible wilderness, which ye saw on the way to the mountain of the Amorites, as Jehovah our God commanded us; and we came to Kadesh-bar-20 nea: (From Horeb to Kadesh-barnea, by the way of the mountain of Seir, are eleven days journeys.) And I said to you, 'Ye are come to the mountain of the Amorites, which Je-21 hovah our God hath given to us. Behold Jehovah "your" God hath set the land before
"you": go up and possess it, as Jehovah the God of "your" fathers hath said to "you"; fear not, nor be discouraged.

22 "And you all approached to me together, and said, 'We will send men before us, that they may search out the land, and bring us word by what way we must go up, and into what cities we 23 shall come.' And the saying pleased me well;
and I took from among you twelve men, 24 one from each tribe: And they turned and went up into the mountain, and came to the valley of Eshcol. And they searched the land.
25 And they took and brought with them to us
some of its fruits; and they brought us word and said, 'Good is the land which Jehovah 26 our God giveth to us.' Nevertheless ye would not go up, but rebelled against the command of Jehovah your God: And ye murmured 27

in your tents, and said, 'Because Jehovah hated us, he hath brought us out of the land of Egypt, to deliver us into the hand of the Amorites, to destroy us. How should we go 28 up? our brethren have discouraged us, saying,
'The people are greater and taller than we;
the cities are great and walled up to the heavens; and moreover we have seen there men of the race of Anak.' Then I said to you, 29
'Tremble not, nor be afraid of them. Jeho- 30
vah your God, who goeth before you, shall fight for you; according to all that he did for you in Egypt, before your own eyes; And 31
in the wilderness, where ye have seen how Jehovah your God hath borne you, as a man beareth his son, through all the way that ye went, until ye came to this place. And in 32 respect to this will ye not believe Jehovah your God, Who goeth in the way before 33 you, to search out for you a place for your encampment; to show you by what way ye should go, in fire by night, and in a cloud by day?' And Jehovah heard the voice of 34 your words, and was wroth, and swore, saying,
'Surely there shall not one of these men, of 35
this evil generation, see that good land, which I swore to their fathers that I would give them; Save Caleb the son of Jephunneh; 36
he shall see it, and to him will I give the land on which he hath trodden, and to his children, because he hath wholly followed Jehovah.' Also Jehovah was angry with me for 37 your sakes, saying, 'Neither shalt thou go in thither; But Joshua the son of Nun, who 38 waiteth on thee, shall go in thither: encourage him, for he shall cause Israel to inherit it.
Moreover your little ones, who, ye said, should 39 become a prey; and your children who on this day know neither good nor evil, shall go in thither, and to them will I give it;

Then ye answered and said to me, 'We have sinned against Jehovah our God'; we will go up and fight, according to all that Jehovah our God hath commanded us.' And ye girded on every man his weapons of war, and were ready to go up to the mountain. But Jehovah said to me, 'Say to them, 'Go not up nor fight; for I am not among you; lest ye be smitten before your enemies.' So I spoke to you; and ye would not hear, but rebelled against Jehovah, and presumptuously went up to the mountain. And the 'Amalekites and Canaanites' who dwelt in those mountains, came out against you; and they chased you as bees do, and destroyed you by Seir, unto Hormah. And ye returned and wept before Jehovah; but Jehovah would not hearken to your voice, nor give ear to you."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER I. 1. Moses begins his address with reminding the people of Horeb, and the command they received to proceed towards Canaan; 'Ye have dwelt long by this mountain.' That was the mount that burned with fire, Heb. xii. 18, and gendered bondage, Gal. iv. 24. Thither God brought them to humble them, and by the terrors of the law to prepare them for the land of promise. There he kept them about a year, and then told them that having dwelt long enough there they must go forward. Though God brings his people into trouble and affliction, into spiritual trouble and affliction of mind, he knows when to advance them from the terrors of the spirit of bondage, to the comforts of the spirit of adoption.

2. He adverts to the wise appointment of their leaders. What can a people do, who are as sheep without a shepherd? Moses assumed no tyrannical power over them; but when he found this necessary, he directed the people, to choose men fit for the office of leaders and judges; and the men they chose he appointed over them. How suit-

we turned, and marched into the wilderness by the way of the red sea, as Jehovah had spoken to me. And when we had compassed mount Seir many days, Then Jehovah spoke 2 to me, saying, 'Ye have long compassed 3 this mountain: turn towards the north. And 4 command thou the people, saying, 'Ye are to pass through the boundary of your brethren the children of Esau, who dwell in Seir, and they will be afraid of you. Take therefore good heed to yourselves: Meddle not with 5 them; for I will not give you of their land, so much as a foot-breadth; because I have given mount Seir to Esau for a possession. The food 6 which ye eat ye shall buy of them for money, and the water which ye drink ye shall also buy of them for money. For Jehovah your God 7 hath blessed you in all the works of your hand; he hath directed 'your' marching through this great wilderness: these forty years Jehovah 'your' God hath been with 'you'; ye have wanted nothing.' 'So I sent messengers to the king of Edom, saying, 'Let us pass, I pray thee, through thy country: we will not pass through the fields, or through the vineyards, nor will we drink water out of the wells; we will march in the king's high way; we will not turn to the right hand or to the left, unable was his advice! "Choose ye men, wise and prudent, and known among your tribes.' Without wisdom, how can a man judge what is right? and without prudence, what dependence can be placed? Public persons should have proper qualifications, and be known to be men of wisdom and prudence.

3. He reminds them of their unbelief and the punishment of it. When they had sent men to spy out the land, they brought up an evil report of it; the people joined them, and refused to go up to take possession. Moses argued with and intreated them, and repeated to them the wonders God had wrought, as a motive to encourage them; but all was vain. Unbelief was their sin; and for this they were doomed to wander forty years in the wilderness, and the whole of that generation to die, except Caleb and Joshua. Let us fear lest we fall after their example, by unbelief. The promised land is set before us; the heavenly rest. Let us not dread nor be afraid of the enemies which oppose our progress towards it. For in due time we shall reap if we faint not.

10—12. These verses seem to be an interpolation, perhaps first placed in the margin, from which they crept into the text: as may have been the til we have passed thy borders.' But he answered, 'Ye shall not pass through my land; lest I come forth to oppose you with the sword.' We, therefore, passed by from our brethren, the children of Esau, who dwelt in Seir; and taking the way of the plain from Elath, and Ezion-gaber, we turned and passed on through the wilderness of Moab. And Jehovah said to me, 'Trouble not the Moabites, nor contend with them in battle: for I will not give you of their land for a possession; because I have given Ar to the children of Lot for a possession. Now arise and march, and pass over the brook Zered.' So we passed over the brook Zered. Now the space of time in which we came from Kadesh-barnea, until we had passed over the brook Zered, was thirty-eight years; until that whole generation of the men of war were wasted out from among the host, as Jehovah had sworn to them. For indeed the hand of Jehovah was against them, destroying them from among the host, until they were consumed.

"Now when all the men of war were consumed by death from among the people, Jehovah spoke to me, saying, 'Ye are this day to pass through Ar, the border-City of Moab: And when ye approach towards the children of Ammon, distress them not, nor meddle with them; for I will not give to you the land of the children of Ammon for a possession; because to the children of Lot I have given it for a possession. Arise, march and pass over the river Arnon; behold, I give into your hand, Sihon, the Amorite king of Heshbon, and his land; begin to possess it, and contend with him in battle. This day I begin to put the dread of you and fear of you upon the nations, under the whole heavens, who shall hear the report of you; and they shall tremble, and be in anguish because of you.'

"And I sent messengers from the wilderness of Kedemoth to Sihon, king of Heshbon, with words of peace, saying, 'Let us pass through thy land: we will march along the high way; we will not turn either to the right hand or to the left. The food which we eat, thou shalt sell to us for money, and the water which we drink thou shalt give to us for money: only let us pass through as travellers; (As the children of Esau who dwell in Seir, and the Moabites who dwell in Ar, did to us;) until we pass over the Jordan, into the land which Jehovah our God giveth to us.' But Sihon the king of Heshbon would not let us pass through his land: for Jehovah your God suffered his spirit to become hard, and his heart obstinate, that he might deliver him into your hand, as it is this day seen. For Jehovah said to me, 'Behold, I begin to give up to you Sihon, the Amorite king of Heshbon, and his land; begin to take possession of his land.' Then Sihon came forth against us; he and all his people, to fight at Jahaz. And Jehovah our God de-case with some other passages in this and other books of the Old Testament, and even in this chapter. But I take notice of this more particularly, as the interpolation is more plainly marked, than in some others: for it cuts in two the speech of God to Moses, and by a parenthesis in the midst of a speech, which has nothing to do with that speech, and which refers to a fact posterior to that speech, as already past, betrays its non authenticity in the most glaring manner—"like as did the Israelites in the land, which the Lord gave to them for a possession." which could not be written by Moses, because it records what was done after the time of Moses, after Israel had got possession of Canaan. Leave out these three verses, and the 9th and 13th will appear connected. Verses 20, 21, 22, 23, seem an interpolation of the like kind, inserted also in the midst of a speech of God to Moses.

19, 24, 25. In these verses God speaks to Moses as the leader of Israel; and I have therefore preferred the second person plural.

29. It does not appear that either the Edomites or Moabites permitted the Israelites to pass through their land; at least on the first application, according to the Sam. It is not improbable, that on more full information respecting their designs, they afterwards permitted them, and supplied them with what they wanted for money. It is only on such a supposition

And at that time we took all his cities and utterly destroyed the men, and the women, and the little ones, of every city; we left none to remain: Only the cattle we took to ourselves for a prey; and the spoil of the cities which we took. From Aroer, which is on the brink of the river Arnon, and every other city that is on the river, even unto Gilead, there was not one city too strong for us: Jehovah our God delivered up the whole to us: But to the land of the children of Ammon ye approached not; nor to any place on the river Jabbok, nor to the cities in the mountains, nor to any place which Jehovah our God forbade us."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER II. 1. God forbids the Israelites to meddle with the children of Esau; as they had no claim to their land. Though it might be in their power to seize their cattle or watersprings, they are not to do it: but ordered to pay for all which they might want. Thus God taught his people to govern their passions, and to act honourably and justly. Though they refused a passage to them through their land, they were charged not to consider this a ground for attacking them. Let all take heed not to follow the impulse of their interest or passion, 'but to do to others as they would others should do to them.'

2. After many vicissitudes, Moses and the people came over a-

has the passage is reconcileable with the text itself ver. 8, and Num. xx. 11. Rosenmuller observes that the Israelites at first desired to go through the midst of Idumea, which was refused; but the Edomites might permit them to go through the borders of their land.

36. Every other city. I have followed Rosenmuller in this version. Once thought that the city, here mentioned, was no other than Aroer itself, as appeared, from comparing chap. iii. 12, and Josh. xiii. 9. and that

So Jehovah our God delivered up into our 3 hands Og also, king of Bashan, and all his people; and we smote him until none was left to him remaining. And at that time we took 4 all his cities; there was not a city which we took not from them, sixty cities, the whole region of Argob, the kingdom of Og in Bashan. All these cities were fenced with high 5 walls, gates, and bars; besides a great many of unwalled towns. And we utterly destroyed 6 them; as we did to Sihon, king of Heshbon, utterly destroying the men, women, and children, of every city. But all the cattle, and 7 the spoil of the cities, we took to ourselves for a prey. And we took at that time out of 8 the hand of the two kings of the Amorites, the land that is on this side Jordan, from the river Arnon unto mount Hermon; ° And this land, 12 of which at that time we took possession, from Aroer, which is on the river Arnon, and half of mount Gilead, and its cities, I gave to the Reubenites and to the Gadites. And the rest 13 of Gilead, and all Bashan, the kingdom of Og, I gave to the half tribe of Manasseh, the whole region of Argob, which, of all Bashan, was alone called the land of the Rephaites. But 14 Jair, the son of Manasseh, took all the country of Argob unto the borders of the Geshurites and against the promised land. Having left the Moabites and Amorites, they met with Sihon king of the Amorites, who refused to let them pass over his land into Canaan, and came forth against them. He began the war, which proved his ruin. How needful the caution, 'with good advice make war.' Were it followed, much misery and devastation would be avoided. From Numb. xxi. 26, we learn, that Sihon had been before successful, and had acquired by his sword what he possessed; and now he falls by the sword of Israel. How true is it, "that they who take the sword perish by the sword." Let us engage in a nobler warfare, and as good soldiers of Christ, use the sword of the spirit, which is the word of God, and put to flight all our spiritual foes.

the second clause וְהָיָה אֲשֶׁר בְּנֵת הָאֵדֹמִי was only a more explicit determination of the site of Aroer; but I am now convinced that the version given is the genuine sense of the text. Compare Ch. iii. 12 and Josh. xiii. 9.

CHAP. III. 8. Hermon. This is one of the ridges of Lebanon, under which the Jordan takes its rise.

9, 11. That these verses are an early interpolation is generally admitted. They are not connected with the narrative, and could not be

Maachathites; and called after his own name that part of Bashan havoth-jair [THE VILLAGES OF JAIR]. And I gave Gilead to Machir; And to the Reubenites and to the Gadites, I gave from Gilead even unto the river Arnon, the whole land within the river, even unto the river Jabbok, which is the boundary of the children of Ammon; The plain also, and the coast of the Jordan, from Chinnereth even unto the sea of the plain, the salt sea, under Ashdoth-pisgah, to the east.

18 "And at that time I commanded you, saying, 'Jehovah your God hath given you the possession of this land; but all that are fit for war shall pass over armed before your brethren, the children of Israel; And your wives, and your little ones, and your cattle, (for I know that ye have much cattle,) shall abide in your cities which I have given to you; Until Jehovah have given rest to your brethren, as well as to you, and until they also possess the land which Jehovah your God giveth to them beyond the Jordan: and then shall ye return every man to his possession, which I have given to you.

21 "And at that time I commanded Joshua, saying, 'Thine eyes have seen all that Jehovah your God hath done to these two kings; so shall Jehovah do to all the kingdoms into which thou passest over. Ye shall not fear them; 22 for Jehovah your God shall fight for you.' And I besought Jehovah at that time, saying, 23 'O Lord God, thou hast begun to show thy 24 greatness, and thy mighty power; for what God is there in the heavens or on the earth, that can do such mighty deeds, as thou hast done? Let me, I pray thee, go over, and see 25 that good land which is beyond the Jordan, that excellent mountainous country, and Lebanon.' But Jehovah was wroth with me for your 26 sakes, and would not hear me; and he said to me, 'Let it suffice thee; speak no more unto me of this matter. Go up to the top of Pisgah, and raise thine eyes, and look westward, and northward, and southward, and eastward, and behold it with thine eyes; for over this Jordan thou shalt not go. But charge Joshua, 28 and encourage him, and strengthen him; for he shall go over before this people, and he shall cause them to inherit the land which thou shalt only see.' So we abode in the valley over 29 against Beth-peor."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER III. 1. The land which they had conquered was given to the tribes of Reuben and Gad, and the half tribe of Manasseh; and from the victories obtained Moses took occasion to encourage Joshua. What God had done he regarded as a pledge of what he would do; for his works like himself are all perfect. Every good man may reason in the same manner, and infer from the power and grace manifested in his conversion, that God will not leave nor forsake him. He that hath begun the work will complete it. Every opposing foe shall be conquered at last; and the soul finally saved. Let us then cleave to God by faith and love; and in the use of appointed means, go on from conquering to conquer.

written by Moses. Dathe observes, that it does not seem necessary that Moses should inform the Israelites, that Og was a giant; for they had seen him and fought with him. The word מִצְבֵּה according to Michaelis means here, not bedstead, but coffin; but whether we render 'bedstead, or coffin,' neither could be known to the Israelites, till David had conquered the Ammonites, 2 Sam. iii. 31; much less to Moses, who soon after the conquest of Og, died. But why was the coffin of Og, a king of Bashan, to be seen at the capital of the Ammonites, and not at his own capital Ashtaroth?

2. The ardent prayer of Moses to enter Canaan, and God's refusal may teach us, that there may be reasons, why our prayers should not be always answered. He doubtless wished to see Israel settled in the land of promise, and thought that he could then die in peace. Though God had determined, that he should not enter Canaan, he honoured him with a sight of it; and commanded him to encourage Joshua as his successor. When God lays by one instrument of good to his people, he raises up another; and thus his work of salvation is carried on. How ever useful a man may be in the world or the church, when his work is finished, he must go to receive his reward; rest from his labours, and enter into the joy of his Lord.

To this it is answered, with some probability, that, being wounded in the battle with the Israelites, he fled to Rabbah, and died and was buried there.

13, 14. Some have thought that all from Manasseh in the 13 to the end of the 14 verse interpolated. I have however retained it, omitting only the last three words with Heubigant. Compare Numb. xxxii. 41; Josh. xii. 30.

16. Within the river. The Arnon makes a great circuit from its source to do them, that ye may live, and go in and possess the land which Jehovah the God of 2 your fathers giveth to you. Ye shall not add to the word which I "this day" command you, nor shall ye diminish aught from it; that ye may keep the commandments of Jehovah your 3 God which I command you. Your eyes have seen what Jehovah did because of Baal-peor; for all the men that followed Baal-peor, Jehovah your God hath destroyed from among 4 you; But ye who did cleave to Jehovah your 5 God are all of you alive this day. Behold, I have taught you statutes and judgments, even as Jehovah my God commanded me; which ye should practise in the land which

 6 ye are going to take for a possession. Keep, therefore, and do them; for this will be your wisdom and prudence in the sight of the nations, who shall hear of all these statutes, and say, 'Surely a wise and prudent people
 7 is this great nation.' For what great nation is there whose gods are so nigh to it, as Jehovah, our God, is to us, whenever we call
 8 upon him? And what great nation is there that hath statutes and judgments so righteous as all this law, which I set before you this
 9 day? Only take heed to "yourselves", and diligently watch over yourselves, all the days of your lives, lest ye forget, or lest they should depart from your hearts; and make known to your children and to your grand-children, 10 the things which your own eyes saw, On the day ye stood before Jehovah your God at Horeb; when Jehovah said to me, 'Assemble the people, and I will make them hear my words; that they may learn to fear me all the days that they shall live upon the earth, and that they may teach their children also 11 to fear me.' So ye came near and stood at the foot of the mountain; and the mountain, surrounded with darkness, clouds, and thick darkness, burned with fire to the midst of the heavens. And Jehovah spoke to you out of 12 the midst of the fire; ye heard the sound of the words, but saw no similitude; ye only heard a sound. And he declared to you his 13 covenant, which he commanded you to perform, the ten commandments; and he wrote them upon two tables of stone.

"And at that time Jehovah commanded me
 14 to teach you statutes and judgments, that ye might do them in the land which ye are going to take for a possession. Take ye there-
 15 fore good heed to yourselves; (for ye saw no manner of similitude on the day that Jehovah spoke to you in Horeb out of the midst of the fire :) Lest ye be corrupted, and make 16 to yourselves any carved idol, after the likeness of the human figure, whether male or female; Or the likeness of any beast that 17 is upon the earth; or the likeness of any winged fowl that flieth in the air; Or the 18 likeness of any thing that creepeth on the ground; or the likeness of any fish that is in the waters beneath the earth: Lest when 19 "ye" raise your eyes to the heavens, and when ye see the sun, and the moon, and the stars, all the host of the heavens, ye should be led to worship, and serve them, as Jehovah your God hath suffered all nations under the whole heavens to do; But Jehovah hath taken you,
 20 and brought you from the iron furnace, from out of Egypt, to be his own peculiar people, as ye are this day. And Jehovah was angry
 21 with me for your sakes, and swore that I should not go over the Jordan, nor enter that good land, which Jehovah "your" God giveth to you for an inheritance. So I must die in this land; I

9, 10. I have transposed one clause of the text a little to make it vigorous. Although the generation of grown men, in whose hearing the Decalogue was given, were now dead; yet a great many of the people, who were under twenty years at that period, must still have remembered so uncommon and tremendous a scene: and to them the appeal is here made. Compare Exod. from xix. 9. to xx. 19.

must not go over the Jordan: but ye shall go 23 over, and possess that good land. Take heed to yourselves, lest ye forget the covenant of Jehovah your God, which he made with you, and make to yourselves carved idols, of any likeness, which Jehovah your God hath for-24 bidden. For Jehovah your God is a consuming fire; a jealous God.
 25 "Moreover, should ye beget children, and children's children, and have remained long in the land; if ye be corrupted, and make to yourselves a carved idol, of any likeness, and do evil in the sight of Jehovah, your God, to pro-26 voke him to anger: I call heaven and earth to witness against you this day, that ye shall soon utterly perish from off the land which ye are going over the Jordan to take for a possession; ye shall not prolong your days up-27 on it, but shall utterly be destroyed. For Jehovah will scatter you among the nations, and ye shall be left few in number among the 28 nations, whither Jehovah will drive you. And there ye shall serve gods of wood and stone,
 the work of men's hands, which neither see, 29 nor hear, nor eat, nor smell. But if thence thou shalt seek Jehovah thy God, thou shalt find him; if thou seek him with all thine 30 heart and with all thy soul. When thou art in tribulation, and all these things, in future days, have come upon thee; if thou turn to Jehovah thy God and hearken to his voice, 31 He will not forsake thee, nor destroy thee;
 nor will he forget the covenant which he confirmed by an oath to thy fathers; for Jehovah 32 thy God is a merciful God. For, inquire, I pray thee, of the days that are past, which were before thee, since the day when God created man on the earth, and from the one extremity of the heavens to the other, whether there hath been so great an event, or whether 33 any such hath been heard of, As that a people should hear the voice of the "living"

God, speaking out of the midst of the fire, as thou hast heard, and live? Or hath any other 34 god attempted to go and to rescue one nation
 from the midst of another nation, by such trials, by signs, and by wonders, and war; and by so mighty a hand, and an out-stretched arm;
 and by such great miracles as all those which Jehovah thy God did for thee in Egypt, before "thine" eyes? Thou sawest, that thou 35 mightest know, that Jehovah alone is God; besides him there is no other. From the heavens 36
 he made thee to hear his voice, that he might instruct thee; and on earth he showed thee
 his great fire; and out of the midst of the fire thou heardest his words. And because he lov- 37 ed thy fathers, he hath chosen their seed after them; and hath brought thee out in his own sight by his mighty power, out of Egypt; To 38 drive out nations from before thee greater and mightier than thou art, that he may bring thee
 in and give thee their land for an inheritance, as it is this day. Know therefore this day, 39
 and consider it in thine heart, that Jehovah alone is God, in the heavens above, and on the earth beneath; "besides" him there is no other.
 Thou shalt keep, therefore, his statutes, and 40
 his commandments, which I commanded thee this day, that it may be well with thee, and with thy children after thee, and that thy days
 may be prolonged on the land which Jehovah

Then Moses appointed three cities on the 41 eastern side of the Jordan; That the man- 42 slayer might flee thither, who should kill his neighbour unawares, and hated him not in times past; and that fleeing unto one of these cities he might live: Namely, Bezer in the 43 wilderness, in the plain country of the Reu-benites; and Ramoth in Gilead, among the Gadites; and Golan in Bashan, among the Manassites.

Now this is the law which Moses set before 44

 might be employed in this business in Egypt.

but as the other retain the singular, I have followed them.

CHAPTER V.

B. C. 1452. The covenant at Horeb; the ten commandments; Moses, at the request of the people, receiveth the Law.

1 AND Moses called all Israel, and said to them, "Hear, O Israel, the statutes and judgments which I speak in your ears this day;
that ye may learn them, and keep, and do
2 them. Jehovah our God made a covenant
3 with us in Horeb. Jehovah made not this covenant with our fathers only, but with us
also, who are all of us here alive this day.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IV. 1. We may learn from this address how much it concerns us to regard the law and word of God. He has given them for our instruction, and the regulation of our lives. We ought, therefore, to preserve God's word pure. We must not add to it our own inventions, as if the divine institutions were defective; nor introduce, much less impose, any rites or religious opinion other than what God has appointed:
nor must we diminish, or set aside, any thing that is appointed as needless or superfluous. God's work is perfect, nothing can be put to it or taken from it, without making it worse.

2. How great is the sin of idolatry! God's Israel must not respect idols of any kind; for he is jealous of his own glory. No creature can represent his spiritual nature and perfections; the most glorious are nothing in comparison with him. However others may do, they are to worship Jehovah only; and his wor-

vah talked with you face to face, saying, 'I 6 am Jehovah thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Thou shalt have no other gods besides 7
me. Thou shalt not make to thyself any car- 8 ved idol, or any likeness of what is in the heavens above, or of what is on the earth below, or of what is in the waters beneath the earth: Thou shalt not bow thyself down 9 to them, nor serve them; for I Jehovah thy God, am a jealous God, punishing the iniquity of fathers upon the children to the third and fourth generation, when they hate me;
But showing mercy to a thousand generations, 10
when they love me and keep my commandments. Thou shalt not take the name of Je- 11 hovah thy God in vain; for Jehovah will not acquit him who taketh his name in vain.
Keep the sabbath day so as to sanctify it, as 12
Jehovah thy God hath commanded thee. Six 13 days thou mayest labour, and do all thy work;
But the seventh day is the sabbath of Jeho- 14
vah thy God; on it thou shalt not do any work; neither thou, nor thy son, nor thy daughter, nor thy man-servant, nor thy maidservant, nor thine ox, nor thine ass, nor any of thy cattle, nor the stranger who is within thy gates; so that thy man-servant and thy maid-servant may rest as well as thyself.

ship must be pure and spiritual, the worship of the heart. It is such worship, and such worshippers only, that God will accept.
They had seen no similitude, when God gave the law, and they must not make any. Be it our care ever to remember, that God is a spirit, "and that we must worship him in spirit and in truth."

3. Moses enforces obedience by the majesty of God, by the love and kindness he had shown to his people. Jehovah only is God, in the heavens above, and in the earth beneath; besides him, there is none other. This God made Israel hear his voice from the heavens, and entered into covenant with them. He redeemed them to be a people for himself. In like manner he hath blessed us, speaking to us by his son from heaven, and redeeming us by his precious blood. Let us then remember our obligations, and glorify God with our body and spirit which are his. "We are not our own, but bought with a price."

16 "Honour thy father and thy mother, (as Jehovah thy God hath commanded thee,) that thy days may be prolonged, and that it may be well with thee, in the land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee. Thou shalt not

22 "These words Jehovah spoke with a loud voice to your whole assembly by the mountain, out of the midst of the fire, from the "dark and" stormy cloud; and he added no more. And he wrote them on two tables of stone, and 23 delivered them to me. And it came to pass, when ye heard the voice out of the midst of the darkness, while the mountain burned with fire, that ye came near to me, even all the heads 24 of your tribes, and your elders; And ye said, 'Behold, Jehovah our God hath showed us his glory and his greatness, and we have heard his voice out of the midst of the fire; we have seen this day that God may speak with man, 25 and yet he may live. But why, now, should we die? for if we hear any longer the voice of Jehovah our God, this awful fire will consume us, and we shall die. For who, of all flesh, hath 26 heard the voice of the living God speaking out of the midst of the fire, as we have, and lived? Approach thou, and hear all that Je-27 hovah our God shall say; and all that Jehovah our God shall say to thee, speak thou to us; and we will hear, and do it.' And Jeho-28 vah heard the words which ye uttered, when ye spoke to me; and to me Jehovah said, 'I have heard the words which this people have uttered, which they have spoken to thee. All that they have spoken is proper. O that such a 29 heart may be in them, that they would fear me, and keep my commandments continually, that it may be well with them, and with their children, for ever! Go say to them, 'Return

30 to your tents.' But as for thee, stand thou
31 here by me, and I will speak to thee all the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which thou shalt teach them, that they may do them in the land which I give them for a possession. ' So I stood between Jehovah
32 and you at that time, to make known to you the word of Jehovah: for ye were afraid on account of the fire, and went not up to the mountain. Ye shall observe to do, therefore,
33 as Jehovah your God hath commanded you: ye shall not turn aside to the right hand or to the left. Ye shall walk in all the ways which 34 Jehovah your God hath commanded you, that ye may live, and it may be well with you; and that your days may be prolonged on the land which ye shall possess."

CHAP. VI. 22. ^aSam. Sept.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER V. 1. We have the law repeated, to teach us that we have need of line upon line and precept on precept. We are inclined to neglect our duty, and our minds must be stirred up by way of remembrance. These precepts are so important, containing the rule of our duty to God and man, that they should be written on our hearts. This is the promise of a better Covenant than that made at Horeb. "After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts, and I will be their God, and they shall be my people."

15. Some consider, that Moses here assigns a very different reason for the observance of the sabbath, from what we have Ex. xx. 11. It does not appear to me, that he assigns here the reason, why this day should be sanctified, but why servants should enjoy rest as well as their masters.

31. 'The 5 verse transposed here.

2. What an awful impression was made on the minds of the Israelites at Horeb! They considered it a mercy that they were not consumed. They prayed Moses to become a Mediator between God and them; and God approved of their prayer. They promised obedience; "All that Jehovah commandeth we will do." Who could have thought that their impressions would have been so soon effaced? Alas, what is man! Unstable as water, hence he does not excel. Let us rejoice, that God is gracious, knows our infirmity, and is ready to pardon. To him let us apply through Jesus, the mediator of the new covenant, and we shall be saved.

CHAPTER VI.

B. C. 1452. The end of the law is obedience; an exhortation to enforce it.

- 1 "Now these are the commandments, the statutes, and the judgments, which Jehovah your God hath commanded that ye should be taught to do, in the land which ye are going to take 2 for a possession. That thou mayest so fear Jehovah thy God, as to keep all his statutes and his commandments, which I command thee; thou, and thy son, and thy grandson, all the days of thy life; and that thy days may 3 be prolonged. Hear, O Israel, and take heed to do; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest greatly multiply (as Jehovah the God of thy fathers hath promised thee,) in a land which floweth with milk and honey.
4 "Hear, O Israel: Jehovah is our God;
5 Jehovah is one: Thou shalt, therefore, love Jehovah thy God, with all thine heart, and 6 with all thy soul, and with all thy might. And these words, which I command thee this day,
7 shall be in thine heart; And thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children; and shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thine house, and when thou walkest in the way, and when thou
8 liest down, and when thou risest up. And thou shalt bind them for a token upon thine hands; and they shall be for frontlets between thine
9 eyes. And thou shalt inscribe them upon the 10 posts of thy house, and on thy gates. And it shall be, when Jehovah thy God shall have brought thee into the land which he swore to thy fathers, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, that he would give to thee; with great and 11 goodly cities, which thou buildedst not; And houses full of all good things, which thou filledst not, and wells digged, which thou diggedst not, vineyards and olive-trees, which thou plantedst not; when thou shalt have eaten and art full; Then beware lest thou forget Jehovah "thy God", who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage. Jehovah, thy God, thou shalt fear; 13 him "only shalt thou serve"; and to him thou shalt cleave, and by his name thou shalt swear. "Thou" shalt not go after other gods, (of the 14 gods of the people who are round about thee;) Lest the anger of Jehovah thy God 15 be kindled against thee, and he destroy thee from off the face of the earth: for Jehovah thy God, who is with thee, is a jealous God.

"Thou shalt not tempt Jehovah thy God, 16 as thou temptedst him at Massah. "Thou 17 shalt diligently keep the commandments of Jehovah thy God, and his testimonies, and his statutes, which he hath commanded thee. And thou shalt do what is right and good in the 18 sight of Jehovah; that it may be well with thee, and that thou mayest go in and possess the good land which Jehovah swore to thy fathers, that he would give to thee: By driving 19 out from before thee all thine enemies, as Jehovah hath spoken.

"When thy son shall, in time to come, ask 20 thee, saying, 'What mean the testimonies, and the statutes, and the judgments, which Jehovah our God hath commanded "us"?' Then thou shalt say to thy son, "We were 21 Pharaoh's bondmen in Egypt; and Jehovah brought us out of Egypt with a mighty hand: For Jehovah showed signs and wonders, great 22

CHAP. VI. 4. Jehovah is One. I have adopted the version of Vitranga and others. Campbell on Mark xii. 29, has supported it with strong reasons: I am not, however, entirely satisfied with it. I think the sense of the Hebrew is, 'Jehovah is our God, Jehovah alone, or only.' For this sense of (יְהוָה) compare Gen. xix. 9; Eccles. iv. 10, &c. In the new Testament, (ὁ) has the same sense, Math. xix. 17; Mark ii. 7. Three of our old versions render, 'the Lord our God, is Lord only.' The Geneva, Mark xii. 29, 'The Lord our God is the only Lord,' with which Pearce agrees. In this view Moses asserts, not only that Jehovah was the God of Israel, but the only one, and as such, him only they were to fear and to serve, exclusive of all the pretended gods of the nations. Ainsworth renders, 'Jehovah our God, Jehovah is one.' Others, 'Jehovah, our God, Jehovah is one.' It must be admitted, that the ancient versions support the rendering given.

8, 9. It is still customary among the Arabs, and the oriental nations, to write passages of the Koran, and other moral sentences, on the gates of cities, walls, and door-posts. Michaelis observes, that these verses do not contain a law, but an admonition to the Israelites to guard against a superstitious use of their phylacteries: See Math. xxiii. 5.

18. The reading of the Sept. and Syr. is supported by the quotation Math. iv. 10. Indeed without this addition the text is defective, and the sense incomplete.

 he thence brought us out ; that he might bring

 24 sworn to our fathers, he would give. And Jehovah commanded us to do all these statutes, to fear Jehovah our God, for our good continually, that he might preserve us alive, as it 25 is at this day. And if we take heed to do all these commandments, as he hath commanded us, it will be our righteousness, before Jehovah our God."

 the land which thou art going to take for a possession, and shall have driven out from before thee many nations : the Hethites, and the Girgasites, and the Amorites, and the Canaanites, and the Perizzites, and the Hivites, and the Jebusites ; seven nations greater and 2 mightier than thou ; And when Jehovah thy God shall deliver them up before thee, thou shalt smite them, so as utterly to destroy them ;

CHAP. VII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VI. 1. We are here taught, that the infinite and eternal Jehovah should have the chief place in our thoughts and affections. We, as christians, enjoy great advantages for the knowledge, fear, love and worship of God. We believe his unity ; that there is one only living and true God ; and though 'there are gods many, and lords many, yet to us there is but one God,' from whom all other beings are derived, and upon whom all are dependent. Such are the first principles of religion. Moses and the prophets taught it, and Christ inculcated it.
 It is our duty also to rely on his providence, and not to tempt him by murmuring and fretfulness. "Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God, v. 16. Christ quotes this passage, when Satan tempted him to throw himself from the top of the temple, Math. iv. 7.
 And as we should not distrust his care, while we are in the way of duty, so let us not presume upon enjoying his protection and blessing, while we neglect it.

2. Great care should be taken to make the law of God familiar to our minds. We have no occasion for phylacteries, nor to write it on our door posts, for 'the word is nigh unto us.' Since

CHAP. VII. 2. Utterly destroy them. The order to exterminate the Canaanites, has formed a plausible objection against the divine mission of thou shalt make no covenant with them, nor show mercy to them : Thou shalt not inter- 3 marry with them ; thy daughters thou shalt not give to their sons, nor shalt thou take their daughters for thy sons. For they will turn 4 away thy sons from following me, to serve other gods ; so will the anger of Jehovah be kindled against thee", and suddenly destroy thee. Thus, therefore, shalt thou do to them ; 5 thou shalt destroy their altars, and break in pieces their images, and cut down their groves,

 and burn their carved idols with fire.

"For ye are a holy people to Jehovah your 6 God : Jehovah your God hath chosen you to be a peculiar people to himself, above all the people that are upon the face of the earth.
 Jehovah did not set his love upon you, or 7 choose you, because ye were more numerous than any people ; for ye were the least of all people : But because Jehovah loved you, and 8 that he might keep the oath which he had sworn to your fathers, hath Jehovah brought you out with a mighty hand, and redeemed you from the house of bondage, from the hand of Pharaoh, the king of Egypt. Know, therefore, 9 the invention of printing, bibles are almost in every hand. Let us then study them carefully, treasure up what they contain in our hearts, and meditate on the rules and directions therein given.

 He that sincerely loves God, will love his word ; "his delight will be in the law of the Lord, and in that law he will meditate day and night."

3. It is a matter of the greatest consequence to the support of religion, that children be instructed in the law of God. They must be "trained up in the way of God, brought up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord ;" be taught diligently the first principles of religion ; that there is but one God and Father of all ; that they are to love him as the author of their frame, and that 'he is the giver of every good gift.' We should speak on religious subjects on every proper occasion ; not for ostentation, but for edification ; and if our children inquire of us, we should readily and cheerfully answer. If our conduct correspond with our instructions, no doubt, their influence will be seen on the rising generation ; and thus religion will not only be supported but widely spread in the world.

Moses, from Tindal to Paine and Geddes. He has filled four pages with what he conceives unanswerable arguments. He goes on this obvious prin-

the faithful God, who keepeth covenant and mercy with those who love him and keep his 10 commandments, to a thousand generations; But he repayeth openly those who hate him by destroying them: to those who hate him, he will not delay; he will openly repay them.
11 Ye shall, therefore, keep and do the commandments, and the statutes, and the judgments, which I command you this day.
12 "For it shall be, if 'thou' hearken to these judgments, and keep, and do them, that Jehovah thy God shall keep with thee the covenant and the mercy which he swore to 13 thy fathers. And he will love thee, and bless thee, and multiply thee; he will also bless the fruit of thy womb, and the fruit of thy land; thy corn, and thy wine, and thine oil; the increase of thine herds, and the young of thy sheep, in the land which he swore to 14 thy fathers that he would give to thee. Thou shalt be blessed above all people; there shall not be male or female barren with thee, or 15 with thy cattle. And Jehovah 'thy God' will take away from thee all sickness; and will put none of the evil diseases of Egypt, which thou knowest, upon thee; but will lay 16 them upon all those who hate thee. And thou shalt consume all the people whom Jehovah thy God shall deliver up to thee; thine eye shall have no pity upon them. Nor shalt thou serve their gods; for that will be a snare 17 to thee. If thou shalt say in thine heart, "These nations are more than I; how can I dispossess them? Be not afraid of them: remember well what Jehovah thy God did to Pharaoh, and to all Egypt; Those great 19 trials which thine own eyes saw; and the signs, and the wonders, and the mighty hand, and the out-stretched arm, with which Jehovah thy God brought thee forth; so shall Jehovah thy God do to all the people of whom thou art afraid. Moreover hornets will Jehovah 20 thy God send among them, until they that are left, who have hidden-themselves from thee, be destroyed: Be not thou affrighted at them; 21 for Jehovah thy God is with thee, a God mighty and terrible. Jehovah thy God will expel 22 by little and little those nations from before thee: thou must not destroy them at once, lest the wild beasts increase upon thee.

"But when Jehovah thy God shall have de- 23 livered them up to thee, and shall, by great and repeated overthrows, have destroyed them; And shall have delivered up their kings into 24 thine hand; then thou shalt destroy their name from under the heavens: there shall no man be able to stand before thee, until thou have destroyed them. Their carved gods thou shalt 25 burn with fire: thou shalt not covet the silver or gold that may be on them, nor take it to thyself, lest thou be ensnared; for it is an abomination to Jehovah thy God. Nor shalt 26 thou bring an abomination into thine house, lest thou become like it, devoted to destruction; but thou shalt utterly detest it, and abhor it; for it is a devoted thing."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VII. 1. Evil communication corrupteth good manners; and hence, if we desire to keep ourselves pure, we must avoid all occasions of sin, and the temptations to it. There are many commands to destroy altars and images, and they are often repeated. Human nature is prone to sin, is easily corrupted; therefore let us avoid every thing that would lead us astray, and have no friendship with the unfruitful works of darkness.

ciple, 'that one man has no right to injure another.' This is allowed; but has not God a right to punish offending, guilty mortals? And may he not make use of one man, or one nation, to punish another? On supposition that the order issued from Moses, it is unjust; but if from God, I see no injustice in his punishing the wicked nations of Canaan, by the Israelites, or any other instruments; unless we say, it is unjust in God to punish at all.

10. Openly. Literally 'to his face.' I have followed Michaelis in this version. Others think the words אל פני mean 'while he liveth,' or during this life, as the words mean Gen. xi. 28. My version implies this;

and I can give no better.

15. Evil diseases of Egypt. Such diseases as are peculiar to Egypt seem to be meant, and those plagues which God sent as tokens of his power and justice. The leprosy and plague have ever been, and are still, the evil diseases of Egypt.

22. Wild-beasts. It is supposed in this verse, that if Judea should be thinly peopled, the wild beasts would so multiply there as to render it dangerous to the inhabitants. The prophet Ezekiel supposes the same, in a passage in which he describes the mercy granted to the land of Israel after its being repopled, when he should turn again the captivity of Sion.

CHAPTER VIII.

B. C. 1452. From God's kindness Moses enforceth obedience.

- 1 "ALL the commandments which I command thee this day shalt thou take heed to do; that thou mayest live, and multiply, and go in and possess the land which Jehovah swore to thy fathers, that he would give to thee.
- 2 And remember all the way through which Jehovah thy God hath led thee these forty years, in the wilderness, to humble thee, and to prove thee, to know what was in thine heart; whether thou wouldst keep his commandments, or not.
- 3 And he humbled thee, and suffered thee to hunger, that he might feed thee with manna, which thou knewest not, nor did thy fathers know; that he might make known to thee that man liveth not by bread only, but by whatsoever Jehovah appointeth, a man may
- 4 live. Thy raiment hath not been worn out upon thee; nor have thy feet swelled for want
- 5 of sandals, these forty years; That thou mayest be convinced in thine heart, that, as a man chastiseth his son, so Jehovah thy God hath
- 6 chastised thee. Therefore thou shalt keep the commandments of Jehovah thy God, so as to walk in his ways, and fear him.

CHAP. VIII.

2. The command in this Chapter, not to intermarry with idolaters, enforces the advice of the Apostle: "Be not unequally yoked with unbelievers." The Israelites might have pleaded as some do, that this was the way to convert them to God; but God knew it would have an opposite tendency. "For they will turn away thy sons from following me, to serve other gods; so will

Ezek. xxxiv. 25. Every body knows that country is not very populous, and accordingly wild beasts are, at present, so numerous there, as to be terrifying to strangers.

CHAP. VIII. 3. Jehovah appointeth. This clause is obscure in our version: 'But by every word which proceedeth from the mouth of the Lord doth man live.' How can man live by a word? The sense is obvious, that God has other means of supporting life than by bread; whatsoever he appointeth for this end will be sufficient. Compare Mat. iv. 4.

4. Thy raiment not worn out. The common opinion that the raiment and shoes of the Israelites wore not, is certainly absurd. The meaning of this passage, to which we may add Nehem. ix. 21, may be, like that of any other passage, taken too literally; as may also Isa. xlviii. 21, where out of valleys and hills; A land of wheat, 8 and barley, and vines, and fig trees, and pomegranates; a land of olive oil, and honey; A land in which thou shalt eat bread with- 9 out scarcity, and shalt want nothing; a land whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayest dig copper: When thou hast 10 eaten and art full, then thou shalt bless Jehovah thy God for the good land which he hath given thee. Beware that thou forget not 11 Jehovah thy God, so as not to keep his commandments, and his judgments, and his statutes which I this day command thee; Lest when 12 thou hast eaten and art full, and hast built goodly houses, and dwelt therein; And when 13 thy herds and thy flocks have multiplied; and thy silver and thy gold are multiplied, and all that thou hast is multiplied; And thine heart 14 be so lifted up, as to forget Jehovah thy God, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, from the house of bondage; Who led thee 15 through the great and terrible wilderness, full of fiery serpents, and scorpions; and who, in dry places, where there was no water, brought water for thee out of the flinty rock; Who 16 fed thee in the wilderness with manna, which thy fathers knew not, that he might humble thee, and prove thee, that in future he might do thee good; And thou say in thine heart, 17 'My power and the might of mine hand have the anger of Jehovah be kindled against thee, and suddenly destroy thee." In unequal marriages we too often find the good are spoiled, rather than the bad mended. If in general it is wise for us to associate with them that fear God, and to depart from evil doers, we should be especially careful, that we never form alliances with those who are strangers to true religion.

the prophet says, the Israelites did not suffer thirst in the desert; which is literally false, but relatively true, as their thirst was speedily satisfied. They had flocks of sheep and goats, and herds of cattle, (Numb. xxxii. 1. and Deuter. iii. 19,) and from these were abundantly supplied with wool and skins, for clothing and sandals; and that they knew how to spin and weave, &c. See Exod. xxxv. 25. The meaning then is, God had provided them with sufficient clothing.

5. Chastiseth his son; that is, correcteth him for his improvement, so hath God done to thee.

7—9. The value of the good things here said to be produced in Canaan; fountains, brooks, depths of water, wheat, barley, vines, fig-trees, pomegranates, oil, and honey, can hardly be estimated by us in Europe;

18 gotten me this wealth! But thou shalt remember Jehovah thy God: for it is he that hath given to thee power to get wealth, that he may establish his covenant which he swore to thy fathers, "to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob", as it is

20 this day, that thou shalt surely perish. As the nations which Jehovah destroyeth before thee, so shalt thou perish; because thou wouldst not be obedient to the voice of Jehovah thy God."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER VIII. 1. It is our duty to remember the way in which God hath led us; to look back on the mercies we have received, the chastisements we have endured, as cautions to us in future, and as motives to our obedience. We should 'call to remembrance the former days,' and bless God, 'who hath fed us all our lives, and redeemed us from evil.' "He hath been with us in six troubles, and in seven he hath not forsaken us." Christians especially should do this; they should review their lives, and celebrate that 'goodness and mercy which have followed them all their days.' This is peculiarly proper when we are just entering into the good land, the heavenly Canaan, which is infinitely better than all present possessions. Let us recollect this as a motive to serve and obey him, and as an encouragement to trust in him for future supplies, for we may be assured that his 'hand is not shortened.'

in thine heart, saying; 'On account of my righteousness Jehovah hath brought me in to possess the land:' for it is on account of the wickedness of these nations that Jehovah driveth them out from before thee. Not on account 5 of thy righteousness, or for the uprightness of thine heart, dost thou go to possess their land; but on account of the wickedness of these nations Jehovah thy God driveth them out from before thee; and that he may perform the word which he swore to thy fathers, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. Know, then, 6 that it is not on account of thy righteousness that Jehovah thy God giveth thee this good land for a possession: for thou art a stiffnecked people.

"Remember, and forget not, how you pro- 7 voked Jehovah your God to wrath in the wilderness. From the day that ye departed out of the land of Egypt, until ye came to this place, ye have been rebellious against Jehovah. Even 8 at Horeb ye provoked Jehovah to wrath; and Jehovah was so angry with you as to have destroyed you. For, when I went up to 9 the mountain to receive the tables of stone, the tables of the covenant which Jehovah had made with you; and I had abode in the mountain forty days and forty nights; I had neither eaten bread nor drunk water; Jehovah 10 then delivered to me two tables of stone, written with the finger of God; and on them were

2. When we partake of the comforts of life, let us not forget, but bless the giver of them. "When thou hast eaten and art full, then shalt thou bless the Lord thy God for the good land that he hath given thee." Let us practise this important duty, thankfully acknowledge God's goodness at our meals in a serious, thoughtful manner, not in a few hasty, formed words, as if we were trifling with God, or ashamed of devout gratitude. It is a natural duty, and a proper expression of gratitude and dependence on him, as it is his blessing upon the creatures, which gives them a nourishing power. It is also the best way to prevent intemperance, and an abuse of his creatures; for, to begin and conclude every meal with serious prayer and thanksgiving, will prevent excess, and preserve our table from becoming a snare.

3. In prosperity let us take heed, lest 'our hearts be lifted up.' When the estate riseth, the mind is apt to rise with it, in written the words which Jehovah had spoken with you on the mountain out of the midst of the fire, on the day of the assembly.

11 Now, at the end of forty days and forty nights, when Jehovah had given to me the two tables of stone, the tables of the covenant;

12 Jehovah said to me, "Arise, go quickly down hence; for corrupted are the people whom thou hast brought out of Egypt; soon have they turned aside from the way in which I commanded them to walk; they have made

13 to themselves a molten calf." Moreover, Jehovah spoke to me, saying, 'I have seen this people, and behold they are a stiff-necked people: Let me alone, that I may destroy them, and blot out their name from under the heavens, and I will make of thee

14 a nation mightier and greater than they. So I turned and came down from the mountain and the mountain burned with fire; and the two tables of the covenant were in my two

15 hands. When I looked, and beheld that ye had sinned against Jehovah your God, and had made to yourselves a molten calf, and had turned so soon aside out of the way in which Jehovah had commanded you to walk;

16 I then took the two tables, and cast them out of my two hands, and broke them in pieces before your eyes. 'And I took the calf, the matter of your sin, which ye had made, and burnt it with fire, and ground it very small, until it was as small as dust; and I cast its dust into the brook that descended from the mountain". And I fell down before Jehovah, as before. 18 Forty days and forty nights, I did neither eat bread nor drink water, on account of all your sins which ye had committed, by doing wickedly in the sight of Jehovah, to provoke him to anger. For I was afraid of the anger and 19 hot displeasure, with which Jehovah was wroth against you so as to destroy you. But at that time also Jehovah hearkened to me. For I 25 fell down before Jehovah forty days and forty nights, as I fell down before; because Jehovah had said he would destroy you. I therefore 26 prayed to Jehovah, and said, 'O Lord God, destroy not thy people and thine inheritance, whom in thy greatness thou hast redeemed; whom thou hast brought out of Egypt, with a mighty hand. Remember thy servants, Abra- 27 ham, Isaac, and Jacob; look not to the stubbornness of this people, nor to their wickedness, nor to their sin: Lest the "people of 28 the" land, whence thou broughtest us out, say, 'Because Jehovah was not able to bring them into the land which he had promised to them, he brought them out to slay them in the wilderness.' Yet they are thy people and 29 thine inheritance, whom thou broughtest out by thy mighty power, and by thine out-stretched arm.' 'And Jehovah was so very angry 20 with Aaron, that he would have destroyed him; but I prayed for Aaron also at the same time."

self-conceit, self-complacency, and self-confidence. Let us therefore strive to keep the spirit low in a high condition: Humility is both the ease and the ornament of prosperity. Take heed of saying so much as in thy heart that proud word, "My power and the might of my hand hath gotten me this wealth." We must never take the praise of our prosperity to ourselves, nor attribute it to our ingenuity or industry; for bread is not always to the wise, nor 'riches to men of understanding.' It is spiritual idolatry thus to "sacrifice to our own net."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER IX. 1. We are here admonish-

ed to guard against self-righteousness. Moses represents the conquest of Canaan as certain; but cautions the people against thinking their own righteousness had procured for them this favour. He repeats this sentiment, because it is difficult to convince people that they have no merit, and that what they enjoy, is the effect of God's free favour. Yet nothing is more certain, than that if men were rewarded according to their deeds, they would never enter Canaan. 'We are saved by grace.' In Christ, believers have righteousness and strength, by which they are justified, and enabled to go and take possession of the promised inheritance.

21. It is generally allowed that this verse, is out of its place; for the burning of the golden calf occurred before what is related in the 18 verse. I would therefore, with little hesitation, place it between verses 17 and 18. I would also venture to transpose verse 20 to the end of the chapter, after verse 29, and verses 22, 23, and 24, to the next chapter after verse 11. I am persuaded, that the attentive reader will find this arrangement more clear and consistent than the common one: and as nothing is taken from the text, I trust such transpositions will be deemed pardonable.

B. C. 1452. God restored the tables of the law; an exhortation to obedience.

1 "At that time, Jehovah said to me, 'Hew thou two tables of stone like to the first, and
2 come up to me on the mountain: And I will write on the tables the words which were on the former tables which thou brokest: 'and make thou an ark of wood" and put them
3 in the ark. And I hewed two tables of stone like to the former, and went up to the mountain, having the two tables in mine hand.
4 And he wrote on the tables, as he had written on the former tables, the ten commandments, which Jehovah spoke to you on the mountain out of the midst of the fire on the day of the assembly; and Jehovah gave them
5 to me. And I turned myself and came down from the mountain, and 'having made an ark of Shittim-wood" I put the tables in the ark which I had made; that there they may remain, as Jehovah commanded me. °And I had staid on the mountain, according to the former time, forty days and forty nights; and Jehovah hearkened to me at that time also, so 10 that he would not destroy 'you". Jehovah then said to me, "Arise, and lead forward 'this" people, that they may go in and pos-

From thence they journeyed unto Gudgodah; and from Gudgodah to Jotbath, a land of rivers of waters. 8. At that time Jehovah separated the tribe of

2. We are also taught, that it is our duty to recollect our sins and renew our repentance on account of them. So far are men from having any righteousness, of which to boast, that they have committed many trespasses, of which they have reason to be ashamed. The Israelites soon turned out of the right way; and brought on themselves God's indignation. They offended most grievously in the matter of the connexion with the verses before and after them; but also, as they stand in the present Hebrew Text, directly contradict that very Text: and the two first of these verses have not, in our Hebrew Text, the least connexion with the two last of them. Our Hebrew Text (ver. 6) says—that Israel journeyed from Bene-jaakan to Mosera. Whereas, that very Text, in the complete Catalogue (Numb. xxxiii. 31.) says—they journeyed from Mosera to Bene-jaakan. Again: Aaron is here said to have died at Mosera; whereas he died on Mount Hor, the 7th station afterwards: see Num. xxxiii. 38. "Again at Taberah, and at Massah, and at 22 Kibroth-hattaavah, ye provoked Jehovah to wrath. Likewise when Jehovah sent you from 23 Kadesh-barnea, saying, 'Go up and possess the land which I give to you;' then ye rebelled against the command of Jehovah your God, and ye believed him not, nor hearkened to his voice. Ye have been rebellious 24 against Jehovah from the day that I knew you.

"Yet, now O Israel, what doth Jehovah thy 12 God require of thee, but to fear Jehovah thy God, to walk in all his ways, and to love him; and to serve Jehovah thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul; And to 13 keep the commandments of Jehovah 'thy God", and his statutes, which I command thee this day for thy good? Behold, the heavens, yea 14 the heaven of heavens belong to Jehovah thy God, the earth also, with all that is therein; Yet Jehovah regarded thy fathers with 15 such love, that he chose their seed after them; even you above all people, as is seen this day. Circumcise, therefore, the foreskin of thine 16 heart, and be no more stiffnecked. For Je- 17 hovah thy God is God of gods, and Lord of lords; a great God, a mighty, and a ter-

golden calf. Let us never then imagine that sinful creatures can deserve any thing but punishment; and instead of founding a claim to the divine regard on our own righteousness, let us plead his mercy and confide in the riches of his grace. This is the only way in which sinners can obtain pardon, and finally enter into the heavenly Canaan, their future blessed inheritance.

says—Moseroth to Bene-jaakan—thence to Horagidgad—and thence to Jotbathah. But, if the marches could possibly be true, as they now stand in these two verses; yet, what connexion can there be, between Jotbath and the separation of the tribe of Levi? Kennicott. Most Critics agree in this opinion; and it is probable that the verses were early introduced by some scribe through mistake. The Sam. Copy gives us a correct account of the marches in the 6 and 7 verses, as they are found in Numb. xxxiii. 31; but still there is no connexion. This speech, without these four verses, is a regularly connected admonition from Moses, to this purpose—that his brethren were for ever to consider themselves as indebted to 18 rible, who regardeth not persons, nor taketh bribes: Who doeth justice to the fatherless

and to the widow; and loveth the stranger, 19 so as to give him food and raiment. Love thou, therefore, the stranger; for thou wast a 20 stranger in the land of Egypt. Thou shalt fear Jehovah thy God; him only shalt thou serve, and to him shalt thou cleave, and 21 swear by his name. He is the object of thy praise; and he is thy God, who hath done for thee those great and terrible things, which 22 thine eyes have seen. Thy fathers were only seventy persons when they went down to Egypt; and now Jehovah thy God hath made thee as the stars of heaven for multitude.

1 "YE shall, therefore, fear Jehovah your God, and keep his charge, and his statutes, and 2 his judgments, continually. For ye, this day know, (for I speak not to your children who have not known, and who have not seen) the chastisement of Jehovah your God; his greatness, his mighty hand, and his out-stretch-3 ed arm; And his miracles, and his acts, which he did, in the midst of Egypt, to Pharaoh, the king of Egypt, and to all his land; 4 And what he did to the host of Egypt; to their horses, and to their chariots; how he made the water of the Red sea to overflow them as they pursued after you; and how Jehovah 5 destroyed them for ever; And what he did to you in the wilderness, until ye came to this 6 place; And what he did to Dathan and Abiram, the sons of Eliab, the son of Reuben;
how the earth opened her mouth, and swallowed them up, and every man who had joined Korah", and their households, and their tents, and all the substance which they possessed in the midst of Israel. Your eyes then 7 having seen all the great deeds which Jehovah did, Ye shall, therefore, keep all the 8 commandments which I command you this day, that ye may be strong, and enter and possess the land which ye are going to take for a possession. And that ye may prolong 9 your days on the land, which Jehovah swore to your fathers that he would give to them and to their seed; a land that floweth with milk and honey.

"For the land which ye are going to possess", 10
is not as the land of Egypt, whence ye came, where ye sowed seed, and watered with your foot, as a garden of herbs; But the land which 11
ye go to possess, is a land of hills and valleys, and is watered with rain from the heavens; A land which Jehovah your God careth 12 for; the eyes of Jehovah your God are always upon it, from the beginning of the year unto the end of the year.

"And if ye will hearken diligently to the 13 commandments which I this day command you so as to love Jehovah your God, and to serve him with all your heart and with all your soul, 'He' will give you the rain of 14
your land in its due season; the autumn-rain and the spring-rain, that ye may gather in your corn, and your wine and your oil. And 15

6. And every man, &c. The clause now found in the Sam. ought doubtless to be admitted as a genuine part of the text. For, as Houbigant observes, it is scarcely probable that Moses should mention Dathan and Abiram, and omit Korah, who was leader of the rebellion. Korah himself and his Levites were consumed by fire. See Numb. xxvi. 10.

10. With your foot. Pilkington conjectures that (רַגְלְךָ) foot is used metaphorically to denote labour. See Gen. xxx. 30; Isa. xxxii, and lviii.
13. He therefore conceives the import of the phrase is, which thou water-est with great labour. I have no doubt but this is the sense, but the ingenious comment of Grotius, since confirmed by Niebuhr, explains the reason why רַגְלְךָ denotes labour. Moses alluded to a machine for drawing up water, which was worked by the foot. Such a one, Grotius long ago observed, that Philo, who lived in Egypt, has described as used by the peasants of that country in his time.

14, 15. He will give. It is not probable, Moses would say, 'I will give you rain,' and 'I will send you grass.' The versions retain the genu-

17 gods, and worship them; Lest the anger of Jehovah be kindled against you, and he shut up the heavens, that there be no rain, and that the land yield not its fruit; and ye quickly perish from off the good land which Jehovah had given to you.
18 "Therefore shall ye lay up these my words in your heart, and in your soul, and bind them for a token upon your hand; and let 19 them be as frontlets between your eyes. And ye shall teach them your children, speaking of them when "ye sit" in your houses, and when ye walk by the way; when ye lie down 20 and when ye rise up. And ye shall inscribe them upon the door-posts of your houses, and 21 upon your city-gates: That your days, and the days of your children may be multiplied, on the land which Jehovah swore to your fathers that he would give them; as the days of the heavens over the earth.
22 "For, if ye diligently keep all these commandments which I command you, so as to do them; to love Jehovah your God, to walk in 23 all his ways, and to cleave to him; Then will Jehovah drive out all these nations from before you; and ye shall dispossess nations greater 24 and mightier than yourselves. Every place on which the soles of your feet may tread shall be yours: from the wilderness to Lebanon,

from the "great" river, the river Euphrates,
even to the western sea shall your boundary
be. There shall no man be able to stand be- 25 fore you; for Jehovah your God shall put the fear of you and the dread of you upon every land on which ye may tread; as he hath promised to you.
"Behold, I set before you this day a blessing 26
and a curse; A blessing, if ye obey the com- 27 mandments of Jehovah your God, which I this day command you; And a curse, if ye will 28 not obey the commandments of Jehovah your God, but turn aside out of the way which I this day command you, to go after other gods, which ye have not known. And it shall be, 29
when Jehovah your God hath brought you into the land which ye are going to possess, that ye shall put the blessing on mount Geri-zim, and the curse upon mount Ebal. (Are 30 they not on the other side of the Jordan, toward the setting sun, in the land of the Cana-

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTERS X & XI. 1. We hence learn both the justice and mercy of God; his justice in punishing the people for their idolatry, and his mercy in restoring the tables of the Law.
His character is, 'that he is a just God and a Saviour.' This should teach us to fear him, and never dare to provoke him to anger by our crimes, lest his indignation burst forth against us, as it did against Korah and his company. To interfere with his wise appointment, and to intrude into office uncalled, is high treason against the majesty of God, and will be punished capitally.

2. We are here taught our duty to God, both in the dispositions and affections of our souls, and in the actions of our lives. We must adore his majesty, acknowledge his authority, stand in awe of his power, and in dread of his wrath. We must love him, be well pleased that he is, desire that he may be ours, and delight in the contemplation of him, and in communion with him: Fear him as a great God, and our Lord; love him as a good God, and our Father and Benefactor. Having given up ourselves to his service, we must make his revealed will our rule in every thing, perform all he prescribes, forbear all he forbids, firmly believing, that all the statutes he commands us are for our good.

3. Moses concludes his address with setting before the people the blessing and the curse. Submission and obedience will secure the former; and disobedience will incur the latter. How dreadful is it to lie under the curse of God! This will convert every creature into an instrument of punishment; and will penetrate like oil into the bones.
Earth will be armed against us, when heaven frowns. The curse on disobedience will destroy us for ever. Let us then aim in all things at the glory of God; honour him that he may honour us. His blessing only maketh rich; conveys whatever is needful for our happiness.
They whom he blesseth are blessed; and they whom he curseth are cursed. His curse like his blessing will be found effective; as the one brings all good, so the other all misery.

That the tithes and firstlings here mentioned are not every tithe and firstling, nor a secondary sort of firstlings and tithes: but the tithe of the tithes, and the choice, or first of the firstlings. I draw this inference from Exod. xxiii. 18, where the Israelites are desired to bring to the house of God, not the firstlings themselves, but the prime of the firstlings. To this it may be objected, that in chap. xv. 19, every firstling, (כל דבביר,) is to be eaten before the Lord, at the place which he shall choose; but we must suppose that the word כל, every, is here to be restricted, to every one of the prime or firstlings; as above explained.

15. Eat the flesh, &c. The text is here brief, but sufficiently intelligible. The words I have put in Italic are evidently understood. The antelope and the deer were not to be offered in sacrifice; but were clean animals, and commonly used for food.

19. As long as thou livest on thy land. So Bate after the Sept. I think it may be inferred, that the Jews, in their state of exile, are not tied down

 19 all thou undertakest. Take heed to thyself that thou neglect not the Levite as long as thou livest on thy land.

20 "When Jehovah thy God shall have enlarged thy boundary, as he hath promised thee, and thou shalt say, 'I will eat flesh,' because thou longest to eat flesh; thou mayest eat flesh,

 24 Thou shalt not eat of it; thou shalt like water

 26 the sight of Jehovah. Yet what things thou hast hallowed, and thy votive-offerings, thou shalt take, and go to the place which Jehovah

Thou shalt not 31 do so to Jehovah thy God; for every abomination which Jehovah hateth, have they done to their gods; for even their sons and their daughters they have burnt in the fire to their gods. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XII. 1. It is not only our duty to worship God, but to do it at the place he chooseth. Had the Jews been suffered to offer sacrifices in any place, soon indeed would they have been corrupted. They must bring their sacrifices to his altar, before the ark. The ark was the token of God's presence, and where that was put, there God put his name, and that was his habitation; it contained the tables of the law, for none must expect to receive favours from God's hand, but those that are willing to receive the law from his mouth. Now under the gospel we have no temple that sanctifies the gold, no altar that sanctifies the gift, but Christ only; and as to the places of worship, the prophets foretold, that in every place the spiritual incense should be offered. And our Saviour hath declared, that those are accepted as true worshippers, who worship God in sin-

to the observation of this precept.

cerity and truth, without regard either to this mountain, or Jerusalem, John iv. 21.

2. Moses teaches us to regard blood as sacred to God; it must not be eaten; for it is the life of the creature, and by this atonement for sin was made. We may partake of the flesh of animals, when we desire it; but let us take heed, that our table do not become a trap and a snare. What can more degrade a man, than to make a god of his belly? We should use the comforts of life in moderation; 'according to the blessing which God hath given us.' To waste his bounty by intemperance, is no small offence. Whether we eat or drink, let us do it to God's glory; and if we have abundance let us cheerfully distribute of it to him that needeth; and by so doing the blessing of such will come upon us.

And nought of the cursed thing shall 17 cleave to thine hands; that Jehovah may turn from the fierceness of his anger, and show thee mercy, and have compassion upon thee, and multiply thee, as he hath sworn to thy fathers; When thou shalt hearken to the 18 voice of Jehovah thy God, so as to keep all his commandments which I this day command thee, by doing what is right in the eyes of Jehovah thy God."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIII. 1. We are here taught, that such is the evidence of revealed truth, and such the miracles by which it was confirmed, that every Israelite, who turned to idols, or who enticed others, was subjected to death. God hath given the most striking proofs of his being and perfections; and to forsake him, must argue a blinded mind, as well as a depraved heart. Let us then look permitted such events, as seemed to confirm the predictions of such pretenders.

upon those as our greatest enemies, who would lead us to break God's commands, or to withdraw our feet from his services; and learn to reject their proposals with disdain and resentment, though they should be our most intimate friends, or nearest relations. In a word; this chapter speaks to every one the sentiment of Solomon, "My son, if sinners entice thee, consent thou not."

9. Thou shalt surely kill. The Greek version most probably read, 'thou shalt surely bear witness against him. It was not the province of the denouncer to kill the guilty person: the sentence of the judge was to be obtained for that purpose.

B. C. 1452. What may, or may not be eaten; tithes of various kinds.

1 "YE are the children of Jehovah your God; ye shall not cut yourselves, nor make bald
2 your foreheads, for the dead. For ye are a holy people to Jehovah your God, and Jehovah "your God" hath chosen you out of all the nations that are upon the earth, to be a peculiar people to himself.
3 "Ye shall not eat any thing abominable.
4 These are the beasts of which ye may eat: the 5 ox, the sheep, and the he-goat; The deer and the antelope, and the goat-deer, and the wild-goat, and the pygarg, and the wild ox, and
6 the chamois; And every other beast whose hoof is divided into two parts, and which cheweth the cud among the beasts, ye may 7 eat. Yet of those that chew the cud, or of those who have a divided cloven hoof, these ye shall not eat: the camel, and the hare, and the jerboa: for they chew the cud, but have not a cloven hoof; therefore they shall 8 be to you unclean. So the swine, though he hath a divided hoof, yet as he cheweth not the cud, shall be to you unclean. Ye shall not eat of their flesh, nor touch their dead carcasses.
9 "These, of all the water-animals ye may eat: all that have fins and scales shall ye eat:
10 But whatsoever hath not fins and scales ye may not eat; it shall be to you unclean.
11 "Of all clean birds ye may eat; But these 12 are they of which ye shall not eat: the eagle, and the vulture, and the ospray, And the falcon, and the kite, and the glade with its kind;
13 And the raven with its kind; And the ostrich, and the night-owl, and the horn-owl,

15 And the pelican, and the king-fisher, And the stork; and the heron with its kind, and the lapwing, and the bat; And every flying- 19 creature that creepeth shall be to you unclean: they shall not be eaten. But of all clean 20 fowls ye may eat.

"Thou shalt not eat of any thing that dieth 21 of itself: thou shalt give it to the stranger who is in thy gates, that he may eat it; or thou mayest sell it to a stranger: but thou art a holy people to Jehovah thy God. Thou shalt not dress a kid in its mother's milk. Thou shalt truly tithe all the increase of thy 22 seed, which the field bringeth forth, year by year. And the tithe of thy corn, of thy wine, 23 and of thine oil, and the firstlings of thy herds and of thy flocks, thou shalt eat before Jehovah thy God, in the place which he shall choose for his own abode; that thou mayest learn to fear Jehovah thy God continually. But if the place which Jehovah thy God shall 24 choose, that there he may dwell, be far from thee, that from the length of the way thou art not able to carry thy tithe, (when Jehovah thy God hath blessed thee.) Then thou 25 shalt turn it into money; and shalt take the money in thine hand, and go to the place which Jehovah thy God hath chosen: And 26 thou shalt give money for whatsoever thou desirest, for oxen, or for sheep, or for wine, or for strong drink, or for whatsoever else thou desirest: and thou shalt eat there before Jehovah thy God, and thou shalt rejoice; thou and thine household, And the Levite who 27 is within thy gates; thou shalt not neglect him; because he hath no part nor inheritance with thee.

- 2 make a release. And this is the manner of the release: Every creditor that lendeth ought to his neighbour shall give him a release; he shall not exact it of his neighbour, who is his brother, when Jehovah's release-year is

- 6 command thee. For Jehovah thy God will bless thee, as he promised to thee: and thou shalt lend to many nations, but thou shalt not borrow; and thou shalt reign over many nations, but they shall not reign over thee.
- 7 If there be among you a poor man, one of thy brethren within any of thy gates, in thy land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee, thou shalt not harden thine heart nor shut thine
- 8 hand from thy poor brother: But thou shalt open thine hand liberally to him, and shalt surely lend him what he wanteth, sufficient for his need. Beware of thinking in thy wicked heart, and of saying, 'The seventh year, the year of release is at hand;' and thine eye be evil against thy poor brother, and thou givest him nought; and he cry to Jehovah against thee, and sin be laid to thy charge. Thou shalt surely give to him, and thine heart shall not be grieved when thou givest to him: because for this thing Jehovah thy God shall bless thee in all thy works, and in whatsoever thou engagest. For the poor will never cease out of the land; therefore I command thee, saying, 'Thou shalt open thine hand liberally to thy poor and needy brother, in thy land.'

"And if thy brother or sister (a Hebrew man or a Hebrew woman,) have been sold to thee, and have served thee six years; then in the seventh year thou shalt let him or her go free from thee. And when thou sendest him out free from thee, thou shalt not let him go away empty-handed. Thou shalt furnish him liberally from thy flock, and from thy threshing-floor, and from thy winepress; according as Jehovah thy God hath blessed thee thou shalt give to him. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in the land of Egypt, until Jehovah thy God redeemed thee; therefore do I now command thee this thing. But it shall be, if he say to his master, 'I will not go out from thee;' because he loveth him and his household, having been treated kindly by him, Then thou shalt take an awl, and thrust it through his

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIV. 1. God teaches the animals to select their food, with unerring propriety, and does he take care of these only? He has given directions to men, what food is proper and what improper. Let us be thankful for that knowledge he has given us, and for that abundance, which he has appointed for our supply. If he forbids the use of any creature, it is because it would do us harm. He is liberal and hath given us all things richly to enjoy; and now under the gospel, every creature that is fit for food may be used, being sanctified by prayer.

2. We are here taught, that the ministers of religion should not be defrauded of their due. If they impart spiritual things they have a right to receive from their hearers, in return, carnal things. Notwithstanding the law provided a maintenance for the tribe of Levi, much was left to the conscience of the people; hence so many exhortations to remember the Levite. They who despise the ministers of religion, despise religion itself; and they who withhold from them their due, are said to rob God. If they watch for souls as those who must give an account, let every one respect their holy calling.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XV. 1. We learn from what we have read, that God requires us to cultivate a kind and liberal spirit. Provision was made for the poor, and those who by adverse circumstances were reduced, in the sabbatical institution; and the people are charged not to withhold a loan because this year was near. Covetousness and avarice can always find excuses; but let us remember, "that he that giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord, and he will repay." The liberal person deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand.

CHAP. XVI. 2. With other sacrifices. As a lamb was appointed for the paschal sacrifice, something must be here supplied to reconcile this passage with others. (See Ez. xii.) Delgado supplies, besides those from the flocks and the herds. To the same purpose Geddes, Dathe, and others. So the Arabic.

Thou shalt number to thyself seven weeks; 9 when thou beginnest to put the sickle to the corn, begin to number the seven weeks. And thou

2. We ought to be thankful for faithful servants, and not grudge them their hire. More especially if they have been reduced to poverty, we should feel for them; and when they leave us, should not let them go empty-handed. "Masters give unto your servants that which is just and equal; knowing that ye also have a master in heaven. And let servants render due obedience to their masters." Let us all remember that one is our master, even Christ; his service is not grievous. We have been the servants of sin; but now let us become the servants of righteousness, that we may enjoy eternal life.

this mean a solemn assembly? The Hebrew word means desertion from work' But in the supposition that they went home, on the morning after the paschal sacrifice, they might return on the seventh day to hold an assembly to the Lord.

10. Archbishop Secker very properly bids us efface the words in Italic in our common version of this verse: unto the Lord thy God. They are evidently a superfluous eke.

- shalt rejoice before Jehovah thy God; thou and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite who is within thy gates, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, who are among you, in the place which Jehovah thy God hath chosen for his own abode. And thou shalt remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt; and thou shalt observe and do these statutes.
- 13 "Thou shalt observe the feast of booths seven days, after thou shalt have gathered in thy corn and thy wine; And thou shalt rejoice at thy feast; thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite, and the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, who are within thy gates.
- 15 Seven days shalt thou keep a solemn feast to Jehovah thy God in the place which Jehovah thy God shall choose; for Jehovah thy God shall bless thee in all thine increase, and in all the works of thine hands, so that thou shalt surely rejoice.
- 16 "Three times in a year shall all thy males appear before Jehovah thy God in the place which he shall choose; on the feast of unleavened bread, and on the feast of weeks, and on the feast of booths: and they shall not appear before Jehovah empty: Every man shall give as he is able, according to the blessing which Jehovah thy God hath given to thee.

"Judges and officers shalt thou appoint in all thy gates, which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee, throughout thy tribes; and they shall judge with just judgment the people. Thou shalt not wrest judgment; thou shalt not respect persons, nor take a bribe; for a bribe will blind the eyes of the wise, and pervert the words of the righteous. That which is altogether just shalt thou follow, that thou mayest live, and inherit the land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee.

"Thou shalt not plant a grove of any sort of trees nigh to the altar, which thou shalt make to Jehovah thy God. Nor shalt thou set up for thyself statues, which Jehovah thy God hateth. Thou shalt not sacrifice to Jehovah thy God any steer, or sheep, in which there is a blemish, or any evil quality; for this is an abomination to Jehovah thy God."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVI. 1. We are here taught that divine ordinances ought to be religiously observed. Some of those enjoined to Israel were both commemorative and typical, as the pass-over. While this feast reminded them of the great deliverance wrought for their fathers; it contained a striking representation of our spiritual deliverance, and the method in which it should be effected. The lamb must be slain, the blood sprinkled, the flesh of the lamb eaten. So was our Lord led as a lamb to the slaughter; his blood was shed, and by faith we partake of the benefits of his sacrifice. As the Jews kept the feast of the pass-over, let us keep the Christian feast in the exercise of renewed repentance, faith, and love. Let us keep it, not with the old leaven, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth.

2. We are also taught to express our gratitude for the blessings of providence. It is our duty to pray for daily bread, and when it is given we should bless God for it. The feast of booths, was the harvest-feast; and this was to be a feast of joy. "Thou shalt rejoice in thy feast, thou, and thy son, and thy daughter, and thy man-servant, and thy maid-servant, and the Levite the stranger, and the fatherless, and the widow, who are within thy gates." Nothing can be more suitable to the feelings of a pious man, than to give thanks to God for whatever he enjoys. Such a character will regard it as a heinous sin to rob God of the praise due to him, by either negligence, on the one hand, or on the other, by taking praise to himself. He knows that it is God who hath blessed all his undertakings.

13. Feast of booths. Russel in his History of Aleppo, vol. ii. has given the following account of the manner in which the Jews of that city keep this feast. "The tabernacles are variously constructed, and disposed in different situations, according to the size and other conveniences of the house. They are sometimes placed upon small terraces in the front of the upper rooms; but most commonly in the court yards: sometimes on the flat top of houses. The ordinary method of building them, is by fastening to the corners of a wooden dikan four slender erect posts; which serve to support on all sides a reticulated work of green reeds; a small place only in the front being left for the entrance. This work on the outside is covered with fresh myrtle; and is hung on the inside with chintz or burdet hangings. The roof is thatched with reeds not stript of their leaves: and the best cushions and carpets are employed to dress the divan. These divans have the advantage of being easily moved; and two or more may be joined together. In some of the principal houses a permanent wooden kiosk, built upon a stone mustaby, in the middle of the court, is made to serve the purpose; which, being already latticed, is easily covered with reeds and myrtle branches. There is still another method used, in order to avoid the litter of withered leaves. This is by erecting a temporary booth, consisting of slight posts, papered over, and wreathed from top to bottom with flakes of cotton: hangings supply the place of walls; and the whole is roofed with mats."

19. Pervert the words of the just. When judges are corrupted, the words of just men, giving their testimony, are perverted by chicanery. The Jews say that the throne of Solomon had six steps, and that when he ascended the first, a crier proclaimed, 'Thou shalt not wrest judgment.'

CHAPTER XVII.

B. C. 1452. Idolators to be slain; the decision of difficult matters; the choice and duty of a king.

- 2 "If there be found with thee, in any of thy gates which Jehovah thy God may give to thee, man or woman, that hath wrought wickedness in the sight of Jehovah thy God, by transgressing his covenant, And hath gone and served other gods, and worshipped them; either the sun or moon, or any of the host of the heavens, which I have forbidden; And it be told thee, then thou shalt hearken, and inquire diligently, and, if it be true, that such an abomination hath been done in Israel: Thou shalt then bring forth that man or that woman, who hath committed such evil deed, to thy gates; and shalt stone that man and that woman with stones, till they die. On the testimony of two witnesses, or on the testimony of three witnesses, shall he that is guilty be surely put to death; but on the testimony of one witness he shall not be put to death. The hands of the witnesses shall be first upon him to put him to death; and afterward the hand of all the people. So shalt thou put away the evil from among you.
- 8 "If there arise a matter too hard for thee in judgment, between blood and blood, between plea and plea, and between stroke and stroke, being matters of controversy within thy gates; then shalt thou arise, and go up to the place which Jehovah thy God shall have chosen; And thou shalt come to the priests, the Levites, and to the judge that shall be in those days; and they shall inquire and show thee what is the proper judgment: And thou shalt do according to the sentence, which they shall show thee, from that place which Jehovah shall have chosen; and thou shalt observe to do according to all that they teach thee: According to the sentence of the law which they shall teach thee, and according to the judgment which they shall report to thee, shalt thou do: thou shalt not decline from the sentence which they shall show thee, to the right hand, or to the left. And the man that will do presumptuously, and will not hearken to the priest that standeth to minister there before Jehovah thy God, or to the judge, even that man shall die; that thou mayest put away the evil from Israel: For all the people will hear, and fear, and do no more presumptuously.

"When thou art come to the land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee, and shalt possess it, and shalt dwell therein, and shalt say, 'I will set a king over me, like all the nations that are around me;' Thou shalt assuredly set him king over thee, whom Jehovah thy God shall choose. One from among thy brethren shalt thou set king over thee; a stranger who is not thy brother, thou shalt not set over thee. But he shall not multiply horses to himself, lest he cause the people to return to Egypt, for the sake of multiplying horses: for Jehovah hath said to you, 'Ye shall return no more that way.' Nor shall he multiply wives to himself, that his heart turn not away: nor shall he greatly multiply to himself silver and gold. And it shall be, when he sitteth on the throne of his kingdom, that he shall write himself a copy of this law in a book out of that which is before the priests the Levites: And it shall be with him, and he shall read it all the days of his life: that he may learn to fear Jehovah his 14, 15. It is clear that Moses did not appoint a Monarchical Government, but regarded Jehovah as the king of Israel; but he so framed their political constitution, that if, in future they should wish to have a king, they might; choosing one of their own nation. This was wise and patriotic.

16. Multiply to himself horses. In a mountainous country like Judea, cavalry could be of no essential service, and Moses wisely forbids the use

God, so as to keep all the words of this law, 20 and to do these statutes: That his heart may not be lifted up above his brethren; and that he may not turn aside from the commandment to the right hand, or to the left; to the end that he may prolong his days in his kingdom; he, and his children, in the midst of Israel."

CHAPTER XVIII.

B. C. 1452. Jehovah is the priests and Levites' inheritance; a prophet like to Moses promised.

- 1 THE priests the Levites, the whole of the tribe of Levi, shall have no part or inheritance with other Israelites: the burnt-offerings of Jehovah, which are his inheritance,
- 2 they shall eat. Therefore shall they have no inheritance among their brethren: Jehovah is their inheritance, as he hath said to them.
- 3 "And this shall be the priest's due from the people, from those who offer a sacrifice, whether it be ox or sheep; they shall give to the priest the shoulder, and the two cheeks,
- 4 and the maw. The first fruit also of thy corn, of thy wine, and of thine oil, and the first fleece of thy sheep, shalt thou give to him.

CHAP. XVIII.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVII. 1. We are again admonished to adhere to Jehovah only, by the awful punishment inflicted on the idolater. He is the only God, and therefore the only proper object of worship; and as he will not give his glory to another, so he will not suffer us to give it. His command to every man is, "thou shalt fear Jehovah thy God, him only shalt thou serve, and to him thou shalt cleave." In the infliction of punishment for this great sin, care must be taken to have clear and sufficient evidence. In matters affecting life, the law required the testimony of two witnesses. While Jehovah would have sin punished, he would not suffer one to bear false against his

of it; but both this and the following precepts, the kings of Israel little regarded.

CHAP. XVIII. 3. It is disputed whether this precept be the same as that of Lev. vii. 34, or a distinct one. Delgado observes, "that scripture explains in one place what is omitted in another: so that the two cheeks and the maw, mentioned here, may be added in Levit. vii. 34. and the breast mentioned there may be understood here." On the other hand, some contend that this precept has nothing to do with sacrifices offered

"And if a Levite come from any of thy gates, 6 out of all Israel, where he had sojourned; and with all the desire of his soul come to the place which Jehovah shall have chosen, Then he shall minister in the name of Jehovah his God, as all his brethren the Levites do, who stand there before Jehovah. They 8 shall have like portions to eat, beside what ariseth from the sale of his patrimony.

"When thou art come into the land which 9 Jehovah thy God giveth to thee, thou shalt not learn to do after the abominations of those nations. Let there not be found one among 10 you that devoteth by fire his son or his daughter to Moloch; or that useth divination, or an observer of the clouds, or an enchanter, or a sorcerer, Or a charmer, or a pythonist, 11 or a necromancer. For all that do these 12 things are an abomination to Jehovah; and because of these abominations, Jehovah thy God driveth them out from before thee. Thou 13 shalt be perfect with Jehovah thy God; For 14 these nations whom thou shalt dispossess, hearkened unto the observers of the clouds, and to diviners; but Jehovah thy God, suffereth thee not to do so.

"Jehovah thy God will raise up to thee a 15 Prophet, from the midst of thee, one of thy own brethren, like to me; to him thou shalt neighbour, and thus wickedly cause the death of the innocent.

2. We are taught, that in matters of controversy, there was a wise appointment for a final determination. For nothing is more injurious to personal peace, or to the public welfare than perpetual litigation. O let us cultivate peace in the spirit of peace; and especially seek peace with God through our Lord and Saviour. Hath he not a ground of controversy with us for our sins? Yet how willing is he to be reconciled. "Come let us reason together, saith Jehovah, though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool."

to Jehovah, but to beasts slaughtered for private use, of which the Levites had a right to the shoulder, the cheeks and the maw. If we adopt this latter opinion, the words 'from those who offer a sacrifice,' must be rendered, 'from those who slaughter animals.' Rosenmüller says, that mat signifies here cattle, as Gen. xxxi. 54.

And Jehovah said to me, 'What they have spoken is right.' I will raise them up a Prophet from among their brethren, like to thee, and will put my words in his mouth and he shall speak to them all that I shall command him. And it shall come to pass, that whosoever will not hearken to my words, which he shall speak in my name, I will require it of him. But the prophet who shall presume to speak a word in my name, which I have not commanded him to speak, or who shall speak in the name of other gods, even that prophet shall die. And if ye say in your hearts, 'How shall we know the word which Jehovah hath not spoken?' When a prophet speaketh in the name of Jehovah, if the thing follow not, nor come to pass, that is the thing which Jehovah hath not spoken, but the prophet hath spoken it presumptuously: ye shall not be afraid of him."

CHAPTER XIX.

B. C. 1452 Cities of refuge for the man-slayer; two witnesses necessary to establish a matter.

"WHEN Jehovah thy God hath cut off the 1 nations, whose land Jehovah thy God giveth to thee; and thou hast dispossessed them, and dwellest in their cities, and in their houses; Thou shalt set apart for thyself three cities, in 2 the midst of thy land, which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee for a possession. Thou shalt 3 divide the boundaries of thy land, which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee to inherit, into three parts, and make a road so that every man-slayer may flee thither.

"And this is the case of the man-slayer, 4 who shall flee thither, that he may live: Who-so killeth his neighbour ignorantly, whom he hated not in time past; As when a man go- 5 eth into the wood with his neighbour to hew wood, and his hand fetcheth a stroke with the ax to cut down the tree, and the head slip- peth from the helve, and lighteth upon his neighbour, so that he die; he shall flee to one of those cities, that he may live: Lest the 6

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XVIII. 1. We here learn that suitable provision was made for those, that ministered at the altar. The people were not to withhold what God had given; and as pious Henry observes, "the priests were not to entangle themselves with the affairs of this life, nor enrich themselves with the wealth of this world; they have better things to mind. They shall have no part nor inheritance with Israel; that is, no share either in the spoils taken in war, or in the land that was to be divided by lot, ver. 1. Their warfare and husbandry are both spiritual, and enough to fill their hands both with work and profit, and to content them. "The Lord is their inheritance."

2: Let us learn to despise and avoid all kinds of superstition. For what can argue greater presumption on the one hand, than to pretend to pry into futurity, or greater folly on the other, to place any reliance on such pretensions? Yet among those called Christians, there are many who observe times and seasons, call some days lucky, others unlucky; consult fortune-tellers, to know what shall happen to them; and have recourse to spells or charms for the cure of diseases, and the discovery of things lost. Such conduct is not less disgraceful to ourselves, than it is sinful in the sight of God. Let us then have no fellowship with such unfruitful works of darkness.

3. Let us be thankful that God has fulfilled his blessed word; and raised up Jesus a Prophet, mighty both in word and deed; that he has declared the whole counsel of God; all that the Father commanded, he made known unto the world. He introduced a new and glorious dispensation, a system of the most excellent laws, confirmed by various miracles, by the prophecy of events which have been accomplished; and especially by his own resurrection. "The law was given by Moses, but grace and truth came by Jesus Christ." He is God's beloved Son, his authorised messenger, let us, therefore, hear him. It is at our peril if we reject him; for, "if he that despised Moses' law died without mercy, of how much sorer punishment shall he be thought worthy, who tramples on the blood of the Son of God? He that believeth on the Son hath life; but he that believeth not shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him." He that will not hearken to this prophet must be cut off from his people.

disputed whether this primarily respects the person of our Saviour, or a succession of prophets in the Jewish Church. Dathe for the latter opinion argues from the connexion, 'that this prophet is opposed to the soothsayers, in the preceding verses; and that there would be no force in the reasoning of Moses, unless the prophet here mentioned was immediately to succeed him; and from verses 20-22, in which they are instructed how they were to distinguish between false prophets and true, he infers the whole must be applied; not to one prophet, but to a succession. It may be replied, that the Jews had no need to consult wizards and others, as they had God's written word, and as they could always consult him by Urim and Thummim; and that the 20-22 verses, do evidently imply, that he would send them prophets from time to time, as the interpreters of his.

avenger of blood pursue the man-slayer, while his heart is hot; and because the way is long overtake him, and slay him; although he be not worthy of death, because he hated him not in time past. Therefore I command thee, saying: Thou shalt set apart for thyself, three cities. And when Jehovah thy God hath enlarged thy boundaries, as he hath sworn to thy fathers; and hath given to thee all the land which he promised to thy fathers that he would give; If thou wilt keep all these commandments so as to do them, which I this day command thee; to love Jehovah thy God, and to walk ever in his ways; thou shalt then appoint, besides these three cities, three cities more, That innocent blood may not be shed in thy land, which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee for an inheritance; and that blood may not be upon thee.

11 "But if any man hate his neighbour, and lie in wait for him, and rise up against him, and smite him mortally so that he die; and flee into one of these cities; Then the elders of his city shall send and fetch him thence, and deliver him into the hand of the avenger of blood, that he may die. Thine eye shall not pity him, but thou shalt put the guilt of innocent blood from Israel, that it may be well with thee.

14 "Thou shalt not remove thy neighbour's landmark, which thy forefathers have set in thine inheritance, which thou shalt inherit in the land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee for a possession.

"One witness shall not be sufficient against a man for any iniquity, or for any sin; whatever sin he may have committed, on the testimony of two witnesses, or on the testimony of three witnesses, shall the matter be established.

"If a false witness rise up against any man, to testify against him some wrong; Then both the men, between whom the controversy is, shall stand in the presence of Jehovah, before the priests and the judges, who shall be in those days; And the judges shall make diligent inquisition; and behold, if the witness be a false witness, and hath testified falsely against his brother; Then shall ye do to him, as he thought to have done to his brother; that ye may put away the evil from among you: For the rest will hear, and fear; and will henceforth commit no more any such evil among you. And thine eye shall not pity; but life shall go for life, eye for eye, tooth for tooth, hand for hand, foot for foot."

B. C. 1452. The Priests and Officers charge to the people when going to battle; on besieging Cities.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XIX. 1. Moses had already set apart three cities beyond the Jordan, and now he appoints three within the land of Canaan; and every facility is afforded to the man-slayer, in his flight thither. These Cities were to be at equal distances, as near as could be, from other places, so that every corner of the land might have one within reach. Thus Christ is not a refuge at a distance, which we must ascend to heaven, or go down to the deep for, but the word is nigh us, and Christ is the word, Rom. x. 8.

2. The precepts repeated in this chapter show the depravity of men. That against removing land-marks is a moral precept, and forbids the invading of any man's right, and taking to ourselves that which is not our own, by any fraudulent arts or practices. It forbids breaking in upon the settled order and constitution of civil government, and the altering of ancient usages without just cause. The precept against a false witness and the punishment annexed, are necessary to public safety. For if one witness was allowed in capital offences, no one could be secure; and the man void of conscience, would swear away the life of his pious neighbour. Civil law is a hedge for which every honest man should be thankful; and which it is the duty of all carefully to observe, and constantly to support.

will. But there is something so marked in reference to one prophet, that he is to be like to Moses, a law-giver, a mediator, one who should introduce a new dispensation, as Moses had done; one who should equal him in power and miracles, and disobedience to whom should be accounted capital;—these things seem to limit this to the person of our Saviour. See for the further illustration, Bishop Newton on the prophecies.

God, who brought you out of the land of Egypt. And it shall be when ye are approaching to the battle, that the priest shall draw near to the people, And shall say to them, "Hear, O Israel! Ye are this day approaching to the battle against your enemies; be not faint-hearted, nor be afraid; tremble not, nor be terrified because of them; For Jehovah your God himself goeth with you, to fight for you against your enemies, and to save you.

"And the officers shall speak to the people, saying, 'What man is there that hath built a new house, and hath not dedicated it? let him depart and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man dedicate it.

And what man is there that hath planted a vineyard, and hath not yet eaten of its produce? let him depart and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man eat of it. And what man is there that hath betrothed a wife, and hath not taken her? let him depart and return to his house, lest he die in the battle, and another man take her.' And the officers shall speak further to the people, and shall say, 'What man is there that is afraid and faint-hearted? let him depart and return to his house, lest his brethren become faint-hearted, like him.' And when the officers have finished speaking to the people, captains of the hosts shall be appointed to lead on the people.

"When thou approachest a city to fight against it, then proclaim to it peace: Then if it return an answer of peace, and open to thee its gates, it shall be, that all the people who are found in it shall be tributary to thee, and shall serve thee. But if it will make no peace with thee, but engage in war against thee, then thou shalt besiege it: And when Jehovah thy God hath delivered it into thine hands, thou shalt smite every male in it with the edge of the sword; But the women, and the little ones, and the cattle, and whatever else is in the city, its whole spoil, thou shalt take to thyself; and thou shalt eat the spoil of thine enemies, which Jehovah thy God hath given to thee. Thus shalt thou do to all the cities which are afar off from thee; which are not of the cities of those nations, whose land Jehovah thy God giveth to thee for an inheritance". But of the cities of those people which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee for an inheritance, thou shalt save alive nothing that breatheth; But shalt utterly destroy them; namely, the Canaanites, the Amorites, the Hethites, and the Perizzites, the Hivites, and the Jebusites; as Jehovah thy God hath commanded thee; Lest they teach thee to do after all their abominations, which they have done to their gods; and thus thou shouldst do against Jehovah thy God.

"When thou shalt besiege a city a long time, making war against it to take it, thou shalt not by the force of the ax destroy its fruit-trees: for of them thou mayest eat, and thou shalt not cut them down to employ them in the siege; for the fruit-trees of the field are for the support of man. Only the trees which thou knowest are not trees producing food, shalt thou destroy and cut down; and with them con-

The fruits of the tree, or of other trees, were not gathered for the first three years—the fruit of the fourth year was holy, and became the portion of the Levites—the fifth belonged to him who had planted it. It then became common and profane. See Levit. xix. 24, &c.

15. There is a striking distinction made between the cities without the boundaries of the promised land, and those within it. The former were only to be made tributaries, but the latter to be destroyed.—The clause now found in the Sept. and Vulg. Geddes considers genuine, and adopts it as part of the text.

And the blood shall be forgiven them. So 9 shalt thou put away the guilt of innocent blood from thee, when thou shalt thus do what is right in the sight of Jehovah.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XX. 1. We are taught in this chapter, that the Israelites would not only have to conquer the Canaanites, but that after their settlement, war would arise and they would have to go forth against their enemies. This is an evil, to which every nation has been subject; and from the passions and sinfulness of human nature, it is to be feared it will continue to be the scourge of mankind. It must always begin in injustice on one side; and, from the very nature of it, it often tends to cherish some of the worst passions. Moses supposes that there is a just cause for war, and he then orders the priests to exhort the people to rely on God for safety and victory. Those who are permitted to retire from the host, could not but be sensible of the kindness of their supreme law-giver. Let us engage in a nobler warfare, and encourage ourselves in the Lord our God; for he will fight for us, against all our enemies.

2. When God ordered the Israelites to besiege Cities, they were first to offer terms of peace; and if not accepted, then only to push on the siege. Let this remind us of God's conduct towards men. Though he might justly destroy them, he waits to be gracious, and first sends messages of peace. "Turn ye, turn ye; for why will you die," is his compassionate language to sinners, "I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth." He assures us of his readiness to forgive our sins, and accept our submission. "Let the wicked forsake his wicked way, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to Jehovah our God, for he will abundantly pardon." But if any go on in their trespasses at length he will whet his sword, and lay hold on vengeance, and then, O sinner, a great ransom cannot deliver thee.

valley or channel, and the water which flows in it; and pran, denotes strong, but never rough. In Arabic it is applied in the sense I have given it here. An ever-flowing torrent, is opposed to such, as in summer were dried up, and whose banks, and perhaps their beds might be ploughed and sown.

7. Nor did our eyes, &c. The design of this law is to guard human life; for Jehovah will require an account of blood that has been unjustly shed, and profligately wasted.

18 "If a man have a stubborn and rebellious son, who will not obey the voice of his father, or the voice of his mother, and who, when they have chastened him, will not hearken to them; Then shall his father and his mother lay hold on him, and bring him out to the elders of his own city, and to the gate of his own place; And they shall say to the elders of his city, 'This our son is stubborn and rebellious; he will not obey our voice; he is a profligate, and a drunkard.' And all the men of his city shall stone him with stones, until he die: so shalt thou put away evil from thee; that all Israel may hear, and fear.

22 "If a man have committed a sin worthy of death, and thou hang him on a tree; His body shall not remain all night upon the tree, but thou shalt surely bury him that day; that thy land be not defiled, which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee for an inheritance: for accursed of God is every one that hangeth on a tree.

23. *Sept. Vulg. Compare Gal. iii. 13.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXI. 1. Every precept and law given, argues the depravity and wickedness of men. What we have now read teaches us, that one man may rise up against another in the field and slay him, as Cain did his brother Abel; and that it may be done so secretly, that there may be no human witness of the deed. How horrible this sin is, the appointment of a solemn public expiation witnesseth; and though the murderer may sometimes escape the punishment due to his crime, in this life, God will at last be the blood-avenger. O let us guard against ungovernable passions; against envy and hatred, which often lead to the commission of deeds, 'which make heaven weep.'

2. In the order given respecting a captive woman, and the treatment of the first-born son of a wife the least beloved, we see both prudence and justice manifested. The soldier is not to abuse the

And if thy brother be not nigh to thee; or if thou know him not, then thou shalt bring it to thine own house, and it shall be with thee until thy brother seek after it; and thou shalt restore it to him. In like manner shalt thou do with his ass; and so shalt thou do with his raiment; and so shalt thou do with any lost thing of thy brother's, which he hath lost, and thou hast found: thou shalt not neglect it.

woman, whom providence has given to him. If he conceive an affection for her, he may marry her; but he must wait at least a month. This was doubtless designed to check the eagerness of passion; and to lead to that reflection, which a matter of such importance as marriage, required. It is good to weigh a thing well, and then act accordingly. We should never let affection prevail over judgment; much less lead us to act unjustly. Partiality to children has been a source of evil from the days of Jacob to the present time.

3. How heinous is the sin of disobedience to parents, when such a punishment as that we have read was to be inflicted! Doubtless parents would try every method in their power, and would endure long before they would resort to the magistrates, and say, "this our son is stubborn and rebellious; he will not obey our voice; he is profligate and a drunkard." Profligacy and drunkenness are in themselves

- 16 And the damsel's father shall say to the elders, 'I gave my daughter to this man to wife, and he hateth her; And, lo, he hath accused her in words, saying, 'I found not thy daughter a virgin;' and yet this is the proof of my daughter's virginity.' And they shall show the proof sins of an aggravated nature; but they are also the fruitful sources of many others. A man inflamed with wine is prepared for every deed of darkness. He is a curse to himself; and often a curse to those related to, or connected with him. By stoning such a one to death,

10. Harmer has proved, that the ass is sufficient, and is often used alone, to plough the lightland of Syria; and Is. xxxii. 20, supposes that this animal was then used for the purpose. The prohibition, can then only relate to the impropriety of joining two creatures of different species.

12. Make strings. These strings or ribbons were, I conceive, to tie the coverlet to the bed posts; which might be deemed the more necessary, as a whole family often sleep in one chamber, on different beds; and these only covered with a single rug. See Harmer's Observations.

13—21. It is presumed this law was consonant to physical causes; and that the proofs could be in that country, always produced, if necessary. Without such a supposition the law would be absurd, and the innoof her virginity to the elders of the city. And 18 the elders of that city shall take that man and chastise him; And they shall fine him in a hundred shekels of silver, and give them to the father of the damsel, because he hath brought up an evil name on a virgin of Israel. And she shall remain his wife; he may not put her away all his days. But if this thing 20 be true, and the proof of virginity be not found for the damsel; Then they shall bring out 21 the damsel to the door of her father's house, and the men of her own city shall stone her with stones until she die; because she hath done a profligate deed in Israel, by playing the harlot in her father's house: so shalt thou put away the evil from among you.

evil was to be put away, that all Israel might hear and fear. Let children learn from this to cultivate sober habits, and to honour their parents, which is the first commandment with promise. For it is impossible, do what we can, to repay their kindness.

cent subjected to a severe punishment. Something like this still obtains among the Arabs. Niebuhr found the same principles still in force among the Arabs in Yemen, where he travelled. He observes, that as the husband by presents, &c, pays the father of his wife, and may be said to purchase his daughter, under a certain description and character; so far as she differs from that character the husband is deceived and injured; and this deception justifies his returning his wife to her father, and re-demanding his presents. This, as may be supposed, must vex and dishonour the whole family of the woman so repudiated, and were it a frequent occurrence, must spread animosities and jealousies throughout not a family only, but a country.

26 But to the damsel thou shalt do nothing; there is in the damsel no sin worthy of death: for as when a man riseth against his neighbour, and murdereth him, even so is this matter:
27 For he found her in the field, and the betrothed damsel cried, and there was none to save her.

28 "If a man find a damsel, that is a virgin, who is not betrothed, and lay hold on her, and lie with her, and they be found; Then the man that lay with her shall give to the damsel's father fifty shekels of silver, and she shall become his wife; because he hath humbled her, he may not put her away all his days.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. We are again reminded of our duty to our neighbour. Before, this was commanded to be done to an enemy, Exod. xxiii. 4; and much more to one that is not an enemy. If we see stray cattle they must be brought back. This must be done in pity to the very cattle, which while they wandered, were exposed; and in civility and respect to the owner, nay, and in justice to him; for it was 'doing as we would be done by,' which is one of the fundamental laws of equity. To restore lost goods, or to help cattle in distress, is of the same nature; and equally necessary. If we have kind friends and neighbours, we must ourselves be kind.

CHAP. XXIII. 1. I have rendered equivalently. There are evidently two sorts of Eunuchs here specified—the one such as were deprived of the testicles only; the other such as were deprived of both testicles and penis. 'Not to enter into the congregation of the Lord,' must mean not to marry an Hebrew woman: for it would be uncharitable to debar any body from becoming a member of the congregation, if he be persuaded that theirs is the true religion: and that this phrase signifies an intermarriage, may be learned from Genesis, ch. xxiv. 16, which shows that intermarriage consolidates an alien with the nation. Others think that the meaning met thee not with bread and with water in the way, when thou camest out of Egypt; and because they hired against thee Balaam the son of Beor, from Pethor of Mesopotamia, to curse thee. Nevertheless Jehovah thy God would 5 not hearken to Balaam; but Jehovah thy God turned the curse into a blessing to thee, because Jehovah thy God loved thee. Thou 6 shalt never seek their peace nor their prosperity, all thy days.

"Thou shalt not abhor an Edomite; for he is 7 thy brother: thou shalt not abhor an Egyptian; because thou wast a sojourner in his land. The children that are begotten of them 8 may, in their third generation, enter into the congregation of Jehovah.

"When the host goeth forth against thine enemies, then keep thyself from every wicked thing. 9

"If there be any man among you, who is not 10 clean from what occurs to him by night, then shall he go out of the camp; he shall not return to the camp: 'Until he have bathed himself in water, and until the sun be set; afterward he shall come into the camp'". 11

2. The laws respecting chastity and marriage are of prime necessity both in a civil and religious point of view. The law protected the weaker sex, and made every reparation for violence, which could be made. It also severely marked their profligacy; and when they were criminal, they must suffer. Folly should not be wrought in Israel; among a people who had statutes so holy and just, and who had the strongest reasons to observe them; much less should sins which heathens practiced be found among Christians. Let both married and unmarried persons learn to regard the law of God, as the rule of their relative duty, and carefully observe it.

is, he shall not be naturalized, not admitted to all the rights of a Jewish citizen.

2. A bastard. Michaelis considers the word as denoting 'a stranger;' but the usual sense is preferable. It signifies a child of a strange, unknown father; a brothel-child.

3. An Ammonite or Moabite. From Nehem. xiii. 4, it is clear that the words (to the tenth generation) have been repeated from the preceding verse; and indeed the text itself shows their interpolation. For how could they be excluded for ever; if they might enter in the tenth generation.

to ease thyself abroad, with it thou shalt dig a hole, and turn back and cover thine ordure.

14 For as Jehovah thy God walketh in the midst of thy camp, to deliver thee, and to give up thine enemies before thee; therefore shall thy camp be holy; lest he see with thee what is offensive, and turn away from thee.

15 "Thou shalt not deliver up to his master, the servant who hath escaped from his master to thee: With thee shall he dwell, even in that place which he shall choose, or in any one of thy gates, which he preferreth: thou shalt not oppress him.

17 "There shall be no prostitute among the daughters of Israel; nor a sodomite among the sons of Israel. Thou shalt not bring the hire of a harlot, or the price of a dog, into the house of Jehovah thy God for any vow: for even both these are an abomination to Jehovah thy God. Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of any thing that is lent upon usury: 20 To a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but to thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury: that Jehovah thy God may bless thee in all that thou undertakest, in the land which thou art going to take for a possession.

21 "When thou shalt make a vow to Jehovah thy God, thou shalt not delay to perform it: for Jehovah thy God will surely require it of thee; and it would be sin in thee not to perform it: But to forbear to vow, shall not be accounted sin to thee. That which is gone out of thy lips thou shalt perform; according to the vow which thou hast made to Jehovah thy God, and what thou hast promised with thy own mouth, shalt thou do.

"When thou comest into thy neighbour's vineyard, then thou mayest eat grapes until thou art fully satisfied; but thou shalt not put any of them into thy basket. When thou goest into the standing corn of thy neighbour thou mayest pluck the ears with thine hand; but thou shalt not move a sickle to thy neighbour's standing corn."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIII. 1. We may learn from the precepts concerning eunuchs and the children of prostitutes, that God has exposed these persons to public disgrace, to deter men from the crimes implied. Some are made eunuchs by men, saith our Lord; and those who make them so, offend against the law of nature. God has made marriage honourable; and when it is entered into from proper motives, it will be found a state, adapted to secure, as well as to give, the purest pleasures; but eunuchism and prostitution are attended with miseries of every kind. How many unhappy victims of the latter vice are to be seen in all places! As we value our character, our health, our peace and our eternal salvation, let us avoid this detestable vice, and the temptations which lead to it.

2. Whatever is decent and becoming, we are taught to regard. God has given us reason and understanding, and expects that we should not act like the brute creation. They know no shame; but we should feel the dignity of our nature, and ever do what is proper. Purity and cleanliness, as they regard the body, are desirable; and how much more so as it respects the conscience? Let us then aim as much as possible to keep a conscience, void of offence, towards God and man. The solemn thought, that God is with us, about our beds, and about our paths, should be a constant motive to duty, and a restraint from vice. To him let us vow perpetual attachment, and faithfully perform what we have vowed; for it is better not to vow, than to vow and then neglect to perform.

serves that the Sam. has preserved the genuine lection. For as matrimonial converse is clearly implied, and as געלח does not in any place denote it, we must admit ובה אליה as necessary.—Some unpleasant defect. It is probable that either some very great bodily blemish, or some base immoral habit, was meant by the legislator. Delgado has well remarked, that 5 "When a man hath newly taken a wife, he shall not go out to war, nor shall he be charged with any business: but he shall be free at home, one year, that he may rejoice with his wife whom he hath taken.

6 "No man shall take, for a pledge, the nether or the upper millstone: for he taketh the means of life for a pledge.

7 "If a man be found stealing any of his brethren, of the children of Israel; and hath enslaved him, or sold him; then that thief shall die; and thou shalt put away the evil from thee.

8 "Take heed in the plague of leprosy, that thou observe diligently, and do according to all that the priests, the Levites shall teach thee": as I commanded them, so shalt thou take heed to do. Remember what Jehovah thy God did to Miriam, by the way, after thou hadst come out of Egypt.

10 "When thou lendest thy brother any thing, thou shalt not go into his house to fetch his pledge. Thou shalt wait without, and the man to whom thou hast lent any thing shall bring out to thee the pledge. And if the man be poor, thou shalt not sleep with his pledge in thy possession: Thou shalt surely return him the pledge when the sun goeth down, that he may sleep in his own raiment, and bless thee: and it shall be accounted to thee as an act of kindness, before Jehovah thy God. Thou shalt not oppress a hired servant 14 who is poor and needy, whether he be one of thine own brethren, or of the sojourners that may be in thy land, within thy gates: On each 15 day thou shalt give him his hire, nor shalt thou let the sun go down upon it: because he is poor, and anxiously expecteth it: that he may not cry against thee to Jehovah, and sin be imputed to thee. The fathers shall not be put to 16 death for the children; nor shall the children be put to death for the fathers: every man shall be put to death for his own sin.

"Thou shalt not pervert the judgment of the 17 stranger, nor of the fatherless; nor take the widow's raiment as a pledge: But thou shalt 18 remember that thou wast a bondman in Egypt, and Jehovah thy God thence redeemed thee: therefore I command thee to do this thing.

"When thou cuttest down thine harvest in 19 thy field, and hast forgot a sheaf in the field, thou shalt not go back to fetch it; it shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow: that Jehovah thy God may bless thee in all the work of thine hands. When 20 thou hast beaten thine olive trees, thou shalt not go over the bows again: what remaineth shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. When thou gatherest the 21 grapes of thy vineyard, thou shalt not afterward glean it: what remaineth shall be for the stranger, for the fatherless, and for the widow. For thou shouldst remember that thou wast a 22 bondman in the land of Egypt: therefore I command thee to do this thing."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIV. I. The practice of divorcing their wives seems to have been in force, before the giving of the law, (see Levit. xxi. 14); nor does Moses command this, but gives laws to regulate and mitigate its evils. This justifies our Lord's

The first three verses in this chapter contain a chain of successive events, finishing with the case in verse 3; and verse 4, expresses what will be the law in such a case.

6. The upper or nether millstone. Every family had, in general, their own portable mill, or quern; which was daily employed in grinding a quantity of grain sufficient for the day. To take away this utensil, therefore, was to deprive the family of their daily bread, called here emphatically their life. This explains that part of the Lord's prayer, 'give us our daily bread.'

8. Shalt thou take heed to do. The Syr. applies this to the Levites, and renders, "As I commanded them, shall they observe and do." The connexion supports the other versions. Compare Levit. xiii. 14, &c.

had been carried, the new Testament proves. They thought it right to put away their wives for any cause, or no cause; and thus perverted the ordinance of marriage itself to the worst purposes. Our Lord has restored the original law, and only allows divorce when the marriage covenant has been violated.

Blessed is he that pitieth the poor. The liberal soul shall be made fat. What we measure out in kindness and charity God will, one way or another, measure to us again. REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXV. 1. Among violent men disputes and controversies will arise; and it is to put an end to them, and prevent the consequences of them, that God has appointed judges. Their office is "to justify the righteous, and condemn the wicked." In punishment, compassion should be shown; extreme rigour is always to be avoided, as the end of punishing an evil doer, is either his own reformation, or to deter others from doing in like manner. The Jews say, that while a person was scourged, the Judge read aloud Dent. xxviii. 58, 59, and xxix. 9, and concluded with Ps. lxxviii. 38; thus preaching repentance to the offender, while he was scourged for his offence. This made the very act of punishment a sort of religious act; and it must have had a very impressive effect, on those who saw it.

2. Be it our care to avoid all appearance of fraud. In the common concerns of life how sinful is it for one to cheat another; and in buying or selling we should be content with reasonable profits, and not aim to get wealth, by having false weights and measures. We should not have a great weight and measure to buy by, for that is to cheat both ways, when either is bad enough; as we read of those that made the ephah small, in which they measured the corn they sold, and the shekel great, by which they weighed the money they received for it, Amos vii. 5. Let us aim then in our civil transactions, to honour God by integrity, that he may bless us, according to his word.

CHAP. XXVI. 5. A wandering Syrian, &c. The sense given to מְדֻבָּר, or מְדֻבָּר in the common version, does not seem appropriate to the condition of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They were not, ready to perish, but were rich and prosperous. I have therefore followed Dathe and others, who justly observe, that the word is applied to the sheep which has wandered from the fold, Psalm cxix. 176, and that the word in this sense is suited to the life of the Patriarchs. Abraham was a Syrian by birth, and by the call of God, a wanderer from his kindred and country. Though God gave to him many promises, yet the only possession he had in Canaan, was that of a burying-place. Isaac and Jacob lived a like wandering life. There have I taken away aught of it for common use, nor given aught of it for the dead; but I have hearkened to the voice of Jehovah my God, and have done according to all that thou hast commanded me: Look down from thy holy habitation, from the heavens, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which thou hast given us, as thou swore to our fathers; a land that floweth with milk and honey.²

16 "This day Jehovah thy God hath commanded thee to do these statutes and judgments; thou shalt therefore keep and do them with all

17 thine heart, and with all thy soul. Thou hast avouched Jehovah this day for thy God; and that thou wilt walk in his ways, and keep his statutes, and his commandments, and his

18 judgments, and hearken to his voice: And Jehovah hath avouched thee this day for his peculiar people, as he promised to thee; and that if thou wilt keep all his commandments,

19 Then he will place thee above all nations which he hath made, in praise, and in fame, and in honour; and that thou shalt be a holy people to Jehovah thy God, as he hath spoken."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVI. 1. From hence we learn that it is fit and reasonable that we should honour the Lord with our substance; we shall thus keep up a remembrance that all comes from him. It is his own which we present to him; let us therefore be ready to distribute, and willing to communicate to our poorer brethren. Let us lay by in store for that purpose. This will make our comforts peculiarly sweet; and we shall be able to "rejoice in the good things which the Lord our God giveth us," and bring his blessing on all that we do and possess.

2. Let us frequently and seriously commemorate all the kind appearances of God for us and our country. And whilst we acknowledge these mercies, let us also present our request to God for future favours, as in v. 15, "Look down from thy holy habitation from heaven, and bless thy people Israel, and the land which

CHAP. XXVII. 2. Plaster them with plaster. It is doubtful, whether the stones were to be plastered over with plaster, or only joined to-manded the people, saying, 'Keep all the commandments which I this day command thee. And it shall be on the day when thou shalt pass over the Jordan into the land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee, that thou shalt set up great stones, and plaster them with plaster: And thou shalt inscribe upon them all the words of this law; for thou art about to pass over, that thou mayest go into the land which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee; a land that floweth with milk and honey; as Jehovah the God of thy fathers hath promised. Therefore it shall be when thou hast passed over the Jordan, that thou shalt set up these stones, which I this day command thee, by mount Ebal, and thou shalt plaster them with plaster; And shalt inscribe on the stones, most plainly, all the words of this law". And there thou shalt build an altar to Jehovah thy God, an altar of stones; thou shalt not lift up an iron tool upon them. thou hast given us, a land that floweth with milk and honey." May we thus cultivate a public spirit, a tender concern for the peace and prosperity of our Israel, that the land may yield its increase.

3. It becomes us to embrace every opportunity of avouching the Lord for our God, of recognizing our obligations to him, and diligently remembering them; and to be careful not to violate the sacred engagements we are under. Having avouched the Lord for our God, let us not be willing to go back; but be upright before him. Nothing will afford us greater joy in life or death, than to be able to appeal to God, that we have not wilfully transgressed his commandments, but have humbly endeavoured, through divine grace, "to walk in all the ordinances and commandments of the Lord blameless."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVII. 1. The various methods adopted to impress the law of God on the minds of the people, teach us, that obedience to it, is of the highest importance.
 It is no light matter; for it is our life. It is the law of Jehovah the great king; and resembles him in its wisdom, excellency, and sanctity. Let us then seek, that it may be inscribed on our hearts.

2. We should be thankful that "we are not under the law, but under grace. Christ hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us." Gal. iii. 13. We are still under the law, as a rule of life, though blessed be God! not as a

Compare Gal. iii. 10.

covenant of works. "We are justified freely by his grace, through faith. The scripture has included, or shut up, all under sin, that the promise, by faith in Christ Jesus, might be given to all them that believe." As we are thus delivered from the terrors of mount Sinai, the curses of mount Ebal, and all the rigours of the Jewish dispensation, let us be more solicitous to walk in the fear and love of the Lord, and in the observance of his precepts. For he that despises and neglects the law of Christ, mild as the gospel dispensation is, "will fall into sorer condemnation than they who despised the law of Moses, and yet died without mercy."

an abridgment of this book of Deuteronomy, or the blessings and curses here set down. Compare Joshua viii. 34.

4. Mount Ebal. Keenicott has laboured to prove, that the Samaritan is the true reading; but his arguments have been examined, and the force of them, at least, diminished by Veosopuir. As it is doubtful which is the true reading, I have adhered to the text. It is of no moment to us to determine the controversy, whether men ought to worship at Jerusalem or on mount Gerizim. Every place is now alike holy; and the worship God requires is that of the heart, John iv. 20. I have transposed the 8 verse after this as evidently its proper place.

5, 6. Compare Exodus xx. 25.

14. And the priests the Levites. So Joshua, Chap. viii. 33, and Josephus; and the text supports this. They stood in the middle, by the ark and the altar; and thence denounced a benediction to the observers, and maledictions to the transgressors of the law. The common Levites stood among the other tribes.

15. Here one naturally expects to find the benediction, or benedic-tions, precede the maledictions; nor is it easy to account for this omission.
 The most probable supposition that occurs to me is, that the benedictions were all included in the general one, appointed by God himself. Numb.
 vi. 21-26.

26. All the words of this law. The word all, which our translators

with thee, if thou wilt hearken to the voice 3 of Jehovah thy God. Blessed shalt thou be in the city, and blessed shalt thou be in the 4 field. Blessed shalt thou be in the fruit of thy body and in the fruit of thy ground, and in the fruit of thy cattle; in the increase of 5 thine herds, and the flocks of thy sheep. Blessed shall be thy basket and thy kneading-6 troughs. Blessed shalt thou be when thou comest in; and blessed shalt thou be when thou 7 goest out. Jehovah will cause thine enemies who rise up against thee, to be smitten before thy face: they shall come out against thee one way; and shall flee before thee by seven ways.
 8 Jehovah will command a blessing upon thee
 in thy storehouses, and on whatsoever thou undertakest; and he will bless thee in the land 9 which Jehovah thy God giveth to thee. Jehovah will establish thee as a people holy to himself, as he hath sworn unto thee, if thou wilt keep the commandments of Jehovah thy 10 God, and walk in his ways. And all the people of the earth shall see that thou art called by the name of Jehovah; and they shall be 11 afraid of thee. And Jehovah will make thee abound in good things; in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy ground; in the land which Jehovah swore to thy fathers that he would give 12 to thee. Jehovah will open to thee his good treasures, the heavens, to give the rain to thy land in its season, and to bless all the work of thine hand: and thou shalt lend to many nations, and thou shalt not borrow of any.
 13 For Jehovah will make thee superior and not inferior, and thou shalt be above only, and thou shalt not be beneath; if thou wilt hearken to the commandments of Jehovah thy God, which I this day command thee, so as to observe and do them: And thou shalt not 14 turn aside from any of the words which I this day command thee, to the right hand, or to the left, to go after and serve other gods.

“But it shall be, if thou wilt not hearken to 15
 the voice of Jehovah thy God, to observe to do all his commandments and his statutes which I this day command thee; that all these curses shall come upon thee, and cleave to thee. Accursed shalt thou be in the 16
 city; and accursed shalt thou be in the field.
 Accursed shall be thy basket and thy knead- 17
 ing-troughs. Accursed shall be the fruit of 18 thy body, and the fruit of thy land, the increase of thine herds, and the flocks of thy sheep. Accursed shalt thou be when thou 19 comest in; and accursed shalt thou be when thou goest out. Jehovah will send upon thee 20 cursing, vexation, and rebuke, in whatsoever thou undertakest to do, until thou be destroyed, and thou perish quickly; because of thine evil deeds, by which thou hast forsaken him. Jehovah shall make the pestilence 21 cleave to thee, until he hath consumed thee from off the land, which thou art going to take for a possession. Jehovah will smite thee with 22 consumption, and with fever, and with the ague, and with inflammation; and with draught and with blasting, and with mildew; and they shall pursue thee, until thou perish. And the 23 heavens which are over thy head shall be brass;
 and the earth which is under thee shall be iron. Jehovah will give, instead of rain to thy 24 land, dust; and from the heavens shall dust descend upon thee, until thou be destroyed.
 Jehovah will cause thee to be smitten before 25
 thine enemies; thou shalt go out one way

have inserted as wanting before the words of this law, was thought by Jerom absolutely necessary to justify St Paul's quotation, in Gal. iii. 10. And it is very remarkable, that this important word is now found here, not only in the Sam. text and its version, but also in 4 Hebrew mss.

CHAP. XXVIII. 5. Thy kneading troughs. The word מַשְׁאֲלֶתֶךָ is rendered thus Exod. xii. 34, in the authorised version; and this is the sense here, and not store. The meaning is, 'thou shalt have abundance of fruits, to fill thy basket, and plenty of meal, for thy kneading-troughs.'

7. One way, and shall flee seven. This is a proverbial saying, to denote a complete overthrow.

13. The superior and not inferior; that is, chief among the nations, and not subject to any. Literally, 'thee the head and not the tail.' I have followed in sense the Bishops' Bible, 'chiefest, and not the lowest.'

22—24. The ague. So the Sept. Vulg. and Arab. render.—Draught. This is the rendering of the Sam. Vulg. and Arab. versions; and as it is classed with other calamities which affect the fruits of the earth, this is more apposite than sword. If these diseases be such as arise from a violently heated state of the atmosphere, from a want of cooling rains and refreshing dews, then we see the connexion and climax of the whole, in the following verses: "Thy heaven—atmosphere—over thy head, shall be brass; and the earth under thee shall be iron. The Lord shall make the rain of thy land, powder and dust; from heaven—the atmosphere—shall it against them, and flee seven ways before them: and shalt be removed into all the kingdoms 26 of the earth. And thy carcase shall be food for all the fowls of the air, and for the wild beasts of the earth, and no man shall scare

 27 them away. Jehovah will smite thee with the ulcer of Egypt, and with the piles, and with the scab, and with the itch; of which thou 28 canst not be healed. Jehovah will smite thee with madness, and blindness, and weakness of 29 mind; So that thou shalt grope at noonday, as the blind gropeth in darkness; and thou shalt not prosper in thy ways, but thou shalt 30 be only oppressed and plundered continually, and no man shall save thee. Thou shalt betroth a wife, and another man shall lie with her; thou shalt build a house, but shalt not dwell in it; thou shalt plant a vineyard, but 31 shalt not gather its grapes. Thine ox shall be slain before thine eyes, but thou shalt not eat of it; thine ass shall be violently taken away before thy face, and shall not be restored to thee: thy sheep shall be given to thine enemies, and thou shalt have none to rescue them.
 32 Thy sons and thy daughters shall be given to a strange people, and thine own eyes looking on, and languishing for them, yet shalt thou
 33 have no power to save them. The fruit of thy land, and all thy labours, shall a nation which thou knowest not, eat up; and thou shalt be only
 34 oppressed and crushed continually: So that thou shalt be mad at the sight which thine own 35 eyes shall see. Jehovah will smite thee in the knees, and in the legs, with an ulcerous sore that cannot be healed; from the sole of thy foot to the crown of thy head.
 36 "Jehovah shall bring thee, and thy king whom thou shalt have set over thee, to a nation which neither thou nor thy fathers have known; and there shalt thou serve other gods, of wood and stone. And thou shalt become an 37 astonishment, a proverb, and a by-word, among all the nations whither Jehovah shall lead thee. Thou shalt carry much seed out into the field, 38 and shalt gather but little in; for the locust shall consume it. Thou shalt plant vineyards, 39 and dress them, but shalt neither drink of the wine, nor gather the grapes; for the worms shall eat them. Thou shalt have olive-

 40 trees throughout all thy districts, but thou shalt not anoint thyself with the oil; for thine olive-trees shall cast their fruit. Thou shalt beget 41 sons and daughters, but thou shalt not enjoy them; for they shall go into captivity. All thy 42 trees, and the fruit of thy land, shall the locusts consume. The stranger that is within 43 thee shall get up far, far above thee; and thou shalt be far, far down below him. He shall 44 lend to thee, and thou shalt not lend to him; he shall be superior, and thou shalt be inferior. Moreover, all these curses shall come upon 45 thee, and shall pursue thee, and cleave to thee, till thou be destroyed: because thou didst not hearken to the voice of Jehovah thy God, so as to keep his commandments, and his statutes, which he commanded thee: And they shall 46 be upon thee for a sign and for a wonder, and upon thy seed perpetually. Because thou serv-
 47 edst not Jehovah thy God with joyfulness, and with gladness of heart, for the abundance of all things; Therefore shalt thou serve thine ene-48 mies, whom Jehovah shall send against thee, in hunger, and in thirst, and in nakedness, and in want of all things; and he shall put a yoke come down on thee, till thou be destroyed."

27. Ulcer of Egypt. That species of leprosy called the elephantiasis, which is common in Egypt as are the other complaints. This disease first affects the feet and lower parts, and then the whole body. It is described in the 35 verse; and from the researches made, it answers the description given, being incurable.

29. Grope at noon day, &c. This is proverbial, and signifies such trouble of mind, that a man does not know how to act; but errs in the plainest things.

38. Thou knowest not, eat up. This was the case in the Assyrian and Babylonish captivity; and it was so remarkable as not to be accounted for, without the immediate hand of God to fulfil these awful threatenings.

36. Hitherto the punishments threatened, were to be inflicted on them in their own country. The following were to pursue them in their dispersion.

37. A Proverb. This was fulfilled in their captivity; but more especially since their dispersion by the Romans; they are a common proverb through the earth: 'you use me like a Jew, you would not have done so to a Jew,' that is, to one of the worst of men.

45. And cleave to thee. One punishment shall follow another, until thou art destroyed as a nation.

49. A nation from afar. Some of the Jewish doctors say, this is a prophecy of their destruction by the Romans, and indeed nothing is here mentioned, but what was literally applicable to that dreadful event. The

of iron upon thy neck, until he have destroyed thee. Jehovah will bring a nation against thee from far, from the end of the earth, with the speed of an eagle; a nation whose tongue thou wilt not understand; A nation of fierce countenance, who will not regard the person of the aged, nor show favour to the young: And they will eat the fruit of thy cattle, and the fruit of thy land, until thou be destroyed: who will not leave to thee either corn, wine, or oil; or the increase of thine herds, or the flocks of thy sheep, until they have destroyed thee. And they shall besiege thee in all thy gates, until thy high and fenced walls come down, in which thou trustedst, throughout all thy land: yea, they shall besiege thee in all thy gates throughout all thy land, which Jehovah thy God hath given to thee. And thou shalt eat the fruit of thine own body, the flesh of thy sons and of thy daughters, whom Jehovah thy God hath given to thee, in the siege, and in the strait, with which thine enemies shall distress thee. The man the most dainty and delicate with thee, shall grudge to give to his brother, and to the wife of his bosom, and to the remainder of his children whom he shall have left uneaten: He will not give to any of them of the flesh of his children whom he will eat; because he hath nothing left in the siege, and in the strait, with which thine enemies will distress thee, in all thy gates. The dainty and delicate woman, who would not venture to set the sole of her foot upon the ground, through delicacy and daintiness, shall grudge to give to the husband of her bosom, and to her son, and to her daughter, Any part of her own offspring, even the child which she hath born; which for want of every other thing, she shall eat in secret, in the siege, and strait, with which thine enemies shall distress thee, in "all" thy gates. If thou wilt not observe to do all the words of this law which are written in this book, that thou mayest fear this glorious and fearful name, JEHOVAH THY God; Then Jehovah will make thy plagues wonderful, and the plagues of thy seed; even great plagues, and of long continuance; and diseases, painful and of long continuance. Moreover he will bring upon thee all the diseases of Egypt, of which thou wast afraid, and they shall cleave to thee. Also every sickness, and every plague, which is not written in the book of this law, them will Jehovah bring upon thee, until thou be destroyed. And thou shalt be left few in number, where- as thou wast as the stars of the heavens for multitude; because thou wouldst not obey the voice of Jehovah thy God. And it shall be, that as Jehovah rejoiced over thee to do thee good, and to multiply thee, so Jehovah will rejoice over thee to destroy thee, and to bring thee to nought; thou shalt be plucked from off the land which thou art going to take for a possession. And Jehovah will scatter thee among all people, from the one end of the earth unto the other; and there thou shalt serve other gods, of wood and stone, which neither thou nor thy fathers have known. And among these nations shalt thou find no ease, neither shall the sole of thy foot have rest: but Jehovah shall give to thee there, a trembling heart, and failing of eyes, and sorrow of mind: So that thy life shall hang in doubt, 66

soldiers in Titus's army were from France, Spain, Britain, and the ends of the earth; the eagle was their standard, and their language was unknown to the Jews, which was not entirely the case with the Chaldee language.

57. Which she shall eat. Accordingly, Josephus tells us, that after eating dogs, horses, cats, &c. they ate their own children privately, and let none share with them. He particularly mentions a noble matron, who boiled part of her child during the siege, but the mob, smelling the meat, broke in, and to them she offered the rest.

61. Every sickness and every plague. This also is a fact, for in almost every nation they have been tortured and destroyed in a thousand ways, and exposed to all the sicknesses that hunger, nakedness, and wandering about, could bring upon them.

62. Be left few in number. This was remarkably the case when Jerusalem was taken; some say a million perished in the city by famine and the sword, and many hundred thousands, in other parts of the kingdom.

63. Plucked from off the land. Titus carried away ninety thousand captives; Adrian soon after slew five hundred thousand; and the senate joined with him in a decree, that no Jew should ever come within Judea, on pain of death; this he did out of policy, but he was fulfilling the counsel of Jehovah.

64. Scatter thee. This has been most literally fulfilled. By the decree above noticed, they were dispersed through Europe and Asia.—Gods of wood and stone. Such were the gods of the Greeks and Romans, which many of them were induced to worship. Some have applied this to the laws of Spain and Portugal, by which they have been forced to become Ca-

and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt 37 have no assurance of thy life: In the morning thou shalt say, 'Would God it were even?'
and in the evening thou shalt say, 'Would God
it were morning!' from the terror of heart which thou shalt feel, and from the sights, 68 which thine eyes shall see. And Jehovah shall bring thee to Egypt again, in ships, (for by the way of which I spoke to thee, thou shalt see it no more,) and there ye shall be sold to your enemies for bondmen and bondwomen, un-1 til there be none to buy you." These are the words of the covenant, which Jehovah commanded Moses to make with the children of Israel in the land of Moab, beside the covenant which he had made with them in Horeb.

B. C. 1452. Exhortation to obedience; the people enter into covenant before Jehovah; punishment of him who flattereth himself in his wickedness.

raoh, and to all his servants, and to his whole

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXVIII. 1. We should consider the prophecy in this chapter, as a glorious confirmation of the truth of the sacred writings, and a proof that Moses was a divinely inspired Prophet. It has been fulfilled in every succeeding age to this day, in all the calamities of the Jews. The contempt they have suffered in every nation, the marks of infamy that have been put upon them, and the blindness of their hearts, are unanswerable arguments for the truth of christianity. Every Jew we see, is a kind of miraculous attestation, that 'Jesus is the true Messiah,' and that 'the scriptures were given by divine inspiration.'

2. We find here, many important branches of duty pointed out. Let us hearken to God's voice, observe his commands, his whole law, not turning aside to the right hand or to the left.
Let us serve God with cheerfulness and gladness; serve him with all our good things. The more we have, the more cheerfully we should serve him; not with reluctance, but with pleasure and tholics, and to worship their saints made of the same materials.

68. Until there be none to buy you. Titus commanded all under seventeen years of age, to be sold; and in such numbers, that thirty of them were sold for a small piece of money. Adrian sold them in a fair, like horses, and for the same price. Such multitudes were often exposed seen; those signs, and great miracles; Yet 4 Jehovah hath not given you, to this day, a heart to perceive, or eyes to see, or ears to hear. Yet he hath led you forty years in the 5 wilderness; your clothes upon you are not worn out, nor are your shoes worn out on your feet.

Ye have not eaten bread; nor have ye drunk 6 wine or strong drink: that ye might know that Jehovah is your God. And when ye came 7 to this place, Sihon, the king of Heshbon, and Og, the king of Bashan, came out against us to battle, and we smote them; And we took 8 their land, and gave it for an inheritance to the Reubenites, and to the Gadites, and to the half tribe of Manasseh. Keep therefore 9 the words of this covenant, and do them, that ye may prosper in all that ye do.

"Ye stand this day, all of you, before Jeho- 10
vah your God; the captains of your tribes, your elders, and your officers, with all the men of Israel; Your little ones, your wives, and 11
the strangers that are in your camp, from the hewer of wood, to the drawer of water; That 12 ye may enter into covenant with Jehovah your God, and into his oath, which Jehovah your God maketh with you this day: That he may 13 delight. Let us fear that awful name, Jehovah, the self-existent, unchangeable, eternal, and covenant-keeping God; that so his blessing may continually overtake us.

3. Let us learn the heinous nature and dreadful consequences of disobedience to God. The curse of God is on the house and on the persons of the wicked. It will follow them wherever they go, embitter all their comforts, and obscure all their hopes.
What various terrible judgments has God in store for the wicked! Alas! whose heart can endure, whose hand can be strong, in that day? May we then be careful, not to 'provoke the Lord to anger.' Oh that we might this day kiss the Son, lest he be angry! Oh that these curses of the law, may now be as 'a schoolmaster to lead us to Christ!' that being justified by him, we may be "delivered from the curses of the law," have peace and security, and maintain his friendship; for "happy is the man that is in such a case; yea, happy the people whose God is the Lord." Let us seek this treasure.

to sale, that there were not persons enough to buy them; and they were sent into confinement, and that so strict and severe, that they died by hundreds and thousands together; and in general, they were looked upon in so contemptible a light, that men would not have them even for slaves;
in so remarkable a manner have these awful denunciations been fulfilled...

establish you to day for a people to himself, and that he may be to you a God; as he hath said to you, and as he hath sworn to your fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob. 14 Nor is it with you only I make this covenant 15 and this oath; But with him that standeth here with us, this day, before Jehovah our God, and also with him that is not here with us, 16 this day. For ye know what happened while we dwelt in the land of Egypt; and while we came through the nations which ye had to pass. 17 And ye have seen their abominations, and their idols of wood and stone, silver and gold, 18 which they had among them: Take heed therefore, lest there should be among you, a man, or a woman, or a family, or a tribe, whose heart turneth away, this day, from Jehovah our God, to go and serve the gods of these nations; lest there be among you a root 19 that produceth juice like wormwood; And it come to pass, when he heareth the words of this curse, that he bless himself in his heart, saying, 'I shall have peace, though I walk after the inclination of mine heart, so as to 20 gratify every desire.' Jehovah will not spare him, but the anger of Jehovah, and his jealousy, shall smoke against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book, shall lie upon him, and Jehovah shall blot out his 21 name from under the heavens. And Jehovah shall set him apart for punishment out of all the tribes of Israel, according to all the curses of the covenant which are written in this book of the law; So that the generation to 22 come, of your children that shall rise up after you, and the strangers that shall come from a far land, shall say, when they see the plagues of that land, and the diseases which Jehovah hath laid upon it; Sulphur and salt burning the 23 whole land; that it is not sown, nor beareth, nor can any grass grow on it; (like the overthrow of Sodom, and Gomorrah, Admah and Zeboim, which Jehovah overthrew in his anger, and in his wrath): Even all nations shall 24 say, 'Wherefore hath Jehovah done thus to this land? what meaneth the heat of this great anger?' Then men shall say, 'Because they 25 have forsaken the covenant of Jehovah, the God of their fathers, which he made with them when he brought them out of the land of Egypt: For they went and served other gods, and 26 worshipped them; gods whom they knew not, and whom he had not given to them: And 27 the anger of Jehovah was kindled against this land, to bring upon it all the curses that are written in this book: And Jehovah, in anger, 28 and in wrath, and in great indignation, rooted them out of their land, and cast them into another land, as it is this day.' Secret things 29 belong to Jehovah our God: but those revealed to us and to our children for ever, that we may do all the words of this law.

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXIX. 1. In the solemn transactions here recorded, we may learn that it is our duty to enter into covenant with God. All Israel is required to do so, judges, officers, particular families, with their wives and children. The christian dispensation is a covenant of grace and mercy; Jehovah our God, proposes certain terms, and requires that we consent to

CHAP. XXIX. 5. I have followed the various readings as what the connexion seems to me to justify; for Moses is the speaker.

18. Produceth juice like wormwood. Observe that gall is an animal secretion, and therefore, is improperly attributed to a vegetable, a root: yet, as some vegetables afford a juice as bitter as gall, that juice may with propriety be associated with wormwood. Jerem. ix. 15; xxiii. 15, speaks of giving the people 'wormwood to eat, and water of gall to drink;' that is, water in which a bitter plant had been infused; or the juice of a bitter plant mixed; which, Lam. iii. 15, he changes for bemerurim, bitterness; or rather, from the same root, myrrhs: 'he hath filled me with bitter potions drawn from myrrhs; he hath inebriated me with bitter juices pressed from wormwood.' See also Amos vi. 12. Now, if myrrh and bitterness were analogous terms in the ancient Hebrew, as these passages, at least, insinuate, then we infer the identity of meaning in the different words used by the evangelists, Mathew and Mark, to denote the same thing. St. Mathew says, 'wine mingled with gall.'—St Marks says, 'wine mingled with myrrh.' It is easy to see from the subject before us, that there is no contradiction in these words, but both mean the same thing; not animal gall, but a bitter potion drawn from a vegetable drug—i. e. myrrh. And the original Syriac term was equally well translated by either of these words.

19. The inclination of mine own heart; that is, I shall be happy though I forsake God and worship idols.—So as to gratify every desire. I have given the sense, the Arab interpreter, Le Clerc, and others have attributed to the text, in preference to the idiom, because I conceive it more perspicuous. The learned reader may consult Rosenmuller.

29. Secret things, &c. Some may inquire when these awful denunciations will be executed, to whom Moses replies, 'Secret things belong to Jehovah our God, &c.' The learned Archbishop Secker observes, that he thinks the meaning is, 'the chastisements which we now undergo, are a manifestation of the secret designs of the Lord against us, in case we should in any age cease to observe his laws.'

CHAPTER XXX.

B. C. 1452. Great mercies promised to the penitent; the divine law plain; death and life are set before the people.

1 AND it shall be, when all these things are come upon thee, the blessing and the curse, which I have set before thee, and thou shalt call them to mind among all the nations, whither Jehovah thy God hath driven thee. And thou shalt return to Jehovah thy God, and shalt obey his voice according to all that I this day command thee; thou and thy children, with all thine heart, and with all thy soul; That then Jehovah thy God will reverse thy captivity, and have compassion upon thee, and will again gather thee from all the nations, whither Jehovah thy God had scattered thee. Should there be any of thine driven to the extremity of the heavens, thence will Jehovah thy God gather thee, and thence will he fetch thee: And Jehovah thy God will bring thee into the land which thy fathers possessed, and thou shalt possess it; and he will do thee good and multiply thee more than thy fathers. And Jehovah thy God will circumcise thine heart, and the heart of thy seed, to love Jehovah thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul, that thou mayest live. And Jehovah thy them. Our general profession of christianity is an obligation upon us. Our interest also depends upon it, and faithfulness requires it. May we frequently recognize it, review our engagements, and faithfully keep to all the stipulations of the covenant.

2. How fatally are sinners deceived, who expect peace and happiness in the way of transgression. While they are blessing themselves, and saying peace, peace, then sudden destruction cometh! That man, who walks after the inclination of his evil heart, however opposed to his duty, and gratifies every desire as far as possible, let him read and tremble. "Jehovah will not spare him, but the anger of Jehovah and his jealousy shall smoke against that man, and all the curses that are written in this book shall lie upon him, and Jehovah shall blot out his name from under the heavens."

CHAP. XXX. 1, 2. Return—with all thine heart. This expresses the nature of genuine repentance. It is calling to mind our sins and our sorrows; and full conversion of the heart to God.

3. Will again gather thee. This was fulfilled in their return from the Babylonish captivity; and it is conceived, will yet have a further accomplishment.

God will put all these curses upon thine enemies, and on them who hated and persecuted thee. And thou shalt return and obey Jehovah, and do all his commandments which I this day command thee. And Jehovah thy God will abundantly prosper every work of thine hand; in the fruit of thy body, and in the fruit of thy cattle, and in the fruit of thy land: for Jehovah will again rejoice over thee for good, as he rejoiced over thy fathers; If thou wilt hearken to the voice of Jehovah thy God, so as to keep his commandments and his statutes, which are written in this book of the law; and if thou wilt turn to Jehovah thy God with all thine heart, and with all thy soul.

"For this commandment which I this day command thee, is neither above thy understanding, nor is it far off. It is not in the heavens that thou shouldst say, 'Who shall go up for us to the heavens, and bring it to us, that we may hear and do it?' Nor is it beyond the sea, that thou shouldst say, 'Who shall go over the sea for us, and bring it to us, that we may hear and do it?' But the word is very nigh to thee, even in thy mouth, and in thy heart, that thou mayest do it.

"See, I have set before thee this day life

3. On how many subjects may the concluding remark of Moses be useful to us! "Secret things belong to Jehovah our God." Let us not then attempt to pry into them. Some are above our comprehension, and it is impossible for us to know them; others, if known, would only gratify a vain curiosity, and many would tend to paralyze our exertions, and render human life insupportable, by the dread of approaching evils. Those things which are most interesting for us to know, are most clearly revealed; and to acquaint ourselves with them, is our indispensable duty. They are the rules by which we are to live, and the grants we are to live upon. We should be concerned to teach them to our children by precept and example; remembering, that it is not those who only know these things that are blessed, but those who know and do them.

5. Do thee good, &c. After their return from the captivity they were great and numerous, but were oppressed by the Persians and Grecians, and at length destroyed by the Romans; so that this prophecy is yet to be fulfilled; when they shall see their crime in crucifying Christ.

But if thine heart turn away, so that thou wilt not hearken, but be drawn away, 18 and worship and serve strange gods, I denounce to thee this day, that thou shalt surely perish; thou shalt not prolong thy days on the land, which thou art going over the Jordan to possess. I call heaven and earth to record this day against thee, that I have set before thee life and death, blessing and cursing; therefore choose life, that both thou and thy seed may 20 live: That thou mayest love Jehovah thy God, and that thou mayest obey his voice, and cleave to him; for he is thy life, and the length of thy days: that thou mayest dwell in the land which Jehovah swore to thy fathers, to Abraham, to Isaac, and to Jacob, that he would give to thee."

9 And Moses wrote this law, and delivered it to the priests, the sons of Levi, who bore the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, and to all 10 the elders of Israel. And Moses commanded them, saying, "At the end of every seven

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXX. 1. We see the scriptures fulfilled in the dispersion and present miserable state of the Jews. Though scattered in every country, they are yet preserved a distinct, and separate people; and is there not mercy in store for them? Their captivity shall be reversed, and God will again gather them from all nations. For if they abide not in unbelief, they shall be again grafted into the Church of God. What a happy period, when the sons of Israel shall have the veil rent from their hearts, and shall turn and be healed.

2. We are reminded of our depravity, and the necessity of receiving grace. God must circumcise our heart, before we can love extensive travel to comprehend this precept. Ye have only to repeat it often, and to keep it in mind, and to square all your actions by it.

15. Life and happiness, &c. The order of the Greek is more usual and natural, and Dr. Roberts prefers it to the text.

20. The length of thy days. It is he alone who can preserve thee, and make thy days long on the earth.

years, on the solemnity of the year of release, at the feast of tabernacles, When all Israel 11 cometh to appear before Jehovah thy God in the place which he shall have chosen; this law shall be read in the hearing of all Israel. Assemble the whole people, men, and women, 12 and children; and the stranger who is within thy gates; that they may hear, and learn, and fear Jehovah thy God, and observe to do all the words of this law. And that "their" chil- 13 dren, who have not known, may hear, and learn to fear Jehovah thy God, as long as thou livest in the land which thou art going over the Jordan to possess."

CHAPTER XXXI.

B. C. 1452 Moses encourageth the people and Joshua; gives the law to the Levites, and maketh a solemn protest to the elders.

Jehovah now said to Moses, "Behold, 14 the days approach that thou must die. Call Joshua, and present yourselves in the congregation-tabernacle, that I may give him a charge. And Moses and Joshua went, and presented themselves in the congregation-taber- 15 nacle. And Jehovah appeared in the tabernacle, in a pillar of cloud; and the pillar of cloud stood over the tabernacle door. And he gave 23 Joshua the son of Nun a charge, and said, "Be strong and of good courage; for thou and obey his commandments. Its perverseness and obstinacy must be removed, its corruptions mortified, and its lusts subdued. It should be diligently sought by those, who are strangers to the love and service of God; and parents should earnestly seek it for their children. However hard and obstinate the human heart may be, God can soften and subdue it. Let us pray that he will 'shed abroad his love in our hearts,' and dispose them more and more to his service.

3. As we enjoy the word of God, we can have no excuse for our sins. This word is not above our understanding, nor is it afar off. "Say not in thine heart, Who shall ascend into heaven? or who shall descend into the deep? The word of the Lord is nigh unto thee, next Chapter, as clearly connected with what precedes. They have no connexion, where they stand in the common version. The order of the next Chapter has been much disturbed; and as a transposition alters nothing in the text, it ought to offend no one, as Kennicott has proved, that many such exist in the Hebrew mss.

CHAP. XXXI. 9. Wrote this law. Many suppose that this book only is meant, which contains a summary of the laws given to Israel; and shalt bring the children of Israel into the land which I swore to them: and I will be with thee."

- 1 And Moses went and spoke these words to 2 all Israel. And he said to them, "I am one hundred and twenty years old this day; I can no more go out and come in. Also Jehovah hath said to me, 'Thou shalt not go over this
3 Jordan.' Jehovah thy God himself will go over before thee, and he will destroy those nations from before thee, and thou shalt dispossess them; and Joshua, shall go over before
4 thee, as Jehovah hath said. And Jehovah will do to them as he did to Sihon and to Og, kings of the Amorites, and to their land,
5 whom he hath destroyed. So will Jehovah give them up before thee, that thou mayest do to them according to all the commandments
6 which I have commanded thee. Be strong and of good courage; fear not, nor be afraid of them; for Jehovah thy God himself goeth with thee; he will not leave thee, nor forsake thee."
7 Moses then called Joshua, and said to him in the sight of all Israel, "Be strong and of good courage; for thou must go with this people to the land which Jehovah hath sworn to their fathers that he would give to them;
8 and thou shalt cause them to inherit it. For Jehovah himself goeth before thee, and will be with thee; he will not leave thee, nor forsake thee: fear not, nor be dismayed."
16 Again Jehovah said to Moses, "Behold, thou shalt sleep with thy fathers; and this people will rise up, and go astray after the even in thy mouth and in thy heart." The gospel of Christ is much more plain and easy. You hear it read and preached among you; it is in your hands; you speak of it; therefore great is your guilt, and great will be your misery, if you do it not. "The servant who knows his Lord's will, and doeth it not, will be beaten with many stripes."

4. Since a blessing and a curse are so plainly set before us, let us 'choose life, that both we and our seed may live.' The more frequently and solemnly a law is urged and enforced, the greater the most impressive exhortations to obedience. The whole Pentateuch could scarcely be read in the space of time mentioned.

19. Write this song. The song intended is that contained in the following chapter, and from its excellence, it deserved to be committed to strange gods of the land into which they are going, and will forsake me, and break my covenant which I have made with them. Then 17 mine anger shall be kindled against them in that day, and I will forsake them, and I will hide my face from them, and they shall be devoured, and many evils and troubles shall befall them; so that they will say in that day, 'Are not these evils come upon us, because our God is not among us?' And I will surely 18 hide my face, in that day, on account of all the evils which they shall have wrought, by having turned aside to other gods. Now, 19 therefore, write this song, and teach it the children of Israel; put it in their mouths, that this song may be a witness for me against the children of Israel. For when I shall have 20 brought them into the land which I swore to their fathers, "that I would give to them"; a land that floweth with milk and honey; and they shall have eaten and filled themselves, and become fat; then will they turn aside to other gods, and serve them, and provoke me, and break my covenant. And it shall be when 21 many evils and troubles have befallen them, that this song shall testify against them as a witness; for it shall not be forgotten out of the mouths of their seed; for I know their disposition, by what they have done, even now, before I have brought them into the land, which I swore *to their fathers, that I would give to them.

Moses therefore wrote this song the same day, 22 and taught it the children of Israel.

21. *Sam. Sept. Syr.

obligation is to observe it. We naturally love life and fear death: hope and fear are our most governing principles. God promises the greatest good, and threatens the greatest evils: and after all, he deals with us as rational creatures, and free agents; proposing to our choice life or death. Thus fairly and equitably the law dealt with men, and so does the gospel also. Therefore, let it be our prayer, that God may so influence our hearts, that we may choose life and live; and not death and so perish for ever.

memory, and preserved as a witness against them.

24. This law. It is probable that this signifies the song which follows. Indeed it is this which he is charged to write, and to teach the children of Israel; it is also most probably this, that Moses gave to the priests to be

24 And it came to pass, when Moses had made an end of writing the words of this law in 25 a book, until they were finished, That Moses commanded the Levites, who bore the ark
 26 of the covenant of Jehovah, saying, "Take this book of the law, and put it in the side of the ark of the covenant of Jehovah, your God, that it may be there for a witness against 27 you. For I know ye are a rebellious and stiff-necked people; behold, while I am yet alive with you this day, ye have been rebellious against Jehovah, and how much more after my death?"
 28 "Gather to me all the elders of your tribes, and your officers, that I may speak these words in their hearing, and call the heavens and 29 the earth to witness against them. For I know that after my death ye will be wholly corrupted, and turn aside from the way which I have commanded you; and evil will befall you in the latter days; because ye will do evil in the sight of Jehovah, to provoke him to anger through the work of your hands."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXI. 1. The promise of God's presence and assistance, is sufficient encouragement for us, to undertake the hardest work, and encounter the greatest difficulties. This encouraged the Israelites to march towards Canaan, and this encouraged Joshua to lead them, although the people were perverse, and the service difficult. The promise, I will never leave, I will never forsake thee, is applied to all christians, Heb. xiii. 5. Depend therefore on the care and power of God; let us boldly say, 'the Lord is my helper;' and fear no danger in the way of duty.

aid up beside the ark of the covenant.

CHAP. XXXII. 1. How sublime is this exordium! Isaiah has borrowed from Moses. Virgil has also the same fine apostrophe: 'Esto nunc Sol testis, et hæc mihi Terra. vocanti.' After noticing the excellence of divine truth (1-3), Moses reproves the ingratitude of the people (3, 6), and then reminds them of the favours with which they had been blessed (6-14). Next, he foretells their settlement in Canaan, and speaks as if seeing their prosperity and defection from God to the worship of idols, (15-18); and then introduces Jehovah himself as speaking (20-42). The whole concludes with the praise of divine justice and mercy; justice in rejecting his own people, and mercy in adopting the gentiles.

4. Creator. The Sept. and Vulg. either found a different word in their copies, or gave what they deemed the sense. The term אֵל in the congregation of Israel the words of this song, until they were ended.

"Give hear, O heavens, and I will speak; 1
 And hear, O earth, the words of my mouth.
 My doctrine shall drop as the rain, 2
 My speech shall distil as the dew;
 As showers upon the tender herb,
 And as copious rain upon the grass:
 For the name of Jehovah I will proclaim. 3
 Ascribe ye greatness to our God!
 The Creator! whose work is perfect; 4
 And all whose ways are equitable;
 A God of truth, and without iniquity, Righteous and upright is he!
 Corrupted are his own polluted children: 5
 A generation perverse and prevaricating.
 Is it thus ye requite Jehovah, 6
 People foolish and unwise?
 Is not he your father, who bought you?
 Hath not he made you and established you?
 "Call to mind the days of old; 7
 Consider the years of every generation:
 Ask your fathers, and they will inform you;
 Your elders, and they will declare to you:
 That when the Most High divided the nations, 8
 When he dispersed the sons of Adam,
 He fixed the boundaries of the people,

2. All the methods of religious instruction that we have received, will be witnesses against us if we are rebellious. "Put this song into their mouths, that it may be a witness for me against the children of Israel." This was the charge to Israel; the law written, read, or sung, were all witnesses against the disobedience of Israel, and aggravated their guilt. The reasons will hold equally strong with regard to ourselves. We have the word, sacraments, and prayer; the word read, expounded, or preached; and prayer in public or private. All which will be witnesses against us, if we continue ignorant, impenitent, Chald. and Syr. signifies to form, to create; and אֵל as a verbal noun may denote the Creator. So the two Arabs Saad. and Erpen. render. This sense best connects with what follows.

5. His own polluted children. Literally, 'His own children have corrupted themselves, by their pollution.' I read with the Sam. Sept. Syr. Vulg. שָׁמְרוּ, and take י in a collective sense. With the versions I read בני. The Sam. has אֵל before the pronoun י; but I prefer the text and consider אֵל as only a various reading of י. I have given what appears to me the sense.

8. In respect to the, &c. I have adhered to the usual sense of the preposition ל. The meaning is, 'that when God fixed the boundaries of other nations, he allotted also a land sufficiently large to contain the number of the children of Israel; and he so favoured them by revealing his

In respect to the number of the children of Israel:
 9 For the portion of Jehovah is his own people: Jacob is the lot of his inheritance.
 10 "He supported them in the wilderness And nourished them in the sandy desert. He protected them, he trained them up; He defended them as the apple of his eye.
 11 As an eagle, with affection, watcheth her nest, And hovereth over her young; Or spreadeth her wings, and taketh them up, And beareth them on her pinions;
 12 So Jehovah alone conducted them; And with him there was no stange god.
 13 "He placed them on a hilly region, And made them eat the produce of the field; He nourished them with honey from the rock, And with oil from the flinty cliffs;
 14 With the cream of herds and milk of the flocks; With the fattest of lambs and of kids; With rams and he-goats of the breed of Bashan, And with flour of the best wheat, And the blood of the grape he made them drink.
 "But Jacob ate and was satiated;"
 15 Jeshurun became fat and kicked! Grown fat, grown thick, and satiated, They forsook the God who made them, And despised the rock of their salvation.
 16 They moved him to jealousy by strange gods;

By abominations they provoked him to anger. They sacrificed to demons, and not to God, 17 To gods whom they knew not; To new gods, come from their neighbours, Whom their fathers never feared. The Creator, who begot them, they deserted, 18 The God, who formed them, they forgot.
 "Jehovah saw, and he was indignant 19 At the provocation of his sons and daughters: And he said, "I will hide my face from them 20 I will see what their end will be: For a perverse generation they are; Children in whom there is no fidelity. They have made me jealous by what is not God; 21 They have provoked me to anger by their idols: And I will make them jealous, by an abject people,
 By a profligate nation I will provoke them to anger.
 For a fire is kindled in mine anger, 22 And shall burn to the lowest Hades; It shall consume the earth with its increase, And set on a blaze the foundations of the mountains. I will heap calamities upon them: 23 Upon them I will exhaust mine arrows. They shall be emaciated by famine, 24 And devoured by rapacious birds, With the most bitter destruction: I will also let loose upon them the teeth of beasts, and disobedient; all will make our condemnation the more intolerable.

3. Let us learn from the whole chapter, that it is the duty of aged and dying saints, to do all they can to promote religion. Moses chargeth Joshua and Israel again and again, now, when he was going to his fathers. Aged christians have but a little time to live, their faculties are impaired, their hands are weakened; but still they may be serviceable. Let them charge their families and successors to serve God. Let them recommend religion to them, and encourage them to serve the Lord; 'set before them good an evil.' Exhort, reprove, rebuke; bear testimony to the truth and comforts of religion; that your exhortations may be a witness, against those of your descendants and relations, that forsake God; and be witnesses for you at the bar, that you were faithful. Thus David, when he was old and greyheaded, "showed God's strength to that generation, and his power, righteousness and goodness, to those that were to come after him." He exhorted his son Solomon to walk in the ways of the Lord.

will to them, and dwelling among them, that they may be said to be his own inheritance.

10. He supported them, &c. The present text is contrary to historical fact; for God did not find Israel in the wilderness, but brought them into it. For this reason I have adopted the Sam. reading.—In the sandy desert. So the Sam. and Sept. which the connexion justifies.

11, 12. Every reader of taste must admire this beautiful comparison. The female eagle is the most attentive of all birds to her young, until they are able to provide for themselves. She has usually but two; and as she is considerably larger and stronger than the male, she takes upon herself the defence of the nest, and the care of its contents.—With him; i. e. God alone conducted them, without the aid of any of the gods of the nations.

13, 14. See Note on the 1 verse.

15. Jeshurun. I have added the hemistich yet happily preserved in the Sam. and Sept. As for Jeshurun, Geddes thought it was a poetic abbreviation for Israel. The Syr. Ouk. and Persic have Israel in the text. With Rosenmüller I consider it a poetic name of Israel, which in Arabic signifies, 'One who prospers.'

21. By an abject people. Literally, 'by a no-people;' that is, a people of no account, sunk in ignorance and vice. The Apostle applies this

- With the rage of the serpents of the ground.
- 25 Without, the sword shall bereave,
And within, terror shall destroy;

And the cruel venom of aspics.

to the calling of the Gentiles. Rom. x. 19.

24. Emaciated. James's translators have followed the interlineary versions and reflected the apposite one of the Greek and Vulg. Is it proper in any language to say, burnt with famine? The effect of famine is not burning, but leanness, emaciation. This is now admitted to be the real sense of the word.—Rapacious birds. Michaelis has proved that רשע signifies a bird of prey; (see Suppl. Lex.) and this is most apposite and suitable. The sense of burning coals attributed to the word is arbitrary and unsupported. The version I have given is supported by the connexion. Many shall die by famine, many by the sword, and their bodies shall be food for the birds of prey and for the wild-beasts.

29. O that they were so wise. The Sam. reading affords as good a sense, if not a better than the text: Instead of which it declares a fact, and prepares for what follows. I include the 31 verse in a parenthesis, as being the language of Moses. For the illustration of the 30 verse, compare Leviticus xxvi. 8.

32. For of the vine of Sodom. Michaelis understands by the vine of

I will render vengeance to mine enemies

Sodom, whose grapes yield poison, the plant called Solanus, or the Night-shade. This according to Hasselquist, abounds round the sea of Sodom. Compare Isa. v. 2, where we find a similar image; and the 7 verse explains both the image of the prophet, and of Moses, in this and the next verse. The meaning is, "The deeds of Israel are wicked and destructive."

34. Is not this stored up, &c. All the evils before mentioned, God has treasured up, and is prepared to inflict them on his disobedient people.

35. And I will repay. I have adopted this reading as best supported. The other yields a good sense.—But the time, &c. that is, when they turn from my law, and worship other gods. Compare Ps. xxxvii. 31.

36. Repent concerning, &c. Repent that they ever were his servants. The Greek 'will be comforted in his servants,' that is, in their punishment. In this verse Moses again speaks.—And none to succour, &c. I have followed the Syriac in this version, as giving a sense most suitable to the context.

39. I am He; i. e. God. The pronoun is often thus used emphatically.

But will be pacified to the land of his people." And Moses went and spoke all the words of this song in the hearing of the people; he and Joshua the son of Nun. And Moses made an end of speaking all these words to all Israel; And he said to them, "Consider attentively all the words which I testify among you this day; and ye shall command your children to observe "and" do, all the words of this law. For this is not a light matter to you; yea on this depends your life: and by this ye will prolong your days on the land which ye are going over the Jordan to possess."

REFLECTIONS UPON CHAPTER XXXII. 1. We hence learn, that we should endeavour to cultivate a due sense of the divine attributes. Greatness is ascribed to God, v. 3. High and honourable thoughts of him may keep us from sin, and lead us to duty. It is a delightful view that is given of him. The Creator, his work is perfect; for all his ways are judgment: a God of truth, and without iniquity, righteous and upright is he." All his works are perfect, but men's works are imperfect. What are all men compared with this wise, just, and faithful God! May we trust in him and devote ourselves to him.

2. How desirable it is to study, and consider our own latter end and to reflect on the consequences of our actions. It is a sign of wis-

42. With flesh from the hairy. The parallelism requires the repetition of the noun; and I consider it as clearly implied in the text. Moses represents God as upbraiding his people with the worship of idols (37 38;) and (39 42) as vindicating his own honour in the punishment of his enemies.

43. Ye nations, with his people. Rosenmuller follows the text, and renders, 'ye nations, his people;' but as some of the Jews believed, and were in fact the beginning of the Christian Church, I prefer the reading of the Sept. If the nations were to rejoice with the believing Jews, as being partakers of the same privileges, they are assured, that though they might be persecuted, God would avenge their blood, &c.

CHAP. XXXIII. 2. Jehovah came from Sinai. Moses alludes to some more remarkable appearances of God; and borrows a metaphor from the sun, which first dawns, and then shines brighter and brighter, to the perfect day.—The holy one came, &c. As שׁוֹרֵק is singular, with Durrel dren of Israel for a possession: And die on the mount whither thou goest up, and be gathered to thy people; as Aaron thy brother died on mount Hor, and was gathered to his people: Because ye trespassed against me among the children of Israel at the waters of Meribah-Kadesh, in the wilderness of Zin; for ye did not sanctify me in the midst of the children of Israel. Yet thou shalt see the land before thee; but shalt not go into the land which I give to the children of Israel."

Now this is the blessing, with which Moses, the man of God, blessed the children of Israel before his death, "when the chiefs of the people, of the tribes of Israel, were assembled":

And he said,
"Jehovah came from Sinai,
And dawned on them from Seir;
He shone forth from mount Paran!
The holy one came with multitudes;
Fire from his right hand was a signal to them.
Yea, he loved the people;
All his hallowed ones he blessed:

dom, and the way to increase it. Especially let us look forward to the end of life, and what will await us then. The miseries of mankind are owing to the want of consideration. Lam. i. 9, "Jerusalem remembered not her last end, therefore she came down wonderfully: she had no comforter." Let us look forward and consider what lies before us; that like prudent men, foreseeing the evil, we may hide ourselves.
